For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

)218504

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2014

https://archive.org/details/ladieshomejourna72janwyet

DEC 31 '54

JOURNAL

ADIES' HOME

JANUARY
1955 • 35c

213604

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

THE MAGAZINE
WOMEN
BELIEVE IN

HE NEHRU FAMILY
By A SISTER

E LARK SHALL SING
COMPLETE NOVEL
By ELIZABETH CADELL

HE GAMBLES:
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

DR. SPOCK

Journal

Contents

January, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 1

Journalities

Latest report from ELIZABETH CADELL (The Lark Shall Sing, page 30): "Born and brought up in India. (I think the American term is 'raised,' but I was raised to a mere five feet.) Educated in Calcutta, London and Darjeeling (in that order). Am an orphan. Also a widow, left with two children to educate and not much to do it on. Solved this problem by placing them both at expensive establishments and working to keep them there. Discovered writing—can recommend it to all thoroughly lazy women. Now live in carefree squalor on a farm near York." She says her goal is "a balcony overlooking the Mediterranean." Our goal is to learn how to be lazy and still write beautifully.

Elizabeth Cadell

Maggie the Dazzler, page 38, is only distantly related to the author, ELAINE GREENE, who concedes that it took her more than one afternoon to learn about men. Now she knows, she thinks, having been married to a book editor for eight years and also employed by a men's magazine. "I was born in Brooklyn and spent most of my childhood in a place called Neponsit, which is a part of Queens that is four blocks wide with the Atlantic on one side and Jamaica Bay on the other. At night the sea pound and the call of four different foghorns was a wonderful lullaby—scary enough to please themostromantickid." That's Maggie.

Elaine Greene

BETTY COE SPICER first visited the JOURNAL offices with her father, Charles Francis "Socker" Coe, when she was ten years old. "Socker" Coe was one of the most popular and successful writers The Saturday Evening Post had, and on that occasion Editor George Horace Lorimer gave Betty a gumdrop. "Gumdrops and magazines have been pleasantly associated in my mind ever since," Betty says. She has been on the JOURNAL staff for five years. Her husband, Bart Spicer, writes historical novels, and mysteries about an intrepid op named Carney Wilde. Concluding her interviewing of Guy and Maude Sarvis (How Young America Lives—at Seventy-Five! page 107), she asked what they had found most interesting in their many journeys about the world. "Why, people, of course!" Guy Sarvis said. With this we agree.

etty Coe Spicer

Novel Condensation Complete In This Issue

THE LARK SHALL SING, Elizabeth Cadell . 30

Stories

THE DOCTOR ALWAYS DOODLED, Dana Burnet . 32
SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (Third part of five), John P. Marquand . 36
MAGGIE THE DAZZLER, Elaine Greene . 38

Special Features

RESPECT FOR LAW BEGINS AT HOME, Dorothy Thompson . 11
WHEN MIGRANT CHILDREN ARRIVE . 21
CROP PICKERS' DILEMMA, Margaret Hickey . 21
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 27
NEHRU AND MADAME PANDIT, Krishna Nehru Hutheesing . 34
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 45
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES—AT SEVENTY-FIVE!, Betty Coe Spicer . 107
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 116

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 8
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 14
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 22
WHAT ARE YOU TALKING ABOUT? (The Sub-Deb) . 24
Edited by Ruth Imler
FIFTY YEARS AGO • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 29
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 46
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 54
THIS IS A MEAN-WELL, Munro Leaf . 87

Fashion and Beauty

CRUISE IN A PACKAGE, Wilhela Cushman . 40
THE JOURNAL'S WONDER DRESS, Nora O'Leary . 44
"I WAS A HOPELESS FATTY . . . NOW I'M A MODEL" . 75
Dawn Crowell Norman

Food and Homemaking

"WE BOTH LIKE TO COOK," Gladys Taber . 48
WATCHING THE NEW YEAR IN, Ann Batchelder . 50
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 52
OLD ICEBOXES AND REFRIGERATORS ARE A DANGER TO CHILDREN . 83
WHAT'S FOR DINNER?, Marian Tracy . 120

Architecture and Interior Decoration

REVIVING A ROOM WITH A TEN-YEAR SLUMP, Henrietta Murdock . 47
A COMPACT AND SPACIOUS HOUSE, Carol L. Mercado . 66
ANYONE CAN FRAME A PICTURE, Nancy Crawford . 128

Poems

RODIN'S SECRET, Jean Todd Freeman . 17
GOD THE FATHER, Robert P. Tristram Coffin . 59
DEAR DEPARTING GUESTS, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 78
TWELFTH NIGHT, THE CASTLE, Elizabeth Henley . 88 VACANCY, Mary Wright Lamb . 96
EDEN, Lionel Wiggam . 103
REMEMBRANCE FOR ROSEMARY, Charles Eugene Mounts . 114
ON AN IRREPARABLE PIANO, Joan Aucourt . 119
THE KATE, Elizabeth McFarland . 122
WITH SYMPATHY, Zoë Akins . 127
IF YOU CAME, Virginia Esterly Dunbar . 130

Cover Photograph by Richard Avedon

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Trayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

ZIP! Off comes greasy scorch with

BRILLO Soap Pads

Stop cleaning pans the hard way! Sturdy, metal-fiber Brillo® Soap Pads clean faster, shine pans brighter! That's because Brillo has more metal-fiber . . . a bigger cleaning surface. Every Brillo Soap Pad is loaded with soap that contains jeweler's polish! Of all cleansers tested, Brillo gives aluminums twice the shine—in half the time!

BRILLO SOAP PADS (red box) Soap-filled pads

BRILLO CLEANSER (green box) Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap right in every BRILLO Soap Pad!

THRIFTIER!
5 and 12 pad boxes

Soft-Weve is the bathroom tissue you can be proud to have in your home

You'll love the luxury of this newer, nicer kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. In today's nicest homes you naturally find Soft-Weve. It's the newer, nicer kind of bathroom tissue that's facial soft.

Two soft thicknesses, yet strong and firm for practical needs. In your own home, be sure to provide facial-soft Soft-Weve for your family and guests. It's another great Scott paper value for modern living.

"Soft-Weve," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

. . . softer because it's double!

Our readers write us

The Americans and Ourselves

HEADQUARTERS
UNITED STATES FORCES IN AUSTRIA
Public Information Division, U.S. Army

Dear Editors: Since you recently carried an article on why the Europeans dislike us, I am enclosing an article written in the independent Italian newspaper Il Corriere della Sera of Milan on 12 Sept. of this year, which will undoubtedly be of great interest to you all.

The article was translated by the staff of the Public Information Officer in Leghorn, Italy, and we here in Austria reproduced it, in full, in our Daily Press and Radio Analysis.

In the five years my wife and I have been in Western Europe, I have read no other such article in any European newspaper or magazine.

Sincerely,
JOSEPH CONGRESS
Chief, Austrian Affairs Branch

▶ Translated article written by Indro Montanelli, who once spent six months as his newspaper's New York correspondent, follows. ED.

Among the friends which I made in the United States, where there is nothing easier than making true friends, there is one who writes me long letters asking about the Italian situation and the problems which make it so uncertain.

He is not a politician. He is a lawyer. But, as all the Americans believe, he considers it his right to contribute a little toward the solution of national problems. This participation of the individual in the life of the community is one of the finest characteristics of the American people and gives them their feeling of social importance. Democracy, in fact, is based on this importance of the individual in the community.

Often, in the letters I receive, there is a question which I always try to avoid in my answers. The question is "Why is America so unpopular even in those European countries which it freed with its Army, and later helped to feed and rebuild?" It is a legitimate question which I would ask, too, if I was an American who had lost a son in France or in Germany. Not being able to deny this European bitterness toward America, I try to talk about something else.

I do this not because there is no explanation, but because there is one. I know it and everyone knows it, but it is not pleasant to confess. Among all the reasons which we give to justify our feeling of rancor toward an enemy who is guilty of having won a war which we declared against him, there is not one which will stand. They have not taken one of our ships, nor a machine gun, nor a piece of land. They have treated our prisoners with the greatest humanity. They have given us four thousand billions of lire. Unfortunately, all these efforts to win our friendship are overshadowed by one fault, from which there is no hope that America will recover since it has it in its blood. This fault is its desire to improve us, to make us better, to make us just, richer and happier.

I need a certain courage to write all this because I can imagine the faint smile of unbelief and skepticism which will appear on the faces of my readers, and especially of those who have never been in the States. Because good faith and honest intentions are so rare in Europe, it is difficult to attribute them to others.

America has never asked for colonies, nor war indemnities, nor trade slavery. It only asked that the conquered people become better, that they love each other their rivalry; make some social reforms; use DDT and refrigerators. This was a mistake and from here all the bitterness against America arose.

The great crime of the Americans is that they are in effect better than we Europeans. I will not say more intelligent, more clever, nor more educated, or more courageous. I only say that they are better-minded persons, that they ar more disposed toward the sacrifice for collective welfare. They are more candid more confident of other people, mor ready to see the good rather than the bad sides of things. All this is nothing but a great bother to us Europeans who have been trained for centuries to discover malice under innocence.

So how can I explain all this to my New York correspondent? He is candid and confident to such a point that he would not believe me. He would not believe me even if I opened the list with the ugliest of human feelings: envy. But it is so. All Europe is envious of America for its power and well-being; envious of those thousands of miles which place it safe from those dangers to which we are directly exposed, envious of its optimism, its corned beef, its childish innocence and enthusiasm which mean great happiness and good health.

The Americans, I must say, didn't do anything to help us conquer this mean but human feeling. On the contrary, they do everything to increase it. Their newspapers, magazines, books and movies are obstinate in repeating their great American happiness and well-being. And we call their happiness and well-being "silliness," as if happiness was not always a little silly. With a secret and rancorous joy we succeed in convincing ourselves that over here we live better, and we try to prove it by the many Americans who come to reside in Italy!

We all know that thanks to them we are still alive and free; we did not become the servants of a German colonel, and we are not yet the servants of a Russian colonel. Nevertheless, all the misfortunes of the Americans give us the bitter pleasure of revenge.

But how can I explain all this to my candid and confident friend from New York? At the same time I should confess to him that I sometimes share those feelings, too, even though I blame myself for it. Sometimes I catch myself hating the Americans for their incapacity to commit mean actions and even to understand them in other people. They place me in a position in which my self-conscience forces me to acknowledge that I am worse than they are.

It is better to avoid an answer and to imagine that my friend in New York would be too stupid to understand it. The word "stupid" consoles us and compensates for everything: for having lost the war, for living now at their expense, and be free, thanks to them. But they should not pretend that, among all these things, we also owe them gratitude.

Grow Old Along With Her

Tucson, Arizon

Dear Editors: In January, 1920, th JOURNAL published the first story I wrote, at the age of forty-three— Elizabeth-Convex. Now, thirty-four years, three books and a few million words later, it seems fitting that I send you these potentially final comments.

We oldsters have been busy for decades creating the spiritual substance of our declining years, and if we do not like what we have created we have ourselves to blame. To the fortunate among us, old age brings the leisure to

"Only stay quiet while the mind remembers
The beauty of fire from the beauty of embers."

If our embers are warm and glowing it does not matter greatly that beneath them are the cold ashes of past sorrow No old people of any century have witnessed so many changes in one life span as we have. Memories wander hithe

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

HIGH-FIDELITY MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS

TO HELP YOU UNDERSTAND MUSIC BETTER AND ENJOY IT MORE

ON ONE SIDE there is a full performance of a great musical work, just as on the ordinary records you buy. The records will feature orchestras and soloists of recognized distinction in this country and abroad. You listen to the performance first, or afterward, and then . . .

ON THE OTHER SIDE is an illuminating analysis of the music, with the various themes and other main features of the work played separately with running explanatory comment, so that you can learn what to listen for in order to appreciate the work fully.

A NEW IDEA OF THE BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB

ALL TOO FREQUENTLY, most of us are aware, we do not listen to good music with due understanding and appreciation. Our minds wander, and we realize afterward that we have missed most of the beauties of the work. There is no doubt about the reason: we are not primed about what to listen for. MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS meet this need—for a fuller understanding of music—better than any means ever devised. They do it, sensibly, by auditory demonstration.

YOU HEAR MUSIC AS THE GREAT CONDUCTORS HEAR IT . . . On the podium they have in mind at every moment the various themes of the work, their interplay and development, and the main architectural features of the composition. This combined aesthetic and intellectual pleasure is what every music-lover can now acquire through MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS. After hearing several of these records, all the music you listen to is transformed, because you learn in general what to listen for. This enjoyable form of self-education can be as thorough as the Music-Appreciation courses given in any university.

YOU SUBSCRIBE BUT TAKE ONLY THE RECORDS YOU WANT . . . A new MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORD will be issued – for subscribers only – every month. Ultimately all the great masterpieces of music will be included. The announcement about each forthcoming record will be written by Deems Taylor. After reading this descriptive essay you may take the record or not, as you decide at the time. You are not obligated as a subscriber to take any specified number of records. And, of course, you may stop the subscription at your pleasure—at any time!

TWO TYPES OF RECORDS AT A RELATIVELY LOW COST . . . All MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS will be high-fidelity, long-playing records of the highest quality—33⅓ R.P.M. on Vinylite. They will be of two kinds: first, a so-called Standard Record—a twelve-inch disc—which will present the performance on one side, the analysis on the other. This will be sold at $3.60, to subscribers only. The other will be an Analysis-Only Record—a ten-inch disc—priced at $2.40. The latter will be made available each month for any subscriber who may already have a satisfactory long-playing record of the work being presented. (A small charge will be added to the prices above to cover postage and handling.)

TRY A ONE-MONTH SUBSCRIPTION—NO OBLIGATION TO CONTINUE . . . Why not make a simple trial, to see if these records are as pleasurable and as enlightening as you may anticipate? The first record, BEETHOVEN'S FIFTH SYMPHONY, will be sent to you at once—at no charge. You may end the subscription immediately after hearing this record—and keep it with our compliments—or you may cancel at any time thereafter.

As a demonstration

WILL YOU ACCEPT WITHOUT CHARGE

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony

A NEW HIGH-FIDELITY RECORDING BY THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Norman Del Mar, Conductor

Analysis by Thomas Scherman

YOU HAVE HEARD this great work countless times—what have you heard in it? And what may you have failed to hear? This demonstration will show you what you may have been missing in listening to great music.

PLEASE RETURN ONLY IF YOU HAVE A RECORD PLAYER WHICH CAN PLAY 33⅓ R.P.M. LONG-PLAYING RECORDS

MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS R30-1 c/o Book-of-the-Month Club, Inc.
345 Hudson Street, New York 14, N. Y.

Please send me at once the first MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORD, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, without charge, and enter my name in a Trial Subscription to MUSIC-APPRECIATION RECORDS, under the conditions stated above. It is understood that, as a subscriber, I am not obligated to buy any specified number of records, and may take only those I want. Also, I may cancel this subscription after hearing this first record, or any time thereafter at my pleasure, but the introductory record is free in any case.

Mr. / Mrs. / Miss .....
(Please Print)

ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... ZONE ..... STATE .....

MAR 1

The only cotton swabs that give your baby all these benefits

- Sparkling-white Red Cross Cotton
- Splinter-free sticks, polished smooth
- No loose wisps or fuzz; won't twist or slip
- Doctor-recommended size
- 100% sterile, guaranteed by Johnson & Johnson

New JOHNSON'S COTTON BUDS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

and yon. The memory of a glee club singing the sure election of Harrison and defeat of Old Grover, going all out on the chorus—is as clear as the memory of Adlai's scintillant prose. Because Cleveland went back into the White House I—a joyful Democrat—had my face rubbed in sand and my dress torn by ganged-up young sons of Republicans. The word "communist" was unknown, but in a Northern village the word "Democrat" was an actionable synonym. Today Democrats are having their reputations shredded by Republicans. The strategy of political warfare remains constant.

"'By, free-trade baby, 'by, free-trade baby, Good-by, Old Grover, good-by."

We learned in childhood that disobedience meant a sound paddling on the place providentially provided for chastisement. Progressive education today maintains that the little darlings must not be thwarted. We wonder if this may be one reason why so many juveniles are learning in jail the lessons they should have learned in childhood.

We have seen Freudian couches become as common as drugstores. We know the new jargon but refuse to have guilt complexes, preferring the guilty consciences with which we are familiar. We old women had our full share of emotional belly-aches. We supplied our own bicarbonate of soda: a mixture of common sense and an attitude of stand up and take it, damn it. Later we added a grin to the mixture, for we were learning the ability to laugh at ourselves. You do not learn laughter on a Freudian couch. We think they will join Coué and his knotted string in the sewers of time.

We old people are gleams in the eyes of undertakers and headaches to politicians who never know how the silly old things are going to vote. Since for over half of our lives other politicians classified us with idiots as unfit to vote, we feel no remorse about the headaches.

The catechism of our youth taught us that the chief end of man is to glorify God. The psychoanalytical termites have been at work on that old document and we are now told that the chief end of man is sexual proficiency—which has always been the chief end of tomcats.

The skilled mechanic of today, with knowledge of all parts of a car, resembles the old family doctor who treated the body as an entity. As we are products of a mechanical age, when the human machine, with too much mileage on it, is beset with creaks and groans, we wish we could take the old jalopy to the nearest auto-repair shop. We feel we might get a better job for less money!

Of late we have watched the Adamic efforts of men to place on women the blame for their own weaknesses. Eve resurrected herself from her myth to give a modern Adam, Philip Wylie, a sock in the spleen which exploded him into reams of abuse of mom.

Of old age the Sage of Concord wrote: "Old age brings along with its uglinesses the comfort that you will soon be out of it. To be out of the war, out of debt, out of the draught, out of the blues, out of the dentist's hands, out of second thoughts, mortifications and remorses, out of the next winter and high prices." It is amusing to speculate on the list of woes Emerson might compile today. Had he witnessed Hiroshima and found himself a member of a race caught with its cosmical constants down, had he witnessed the frantic, desperate efforts of the race to pull up its atomic pants, perhaps the only item he would retain would be the blues. Sincerely,

ESTELLE AUBREY BROWN

Left Business for Teaching

Willow Grove, Pennsylvania

Dear Mr. Gould: Having tasted both teaching and business, I left business this fall to devote myself to teaching.

Although I certainly shall miss the higher salary, Christmas bonus, free insurance and hospitalization, substantial annual increases and company retirement benefits, I still find the scales tipped in favor of the classroom. The stimulation and gratification in training young minds (and older ones, too, now that I have established an adult-education program at Beaver), the opportunity to grow professionally at a leisurely pace amid pleasant surroundings, plus the broad freedom in planning and executing one's work—these are compensations which add up to a satisfying existence.

Very cordially yours,

WILLIAM W. HASSLER

Can This Marriage be Spoiled?

Chehalis, Washington

Dear Editors: I'm happily married myself, but Can This Marriage Be Saved? gives me a lot to think about and helps me see lots of ways I can make even our marriage a lot happier. Sincerely,

MRS. D. L. HUBERT

There When Needed

Detroit, Michigan

Dear Journal: How many times do we hear the words, "After the children start to school," "After we retire," or "After we buy our house, then we shall do the things our hearts desire."

Our hearts' desire has been and still is a home of our own, but now I am living each day to the fullest and not waiting till "after we get our home."

The reason for this change is that I have just had bulbar polio. The knowledge that all one's well-laid plans can be crossed out overnight awakened me to a new enjoyment of today. I think I'll always say a little prayer of thanksgiving now whenever I run after my little boy or pick up my baby girl.

My letter wouldn't be complete without a boost for the March of Dimes. They are really there when needed!

Polio is a dread word, but it doesn't mean surrender. Look at me; I can run.

MRS. DORIS KOWALL

▶ March of Dimes begins in January. ED.

He Never Underestimated

Durban, Natal, South Africa

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: Mrs. Robinow and I were amused to note the JOURNAL advertisement captioned "Pinned any medals on your wife lately?"

FULTON

Distinguished baking.

Because I did do just this, nearly seven years ago, on our tenth wedding anniversary. A photograph of Mrs. Robinow's medal is enclosed. The initials "D.B.M." on the bar stand for "Distinguished Baking Medal." Yours sincerely,

RICHARD F. ROBINOW

Moving Advice

West Middletown, Ohio

Dear Editors: We've been married seven years. In that time we've lived in four towns, nine houses (or apartments) and Bill has had four jobs. Now we are back in Ohio and the young fellows my husband works with and their wives are from Canada, China, New York and Virginia. Others have moved so often they no longer call anyplace special home.

The thing we've learned is to laugh at etiquette's idea that you mustn't call on neighbors till you've been called on or invite in the settled folks till they invite you. People are wonderful, but they're shy and lazy. If they don't come around in a week, go to them or you'll deny yourself the richest experience you can have in life. Sincerely,

DOROTHY D. BRICKNER

New!

RICHER LATHER! INSTANT RINSING! SHINY-CLEAN HAIR! YET THIS NEW SHAMPOO NEVER, NEVER DRIES YOUR HAIR!

New Woodbury Shampoo

FOR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

Any good shampoo will clean your hair. But here is a shampoo that not only cleans hair thoroughly and leaves it shiny and pretty, but also protects it from drying out. There's a special ingredient in New Woodbury Shampoo which helps preserve your natural hair oils. You can set your hair just the way you want it, right after washing. It will look wonderful!

New Woodbury lathers abundantly, even in hard water, and it rinses quickly. You won't need special rinses. We don't know of any better shampoo, but we do know that New Woodbury is so popular that it can be priced much lower than other quality shampoos. Try it right away. Enjoy the clean, happy feeling of a really good shampoo!

Suddenly You Look

Radiant!

Gone are hateful blemishes —your skin is baby-soft!

This happens to you when you give up your usual face-washing routine and start using Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Usually in just 7 days people begin saying, "What have you done—you look simply wonderful!"

Gone are hateful blackheads, externally caused pimples, flaky dryness, oily shine. Your skin is fresh, clear and radiant.

No other skin preparations can do just what Cuticura does, for Cuticura contains a secret blend of softening and medicated ingredients that have gained widespread medical recognition and world-wide renown.

Only Cuticura Soap—of all leading soaps—is superfatted to maintain the natural moisture and normal, healthy acidity of the skin. Only Cuticura Ointment contains its special blend of ingredients that soften and gently stimulate as they quickly help clear up imperfections.

Used by hundreds of doctors and by certain leading hospitals, Cuticura—in clinical tests—relieved 8 out of 10 acne cases, all without a single allergy resulting!

No wonder so many thousands of happy girls and women are thrilled with Cuticura results! Do get Cuticura Soap and Ointment today. Also available in Canada.

Cuticura

Proved Way to Lovelier Skin

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Especially Me makes New Year resolutions re rabbits.

JANUARY is not an easy month in New England; nobody would pretend that it is. The skies are dark and brooding, cold winds thunder in from the north like wild horses with manes flying free, windows rattle, doors bang open. But when we come in with freezing mittens and galoshes colder than dry ice, how sweetly the fire burns on the hearth and how lovely the African violets look on the window sills. The pale rosy pink, the snow-drop white and the delicate amethyst make us feel suddenly we are in a small tropical world.

When the roads are too icy to drive on, we have a sudden feeling of being marooned in a secure firelit sanctuary. Jill takes off happily to the darkroom to make a few extra prints and I get in a polishing mood. I sit at the high counter in the kitchen and watch the steep winter sky darken and come close, like a gigantic winter gull drifting down. The new copper and silver polishes are simply a joy, and as I do my cherished grandmother's teapot, I think it shines like summer!

Then in late afternoon we bundle up and run out with the dogs at our heels and fill the bird feeders again. The chickadees sit and wait, scolding in a nice kind of way. The woodpeckers run circles around the sugar maples and the air is suddenly full of chatter and life.

My little favorite chickadee is back again, the one with the bent wing. Extra peanut butter for him. He cocks his black-capped head at me as I fix his dinner, and rocks back and forth, and chats busily. I talk back, and I imagine that we understand each other very well. Jill says darkly the next thing we know, we shall be making a house bird out of that chickadee!

Our water pipes always freeze when the temperature gets below zero. Knowing this, I think my housekeeping has improved, for at night I wash every dish, tidy up the kitchen, make the breakfast coffee the last thing. Water the violets. If I wake up in the night, I run out and turn the faucets on, just to see!

And then I wake in the silvery morning light to hear Jill, controlled but fierce, telling Cliff the pipes are gone again! It is one of the side effects of an old house. The pipes are just where they had to be and they are not geared to heavy cold.

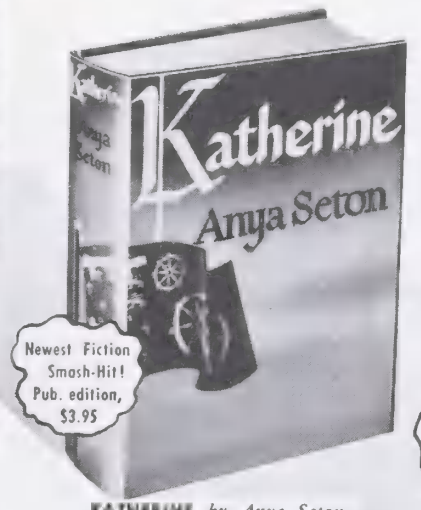
Some people tell me we ought to live like pioneers part of the time, just to appreciate modern conveniences. I, however, feel I appreciate them anyway. And it is hard to switch from a completely present-day setup to one of sixty years ago all at a moment's notice. When the electric goes off, as we say in our valley, we grope for the dusty oil lamp and find it has no wick. We wonder where the old dishpan went to after the dishwasher took our lives over. The water pail turns out to be full of potting soil for the house plants.

And it takes quite a time to get the fireplace right for the bacon and eggs. Then we normally use an electric coffee maker. The ancient drip pot is somewhere around, but nobody knows just where—maybe with the picnic equipment from last summer?

We do have two wonderful aids for nonmechanical cooking. Phil and Bibi Thomson gave us a thing that looks rather like a small clothes rack. In fact, they gave one to another friend who used it to dry nylon stockings on! It is a metal rack which holds a toaster or steak grill at any of three different heights from the fire in the fireplace. Now we never have to sit and burn ourselves up while balancing the toaster precariously on a green log. Steak or hamburgers go in the toaster, the handle hooks on the rack and we sit back and eat stuffed olives and pickled mushrooms while the dinner is on.

The other lovely invention is a charcoal grill which is modeled on the Japanese charcoal brazier. It is round, it has a handle, you can set it on the hearth and cook over a good charcoal fire and it does not smoke. Don't ask me why, but it doesn't. During our last hurricanes, we got a good many meals on this portable brazier and they were delicious. It uses very little charcoal, and the fire is absolutely even. The insulated container for this affair makes a good carrying case for picnic supplies in summer.

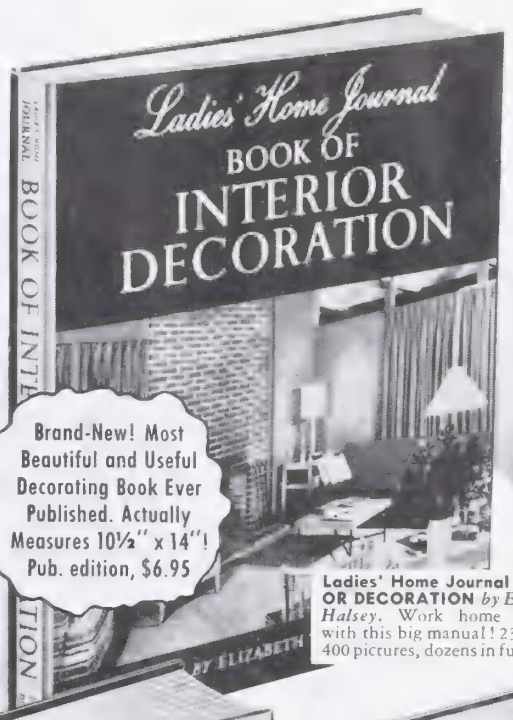
CONTINUED ON PAGE 118



Any Three

of these fine new books

(Value up to $22.90 in publishers' editions)

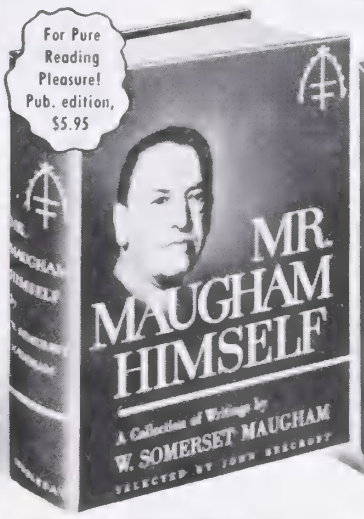


yours for only $2.00

when you join the Literary Guild and agree to take as few as 3 more selections during the coming year

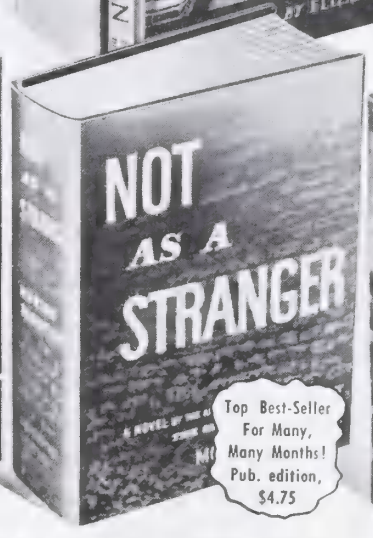
Newest Fiction Smash-Hit! Pub. edition, $3.95

KATHERINE by Anya Seton. Newest best-seller by the author of Dragonwyck—a novel about Katherine of England and the love affair that changed history.



Brand-New! Most Beautiful and Useful Decorating Book Ever Published. Actually Measures 10½" x 14"! Pub. edition, $6.95

Ladies' Home Journal INTERIOR DECORATION by Elizabeth Halsey. Work home miracles with this big manual! 237 pages, 400 pictures, dozens in full color!



#1 Fiction Best-Seller! Pub. edition, $3.95

LOVE IS ETERNAL by Irving Stone. New #1 best-selling novel . . . the true love story of Abraham Lincoln and Mary Todd. By the author of Immortal Wife.

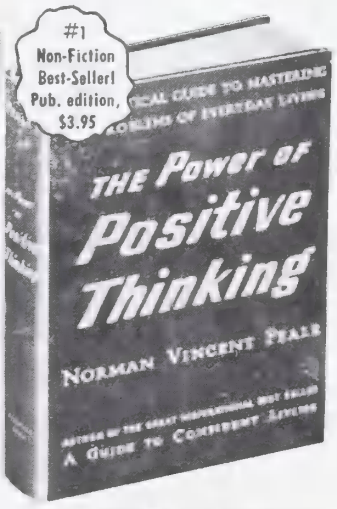
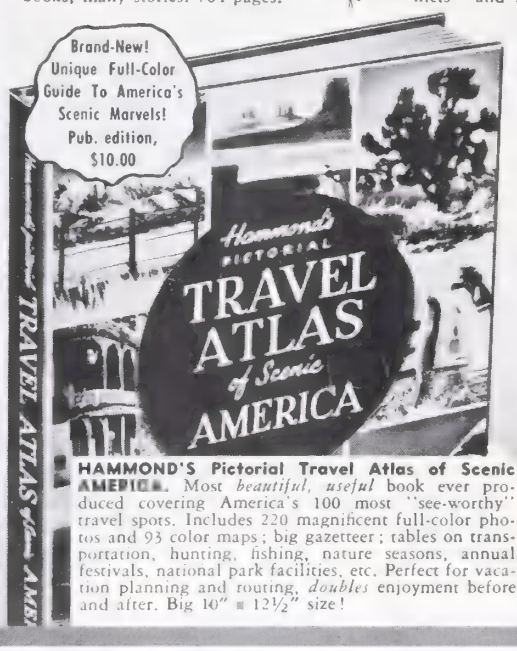
For Pure Reading Pleasure! Pub. edition, $5.95

MR. MAUGHAM HIMSELF. The great story-teller's best works that reflect most intimately the man himself. Includes 2 books, many stories. 704 pages.



Top Best-Seller For Many, Many Months! Pub. edition, $4.75

NOT AS A STRANGER by Morton Thompson. Powerful story of the making of a doctor . . . his loves, ambitions, conflicts—and strange temptation.



Ninth Edition of America's Basic Cook Book . . . Famous For Over 30 Years!

THE NEW FANNIE FARMER COOK BOOK. Favorite for all occasions; completely modernized with 3,000 recipes. Menus, charts; 160 new drawings!

#1 Non-Fiction Best-Seller! Pub. edition, $3.95

THE POWER OF POSITIVE THINKING by Norman Vincent Peale. An inspired thinker gives us the rules that work to win love, success and happiness.

Brand-New! Unique Full-Color Guide To America's Scenic Marvels! Pub. edition, $10.00

HAMMOND'S Pictorial Travel Atlas of Scenic AMERICA. Most beautiful, useful book ever produced covering America's 100 most "see-worthy" travel spots. Includes 220 magnificent full-color photos and 93 color maps; big gazetteer; tables on transportation, hunting, fishing, nature seasons, annual festivals, national park facilities, etc. Perfect for vacation planning and routing, doubles enjoyment before and after. Big 10" ■ 12½" size!

Pub. edition, $5.00

AMY VANDERBILT'S COMPLETE BOOK OF ETIQUETTE. Your way to be socially correct always, in all things you do. Over 700 fact-crammed pages!

Pub. edition, $3.95

HAMMOND'S New Supreme WORLD ATLAS. Top-notch all new atlas; 100 maps in full color, latest Census figures. Measures 9¾" ■ 12¾" in size!

The Literary Guild's Greatest Offer In 27 Years!

THE Literary Guild wants you to share with its nearly one million readers these advantages of membership: SAVINGS up to 50% on the important novels and best-sellers you want to read; valuable FREE onus Books; your choice of the best books as soon as they are published. For example, during the past few onths our Club members have received five new national best-sellers!

OW THE GUILD OPERATES. Each month our editors select from all the novels submitted by publishers e one best book—which is then fully described in "Wings", the illustrated magazine members receive ch month. These books are regularly priced at $3.50, $3.75 and even $4.00—yet as a Guild member u get them for only $2.00 each, plus shipping. (Occasional extra-value selections are offered at $2.50.) you don't want the selection, you choose an alternate or tell us not to send any book. It isn't necessary accept a book every month; you can take as few as four a year, and you will receive a FREE Bonus ook for each four books you accept. You pay postman nothing; your bill is due later. You may cancel our membership at any time after accepting four books.

END NO MONEY—JUST THE COUPON. Why not join now while you can have THREE books (a alue up to $22.90 in the publishers' editions) on approval! You may return them within 7 days and owe othing, or pay only $2.00 for all three and become a Guild member on a trial basis. Then you need accept nly three more books at only $2.00 each during the coming twelve months. So mail the coupon today!

LITERARY GUILD OF AMERICA, INC., PUBLISHERS, GARDEN CITY, N. Y.

MAIL THIS COUPON NOW

Which 3 Books Do You Want for only $2.00

IF YOU JOIN THE LITERARY GUILD NOW

Literary Guild of America, Inc., Publishers
Dept. 1LHJ, Garden City, N. Y.

Please send me at once the THREE books checked below as my Membership Gift Books and first selection, and bill me only $2.00, plus shipping, for all three:

- ☐ Amy Vanderbilt's Etiquette
- ☐ Fannie Farmer Cook Book
- ☐ Hammond's Travel Atlas
- ☐ Hammond's World Atlas
- ☐ Katherine
- ☐ Ladies' Home Journal Interior Decoration
- ☐ Love Is Eternal
- ☐ Mr. Maugham Himself
- ☐ Not As a Stranger
- ☐ The Power of Positive Thinking

Enroll me as a member of the Literary Guild and send me "Wings" every month so I can decide whether or not I want to receive the Guild selection described. My only obligation is to accept four selections, or alternates, per year at only $2.00 each (plus shipping), regardless of the higher publishers' prices. For each four books I accept, I will receive a free Bonus Book—and I may resign my membership at any time after purchasing four books.

SPECIAL NO-RISK GUARANTEE: If not delighted I will return all books in 7 days and this membership will be cancelled!

Mr.
Mrs. .....
Miss (Please Print)

Street and No. .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Selection price in Canada, $2.20 plus shipping. Address LITERARY GUILD (Canada) 105 Bond St., Toronto 2, Ont. Offer good only in U.S.A. and Can.

Outside notice of inside quality!

Hungry youngsters love to see there's soup for lunch... delicious soup, piping hot, made so quickly and easily from the magic in an envelope of aluminum foil. It's the same aluminum foil as the Reynolds Wrap that keeps those made-in-advance sandwiches fresh. It's Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging!

There's nothing so convenient as these modern soup mixes on your pantry shelf. They take so little space you can always have a wonderful assortment on hand. And they stay fresh indefinitely ...because the aluminum keeps in all the flavor and nourishing goodness, keeps out all moisture and damaging light rays.

Stock up on dry soup mixes. And when you do, notice the Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging. You can tell it by the gleam of the inner or outer surface. And on more and more products you can identify it by the Reynolds Wrap Aluminum Packaging Seal.

Reynolds Metals Company,
General Sales Office, Louisville 1, Ky.

SEE "MISTER PEEPERS," starring Wally Cox, Sundays, NBC-TV Network.

QUALITY PROTECTED WITH REYNOLDS WRAP ALUMINUM PACKAGING
TRADE MARK

STOP ACCIDENTS BE CAREFUL—
the life you save may be your own!

Respect for law begins at home

"Landscape," an etching by Jean Kubota Cassill, from the exhibit, Young American Printmakers, sponsored by New York's Museum of Modern Art. View is sketched from the artist's doorway in Iowa City, etched on copper.

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

SOME time ago an internationally famous pyschiatrist told me the following story, which I recall in his own words:

"Two well-to-do middle-class people, the father a business executive, came to consult me about their only child, a nine-year-old son, who they declared was suffering from a serious 'compulsive neurosis,' which led him to wield the scissors on everything in his home. He had slit the furniture coverings, demolished the draperies, cut his mother's best dresses to ribbons, and finally begun on his father's shirts and suits. The cutting mania had begun some three months before.

"I inquired whether he had previously displayed destructive tendencies. They said, 'Not really,' but confessed that in a temper he would sometimes break dishes or ornaments around the house. I inquired what they had done about it, and they replied that they had both 'reprimanded him very severely,' but that scoldings, and even his mother's pleas and tears, had no effect.

"I said I would like to see Bobby, but not in my office, and not with his knowledge that I was a psychiatrist or a doctor, and they suggested that I drop in for a social call when the boy was at home and I could talk with him as a casual family acquaintance.

"This was arranged and I saw Bobby for an hour or so and drew him out without resistance on a number of subjects—his schoolwork, his teachers, his reading matter and his favorite television programs.

"The next day I had a conference with his parents, who eagerly inquired what I thought was wrong with Bobby, whether I would take his case, and how prolonged I thought the treatment might be.

"I told them that I did not think there was anything seriously wrong with Bobby, and that I would take his 'case' provided his parents would co-operate fully, which they instantly agreed to do.

"'I am not sure you will,' I countered. 'Has Bobby ever been punished?'

"Again they reiterated that he had often been severely reprimanded. 'Doctor, I have wrestled with that boy,' the father almost wept.

"'And it hurt you and his mother a good deal more than it did Bobby,' said I. 'Well, now, you, Mr. X, go home and tell Bobby you've had all you intend to take. Tell him the next time he cuts or otherwise destroys anything in the house, you are going to lick the pants off him. Don't hide the scissors. And then when he starts again being Jack the Ripper, do so—give him a hiding.'

"The parents were flabbergasted. They were, in fact, outraged. 'Do you think that will cure Bobby?' the mother said scornfully. 'No one has ever lifted a hand to that child. We believe in love.'

"'So do I believe in love,' I replied, 'but love is a two-way street, and as far as children are concerned, it includes respect. Bobby is a perfectly normal boy. He is bright, healthy and full of energy. But he has no respect for either of you. And because he has none for his own father and mother, he also has none for his teachers or any other authorities.'

"'But why,' moaned his mother, 'does he do such things? There must be a reason.'

"'He does them to assert his own power—his ego. He does them to challenge you. There is nothing psychologically abnormal about that. All children challenge authority. What is abnormal in this situation is that he gets away with it. He knows that you are bigger and stronger than he, and that you are highly respected in the adult community. Nevertheless, he, little Bobby, can destroy your possessions, drive you frantic, reduce you to helplessness.'

"'If I give him, as you recommend, a hiding, do you think that will stop him?' the father asked.

"'Not the first time. The warning that you will do so will roll right off him. He won't believe you. Then when you do it, he will be furious—he will hate you for the time being, and he will destroy something again, partly out of revenge, partly to test whether you really mean business. Then lick him again. I think it will take three lickings—then he will stop.'

CONTINUED ON PAGE 127

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Antoinette Bacchetta, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey

SAVE MONEY TODAY

Save Bed-

Treat yourself to the sheets that slip on in less than a minute... never wrinkle, never come un-tucked —the sheets millions of women love, love, love —— famous

Pacific Contours

3-times faster bedmaking!

- One trip around makes your bed!
- Ready-boxed corners slip on easily, quickly
- No more centering as with flat sheets
- No more hand-folding corners
- No more un-tucked sheets in the morning . . . Pacific Contours can't come loose!

More sizes for more beds!

- Twin and double innerspring mattresses
- Twin and double foam rubber mattresses
- Three-quarter bed
- Youth bed
- Crib

Four superb qualities!

- Lovely Combed Percale—5 colors as shown
- Sturdy Extra-strength Muslin—white only
- Economical Truth Muslin—all colors except lilac
- New! Miracale† — the most luxurious sheet you ever dreamed on!—over 210 mercerized threads to the inch! White only

†TM Pacific Mills

Now! Colors with a plus!

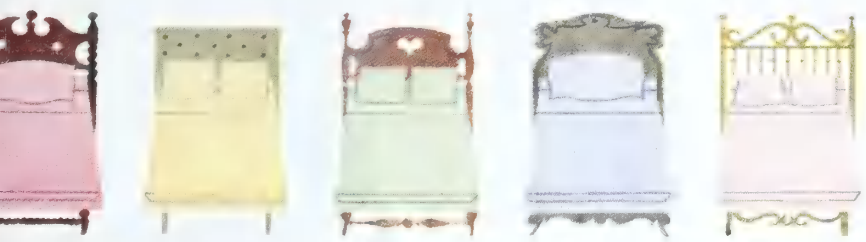
- Different from most bedding, Pacific sheets and pillowcases match exactly!
- Different from most pillowcases, Pacific cases are Sanforized®—have the same exquisite sheen and texture of Pacific Sanforized sheets
- Now—no more slightly-off shades to spoil your bed's smart look!

GET YOUR PACIFIC CONTOURS NOW— AT LOW, LOW WHITE SALE PRICE

making Bother Every Day

Each day, you tidy Pacific Contours in just 20 seconds!

Stopwatch test by York Research Corporation shows—average time to remake a morning bed, twin size, with flat sheets is 79.4 seconds . . .



. . . with non-wrinkling, can't-come-untucked Pacific Contour sheets—average time to remake bed is only 20.3 seconds!

BEDS COURTESY OF RICHARD WHEELWRIGHT

Sounder sleeping for millions! Go to bed on a smooth sheet . . . wake p on a just-as-smooth sheet! There's not a chance for a Pacific Contour ottom sheet to bunch up under you. Four fit-the-mattress corners hold sheet mooth all week! Try it—you won't ever want to sleep on any other sheet!

Extra toe-room! Only the Pacific Contour Top* sheet has this expansion Kick-fold. Husbands love the way it balloons up six inches—gives plenty of wiggle space for freedom-loving toes! Women love the way a pull at the top hem tidies the bed in just 20 seconds! *Pat. pend.

ose pink— rings out the ch, warm tones f mahogany

Maize— wonderful with the new bleached woods

Mint Green— perfect for yellow-toned maple

Blue— decorator's choice for walnut

Lilac— favorite for antique brass beds

Everybody's changing to

PACIFIC Contour® SHEETS

"Contour" is the registered trademark for Pacific's mattress-fitting sheets

Make your own drapes!

Decorator Drapery Fabrics

only $1 a yard

Free instructions. New* PLEAT-A-MINUTE, *concealed, self-pleating drapery heading, available exclusively through us. Easy to use, professional results.

Carabao Shantung Weave Fabric $1 a yard (pictured above)

We have sold over a million yards of this wonderful drapery fabric. Cross dyed to give a dramatic two-tone textured effect, you can't see through it although light comes through. Perfect for panel or draw drapes, can be lined. Grey, Beige, Lime, Rosedust, Turquoise, Cocoa, Gold, Mint Green, Hunter Green, Seafoam, Celadon, Red, Off White. 44" wide. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Nubby Weave Fabric $1 a yard

A new dull-finish fabric with exquisite texture when the light comes through. Thoroughly tested, hangs beautifully in draw drapes or panels. Subtle decorator colors. Turquoise, Spruce, Seafoam, Lime, Leaf Green, Light Beige, Fawn Beige, Rosebeige, Tearose, Cocoa, Ice Pink, Rosedust, Ashrose, Natural, Straw, Gold, White, Grey. 45" wide. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Textured Weave Fabric $1 a yard

A monotone textured fabric for draw drapes, panels, one of our customers' favorites. Eggshell, Lime, Wine, Beige, Leaf Green, Grey, Gold, Brown, Celadon, Red, Lemon, Ashrose, Hunter Green. 45" wide. Send for swatches, information.

Carabao Sheen Weave Fabric $1 a yard

An interesting new fabric—please send for swatches to see how lovely it is. For draw drapes, panels. Red, Celadon, Brown, Eggshell, Gold, Hunter Green, Beige, Lime, Wine, Driftwood, Ashrose, Lemon, Leaf Green. 45" wide.

Carabao Metallic Print Shantung Fabric $1 a yard

Printed with gleaming, non-tarnishable silver and gold. Hand washable, for draw drapes, panels. Hunter Green, Dusty Rose, Gold, Grey, Copper, Seafoam, Beige, White. 41" wide. Send for swatches.

Custom Made Drapes

approx. $1.50 a yard

We will custom make drapes to your window measurements from any of the above fabrics, lined or unlined. Send for complete information, directions for measuring.

Send 25¢ for swatches of all colors of all five fabrics.

Money back guarantee

CARABAO
SPECIAL PRODUCTS COMPANY

950 COLUMBUS,
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF
DEPT. KJ7

Send for complete information, prices, directions for measuring.
CARABAO SPECIAL PRODUCTS COMPANY, Dept. KJ7
950 Columbus Avenue, San Francisco, California
Send me information. ☐ Enclosed is 25¢ for swatches.
(please print)
Name_____
Address_____
City and State_____

OUR FIFTH YEAR OF SELLING DIRECT BY MAIL

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"Sure I know the value of a dollar. That's the reason I asked for two."

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN—a farseeing man with a sense for money—was born in Boston January 17, 1706. When he died in 1790 he bequeathed to that city the sum of $5000, with the stipulation that at the end of 100 years a certain percentage of the accumulated fund be spent for some public work.

In 1906 this was done. With the part of the fund specified, the Franklin Technical Institute was built. It cost $438,492, and is now worth over $1,000,000. At the end of 1950, the second part of the fund amounted to $1,043,980. Today it totals $1,137,185 plus, and by the end of the 200-year period should amount to $3,405,502.

He left the same sum to Philadelphia. But Philadelphia, we hear, hasn't done so well.

•

Speaking of Philadelphia, Judge Curtis Bok with four other men sailed 3300 miles across the ocean last summer in a small sailboat, Alphard, from Camden, Maine, to Burnham on Crouch, Essex, England. They never were really comfortable, and in face of their seafaring duties politics and the law blew away like mists before a fresh breeze. The depth of the ocean, the vastness of the sky, the consciousness of the point of no return, enriched their reveries. What fascinated Judge Bok most was navigation. He did the navigating himself, and when the little boat arrived—by dead reckoning—within seven miles of its landfall on the other side of the Atlantic, he was modestly surprised and profoundly satisfied.

•

A book I've just read, BABY SITTER'S GUIDE, by Dennis the Menace (Bob Harmon and Hank Ketcham) is strictly for laughs—though they may be fairly grim laughs from certain parents and most baby sitters.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

FROM BABY SITTER'S GUIDE, BY DENNIS THE MENACE (HOLT)

"See? That's why you should never hit a girl!"

Sally Ross tells you why Pream is a joy to cook with, too!

FOR Cream Sauce

Easiest, best way yet to make this basic sauce perfectly—without a single lump!

FOR Smooth Gravy

No lumps ever—and so luscious—when you follow the delicious, easy Pream recipe!

FOR Creamier Soup

For richer flavor, add 3 or 4 tablespoons of Pream to your favorite canned soup.

New easy, thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

THE DELICIOUS 100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN POWDERED FORM

Not a substitute! Pream is a true dairy product—made entirely from fresh, sweet cream and other milk products—powdered for convenience. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! Keeps indefinitely while sealed. When opened for regular use, it stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful on kitchen shelf or in your refrigerator!

So economical! Pream costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! When you Pream your coffee, every cup contains only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream.

Instant dissolving! Just put a spoonful of Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir . . . and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

SEND FOR FREE RECIPE FOLDER

Simple, fast Pream ways to make these three standbys more luscious—plus dozens of other work-saving Pream cooking ideas—are yours in the exciting new Pream Recipe Folder! Just fill in and mail this coupon, now!

To: Sally Ross, Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

Street_____

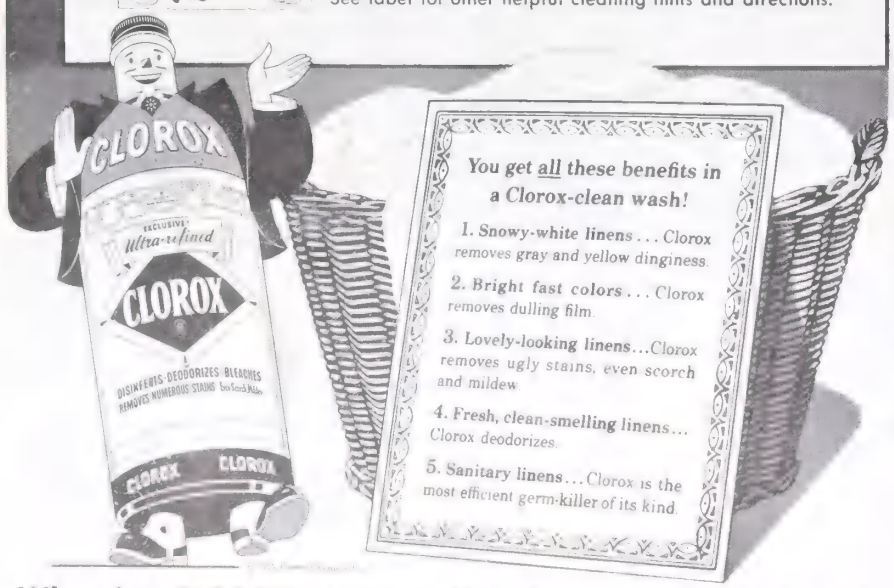
City_____ Zone_____

State_____

Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska, and Hawaii.

© 1954, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

... and your family gets more health protection from a CLOROX-clean wash!



CLOROX makes linens more than white... it makes them sanitary, too!

No other home laundering product does as good a job of protecting health as Clorox... the most efficient germ-killer of its kind! And your own eyes tell you your white cottons and linens are snowy-white when they are Clorox-clean. For Clorox removes dinginess, stains, even scorch and mildew!

Clorox leaves cottons and linens... including diapers... fresh smelling, even when dried indoors, because Clorox deodorizes. Also, Clorox is extra gentle, free from caustic... made by a patented, exclusive formula. And there are no gritty particles in Clorox, a liquid, to damage your wash or washing machine.

And CLOROX is easy and economical to use in routine cleaning, too! Besides deodorizing and removing stains from kitchen and bathroom surfaces, Clorox also disinfects... protects family health. And, Clorox does all three jobs without scrubbing. Hundreds of public health departments recommend the Clorox type of disinfection. See label for other helpful cleaning hints and directions.

When it's CLOROX-clean... it's SAFER for family health!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

In these days of mass entertainment, mass reading, mass information, it is soul-cleansing to get a glimpse of the solitary spirit. This happens when we read poetry. We also get the same kind of revelation in Ellen Glasgow's autobiography, THE WOMAN WITHIN. Ellen Glasgow died in 1945, and no one in her lifetime read the manuscript of this book. She wrote it off and on from 1936 to 1943, and when it was finished put it in a safe-deposit vault, not to be opened until after her death.

"This rough draft," she begins, "was written in great suffering of mind and body, and the work is as true to actual experience as I have been able to make the written word." Artists—especially women artists—will find it heartbreakingly real.

•

An ideal book for a young mother still in the hospital is MOTHER AND CHILD, a book of dreamlike pictures, with text, by Nell Dorr. They are quiet pictures, apart from the world, as a mother with her child is apart. They give you pause. What kind of mother have I been, anyway? you ask yourself.

COPYRIGHT, 1954, BY NELL DORR (HARPER & BROS.)

Love is a baby's natural right.

•

THE CORNERSTONE is an amazing historical novel. It is by Zoé Oldenbourg, author of THE WORLD IS NOT ENOUGH, and I can pay it no greater praise than to compare it to my two favorite historical novels, KRISTIN LAVRANSDATTER, by Sigrid Undset, and THE CORNER THAT HELD THEM, by Sylvia Townsend Warner. Both are novels of the Middle Ages, one in Scandinavia, the other in England.

THE CORNERSTONE is the Middle Ages in France and the Holy Land. It includes a Crusade and a wide panorama of people from all walks of medieval life. Their way of living and loving and playing and fighting seems incredible, but as we read this book we know that it is true.

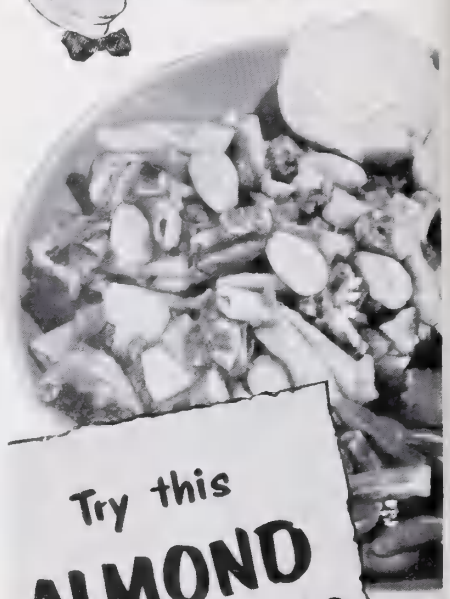
•

DOGS AND PEOPLE, by George and Helen Papashvily, is as much Papashvilys as it is dogs, and on both counts it is delightful. (You remember Thanks to Noah that appeared in the JOURNAL.) This present book is for use as well as entertainment. It gives excellent advice about teaching dogs, breeding them, feeding them, and contains a fabulous store of stories.



Maybe you know about the dog in Albany that wandered into the post office as a puppy and was adopted by the mailmen. He was a rover by instinct, so the mailmen gave him a collar and let him take round-trip excursions on mail cars. He visited every state in the Union, Mexico and Can-"Almonds make the dish"

says Trader Vic

famed San Francisco restaurateur.

HERE'S A hearty, tasty treat, protein-rich and thrifty, too. See how crunchy almonds give the "flavor-lift" that makes it a family favorite. A happy meal for 6.

1 lb. ground beef or hamburger
1 medium-sized onion, diced
1 green pepper, diced
1 tbsp. oil
2 (8-oz.) cans tomato sauce
¾ cup roasted almonds, diced
1½ tsp. salt
1 (8-oz.) pkg. macaroni
1 cup grated sharp Cheddar cheese
⅓ cup milk

Brown meat, onion and green pepper in oil; add salt and tomato sauce. Cover and simmer 20 minutes. Cook macaroni in salted water 15-20 minutes. Combine with meat mixture. Stir in cheese, milk, almonds, and turn into casserole. Bake in moderate oven (350°) 20-30 minutes.

Win Compliments with Almonds

Crispy almonds perk up everyday dishes and glorify desserts. Try roasting the natural kernels (not blanched) 20 minutes in a slow oven. Use 1 teaspoon butter per cup of meats. Salt some for nibbling. Chop the rest for cooking and toppings.

Buy Blue Diamond almonds shelled or in shell, or try Blue Diamond Buttered Almonds, ready-roasted-and-diced.

For free recipe booklet write California Almond Growers Exchange, Sacramento, Cal.

ada. Finally one August day the postal authorities tied a letter of introduction on his collar and started him around the world alone. He went to Tacoma, to Japan, to Shanghai, to Singapore, through the Suez Canal, to the Azores, and when his boat landed in New York he caught the first express north and trotted into the Albany post office just 132 days after he left it!

•

Bird songs have been recorded many times, but no record that I have heard is a match for SONGBIRDS OF AMERICA, by Arthur Allen and Peter Kellogg, working with the Cornell Laboratory of Ornithology. These are the songs of 24 North American birds with explanatory remarks that help fasten the songs in your mind, plus pictures of each bird in color with full description.

•

You know about ham radio operators. But did you know that Columbus, Ohio, has a club of twenty-five hams, all of them blind? Over half of them have already got their licenses, which means passing a Government test, and they are prepared to help in any emergency—fires, floods, blizzards. "Their ability to remember is uncanny," says William Jenney, the telephone-company engineer who singlehandedly is responsible. He conceived the idea of teaching the touch system to the boys at the Columbus State School for the Blind. All who wanted to learn it were eligible.

•

SONG OF THE SKY, by Guy Murchie, is a glowing tribute to navigation—the navigation of Arabs journeying across the desert, of American Indians moving through the forest, of the sea and the air. But it is much more. The author has been a navigating officer on transport planes flying across the ocean, and this is his aerial view of the currents of air, of winds, of thunderstorms, snow, fog and the strange eerie sounds of the sky. It is an alluring, almost sublime, combination of scientific fact and the thoughts and fancies and fantasies of a man whose life is spent high above the earth. SONG OF THE SKY does for the air what THE SEA AROUND US did for the sea.

•

YOUR DEAFNESS IS NOT YOU, New Design for Deafness, by Grace Barstow Murphy, is a heartening book. Mrs. Murphy is the wife of Robert Cushman Murphy of the Bird Department of the American Museum of Natural History. She has lived in the shadow of deafness since she was ten years old and has been completely deaf for the past four years. Yet she has kept up with music and the theater, and has gone to the far corners of the world on scientific expeditions with her husband.

Beethoven, completely cut off from the world of sound, always seemed one of the great cosmic tragedies. Now I see that Daumier, French caricaturist supreme, though he lived to be seventy-one, was blind from forty-five on.

•

DAUMIER, Caricaturist, by Henry James, is a charming little book, exquisitely printed, illustrated in color, published in London but obtainable here from the Rodale Press, Emmaus, Pennsylvania, $1.25. It is one of a series called The Miniatures, and if you are on the lookout for the unusual—small scale and far removed from the worrisome present—send for the prospectus.

•

My choice for biography over a stretch of months is MELBOURNE, by Lord David Cecil. Melbourne's private life was lively if not significant, and his accomplishments as Prime Minister under Queen Victoria left something to be desired, but his personality was pleasing and this picture of the nineteenth century in England through which he moved is deeply nostalgic. We're nostalgic for that fabled day of peace and security and solidity—a state of being which most of us have never known and which it is probably our destiny never to experience.

•

Just for laughs is LIGHT ARMOUR, Playful Poems on Practically Everything, by Richard Armour—on Males and Females, Hosts and Hostesses, Guests and Guestesses.

SO SOON?

Our guests are about to go—
That is, they're all set to start
To plan to prepare to get ready
To begin to commence to depart.

•

If you know anyone staying in Miami this winter who happens to have an interest in art, you should tell her about the Terry Art Institute. It is a nonprofit organization started as a living war memorial by the mothers and fathers of Dade County boys who were lost in World War II. From an investment of $487, it has grown to be the largest art institution in the South. Besides Fine Arts, it teaches Commercial Art, Art in Advertising, Interior Decorating, Costume Design, Fashion Illustration. It also owns and operates the Negro Art Institute in Miami.

END

RODIN'S SECRET

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

We walked through the museum. The day was cold Though Titian was warm and Picasso bold.
Our steps fell hollow. The armored knight
Leveled his lance and spoiled for a fight.
And there in the cloister where the fountain fell
I wanted to stop—but I could not tell
What your thoughts were.
Stiffly you turned, you said,
"Perhaps the sculpture?" I nodded my head.

The statues were blind. We walked apart
And the cold of the day was touching my heart
When there, in the corner, just before my heart broke,
We saw the Hands. And the hard rock spoke.
Perhaps I trembled, or gave some sign . . .
For somehow you smiled, and your hand found mine.

Holiday Time is TANGERINE TIME!

Tangerines—Florida's holiday treat-to-the-nation—are at your grocer's. They've never been sweeter and juicier—never more full of deliciously different Tangerine flavor!

Just zip off the peel and Florida Tangerines are ready to eat. Plump sections pop apart at the touch. Perfect for lunch boxes, snacks and desserts. Bringing Golden Vitamin C and energy for these busy days when you use it up so fast.

The season's short and sweet; buy Tangerines today!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

The champagne of juices comes from sweet, distinctive-tasting Florida Tangerines. Look for it canned on your grocer's shelf or for the concentrate in his frozen food cabinet. Available all year round.

FLORIDA'S "ZIPPER-SKIN" HOLIDAY TREAT

Winter's a wonderful

YOU'LL ENJOY THESE YEA

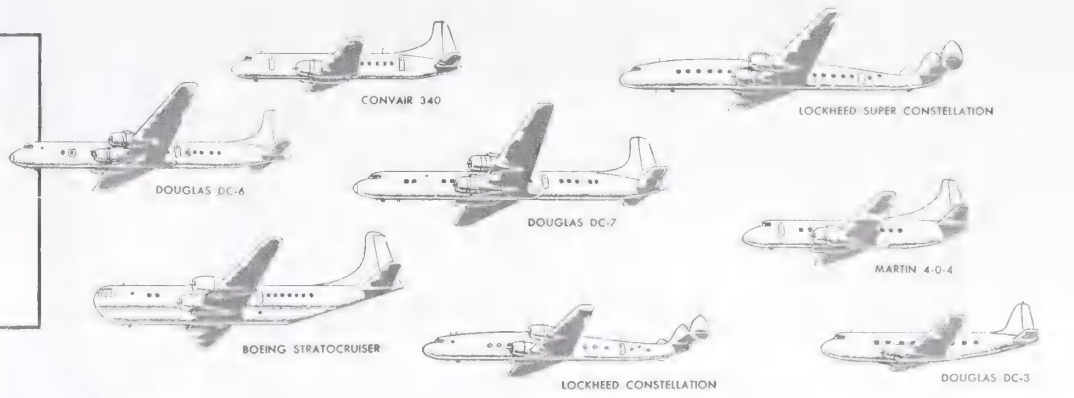
Last year alone nearly 28 million people traveled by air on scheduled airlines in the United States—and more people entered and departed from the United States by air than by any other means. Why this great shift to air travel? Because more and more Americans everywhere are finding that air travel—in winter and every season gives them all the advantages of speed, comfort, safety and econom Ask any airline representative or your travel agent to give you fu details about the wonderful conveniences of winter airline travel.

time to fly...

'ROUND AIR TRAVEL ADVANTAGES EVEN MORE IN WINTER

1. NO ICY ROADS—In the air, you're safer by far than going by car. In fact, American-built air transports have established all-time high safety records on domestic and worldwide routes flying billions of passenger miles in all kinds of weather. Their safety record was 5 times better than by auto and taxi.

2. MANY TIMES FASTER than by the fastest surface travel. Newest sky giants, for example, fly from California to New York in less than 8 hours. Dependable airliners whisk you anywhere, make the most of time. You'll enjoy many extra hours or even several extra days at your destination when you go by air.



3. STRETCH OUT IN COMFORT—Airliners today are designed with you in mind, to provide plenty of room in spacious, air-conditioned cabins. Reclining seats give you "living room" comfort—with attentive personal service, delicious meals and refreshments to make every part of your trip more enjoyable.

4. THRIFTY, TOO—See how much farther your travel dollar will go when you go Airline. All the advantages are yours to enjoy at prices which so often are lower than surface transportation, when you consider berth and meal charges. Family travel plans and air coach or tourist service offer even greater savings.

America's leading airliners are Douglas DC-3s, DC-6s and DC-7s, Convair-Liners, Martin 4-0-4s, Boeing Stratocruisers and Lockheed Constellations. Every type depends on Pratt & Whitney Aircraft engines or Hamilton Standard propellers, or both—products which help make them the finest and most dependable passenger aircraft in all the world.

UNITED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION East Hartford, Connecticut

In Canada: CANADIAN PRATT ■ WHITNEY AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.

Makers of PRATT & WHITNEY AIRCRAFT engines, HAMILTON STANDARD propellers and aircraft equipment, and SIKORSKY helicopters for our armed forces and the finest airlines in the world.

Chatham Blankets America

in a great January Wool Sale

Save money! Buy these 100% wool blankets now.
Now you can have the right size to fit your bed

Look for these sale tags on Chatham Wool Blankets at your favorite store now.

Prices slightly higher in the West

Chatham Manufacturing Company, Mills at Elkin, Charlotte. Spray in North Carolina

When migrant children arrive

...Volunteers are There to Help

Crop Pickers' Dilemma

By MARGARET HICKEY

MOTHERS know that their growing boys and girls need the vitamins that tree-ripened fruits and garden-fresh vegetables provide. But how many know the human, often tragic story behind the harvesting of these crops so vital to the family's health? Those snappy string beans admired by Mrs. Smith of Main Street may have been picked by a barefoot, undernourished child who has never romped on a real playground or by an older boy unable to write because the family's dusty truck never stopped in one place long enough for him to go to school.

Crop picking is essential work, so migrant families—more than a million of them—move up and down the country, belonging to no town. Their only shelter may be a shanty, a dilapidated barn, an abandoned freight train, or even a chicken coop.

U. S. Children's Bureau studies have produced striking facts about the unhappy conditions of these transient children's lives. One private organization—the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.—has established a program of concrete help.

Last summer, 150 teachers, school principals and ministers, along with another 150 college students, moved into migrant camps in 12 states. They organized child-care centers for the youngest, high-school classes for the older children and adults; arranged Sunday-school and worship services; provided recreational activities for all age groups. All told, they reached an estimated 100,000 migrants.

A typical child-care center, according to Miss Edith Lowry, leader of the home-missions program, provided breakfast, lunch and two between-meal snacks, including always orange juice and cod-liver oil.

High-school instruction followed the quick and effective method of putting over the three R's originated by Dr. Frank Laubach, literacy expert. Pickers learned to read road signs, count money, make telephone calls, use the post office and the bank.

The activities stirred up by the National Council of Churches have encouraged other groups to help. Boy or Girl Scout leaders are undertaking to bring the Scout program to transient children in Colorado, Florida, Michigan, New York and New Jersey. In California, two 4-H clubs have been organized and a State Migrant Committee is under way.

In Wisconsin, the Governor's Commission on Human Rights urges communities to accept the migrants as temporary citizens, grant them the same privileges that others enjoy. Community interest was first aroused in 1949, when Texas-Mexican children were denied use of the swimming pool in the Waupun area. Now both local and visiting children play together on municipal playgrounds under locally sponsored supervision. Churches and organizations put on family-night programs at the camps and Saturday-night fiestas in town, with both migrant and local families attending. END

IT was nearly suppertime when the doctor beckoned Mrs. Martinez into her office. The mother had been there since eleven, cradling the sick baby in her arms and whispering to it softly in Spanish.

"I'm sorry you had to wait so long." Dr. Elfriede Horst spoke slowly, distinctly, to help her understand. She had seen one patient after another all day, still had three house calls to make before giving a talk at her women's-group meeting. "Why didn't you call to let me know you were coming?" she asked. "Then I could have seen you right away."

Mrs. Martinez smiled shyly. She was a small, very young woman with scrawny arms and a thin face that brightened when she looked at the baby. The neat flowered cotton house dress she wore showed plainly she was expecting another child. "I no understand telephone," she apologized. "I wait."

Doctor Horst had heard this same explanation from other wives of Spanish-speaking migrant farm laborers. Many of these Mexican-American families who had left Texas for the summer to pick onions, tomatoes, string beans and corn on farms near Des Plaines, Illinois, did not know how to use a telephone. And they were afraid to try because it was hard to understand and be understood in English.

"What are you feeding the baby?" Doctor Horst asked as she picked up the pale, listless Martinez child, lean and puny for his nine months.

"The formula," his mother answered.

"What formula?"

"The one the doctor give when he is born."

"My goodness!" the doctor exclaimed. "That's not enough for a growing boy." From her desk drawer she took several sample cans of baby foods. "Your baby needs more than just milk," she explained. "Take these and buy more later. Be sure that he eats three times a day." Then she vaccinated the infant against smallpox and gave him his first inoculation against typhoid, tetanus and diphtheria. CONTINUED ON PAGE 73

ARTHUR SHAY

In carefully enunciated English, these Spanish-speaking children of farm workers from Texas recite the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag at the A. A. U. W. Migrant School in Des Plaines, Illinois. With the help of friendly volunteer teachers, they are learning that, though only temporary members of the community, they are citizens too.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D.
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

What makes a man decide he's ready for marriage—when he sees a particular girl?

Are You Qualified for Marriage?

THE sensible girl planning a business career acquires needed skills before seeking a responsible or specialized position. She knows that she must perform the duties she undertakes to hold the job.

But many a girl who wouldn't pretend to be a secretary without typing and shorthand marries without concern for her qualifications as a wife. Granted, tangible skills can be acquired as needed, at home as in business. With common sense and a good cookbook, a bride soon learns to prepare adequate meals, as the beginning typist develops speed with practice.

The important point is that she consider the obligations inherent in marriage, and honestly appraise her capacity to fulfill them, whether they involve specific skills like cooking or intangible qualities of character.

Some girls just don't understand what being a good wife means. This thought came to mind recently when we made several studies among college girls. Though almost all expected to marry, they were concentrating on careers outside the home rather than within. Many who admitted shortcomings as homemakers felt their earning power would compensate. For example, only 18 per cent could cook; the rest explained that their salaries would cover restaurant meals or a servant.

Some men might accept this arrangement, but many would not. In any case, a girl cannot afford to assume that professional ability qualifies her for a successful career as a wife.

Here are some of the attributes of the woman worthy and capable of achieving a happy marriage. How do you measure up?

Her home and family come first. While she is single, the successful young businesswoman has neither need nor inclination for domestic activities. But when she marries, she realizes that she cannot create a home for her husband merely by occupying it with him. She is willing to shop for curtains during lunch hours, to cook an appetizing meal after work, and to attend to major chores over weekends. Unless she would rather quit her job than slight her duties as wife and homemaker, she is better qualified for business than for marriage.

She is adaptable. Marriage is full of frustrations for the woman who cannot adjust to varying situations, circumstances, and particularly to other people. The happy wife adapts her mood to her husband's (she feels like talking, he is uncommunicative), conceals her disappointments (he is too tired for the movie she'd looked forward to), and puts the big chair by the fire where he wants it even though it spoils the effect she planned. Adaptability means more than weakly giving in. Rather it means the ability to understand his needs, to see his point of view, and to identify with him so fully that his wishes are usually hers.

She cultivates homemaking skills. Probably she already has an elementary knowledge of basic household tasks when she marries. She rapidly acquires new skills and improves familiar ones, even though she keeps her job and can afford help. Otherwise she cannot adequately supervise the service she pays for, nor take over in an emergency. Least of all can she appreciate or provide the little extras of beauty and comfort that create an atmosphere of welcome and individuality.

She is responsible. Though the business girl is subject to supervision and correction, as a housewife she is on her own. No one will see if she sweeps dust under the rugs, or hides overdue bills. She can invent an excuse for the makeshift dinner instead of admitting that she played bridge too late.

But it is not personal fastidiousness or fear of detection alone that restrains the responsible wife from such behavior. She performs her tasks faithfully and admits shortcomings honestly because she accepts her obligation to run the house, as she expects her husband to earn the living. The woman who wants a dependable husband proves to him that she herself is trustworthy.

She keeps up with her husband. Her husband's promotions and salary increases bring her new responsibilities and opportunities as well. By improving her household methods, she does a better job, and still has more time for outside interests and activities. She tries new recipes, rearranges the furniture, and invites new friends to dinner. She reads fashion articles, follows sports and tries her luck at a new game. Her development is measured not by a pay check but by her husband's growing admiration, appreciation and love.

Preparing for a business career is commendable in itself. But the career of marriage is a woman's greatest opportunity for happiness. Whether you are single or married, do not neglect or take for granted your qualifications for the role of wife.

Ask Yourself:
"Am I a Responsible Wife?"

Attitudes and feelings, as well as habits and actions, determine how responsible one is. In answering these questions don't give yourself the benefit of any doubt. Then see how you compare with other wives.

Do You:

1. Consider yourself a dependable person?
2. Find it easy to put off chores?
3. Nearly always serve meals on time?
4. Think wives work harder than husbands?
5. Observe a schedule in running the home?
6. Envy wives who hold outside jobs?
7. Stay within your household budget?
8. Often think your husband's demands unfair?
9. Admit and correct your errors and mistakes?
10. Become easily tired or bored with housework?
11. Look to your husband for guidance?
12. Frequently wish you were on your own?
13. Avoid making excuses for yourself?
14. Feel hurt and offended by husband's criticisms?

Odd-numbered questions should be answered "Yes," even-numbered ones "No." If your correct answers total twelve or more, you are more responsible than the average wife. Ten is an average score, eight or below is poor. Studying your incorrect answers may help you see yourself as you appear to your husband.

The Bond of Religion

MANY letters come to us asking for guidance in dealing with conflicts arising out of religious disagreement between husband and wife. The problems presented may arise because they are of different faiths, or because one is more devout than the other.

The counselor knows from research findings as well as from experience and observation that religious differences often cause trouble within the family. But he also knows, as many laymen do not, that religious indifference is more often associated with unhappiness and failure in marriage than religious differences. In our continuing study of more than a thousand married couples, we find that the breakup rate is substantially higher in homes where there is no religious observance than in homes of mixed faith.

Many factors help to explain why religion is a unifying force in marriage. In the first place, divorce is contrary to the spirit of every religious faith, and violates the church laws of many. The belief that divorce is a sin is a deterrent to unwise or hasty marriage, and a formidable barrier to taking the divorce route to escape when the going gets rough.

Second, a selective factor is involved. The person who respects the institution of religion is inclined, by nature as well as training, to respect the institution of matrimony. Regardless of the particular creed, the individual fortified by faith is more apt to be stable, dependable and disciplined than the individual indifferent to religion.

Again, attendance at church and observance of religious customs offer the family frequent opportunities to share experiences. As parents and children worship together in church, they are spiritually united as well as physically close. By its very nature, religion strengthens the bonds of family love and loyalty.

Nor are the social aspects of church to be disregarded. In general, church members are the substantial and worth-while citizens in any locale. By going to church, you become identified with the most desirable elements of the community, rather than with the frivolous or the drifters. Children brought up to attend church are accustomed to value and to seek community approval.

Some parents are reluctant to send their children to Sunday school or church, for fear of forcing on them beliefs not to their later liking. Though parents must decide the question for themselves, let them bear in mind that some knowledge of the Bible, some understanding of what other people believe about God are an essential part of a child's training. Every child needs and deserves religious instruction, whether at home or at Sunday school.

It is not our purpose to urge any particular faith or form of observance. It is our purpose to suggest some of the benefits of religion, to each individual and to family life.

Do You Agree?

Can a wife be physically ill because she is unhappy, or is she unhappy because she is physically ill?

Both may be involved. Each case must be carefully studied to see how much of the illness is physical and how much is emotional.

½ ton a month...

that's how many dishes you do for a family of four. Sounds like you ought to know about new Lux Liquid Detergent

Makes lighter work of dishwashing

If you stacked your monthly quota of dishes-to-do on a scale, they'd weigh over half a ton. That's why you need Lux Liquid—made just for doing dishes fast and easy. It floats grease right off . . . gets plates and glasses sparkling clean.

And there's real economy in Lux Liquid. Just a teaspoonful does a dishpanful . . . one can outlasts several boxes of the leading dishwashing powder. Lux Liquid is almost as mild as Lux Toilet Soap. Incidentally, Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantee Lux Liquid to be as promised, or your money will be refunded.

Get Lux Liquid when you market!

P.S. Women seem to be finding lots of new ways to put Lux Liquid to work. For example, you've discovered it's great for washing the kitchen and bathroom tile, the floors and windows—really fast and easy!

A teaspoonful does a dishpanful

Packed in a can as it should be—with a dripless spout

See the stars on Lux Video Theatre —Thursday nights, NBC-TV Hear them on Lux Radio Theatre —Tuesdays, NBC

IT'S THE NEXT BEST THING TO A DISHWASHING MACHINE

You don't have to stare at your shoes if you're stumped for something to say.

TANA HOBAN

What are you talking about?

THE SUB-DEB edited by Ruth Imler

Boys

He—"Hi!"
She—"Hi!"

And then, probably because you like him a lot and want him to like you, too, you simply can't even think of another word to say, right? Right. It's then that one smile is worth a thousand words. For if you can show him, by your smile, that silence doesn't worry you and that it needn't worry him either, you'll discover that one or the other of you can say something about the class you've just had or the one you're going to next. . . .

A relaxed, easily-moving-from-smile-to-smile conversation with a boy is yours for the remembering that you—and any boy or girl your age—have almost everything in common: school (subjects, problems, schedules, sports, activities), movies, records, books, magazine articles . . . and a lively curiosity to know what the person you think you like is really like!

For instance ——

on a first date: If the boy's new at school (or to you) ask him where he went to school before. What he's taking here. Does he think he'll like it as well as at the other school? What activities he's going out for. With one or all of these questions, you're bound to hit upon a mutual point of interest, so you can have a chat, not a question-and-answer period.

on a second date: Obviously, now he's interested in you. Help him get to know you better by interspersing some comments about yourself with comments about him—not about how wonderful or how bashful and awful you are—but about what cartoonist you think funny or what subject gives you the most trouble in school (arouse the knight in the boy), or tell him that you plan to watch such-and-such a TV show because. . . .

on a twentieth or so date: "Of course I know how to talk to him," you insist. But the truth is that your conversation and your relationship can go stale if you don't make an effort to talk to each other about important things. (Ask any married couple!) If you're together a lot and know each other well, you fall into the habit of a sort of mental shorthand without any real conversation. If you're going steady, ask yourself: When was the last time we talked about a book? A concert? Politics? A problem? Do I know what he thinks about religion? Travel? What he wants to do when he finishes school? Start talking!

at a dance: Take your cue from your partner: if he begins a conversation, respond to it, otherwise there's no need for chatter. When the dance ends you can comment on the music (better, though, to comment on his dancing or at least on how much he seems to enjoy the music!), the decorations or the turnout.

on the telephone: You can refuse a date you simply don't want by saying, "Oh, I'm sorry, but I'm busy Saturday night"—you don't have to tell him you're going to be busy washing your hair; if you really do have a date, and really want one with him, change the inflection of your voice, and your wish may come true: "Oh, I'm awfully sorry, Bob, but I'm busy this Saturday," or "busy this Saturday."

News Adults

If friends of your parents—somehow the ones most likely to ask awkward questions—ask what you're doing in school, tell them; they're only trying to talk about your interests. If you're absolutely stuck for a conversational topic—as when, for instance, the minister stops by for a call and your mother is still out shopping—it's a good bet that he reads the newspapers. (You should too!) You can always talk about current events.

Parents of friends should be easy to talk to because you have so much in common—their sons and daughters. You can talk to them about school ("We're so glad that Katie [the daughter] is class secretary") or about the neighborhood or, again, about the food they're serving.

Parties

If everybody is standing around in tightly knit groups and you're outside (this should virtually never happen if the hostess is on her toes) you can ask the hostess if you can help her. Passing sandwiches among the crowd will give you a chance to break in conversationally. Food, incidentally, is a subject on which any boy can become eloquent and one of universal interest!

If you're the hostess you're supposed to see that everybody is introduced to everybody and that nobody's left alone. If you think the two have anything in common, throw in a clue about one of them. ("Jane, this is Bob Jones. Jane Brown. Bob works for his school newspaper too.")

Try to keep yourself from saying, "I've heard so much about you," when you meet someone dreamy. This may seem like a friendly comment to you, but the other person is taken aback. He wonders, "What has she heard? Who told her? And what can I say now?"

The remark, "My, you've changed!" can be another conversational dead end. When you're meeting someone you haven't seen for a really long time, this leaves him wondering, "What does she mean? How? Do I look or act worse? Better? Or what?"

Conversation

Ice Creators

When someone says to you:
1. What are you doing Friday night?
2. What do you think of Sally Parks?
3. My, you're getting to be quite a grown-up young lady, aren't you?

All you can do is:

1. Say, "Well, my plans are still sort of undecided—why?" Anybody who asks a question like this deserves the old stall. If it's something you want to do, you can accept. If not, you can say, "Well, as I told you, my plans are indefinite—I may be having an out-of-town guest, so maybe you'd better ask someone else."

2. Say, "She seems nice to me. Oh, listen, they're playing In the Mood." Anything to switch the subject. This is a tactless question, and the questioner should learn that you have no intention of gossiping or psychoanalyzing.

3. Smile. Modesty in a young girl is considered charming by older people, and there really is no answer to this except, "Yes, I am."

THEY'RE STILL TALKING ABOUT:

The new birthday cards—in cutout form—that can be hung later as ultramodern mobiles. . . . The "tape-measure ties" made by the Four Leaf Clover Sub-Deb Club, of Hamden, Connecticut. Gals sew tiny jingle bells to each end of a tape measure, then tie them under the collars of their blouses. . . . A twist on a progressive dinner party initiated by the Doodle Bug Sub-Deb Club, of Cranbrook, British Columbia. The girls went to five members' homes for five courses, as usual, but at each house they stayed to do the dishes! . . . The brightest of the new room-brightening accessories—felt scatter pillows made in the colors and shapes of watermelon slices, carrots and half-moons. . . . The Pakistani teen-age girls who were urged by their UN Children's Fund supervisor to select a movie that would be "helpful in their cultural development." Although none of the girls had ever seen a movie, their choice was unanimous and unerring: "How to Marry a Millionaire." . . . The decorating theme of the Emancipation Ball given by the Sub-Deb Club of Pampa, Texas, to welcome full-fledged new members after their tryout period—the balls black balloons, the chains of black and silver paper.

The LIGHT refreshment for today's active people

It isn't the figure skaters, but the skaters' figures that steal the show on the ice these days.

For never were trimness of form, swiftness and grace of movement, more nearly universal. All because this is a generation that has learned it pays, in health as well as in looks, to watch its waistline. Its taste therefore is for lighter, less filling food and drink.

Including Pepsi-Cola, made to suit this modern taste. Never heavy, never too sweet, reduced in calories, today's Pepsi is the modern, the light refreshment for today's active people.

That is why Pepsi-Cola is more popular than ever, no matter what the weather. It refreshes without filling. Have a Pepsi.

Pepsi-Cola

refreshes without filling

9500 SKIN TESTS PROVE . . .

Palmolive Soap Is Mildest! Better for Complexion Care!

BETTER THAN ANY LEADING TOILET SOAP...
FLOATING SOAP...EVEN COLD CREAM!

Skin Specialists Agree: Milder Cleansing is Better for Your Complexion!

A mild soap means: less irritation . . . more gentle cleansing . . . softer, smoother skin. Palmolive brings you all these benefits—yes, Palmolive is better for skin care . . . because it's the mildest of them all. That's why no other leading soap or cold cream gets skin thoroughly clean as gently as Palmolive!

So change today to Palmolive's Beauty Plan . . . gently massage Palmolive's lather onto your skin for 60 seconds, 3 times a day. Rinse; pat dry. In 14 days or less, see if you don't have softer, smoother, brighter skin—that Schoolgirl Complexion Look! You'll find that Palmolive Soap is the mildest of them all—far better for complexion care!

LOOK AT THE FACTS—PROVED BY 9500 SKIN TESTS!

Palmolive Is Proved
Milder than Any Other Leading Beauty Soap or Castile Soap!

Palmolive Is Proved
Milder than Leading White
Floating Soaps or Deodorant Soaps!

Palmolive Is Proved
Even Milder than America's Leading Cold Creams!

PALMOLIVE SOAP HELPS YOU GUARD THAT SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION LOOK!

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

I have two sisters who experience ere pain for an interval between ir periods every month, and I would preciate knowing the probable cause t."

HAVE been having a pain at intervals in right side for a long time, Doctor, and husband insisted that I come to you to if my appendix might be acting up. He a terrible time with his a few years ago I think he must have an appendix com-, if there is any such thing."

he speaker obviously was a woman in twenties. The doctor glanced appraisy in her direction. "Could you be a little e explicit? You say you have this pain at rvals; is it frequent?"

No-o-o, but it is often enough to be a sance."

My next question is one which I ask pracly all my patients. Have you ever had a gnancy interrupted for any cause what-?"

No, Doctor. I've never been pregnant, ough I want to be."

This pain, then—is there anything that ns to precipitate it?"

No, it just comes and goes without any arent rhyme or reason. I never get ough a month without experiencing it."

There is a periodicity to it, then?"

Not with reference to the calendar, but it ns to occur just between my monthly ods."

And how about your cycle? Is it twenty-t days?"

Yes, I can always rely on that."

And the pain comes about in the middle he cycle? That would be about fourteen s after the first day of the previous struation?"

Yes."

How would you describe the pain?"

We-ell, it's a sort of constant cramp, alugh there are intervals of comparative f. It's not so severe, but it is uncomable. It's always on one side, never both, usually does not last more than forty-t hours, although sometimes I have a twinges two or three days before the n becomes constant, which I've learned ccept as a warning."

Is there any bleeding at these times?"

Not as a rule, although once or twice e has been a very little."

"And when did you have your last regular menstrual period?"

"About ten or twelve days ago. I noticed one of those warning twinges this morning."

"Before I have the nurse make you ready for an examination, is there anything more that you can tell me—any other symptoms you recall?"

"The only other thing is that I seem to have a slight vaginal discharge at such times—a white discharge."

"I see. Now, would you go with the nurse, please?"

Returning to the consulting room, the patient said, "I do hope, Doctor, that I haven't been making a fool of myself. It isn't appendicitis, is it?"

"No, I don't believe it is, although the complication which is giving you annoyance has often been confounded with appendicitis, and also with other ailments leading to operative procedures which proved unnecessary."

"You haven't told me yet what is my trouble, Doctor."

"I imagine it will require a bit of explaining. The examination and all you have told me indicate that yours is a case of intermenstrual pain, which the German scientists long ago characterized as Mittelschmerz. The cause of your periodical episodes of pain is the fact that at such times you are ovulating."

"Why should it affect me that way? Isn't that unusual?"

"Not very unusual. The phenomenon affects about five per cent of all women regularly, and I have heard it said that the incidence is much greater. Tell me, have you a clear idea of what ovulation really is?"

"I think I understand about the menstrual cycle, but my idea of the exact process of ovulation is rather dim."

"Well, if you understand the menstrual cycle, you realize that it is simply a circle connecting cellular growth and replenishment within the uterus following the casting off of the old cells by the process of menstruation. It is in the middle of this cycle that ovulation takes place.

"In the structure the ovary is simply a collection of ova held together by connective tissue. When stimulated to activity at the proper time in the cycle, the ova within are thrown into a condition of active development. Each individual egg is contained in a very small sac called a 'follicle.' There are many of these follicles at the start, but by the middle of the cycle one particular one has or Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of nen, containing several chapters which have not ared in the JOURNAL, has been published by Haw-n Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 104

FASHION OF A THOUSAND LIVES

FIRST FOR CAREFREE LIVING

Shelton Stroller

When yours is an active life: on the go fashion is what you want. When you choose Shelton Stroller you're in style for carefree living. An on-in-a-jiffy zipper front invites you to step into it easily. The smoothly woven 100% nylon jersey washes, dries fast, sheds wrinkles, saves ironing! And for beauty of print, Shelton Stroller strolls away with the prize. Sizes 12 to 20, 12½ to 22½. In Aqua with lilac, Gray with coral, Blue with yellow, Beige with teal. About $13.

You'll see Shelton Strollers featured by America's leading stores. For the name of the store nearest you, write us today and receive FREE FASHION FOLIO.

© 1955 SHELTON CASUALS

Shelton CASUALS, DEPT. L1, 1350 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18.

Kotex now comes in this soft grey package

Selected by thousands of women as first choice of many designs—this new Kotex package reflects the quality you've learned to trust. For Kotex* gives you the complete absorbency you need . . . the softness you're sure of. Kotex holds its shape, keeps its comfortable fit; so there is no roping, twisting or chafing.

Moreover, this is the only leading napkin with flat pressed ends to prevent revealing outlines. When you shop, look for the new Kotex package—soft grey, with a graceful K, symbol of highest quality.

MORE WOMEN CHOOSE KOTEX THAN ALL OTHER SANITARY NAPKINS

Your choice of three size
Regular—blue panel; Junior—green panel; Super—ros panel. And with Kotex you' want a new Kotex belt. The go together for perfect comfor

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know,
Editors you like,
and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN January, 1905, a woman waiting for a train in Minneapolis lost her bustle, in which was $500. Shoeshine boys on Broadway were whistling Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie, a new hit, and women welcomed the first vacuum cleaner, called a "suction machine," a monstrous contraption weighing fifty pounds.

Among the many helpful hints in the January, 1905, JOURNAL were How to Sing the German Songs (by Madame Schumann-Heink), The Correct Way to Play the Mandolin, and How a Girl Should Salute a Flag.

"With the holding up of her skirts with one hand, and the engagement of the other hand with a parasol, how should a girl salute a flag?" the JOURNAL asked men high in Army and Navy circles. Some of the answers:

"Have the handkerchief drawn from the belt and hung pendent from the hand at an angle of forty-five degrees."

"Kiss her right hand."

"Make a curtsy to the flag the moment it passes."

"Hold the open palm at the brim of the hat."

"Admiral Schley has an idea entirely his own," comments Editor Bok. "Says he, 'I believe a salute to the flag by the mothers and daughters of our land should be made with the right hand on the heart and the head reverently bowed.'"

"How I Plan a Week's Work Without a Servant: Monday: Rise at five A.M. and go to the kitchen and put on a large apron, sweeping cap and gloves. Remove ashes from the range and make fire. Rub range with strong soapsuds. While teakettle is boiling, begin soaking a boilerful of clothes ——"

"When I sweep, I do not swathe my head in a towel," confides a new bride. "I have cunning mob caps of white lawn, and when I am wearing my blue house gown I pin a blue bow on the cap!"

"Mourning: For the first two months, a black crape veil is worn over the face, reaching to the bust in front and just below the shoulders in back; after this space of time, a black face veil is worn coming to the edge of the chin."

"The perfect gift for mother: Have a telephone put in the house."

SCHNEIDER

Photographer Schneider working out with Swedish Crown Prince Carl.

WHEN Josef Schneider, the famous photographer of children, was telling Tina Fredericks how he managed to get such good pictures of the Swedish crown prince, age 8, by vigorously engaging his attention, Tina asked him what tips he had for our readers who wanted to photograph their own princes and princesses. He gave us these: Under six months there's nothing like mommy burying her hair in baby's tummy, and then withdrawing it, to make the child respond. At twelve months, jiggling a chain of safety pins in front of the child is practically sure-fire; and a little later on you can begin giving the child a bright new silver coin, and quickly taking it back. That will work with any youngster for quite a while to come, said Joe.

Back from all the great galleries of Europe, our art editor, William Fink, whose eye is ever on the alert for art wherever it is to be found, has been enchanting us with descriptions of how English boys decorate the ancient taxicabs they buy to ride around in. One Bill saw was completely pink, painted in perfect imitation of quilting. Another was pasted all over with colorful wine labels, and varnished. Still another tall old, typical London taxi was entirely painted outside to represent a red-brick town-house wall, with Regency chairs inside replacing the seats, and a chandelier hanging from the high ceiling. But the most romantic was the one painted like a little country cottage. It even had a window box in back. "And believe it or not," said Bill, "blooming in the window box were honest-to-goodness geraniums!"

In the South, Middle West and West the preferred hours for weddings are 8:30 and 9:00 P.M.; in the East, it's 4:00, 4:30—or high noon. . . . Four out of ten college students who study to become teachers never enter the teaching profession.

Half of nighttime traffic accidents are due to poor visibility; with proper street lighting, possibly 10,000 deaths and 370,000 injuries could be prevented yearly, a billion dollars or more in property damage saved.

We happened into Nora O'Leary's fascinating Dress Department next to our plain old office, and it was just as pretty Leonie Vernet was trying on what looked to us like an ermine coat and hood. "No, it's not ermine," said Nora: "it's white Orlon fleece, and I'll tell you a secret. I was intending it only for the lining, but it looked so wonderful alone, and felt so warm, I finished it up just like this, for the January cover." . . . So take another look outside at Leonie.

DI PIETRO

Nora O'Leary adjusts Leonie Vernet's "cover-girl" coat.

Among the group Mary Bass was escorting through the Homemaking Department the day certain women of the Human Rights Committee of the U.N. came to have luncheon with Mrs. Gould were a princess from Pakistan, a member of the Norwegian Parliament, the chief medical officer of Copenhagen, the envoy extraordinary of the Dominican Republic, and the first secretary of the Cuban embassy. As we happened by, all these ladies, so diverse in dress, speech and tradition, were fascinatedly watching with one accord as Margaret Davidson demonstrated the very last word in washing machines. Seeing which, we couldn't help thinking how in the world of the mind and spirit, where human rights originate, the universal oneness of women's interest was a unanimous force. So when later at luncheon Mrs. Gould asked what they thought of her husband's conviction that if women were running the world there would be no war, it was not surprising that the agreement was general. It seems that women speak a common language, though they speak in many tongues.

DI PIETRO

Miss Davidson (second from left) and Mary Bass entertain U.N. women.

Anything can happen here, we always say, and had no sooner said it for the umptieth time when Bernardine Kielty came in to tell us she'd just heard the unmistakable song of the Peabody bird outside her window, five hundred feet above Rockefeller Plaza—"The first time since our honeymoon in Maine, many years ago," she said. "It's really the white-throated sparrow," our most ardent bird watcher went on, giving us its song: "Old Sam Peabody, Peabody, Peabody," or flute-like sounds to that effect, and told us about watching bird watchers in Central Park. "Not just John Kieran," Bernardine said, "but loads of people you'd never expect. Karl Menninger, the psychiatrist; Crawford Greenewalt, president of DuPont; Jimmie Cagney, Cornelia Otis Skinner and Fred Allen, too—even though Fred does make fun of bird watching on the air."

She needed something solid, dependable. But until she met this provocative stranger she didn't consider tho

The Lark Shall Sing

"JUNE, a good time to sell," Mr. Milward observed, taking the advertisement and glancing through it rapidly.

"Yes," Jeff agreed. "I thought when I was out there yesterday that the place looked a good deal better now than it did a year ago, when ——"

"Yes, a year," mused Mr. Milward. "It's gone very quickly. Or perhaps"—he glanced at Jeff with something of questioning, something of sympathy in his glance—"perhaps you don't think so?"

"If you mean do I still miss Roselle—then yes, I do," admitted Jeff a little unwillingly. "I was wondering yesterday ——"

"Whether they'll come back?"

"Yes."

Mr. Milward leaned back, folded his hands, and gave the matter some thought. "No," he said at last, "I don't think they'll come back."

It was a sad business, he reflected, to see a splendid family like that breaking up. And he would regret saying good-by to Lucille—perhaps because she was immeasurably his favorite godchild, perhaps because he had been a little in love with her mother, perhaps because Lucille herself was so young and so vital.

The Waynes had gone away for a year. The year was over—but they were not coming back. Lucille would be here this morning to talk over the sale of the house; and, though it seemed incredible, when the visit was over she would go back to Cornwall—to live among people he had never seen and might never see.

Lucille—and the others: Nicholas, his wife's godson; Roselle . . . Simon . . . Julia . . . and then, last of all, Dominic. A fine family, people had always said—healthy, good-looking; all except Julia, that is—and all full of life and spirit and —— Well, no; not all of them. Roselle was a gentle little thing and so was Simon. But the others had spirit enough and to spare. Lucille, perhaps, had too much. He had always warned her about her habit of acting too impetuously, too hastily, but who had ever been able to prevent Lucille from doing anything she wanted to do?

Lucille—even if she was coming only to complete this gloomy business, she would, at any rate, be with them for a few days; and the sight of her would give immense pleasure to himself and to his wife. To Jeff? Perhaps not. Jeff judged Lucille, Mr. Milward thought, a little too harshly. He blamed her for the breakup of the family; he felt that she had sent Roselle away, out of his life. It was not strictly true, but perhaps if Lucille had been a little more patient ——

He studied his son's sturdy shoulders against the window. A fine young man, Jeff. Not outstandingly handsome, perhaps, but quiet and sturdy and reliable. Perhaps he might have CONTINUED ON PAGE 84

Copyright, 1954, by Elizabeth Cadell. This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by William Morrow & Co., Inc.

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

aybe a girl needs other things even more.

• By ELIZABETH CADELL

"Stars, millions and millions of them," he said, enjoying it all. Then, abruptly: "How long have you known your fiancé?"

SHE HAD TO LEAVE HIM BUT SHE COULDN'T, COULDN'T TELL HIM WHY !

Her eyes were unusually large,
unusually bright.
"You've never sworn at me before," she said. "I liked it."

cody whitmore

By Dana Burnet

THE DOCTOR ALWAYS DOODLED

DOCTOR PALMER sat behind his huge flat-topped mahogany desk; in front of it Miss Martin, in her white uniform, sat facing him. As they talked, the doctor doodled. He had picked up a pen and was squiggling some aimless design on a piece of paper torn from his memo pad.

"So you're leaving?"

"Yes, doctor."

"H'm-m," Doctor Palmer said, and went on squiggling. It was a habit of his. Jane Martin had been a nurse in his office for almost two years. She knew that the doctor always doodled.

She knew other things—ordinary, external things—about the big, hulking, homely-faced man who was her employer. She knew that he was thirty-six years old and already a brilliantly successful neurologist, as witness this spacious Park Avenue office into which, at the moment, poured the faint golden light of a dying summer day. She knew that he had written an impressive book: The Pyramidal Tract in Apes and Men; a Study of the Factor of Consciousness in the Lower Spinal Cord Reflexes.

She knew that his first name was Jonathan—not John, as his friends and colleagues called him—and that he had once been married to a woman who had divorced him while he was serving overseas as an Army doctor during the Second World War. This last she had learned from Miss Simpson, his elderly nurse-secretary, who had added that in her opinion the doctor would never marry again. Now after twenty-three months in his office, Jane Martin had decided that Miss Simpson was right.

"I must say I'm surprised," Doctor Palmer said as he doodled. "In fact, this is something of a shock. I've come to depend on you very considerably, Miss Martin."

"Yes, I—I know. I'm sorry, doctor."

"I had no suspicion that you were dissatisfied here."

"I'm not dissatisfied, exactly."

"Is it a question of money?"

"No, it isn't a question of money."

"Perhaps you don't get along with Miss Simpson?"

"I love Miss Simpson, and I've enjoyed being with—I mean working for you."

"That was my impression." He glanced up at her with a puzzled frown. "It was distinctly my impression that you were happy here."

Her voice quavered slightly. "I guess I'm just happy by nature." CONTINUED ON PAGE 105

NEHRU and MADAME PANDIT

By Their Sister . . . Krishna Nehru Hutheesing

A vivid portrait of the Prime Minister of India and his sister, Madame Pandit, by the person who knows them both better, perhaps, than anyone else in the world— "the other Nehru sister."

Grandsons, Rajiv and Sanjaya, visit Nehru each morning while he does his yoga exercises, particularly admire grandpa's ability to stand on his head.

INDRA ARYA

I STOOD on the steps of the Taj Mahal Hotel in Bombay, talking to a friend. An American gentleman, obviously a tourist, passed us again and again, staring and looking back at me. He seemed undecided whether or not to speak. At last his curiosity got the better of him. Raising his hat, he came forward and said, "Forgive this intrusion, but are you Madame Pandit?"

"No, I am not Madame Pandit," said I, with a sigh of resignation. How many times I had been asked the same question.

"I am sorry," continued the American, "but you do look a lot like her and I just wondered." He looked most apologetic but still puzzled, so my friend told him I was "the other Nehru sister."

Enlightenment dawned on his face. "Well, well, isn't that a coincidence," he said, stretching out his hand to shake mine. "It is indeed a pleasure to have met you, lady. How many sisters are there?"

"Just two," I said. "Madame Pandit and I." We shook hands again and said good-by.

How true it is that few people know that the Prime Minister of India has any other sister than Madame Pandit! It is, indeed, great good fortune to be born into a family which has an illustrious name, and I am very proud of being a Nehru. Yet I wish at times that I did not belong to a family that is so much in the limelight.

Swarup, as my sister was named, was born ten years after Jawahar. Seven years later I arrived. Coming ten years after Jawahar, Swarup was rather spoiled. As a child she had a lovely complexion and nice eyes but protruding teeth. As she grew up she became prettier. She was five years old when father brought our governess from England. It is customary in a Kashmiri household to call the first daughter "nanhi," which means "the little one." Everyone called Swarup "nanhi," but as this was a mouthful for the governess, she started calling her just "Nan." This name stuck and even the family took to it.

When I was to be named the same thing happened. Usually a christening takes place when a child is about three months old, but mine was delayed because mother was ill and also because she had written to Jawahar, then at Cambridge, to suggest a name for me. Meanwhile I was referred to as the "choti beti," which means the "little daughter." My governess converted this into "Betty" which later I spelled "Betti" to make it sound more Indian. I was named Krishna Kumari at my brother's suggestion when I was six months old. "Krishna" can be either a boy's name or a girl's.

Nan was born while a storm was raging outside and hence was nicknamed "The Tempest" by father. But the name was not appropriate, as she was a fairly quiet child, amenable to discipline because she found it much less troublesome to submit than to stand up for her own rights. I was the reverse, and times without number have I been locked up or sent to bed without supper for refusing to obey an order that I considered unjust. I have always adored Jawahar and so has Nan, but she has been much closer to him because the age difference between them is less. She has had many more opportunities to be with him and work with him because, even after she married, she continued to live in our home town.

JITENDRA ARYA

In six-yard drape of sari, Madame Pandit appears taller than her five feet. In her garden, in New Delhi, she wears hand-spun Indian cloth; in America her saris are sometimes made of nylon.

We were all brought up more by Western than Eastern standards, and we had the privilege of mixing freely in society. For my brother, this was perhaps not unusual. But for my sister and me—women!—it was unheard of. When love and marriage came our way, our unconventional upbringing gave our lives twists and turns that were unconventional—at least for India!

As the youngest Nehru I usually saw very little of my parents. Mother was a Kashmiri beauty, completely absorbed in the running of the house and her unhidden pride in her only son, Jawahar. In later years, she was a semi-invalid, confined to her bed many months in the year. Father was an extremely busy, preoccupied, successful lawyer who had very little time for his children.

It is said of the Nehrus that we have a "great charm" which we can turn on or off in a flash. If this is so, it is a direct inheritance from father, who, for his day, was also outrageously Westernized.

Mother came from an orthodox family, had little education, spoke English only brokenly, and was married when she was thirteen. Having lived all her youth under the iron regime of a Nehru mother-in-law and numerous other in-laws, she soon learned to bend like the willow and try to please everyone. Meek and docile by nature, she allowed herself to be bossed and dominated first by her parents, then her in-laws, her husband and later by her children. When father took to Western ways of living, dressing, eating and entertaining, she had no alternative but to fall in with his wishes and do likewise. But she never got used to it or liked it.

There is, incidentally, an interesting story behind the Nehru name. The old family CONTINUED ON PAGE 76

Sincerely— Willis Wayde

When young Willis Wayde moved East with his parents, he could not guess how surely Harcourt Mill (where his engineer-father worked) and the powerful Harcourt family would shape his whole future. Living in the garden house on the Harcourt estate, Willis played with the Harcourt grandchildren Bess and Bill, learned to respect old Mr. Harcourt, became keenly interested in the mill. But the arrogant Bess never let Willis forget he was not of her class, and Willis' father warned him to seek other friends. Still, when old Mr. Harcourt loaned Willis the money to go through Harvard Business School and gave him increased responsibility at the mill, Willis began to believe his future might include both success and Bess Harcourt.

Then old Mr. Harcourt died, and Bess' father, Bryson, who lacked old Mr. Harcourt's business acumen, let the mill deteriorate. On the day Willis learned of Bess' engagement to socially prominent Edward Ewing, he left Harcourt Mill to accept a position with Beakney-Graham, a New York management concern. Several years later, successful but unsatisfied, Willis encountered Sylvia Hodges, whom he had known at Cambridge. Inspired by Sylvia's admiration, Willis asked Beakney-Graham for a large raise—and got it.

"You're awfully sweet,

rling," Sylvia said,

"but everything's so different."

Willis hadn't forgotten Bess Harcourt.

Perhaps he never would forget her.

But Sylvia was near . . . and real.

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

OCCASIONALLY it seemed to Willis Wayde that his was only the progress of any successful American who had started as a poor boy and had used the opportunities offered by what was called the American way.

In an autobiography written for a subscription volume entitled Industrial Leaders of America, Willis believed that he had adequately covered the high points of his career. "In late May, 1936," he had written, "I was sent by the management company, Beakney-Graham, to make an industrial study of the Rahway Belting Company. As a result of this study, Beakney-Graham assumed temporary management and I acted as their representative until, upon resigning from Beakney-Graham, I became executive vice-president of Rahway Belting and later married, a step I have never regretted." There in a few lines was an account of his actions, on which he could not have improved by expanding it to a page, but he still could not explain exactly why he had done many things.

On the morning Willis first visited the Rahway Belting Company he drove there in his own car. He had read all the available material on the Rahway Belting Company. He knew it was a small plant that had suffered badly in the depression and that the control of the company rested in the hands of Mr. Manley Jacoby. He also knew that what had saved Rahway Belting in the depression and all that kept it running still was its product, the Planeroid high-speed belt, made by a patented process. Besides the Planeroid line, Rahway Belting manufactured rubber hose and a variety of v belts.

Willis had visited enough industrial plants to know that exterior conditions were no criteria of efficiency. Although windows might be broken and paint peeling, a place could still give the impression of order and morale, but his acquired sense of appraisal told him Rahway Belting was a dying duck.

The yard was as dirty as the parking place and the wooden steps leading to the office were shaky. The waiting space for callers had not been swept, and the girl at an antiquated switchboard knew nothing about his visit. Mr. Jacoby was in, she said, and nodded toward a door. The room where Mr. Jacoby sat reminded Willis of the waiting room in a country railroad station, and Mr. Jacoby in his shirt sleeves, seated at a golden-oak roll-top desk, looked exactly like a retired stationmaster.

"Good morning," Willis said. "Am I speaking to Mr. Jacoby?"

Mr. Jacoby pulled a soiled handkerchief from his pocket and CONTINUED ON PAGE 54

Copyright, 1954, by John P. Marquand

LUSTRATED BY OBY WHITMORE

"Oh, Tommy," I said,

"after all these years."

Maggie

Tommy was dark and romantic . . .

the man of her dreams. But her husband's name was Jack.

the Dazzler

by Elaine Greene

I'LL tell you what I was supposed to be doing this morning at nine-thirty. I'm sure it has a familiar ring. I was supposed to be taking care of some work in my kitchen—namely, a sinkful of philodendron to be watered, a counterful of eggy dishes to be washed, a table covered with clean black cotton men's socks to be rolled into pairs, and every pot I own to be returned to the closet from which my younger daughter had flung them in a search for her screw driver.

And I'll tell you what I was doing this morning at nine-thirty. This probably has a familiar ring, too, though it doesn't get as much publicity. I was imagining myself in the arms of another man. This always happens to me while playing the piano, which I do every couple of weeks. It's a simple case of conditioning, as you will see, but today is rather special.

Usually I find myself standing in the living room with a vacuum attachment in each hand and what I choose to call a culture-starved look on my face. I really don't think it matters to this narrative whether the music or the man is the original motivation. (I majored in child psychology—you will have to excuse occasional lapses into professional jargon.) Anyway, I fling down the laborsaving devices and off I go. When I was part of that huge army of girl lesson takers my favorite piece was Rustle of Spring. It's about all I can remember now and it serves me well, passionate number that it is. I always play it with what my teacher called "expression"—swaying from side to side, crouching fiercely over the keys, then wildly flinging my head back.

Tommy, the man this performance evokes, used to stand behind me holding my shoulders still and complaining that I played like a gypsy. Whenever he touched me I'd get numb in the wrists and try to skitter away. I tried to do Bach for him with the brow unfurrowed and the back straight, but it wasn't my cup of tea. I just didn't have Tommy's fine taste. He said Bach was beautiful like numbers. He's a mathematician, Tommy is, with a soul. He's a genius—only twenty-seven, like me—but he's been teaching at that place in Virginia where scientists go when they've got their Ph.D.'s and need a few more wrinkles in their brains.

I think I should mention that I haven't seen him in five years. And it might also do to add that I deeply love my husband, who will appear shortly. And finally I should explain that this morning is special because I saw a news item in the paper saying that Thomas Calhoun, late of Virginia Institute, was in New York organizing a new Department of Cybernetics at Manhattan Polytechnic. This gives a kind of urgency to any idle thoughts I might have on the subject, since Jack and the CONTINUED ON PAGE 118

ILLUSTRATED BY PAUL BURNS

Cruise in a package

A lot of places in one trip . . . a lot of fashion in one suitcase . . . that's the winter-vacation idea

BY air or sea, smart career girls are setting the pace, traveling light. The palest sand is the shade of beige for two or three most important costumes—a coat, a linen dress, a suit. After that, colors run wild—all go with beige. Look for apricot, honey and melon shades in sweaters, flannels and linens, for sea blues and corals in cottons, for prints in bathing suits. A sailcloth sight-seeing dress is straight as a piece of chalk. Another cotton has a full skirt, becomes a dance dress by adding loops of jewelry. Shorts are every conceivable length. Most shirts are overshirts, many like jackets. Floating chiffons grace tropical terraces, go home to city restaurants. (All these fashions are a forecast of things to come next summer.) No overweight problem in shoes: brown calfskins are good travelers, matched with a bag; white sandals double for day and night; bright sailcloth flats go to the beach. By Wilhela Cushman

Fashion Editor of the Journal

Cruise suit of linenlike rayon-and-acetate is also an anytime fashion, by Vincent Draddy. Straight, sand-beige wool-fleece coat by Alvin Handmacher.

aist dresses are at home around the world today. This one oin-dot silk surah with a white calfskin belt, by Maiola.

PAUL KADKAI

This flannel skirt and cashmere sweater lined with shirt-waist silk are in one of the prettiest colors of the season and make a necessary wool costume, for cool days. by Rex Madsen.

Embroidered cotton dress has its own sweater, is for any time of day. By Toni Owen. The fun hat is made of multicolored fringed raffia.

Cruise in a package

Deep-sea-printed jersey bathing suit by Isabel Dobson, matching hooded jacket. Terry-cloth beach towel.

This pale beige Irish-linen dress-and-jacket costume is a winter-vacation or a summer town fashion, by Maiola. The beech-color calfskin bag by Michel.

PAUL RADKAI

Afternoon and evening cotton in a gold-and-coral print. By Ann Fogarty. Worn with a necklace of coral and turquoise beads.

White cotton piqué bathing suit worn with striped beach coat of Italian terry cloth, by Isabel Dobson.

Sailcloth is news in pale pink in a casual, double-breasted sheath, by B. Zaring. Accent with a roomy violet straw bag from Italy.

Chiffons are in fashion for South and North. This pale pink one by Ceil Chapman has an embroidered jersey jacket.

Shirtwaist beach jacket of corded cotton, worn with slacks by John Miller. Canvas bag by the Tilletts, straw sandals by Ben Sommers.

The Journal's Wonder Dress to make under $10.00

$.50 The dress with a bias fold of white piqué at the neck . . . add carnations.

$1.85 The neckline filled with a crisp white dickey...add bright cummerbund.

$3.33 Pale blue satin collar is feminine, flattering. Vogue Design No. 8469.

Seven spring changes add little to cost, much to charm and variety of uses

A favorite winter-into-spring costume is a good, basic jacket dress. Ours, in worsted-and-acetate faille, is a bargain, we think. Cost, under $10.00 complete. The design is becoming to all ages . . . most figures (goes up to size 40). The neckline of the dress lends itself to many changes. All for a minimum of effort and a minimum of money.

By NORA O'LEARY Pattern Editor of the Journal

$6.50 For glamorous white fur collar on the jacket. Add colorful beads to the neckline, gay hat by John Frederics.

ROGER PRIGENT

$4.92 An amusing overskirt of navy organdy embroidered with white dots. Vogue Design No. 8461, 24 to 32 waist.

$7.95 An extra jacket in jewel-tone velveteen goes prettily over dress for evening. Vogue Design No. 8490. 12 to 20.

$1.60 Add a shocking-pink satin scarf and knot it jauntily underneath the collar of the jacket. A small navy-blue hat.

These sketches show the detail of this adaptable Vogue Design No. S-4576, sizes 12 to 40. Morris Moskowitz bag.

© VOGUE

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 63

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5 cents additional for each pattern ordered.

Can this marriage be saved?

DON ORNITZ

SHE: "Brad does almost unbelievable things, sneaky, dishonest things, to finance his gambling sprees. Just last month he took the week's grocery money from my purse."

HE: "I don't need to be told by a psychiatrist that I'm breaking Kyra's heart. I know I should never touch another card or bet another horse. I know I should reform. How to do it is the question."

More than 400,000 marriages are terminated each year in the divorce courts of the United States, and there are now more than 1,500,000 children of school age who are the product of homes broken in this way. An actual majority of all these breakages are probably as unnecessary as they are undesirable, and could be avoided with a very moderate amount of effort, based on expert help. The American Institute of Family Relations, a national nonprofit organization, is now completing its first quarter century of education and counseling in this field, and has been able to help its clients solve their marital problems in 80 per cent of the cases that come to it. The counselor in this case was Dr. Eva S. Olman.
PAUL POPENOE, Sc.D., Director.

Dr. Paul Popenoe

KYRA TELLS HER SIDE:

"GAMBLING is destroying my marriage," said twenty-eight-year-old Kyra, who was six months pregnant. She began to cry. "Last year Brad lost almost $2000—nearly a third of his salary and commissions as salesman. I haven't enough cash to buy a decent layette for the baby I'm expecting. Our two-year-old daughter is so poorly dressed the neighborhood youngsters laugh at her. After the new baby is born, I intend to return to teaching in order to support my children and myself. I don't know what will happen to Brad. I don't consider it my duty to pay the debts of a man who constantly puts horses and cards ahead of the welfare of his wife and family. Even if I were willing to support Brad, and he was willing to let me, I couldn't earn enough to keep up with his gambling losses."

Kyra dried her pretty blue eyes, and shifted her awkward body.

"I still love the man I married six years ago. Brad used to be dependable, thoughtful, considerate. He has turned into an untrustworthy stranger. We once lived in harmony and peace. We now live in a financial nightmare. Our creditors hound me incessantly. Until our telephone was disconnected for nonpayment, it rang all the time. Bill collectors camp on our doorstep, trail me and little Sally to the supermarket. The people we owe are aware that I still try to pay our bills. Brad doesn't even try. He just tosses the unopened envelopes on my desk. Then, as likely as not, he slips off to a race track or some bookie hangout and loses still more money.

"On my wedding day, I thought I understood and knew my husband as well as I knew myself. Brad and I didn't rush into marriage. We fell in love practically on sight—Brad proposed the week we met—but he was in the Army at the time and I was a college sophomore. We waited until he completed his Army service and I got my degree. The long engagement was my idea. I wanted to be very sure our love would last. Neither Brad nor I, as it happens, came from a happy home. His parents were divorced years ago and my parents are hopelessly incompatible. An angel from heaven couldn't live in peace with my mother. Her bossiness has made my poor father's existence a misery.

"I once shared Brad's hopes and ambitions, as he seemed to share mine. I taught school for three years after we did marry to help us get established. With both of us earning, we built our own home and furnished it. Brad built a guest cottage in the back yard to carry the mortgage payments. His father, who is a successful wholesale grocer, located a good job for him with a frozen-food company. In those days I thought Brad would advance fast. Together, we accumulated a sizable savings account.

"For three years we got along fine. Brad is a sweet and gentle lover. Our honeymoon was wonderful. Our sexual adjustment was perfect. For three years I had no worries of any kind. However, Brad fretted about my working—despite his present behavior, he is extremely proud and sensitive—and he kept on begging me to stay at home and be just a wife. After we finally saved $1000 I gave up my teaching and soon Sally was on the way.

"While I was pregnant that first time," Kyra told the counselor in sorrowful perplexity, "all our troubles commenced. It took me quite a while to realize that something had happened to Brad, that he had changed. Possibly I should have sensed the difference. It still seems incredible to me he would choose the very time I was carrying his first child—the child he had begged for—to start on the road leading him to ruin.

"During my pregnancy with Sally, he was far more tender and considerate than the average husband. I have never been especially interested in housework or cooking. Brad took over the marketing, helped with the meals and dishwashing, treated me as though I was a baby myself. I did notice," said Kyra, remembering back three years, "there were evenings he arrived home very late. I assumed he was calling on prospective customers. I have always been ambitious for him. Consequently, I didn't object to his absences.

"The week Sally was born," Kyra said painfully, "I found out how Brad had been spending his time and our savings. One morning my hospital bill—which I thought he had settled—was delivered to my room. A few minutes later Brad arrived with flowers, and I spoke to him about the bill. He seemed upset and embarrassed, but said he'd pay at the desk when he left. His manner was so strange I called the cashier during the afternoon, and sure enough Brad had paid. But then my father-in-law telephoned and told me Brad had borrowed $100 from him.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 122

"I imagine myself rushing home and into our bedroom and waking Kyra, and pouring thousands of dollars into her lap, and seeing her eyes open wide with surprise and admiration . . . invariably I stick with the game too long."

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

Maybe my Dream Woman has solved the problem of diverse eating tastes in our family. At one meal she served five kinds of precooked meat pies—turkey, beef, tuna, chicken and lamb; no two of us were eating the same proteins.

Junior has introduced a new college and Army phrase into our peaceful household: "No sweat!" It seems to mean that, when he favors a certain decision or solution, the rest of us should fall in step without argument.

"A wife who's acutely jealous of her husband," whispers Peter Comfort cautiously, scraping ice off his windshield, "if he so much as lights a girl's cigarette twice, is apt to be an incorrigible flirt herself."

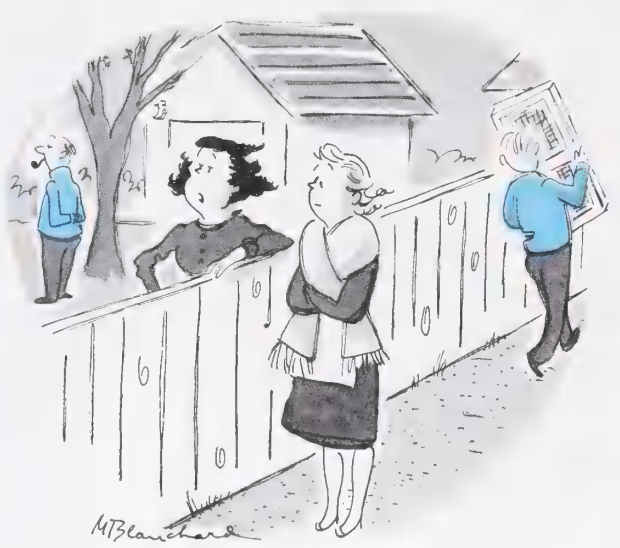
In our street the baby of the girl who married the boy next door has two sets of grandparents; around its play pen they look daggers amiably at each other; each suspects the others of mishandling the infant like a halfback fumbling on his own two-yard line.

Rattling around in a sixteen-room house since their children married, our neighbors around the corner decline to move into an apartment. "We can leave the Christmas tree in an unoccupied room," they agree, "and keep it around till the Fourth of July, or keep an indoor sand pile to lure our grandchildren in another room."

Our plumber says he can go to Florida for the winter if he wants to. "But I get in more swimming at the Y.M.C.A. pool," he says placidly, "and more sun baths, under the lamp, than my boss does around Sarasota."

Our youngest and I are both almost convinced that the best diet to lose weight must include a couple of padlocks on the pantry and the refrigerator. . . . On a baffling day around the house a nervous eater can easily tuck away three times as many calories just between meals as he ought to eat all day.

Even homely babies in our town seem to be treated as if they were beauty queens; their "cuteness" is half innocence, half serenity. . . . But a truly handsome infant reigns like Miss Universe; I've seen strong men neglect grown blondes to dandle such an infant.



After a twenty-year prowl for a modern sewing cabinet for my Princess of Sheer Delight, I've finally found a superb and tricky Swedish blond model with retractable trays. Now maybe I'll get my Argyle socks mended the same winter.

"Who objects if eighth-graders are taught how to organize a precinct caucus or conduct a disarmament conference," demands our town's second oldest fogy, "if they'd also read Gulliver, Crusoe, Alice in Wonderland and Huck Finn!"

"Since all the books of guidance for parents seem to be so loaded in favor of the kids," says our town's most shameless unnatural mother, "I wish somebody'd write a book for children on the coddling of nervous parents."

Some people like better a treatment by a masseuse or a chiropractor or an osteopath; what relaxes me the most is either (1) to watch my wife wash the dishes or (2) admire her as she brushes and primps at her dressing table.

I was the most surprised man in the house when my Lady Love presented me with a hand-knit tennis sweater for Christmas, with red, white and blue stripes at V neck and waist. I'd stumbled on it many times, but I'd estimated she'd finish it for Christmas, 1955.

"I never have to ask Henry to take the screens down—he never puts them up."

"Complain all you like about modern schools," says my favorite P.T.A. matron, "you admit they do teach the kids self-assurance?"

Yep, I admit; if the matron weren't so cute I'd ask her if it might not be better to teach the pupils "I don't know" occasionally instead of "I know it all."

Our town's young bloods who once besieged the dime stores for dates with the pretty girls are baffled to hear that one of Woolworth's great beauties is a doctor's wife in Tennessee, one a missionary in Africa, one a nurse in Texas, and five have moved to California.

I've argued that broken Christmas toys contribute to the modern child's sense of insecurity. Or are the young moderns more violent toy breakers? We've always returned indignantly any Christmas toys which fell apart by New Year's Day.

We can't bring ourselves to throw away photographic holiday cards, they're such a cyclorama of our faraway friends. But too many of 'em are oversold on pictures of their young, and much too modest about using their own pictures.

We argue occasionally at the club how we can show resentment toward states which send low-grade senators to Washington to become nationwide nuisances. . . . "Maybe we can refrain from buying gasoline in such states when touring," says our club wit, "but that hardly seems enough."

I can't quite convince Bennett Cerf that most of the "100 great books" are so difficult to read that most of us lowbrows won't read 'em unless they're rewritten in modern lingo. . . . Maybe it's a job for Ford or Rockefeller or somebody who wants the lowbrows on his side too.

Our basement shelves and corners are alive with the b.w.'s narcissus, amaryllis and hyacinth bulbs. She's forcing 'em into innocent green stalks and wondrous bloom among the stacks of soap and canned salmon. How magically they shrug off a blizzard!

Our two sons' feet grew bigger so fast that before I knew it my wide assortment of shoes were all too small for 'em. . . . Now I can wear some of their outgrown shoes by inserting a thick insole. (It helps pay their college expenses.)

My harassed friend next door tells me he's given his wife an ultimatum: she can have her kitchen modernized or a trip to Europe, but not both. "But you watch and see," he says darkly, "she'll get both."

. . . When your youngest across the room consults you every thirty seconds about his lessons,

. . . And Junior ponders his future over scrawls on papers in his college clipboard,

. . . Or your daughter quotes from Doc Spock to prove how mistakenly you reared your infants,

. . . And your wedded wife knits at a sweater she vows her old beau will get if you don't mend your ways,

. . . Then you don't really live in the "Age of Anxiety," stranger, no matter what the country-club oracles of doom are saying.

Changes not too radical made a dated room into a modern setting.
The upholstered furniture and rug are the same; most of the tables are new, and all the fabrics.
Eliminating the mantel made the room more contemporary, and replacing dated lamps with those in today's style gives a fashion touch.

Reviving a Room with a Ten-Year Slump

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal.

A FEW new pieces, a fresh color scheme and contemporary accessories do much to revive the room with a wilted look. For instance, the scale of lamps and occasional tables has greatly increased in recent years. The coffee table, no bigger than a large tray ten years ago, has taken its place as the focal point of the room—its uses grow from day to day. In our room we substituted a really large, commodious table for a relatively small one. Then came a look at the lamps, which seemed to cut everything in the room down to their low height. Three handsome new lamps of stature conveyed dignity and importance. Even the patterns of fabrics have taken on new dimensions, and a large cabbage rose with lush green leaves creates drama. The fireplace molding is another contemporary note in this room. Unless a mantel is in the best classic tradition, featuring meticulously grouped treasures, it is very apt to revert to the cliché pair of candlesticks or ivy pots. In line with the lighter touch, the heavy-textured draperies were replaced with airy, silk shantung. The shades are natural, matchstick bamboo.

These are the principal changes made in a room, the essential furnishings of which are as pleasing today as they were ten years ago.

FOWLER

Many rooms not redecorated for ten years have the appearance of having been forgotten.
New arrangement, a fresh color scheme and the elimination of dated accessories will give new life.

Measuring height on the "growing tree" in a corner of family kitchen is a part of the birthday tradition. Here Johnny checks Jamie's gain over the last year.

"We both like to cook"

By Gladys Taber

YOUNG Doctor John and his wife Miriam, who have four boys growing like beanstalks, are a couple who both like to cook. When they moved into a forty-year-old house on a Connecticut hill, the kitchen was a baffler. In one wing, it was huge, with a pantry opening from it, doors and windows on every side, and a big chimney jutting into it! What they wanted was a kitchen that would turn out family meals easily, with space for both John and Miriam to cook favorites. They wanted a cozy eating center. And Miriam wanted ironing space so she could run through shirts and slacks while dinner cooked. The only structural change made was to close off that pantry, a good idea for any old-fashioned house. Then along two walls went the main cooking line-up—range, refrigerator, sink, dishwasher and cabinets. Opposite the chimney went a snack table and in peninsula style a second cook spot with waist-high oven where Doctor John is chef. That left a free wall for ironing.

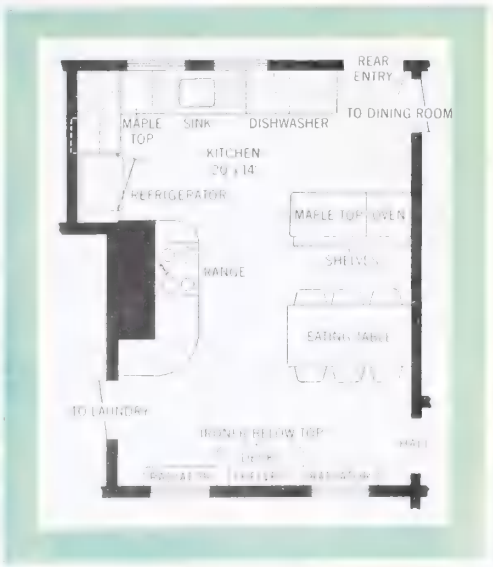
Their new kitchen is as sociable and practical as can be. Galloping boys don't harm the woodsy green floor spaced with gray—it's vinyl asbestos tile. Doctor John liked washable white fabric-textured vinyl wall covering, and steel cabinets with baked-on enamel. Miriam chose the cheery yellow plastic counters and the curtains of white cotton printed with fruit and vegetables. In the hilltop house nowadays, dinner's readying for a pleased pair with a kitchen that really suits them to a team!

Brick chimney cleaned of many coats of paint makes a fine background for new main cooking center. Range just 30" wide is complete with full-size oven, storage space, and four units with push-button controls. Choice of compact model allows for good array of storage cabinets close to range. Cooking tools and utensils hang on brick, and lids store in slots behind counter. At lower left, trays file vertically.

STUART

Shallow storage cupboard to hold toaster, napkins and cereals (Peter chooses his favorite) shields eating center from work area. Glass jars above contain staples.

Sit-down space for lunch, with elbowroom for growing boys, is out of the way of traffic. Hard plastic table top in tweed design is handsome and rugged, acts between meals as a homework center for boys or work desk for their mother. Framed circus scenes came from a children's storybook.



In second cooking center, husband John produces specialties—and during family reunions, extra hands pitch in. Extra oven adds to cooking facilities, makes big meals twice as easy to get. Cabinets hold baking supplies. Wood top, fine for slicing, kneading, has safe and handy slots for knives.

Ironer rolls away under telephone shelf when not in use. Shelf also holds finished, folded ironing. One of black kitchen chairs, cheerful with strawberry-colored plastic, is a comfortable height for ironing, and a roll-away hamper helps ease chores. Wall shelf holds her cookbooks and radio.

Old-fashioned 20′-long kitchen came up to date with new work centers. Along two sides runs main cooking center; refrigerator covers door of a pantry added to a laundry room. Facing chimney: extra cook center and snack table. On short wall: ironing.

Menu

Cold-Meat Platter Frankfurters
Mustard Sauce
Assorted Breads
Favorite Potato Salad
Confetti Deviled Eggs
Herring-and-Cabbage Salad
Assorted Cheeses Crackers
Coffee Punch Soft Drinks
Salted Nuts Candy

(Planned for 8)

Watching the New Year In

I DON'T know when or where it started, nor by whom or how, but it's still the right and proper thing to watch the New Year in with friends and family. The "Happy New Year"s ring out like Mr. Tennyson's "glad bells," and the candles shine like Venus and Orion on the happy faces of the gathered friends. A happy New Year. A time to be merry. A beginning.

As the New Year knocking at the window comes in, the dining room or game room becomes the focal point for all. Maybe it has been an evening spent in the sharp outdoor air, maybe a blizzard is staging its drama on the hills that "late were green," but it's cold and in they come to greet the baby year and sing Auld Lang Syne to the tottering old year who has finished and said good-by. And gone out—no one knows where.

You may have an intimate ten or twelve or open your heart and home to all your neighbors. We're going to keep our party simple and make everybody welcome. This is a fun party and easy on the hostess—that's you.

A cold-meat platter often carries in its train a battery of spine-stiffening concoctions called condiments. But a spirit of choosiness prevails at this layout and it's quite all right to bypass the catalogue of sharp appetite uplifters and stick to one, an especially appealing one, a mystery-brewing one. And if there's a seasoning, a flavoring, that your imagination has whispered in your inner ear, go ahead and drop it in. It won't bite you. I can't promise as much for the finished product. For it is a mustard sauce and not transferable to

CONTINUED ON PAGE 130

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER I

LINE A DAY

Readers liked the JOURNAL'S first mother-daughter cover (1939), by Al Parker, so much a whole series followed, gave impetus to vogue for mother-daughter fashions.

1 Smoked-oyster fans will rise and cheer for this new hors-d'oeuvre spread for Melba-toast rounds or shredded-wheat wafers. Chop fine 4–6 smoked oysters, depending on how well you like the flavor, and blend into one 3-ounce package cream cheese. Season with lemon juice and Tabasco sauce to taste. Don't add salt!

2 Poppy-seed cookies, old-time gingersnaps thin as grandma's lace shawl, pretzel sticks straight as a twig from the fall woods, and celery chips are stand-ins for more fussy eatables on the tea table.

3 A baked ham that will, to quote a familiar sign, make you "Stop—Look—Listen" is half baked first. After it is half done, cover the top with brown or maple sugar, sprinkle it with ground cloves, add a little cinnamon, and cover it with very thin, close-together slices of ginger preserved in sirup.

4 2nd step: Now look. Make a ravishing sirup of a very extravagant piece of butter—as if I could be extravagant—say about a quarter of a pound, mixed with more of the sugar and a cup or cup and a half of flavored sirup or pineapple sirup, and with this fragrant baste, baste your ham as it finishes its oven incarceration.

5 A best-cook friend contributes an idea for the Sunday roast chicken. She adds a can of liver pâté to the stuffing. Tried it—first rate.

6 I just can't leave a can of soup alone. Here's my latest wrinkle. Cook ½ cup minced onion in 2 tablespoons bacon drippings until tender. Add 2 cans pea soup and 2 cans bouillon, 1 clove garlic, crushed, ⅛ teaspoon thyme, and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer 10 minutes. Just before serving, add 1 cup grated raw carrot. That's what I mean, carrot.

7 Maybe not the last word or caboose on tomato soup, but if this isn't young and startling, neither am I. It's only this—cover the tops of cups of tomato soup, hot or cold, or tomato bisque, with chives chopped as fine as basil seed after you've ground the seed. Fancy!

8 That reminds me to say that if fresh basil is growing in your sunny kitchen window, pluck a few leaves and simmer them in the soup a few minutes, with a teaspoon of sugar. Take out the leaves.

9 When you buy herbs (and you have to unless you grow and dry your own) get the smallest package you can, and whether used up or kept "setting," renew them once in a while. Remember the Good Book. It says, "If the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" You understand me, I know.

10 In a frying pan induce a reluctant piece of butter or margarine to melt and be prepared to make friendly with a pinch or so of orégano or basil (or a few leaves). Stir a turn or two. This is ready to fry the eggs in. Oh, so I forgot to mention frying eggs, like the girl at the bridge party who's always saying "What's trumps?" after the first four tricks have been played. Baste the eggs and take out on caraway-rye toast. Sprinkle with paprika.

11 Here's one right off the boat, or so they tell me. Part 1: Make some thin French pancakes as you would for crepes suzette. Spread with sweetened apricot purée, roll up and lay in a baking dish.

12 Part 2: Sprinkle with crushed peanut brittle. Bake 2 or 3 minutes in a very hot oven. Elegant!

13 I remember an appetizer: Beat up a cream cheese with a whisper of tarragon, salt and pepper to suit, and 1 teaspoon minced onion. Add the yolk of an egg and beat. Spread ½" thick on small bread rounds sautéed in butter or margarine, run them under the broiler and they'll puff up as cute as baby's first picture. Serve hot.

14 "Those muffins tasted real good, Matilda. But I wish you hadn't taken them to the Grange supper. With the new minister's wife there and all. Wrong with them? Too much beating. They had holes in them big enough for a cat to get through, as Eph would say."

15 Too much beating. Muffin batter's got to be stirred and just enough so it'll hold together. I always put the milk, melted butter and beaten egg together and add to the dry part and stir just enough. Fine-grained and handsome and delicious as shortbread any day.

16 Remember the scalloped-potatoes-and-ham casserole you turn to when in an economy mood? Try an up-to-date version, substituting brown-and-serve sausage (straight from the package) for the ham.

17 More sour cream used to be thrown away than would have floated the Constitution and four tugs to dock her. Not so nowadays. There are thirty-four receipts for sour cream that I know of. Anyone got anything on me? How about baked tomatoes and leeks, Parmesan-cheese pudding, apple pie, coconut pie—all made with sour cream? Nothing like learning.

18 Hash de luxe; Verse 1: Baked corned-beef hash is near the party line when done like this: Mix a can of the finest hash with a small onion minced and sautéed in a little butter or margarine, but not browned. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, a shake or two of salt and ½ can condensed pea soup. Mix thoroughly.

19 Verse 2: Make a mound of the hash in a 10" glass pie plate, well greased. Leave a margin of 1" all round. Sprinkle the hash with fine buttered crumbs and bake at 375° F. for about ½ hour, not less. If not real brown, apply the broiler treatment. Now heat the rest of the pea soup with 2 tablespoons cream, a small piece of butter or margarine and some chopped mushrooms, and arrange around the hash as a garnish.

20 Lamb chops make a stunning appearance if served on a silver platter or chop plate, reposing on a bed of mashed potatoes made savory with tarragon, with a curled anchovy on top of each chop. Garnish with broiled tomato halves dressed with basil butter.

21 Have you come across frozen fish sticks all breaded and ready to bake in a hot oven for only 15 minutes? Good they are served piping hot with this sauce: Add 2 tablespoons chopped dill pickle, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard and 2 teaspoons lemon juice to ½ cup mayonnaise.

22 An omelet tastes twice as good surrounded by mushrooms broiled in butter (heat the canned ones), alternately arranged with finger-shaped potato croquettes.

24 Don't forget to stir when you're cooking a cereal. Stirring, as Shakespeare said of quite a different matter, "There all the honor lies."

25 Nothing new under the sun? Take a package of gingerbread mix and add 2 or 3 tablespoons chopped crystallized ginger. Instead of milk or water, use orange juice for liquid. Bake in muffin pans. Cool, hollow out, then fill with orange marmalade and cover with sweetened and ginger-flavored whipped cream.

26 How doth the little oyster now improve each shining day? I asked a sleepy oyster about his work and play. I am making up statistics, but he only yawned and said, "The water's deep, I want to sleep, why don't you go to sleep?"

27 Let's take some large grown-up oysters, baptize them with lemon juice, then dip each one in melted butter, then in beaten egg. Treat with an overcoat of seasoned (salt and pepper) crumbs and grill on an ungreased broiler about 2 minutes on each side. Turn once. Serve with hominy croquettes and a green salad.

28 How boring can stuffed celery get? Do something about it. Instead of cheese and cheese, period, stuff the crisp inside stalks with chicken, partridge, ham, smoked turkey or purée de foie gras—each one a savory pâté.

29 Among the newest gadgets to gladden the heart of the dedicated cook are miniature angel-cake pans, hole and all. About the size of a cupcake. Imagine!

30 From an old cookbook: "The best cooks eschew the so-called 'pastry bag' and the pernicious advice some books give them to cook vegetables done up in muslin. Lint is not eatable and it is not, in these cases, to be avoided." But grandma, what folks don't know won't hurt 'em.

31 WHAT SHALL I SAY?

What shall I say to the fallen year?
Only a brief good-by?
Who will shed with me a regretful tear,
Or share with me a sigh?
What shall I say to the newborn year?
It comes with no fife and drums.
Silent its advent. Can you hear
Its small voice as it comes?
What shall I promise another year?
How speak the words it waits to hear?

By Ann Batchelder

1 can of Beef Soup plus 1 can of Beef Noodle – Combine both soups in a saucepan – blend with about 1½ cans of water. Stir until smoothly blended – heat and serve. You'll discover a new satisfying soup for big appetites – doubly generous with cubes of lean beef, plentiful with fine egg noodles, barley and carrots in a flavorful beef stock.

An exciting idea from Campbell's – new soups from two soups

1 can of Bean with Bacon plus 1 can of Vegetable – Pour together – blend with about 1½ cans of water. Heat and serve. Here's a new, full-flavored soup – with enough nourishing goodness to make a meal!

SOUP MATES

By Anne Marshall
Director, Home Economics, Campbell Soup Company

. . . the easy way to make delicious new soups!

Here's an adventure for every cook who likes to try something new! It's Soup Mates – the creative cooking idea of blending two soups to make exciting new soups. Try it yourself – it's easy! Use any of the combinations we suggest here for trying Soup Mates. See what new flavor, new character one great Campbell Soup gives another!

CAMPBELL'S SOUP MATES LEAFLET – AT YOUR GROCER'S NOW!

It's filled with suggestions for new Soup Mates – including such tempting combinations as these:

- 1 can Cream of Mushroom plus 1 can of Scotch Broth (with 1½ cans of water)
- 1 can of Chicken Noodle plus 1 can of Cream of Celery (with 1½ cans of milk or water)
- 1 can of Tomato plus 1 can of Green Pea (with 1½ cans of equal parts milk and water).

Campbell's Soups

Quick—nutritious—and simply delicious!

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37

wiped the corners of his eyes. "Yes, young fellow, that's my name," he said, "and it wasn't my idea to get you here."

It wasn't his idea, Mr. Jacoby said, but the bank's idea, and that was the trouble with getting mixed up with banks. Once you started dealing with them you were like a fly on sticky paper. As Willis sat in an uncomfortable chair listening to Mr. Jacoby, he felt like a doctor hearing the complaints of a chronic patient. Even while Mr. Jacoby's querulous voice rang in his ears, Willis was beginning to see the picture of Rahway Belting, and he knew right from the beginning that Mr. Jacoby was the key to the puzzle.

Willis could see him still, a tired old man in his middle sixties. He was running down like Rahway Belting, but it never paid to underestimate anyone, and traces of shrewdness and skill enlarged themselves in various ways as Mr. Jacoby talked.

"Say," Mr. Jacoby said, "you know something about belting, don't you?"

They wouldn't have sent him down if he didn't, Willis told him, and then he mentioned the Harcourt Mill.

Mr. Jacoby said, "That used to be a nice concern."

Willis often thought that the saying, "No love is like your first love," applied to business as well as sentiment. When the Harcourt Mill was mentioned, old loyalties came over him and old habits of thought that unexpectedly fused into creative desire. He had thought in the first minutes of his interview that there was only one honest recommendation he could make: to put the factory up for sale and to dispose separately of its Planeroid patents. But now he revised that estimate, because an old and inefficient man was talking of the Harcourt Mill. It used to be a great place once, Mr. Jacoby was saying, and Mr. Henry Harcourt was a grand gentleman. Mr. Jacoby wondered, now that Mr. Harcourt was gone and things weren't going so well up there, what had happened to the Harcourt place.

"I guess it's still right there," Willis told him, "but I haven't seen it for quite a while."

Willis had deliberately put the Harcourt place out of his mind for a long while, but now he found himself thinking how it would look with the pear and tulip trees about to start their bloom. He could even think later that the ghost of Mr. Harcourt must have given him advice and warned him not to miss an opportunity. At any rate, Willis grasped the vital fact that the Planeroid process was a good one. Long before he inspected the plant and the books, he had a good picture of the Rahway problem. The whole answer lay in cutting costs and concentrating on a single line.

"I'd like to have a look at the Planeroid division if I might," Willis said, and he had been right. It was the only part of the plant that mattered.

MR. JACOBY'S mind was working, too, and it was pleasant for Willis to remember that Mr. Jacoby had trusted him right from the start.

"What I need," Mr. Jacoby told him late that afternoon, "is a young fellow who knows this business."

"Well," Willis said, "we've got to look around for someone."

"How about you?" Mr. Jacoby asked.

"Oh," Willis said, "I'm unfortunately working for Beakney-Graham. I'm only here to get things started on the right track, you know, but I do think we can put this property on a paying basis. I may have a few rather radical ideas, but I hope you'll give us a chance, Mr. Jacoby."

"You show me how we can pay dividends on the preferred," Mr. Jacoby said, "and you can do anything you want."

It had been as simple as that. From the beginning Willis realized that it was necessary to move carefully. He would have to use tact and persuasion and ruthlessness. Luck, of course, entered into his handling of Rahway Belting, but his own capacity was always the most important asset.

He wanted very much to talk to someone who would listen as he thought out loud. This was why he called up Sylvia Hodges and asked her to dinner when he reached New York that night.

He must have understood from the time he had spoken to Sylvia of that green dress in Bergdorf's window that Sylvia was as tired as he was of the small contrivings of mediocrity. He knew that she would have been perfectly happy if he had taken her to some small restaurant in the vicinity of Washington Square, but he took her to dine instead at 21 West 52nd Street, where he had often entertained for the company. Even in those days "Twenty-one" was, according to his rather limited knowledge, one of the most interesting restaurants in New York. You always saw personalities there who impressed out-of-town clients, individuals whose names were in the gossip columns, actors, Hollywood producers, and sometimes authors and playwrights.

"I sort of thought you'd like to see this place," he told Sylvia. "Would you like a Martini?"

"Why, yes," Sylvia said, "I'd like one, but you don't have to do these elaborate things for me, you know."

"I know I don't," he said, "but just the same, I like to."

"Well," she said, "I like it more than I ought to, I guess."

It pleased him to observe that people were looking at Sylvia curiously. In "Twenty-one" people always looked curiously at everyone else, since you could never be sure what stranger might be important. Sylvia was never embarrassed by the plainness of her clothes, and Willis was almost sure that they thought she was too well known to bother about being elaborately dressed.

"Robert Benchley comes here quite often," Willis said. "You know, Robert Benchley, the humorist."

"Oh," Sylvia said. "He was on the Lampoon at Harvard. Have you read his new book, My Ten Years in a Quandary?"

"In a what?" Willis said.

"In a Quandary," Sylvia said.

"Oh," Willis said, "I get it now. No. I haven't had much time to read lately, except for fifteen minutes with Doctor Eliot's Five Foot Shelf before breakfast."

"Do you really do that every morning?" Sylvia asked.

"Of course I do," Willis said. "I try to finish anything I start. I'm reading Montaigne right now. He's quite a boy, Montaigne."

"But I don't see how you can get much out of Montaigne in fifteen minutes," Sylvia said. "Don't you forget what you've read the day before?"

"It was tough at first," Willis said, "but I'm getting the hang of it now. Would you like another Martini, Sylvia?"

"Are you going to have another?" Sylvia asked.

"I don't usually," Willis said, "but I think I will. I've had quite a day today."

"Why did you have quite a day?" she asked.

"That's just what I want to tell you," he said, "and I don't know anyone else I want to tell."

Her eyes were bright and there was more color in her cheeks. He had never seen Sylvia look so attractive.

Sylvia listened just the way he hoped she would when he told her about Mr. Jacoby and the Rahway Belting Company, and the way her glance met his when he was talking made everything he said sound like a tale of adventure.

"You wait," he said. "A year from now I'll have the Rahway Belting Company making money."

It was not a heroic statement, but his enthusiasm gave it a ringing sound, and Sylvia must have felt its contagion.

"Oh, Willis," she said, "do you really think so?"

All words had a different ring when one was young.

"They've got the Planeroid patents," he said. From the very beginning he was the only one who saw the full potential value of those Planeroid patents. "Sylvia," he said, and he put his hand over hers without knowing he was doing it, "just wait till you see a sample of Planeroid."

Then Sylvia laughed, but he did not mind, because she did not know what Planeroid was.

"We'll sell the Ford and get a Cadillac before we're through," he said.

He did not realize until the words were out that he had included Sylvia in his vision of the future. In fact, he did not realize, until that moment, that he was in love with Sylvia Hodges. It was strange how unexpectedly it all happened and how naturally they both accepted it.

"Willis," she said, "I'm going to spend my vacation with the family. They have a cottage on Lake Sunapee in New Hampshire. I know they'd love to see you, if you'd like to go there too."

He had passed through the preliminaries of courtship without his having known it. Without his ever having kissed her or said a word of love, he knew he was as good as engaged to Sylvia Hodges.

Perhaps it was impossible to understand character until after you were married, no matter how much two people had seen of each other before—and he had certainly seen quite a lot of Sylvia the summer he had been working on the reorganization of Rahway Belting. They had fallen into the habit of having a bite to eat together every evening after Willis returned from Rahway, usually at Tony's Italian Restaurant on Bleecker Street, and afterward they had got in the habit of sitting around awhile in Willis' apartment on Tenth Street, never for very long because Willis had figures to organize and work over every evening. His ideas about the Planeroid process which did so much to influence his whole career, were already assuming a definite shape. Although Planeroid was designed as power belting, he believed that some changes in the manufacturing technique could adapt the economical carcass of Planeroid into conveyor belting which would be cheap enough to enter the competitive field.

IT was this idea, of course, that finally made Rahway Belting the company that it turned out to be and which helped to make his own industrial reputation. It was a pleasure to tell Sylvia about what he wanted to do and about his earlier days and about his father and mother and the Harcourt place and the Harcourt Mill. It was a real relaxation after a hard hot day at Rahway.

Though Sylvia's childhood was different from his, Willis could understand a lot of the things she had faced. Her parents had never cared about money, but they had cared deeply about education. Sylvia, as she admitted herself, had always had an ambition to excel in school and college. She had managed to graduate with a cum laude, as her father wanted, but what did it amount to now? It had only taught her that there were a lot of people far brighter than she would ever be, and the last thing that she wanted was to marry some university instructor and to live the life her mother led. She wanted to have a little fun out of life and not to worry about how much it cost. That was one of the wonderful things about Willis, she said, that he never appeared to worry. She wanted to go abroad—not tourist class—and she wanted to stay at hotels instead of pensions.

The first time Willis had ever kissed her was when she told him one June evening what she really wanted to do in Paris. She made him feel how wonderful Paris was, and even made him forget the Planeroid process for a while.

"Not any stuffy pension," Sylvia was saying, "and not any back seat in the Comédie listening to Racine. I want to go to Foyot's and then to the Folies-Bergère."

"Would you like me to take you there?" Willis asked.

"Yes," she said, "on the Mauretania."

"All right," he said, "I'll take you someday, Sylvia."

"I wish we were going tonight," she said. "They always sail at midnight." Then she laughed. She must have been thinking of the crowds and the farewell messages and orchids and champagne and the voices of the room and the deck stewards calling out that it was time to go ashore.

"Where's the best place to buy dresses in Paris?" he asked.

"I'd rather go to Worth's," she said.

"Don't worry. I'll take you there," he told her.

It had seemed natural to kiss her then, and she had clung to him and then she hid her face on his shoulder.

"This doesn't have to mean anything unless you want it to," she said.

The Columbia sociologist for whom Sylvia was working left for a six weeks' trip the first of July, and Sylvia went to stay with her parents at Lake Sunapee. Although she wrote Willis three or four times a week, letters were not the same as Sylvia. It was fortunate for Willis that complications at Rahway occupied nearly all his waking hours.

There were many later periods of crisis and negotiation in his career which were as arduous

CONTINUED ON PAGE 56

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

THERE are times when a thing can go just so far and bang! That's when Junior gets spanked . . . and—as the exchange doctor from Europe at our local hospital says—"That should happen about once a year, but it should happen."

Mother of bride, inviting guest to informal reception: "Among ourselves, we call it our freedom party."

Our special cleaning woman again: "I've just got to reduce; everything I eat turns into food."

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

Although it seems quite weak
To make and straightway break them,
It's even weaker still
To never even make them.

A man reveals something about himself when he listens to a woman talk; the better he listens, the more apt he is to be married.

Portrait of a mother watching television: Enters room, settles into chair, whispers, "Which one is the villain?" waits until commercial to ascertain what homework the children have to do, gets up, puts cat out, empties ash tray, gives advice to husband, then goes back to the kitchen long enough to miss the clue that explains everything.

A boy's first letter from school: "Dear mom: Just a line to let you know that I like your cooking better than I did."

No girl is old enough to date who isn't old enough to listen to advice.

In these 3-hour danger periods YOUR SKIN "DIES" A LITTLE

There are 1- to 3-hour periods every day, doctors say, when your skin is in danger—open to such serious troubles as stretched pores . . . coarsened texture . . . cracking, "shriveling." These danger periods of skin "un-balance" are immediately after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Nature takes 1 to 3 hours to restore these vital protectors. Meanwhile, your defenseless skin "dies" a little . . .

Read how great beauties of the social world prevent the damaging effects of skin "un-balance"

After each washing— "re-balance" your skin

Whether you're in your teens or your forties, you can notice these little warning signals of skin "un-balance" after washing your face—

—flakiness . . . a blotchy look —your skin "burns" . . . feels dry, stretched tight

What do skin specialists advise? Should you stop washing your face? Not at all. "Wash your face, of course," they say—"but after each washing, 're-balance' your skin instantly . . . "

No woman can afford to ignore this vital after-washing skin care with the excuse: "Just too busy" or "It's too late for results to show." A "re-balancing" application of Pond's Cold Cream will take you only a few seconds—far less time than washing your face—and the happy results will show—right away!

60 times faster than Nature

Light, swift-acting—Pond's Cold Cream "re-balances" your skin after washing in just one minute—at least 60 times faster than Nature does. It combats dryness, flaking, shriveling. Restores elasticity. Keeps pore-openings clear. Keeps skin texture fine and smooth.

And always—a deep clearing at bedtime

Besides "re-balancing" after each washing, your skin needs a thorough clearing with cream each night. A deep Pond's Cold Creaming dislodges water-resistant dirt from the pores. Keeps your skin looking fresh, young, vibrant.

Start now! Begin this wonderfully simple, effective beauty care with Pond's Cold Cream today. After each washing—a quick "re-balancing." At bedtime—a deep Pond's clearing. You'll be astonished at how quickly you have a noticeably lovelier complexion!

he world's most famous beauty formula . . . never plicated, never equaled. Get a large jar. More women use d love Pond's Cold Cream than any face cream ever made.

Romaine, Marchioness of Milford Haven

The lovely Marchioness, photographed in her charming Park Avenue apartment, is noted for her exquisite complexion. About her skin care, she says, "It's now second nature to me to reach for Pond's Cold Cream after each washing. And I never miss a good, deep Pond's cleansing at bedtime."

Don't be a target for WINTER AILMENTS!

The raw and chilly months of winter used to be dreaded because of the serious health threats that came with them. Pneumonia, for instance, was especially feared.

Just a few years ago, this disease claimed one out of every three of its victims. Now, fortunately, the threat of pneumonia is much less marked than it once was. This is because the sulfa drugs and antibiotics have been found to be so effective in a large number of cases.

Pneumonia is still dangerous when treatment is delayed. Proof of this fact was shown in a recent study of 15,000 cases. It indicated that the case-fatality rate was twice as high for patients treated after the fourth day of illness as for those treated earlier. This is one of the big reasons why you should call the doctor immediately when you suspect pneumonia. When proper treatment is given at once, pneumonia can usually be cured in a surprisingly short time.

What can you do to escape becoming a target for pneumonia? Your doctor will tell you that one of the wisest things is to take proper care of yourself when you have a cold. In nine out of ten cases of pneumonia, colds occur before pneumonia develops.

Should you "come down" with a cold, doctors recommend that you stay at home and rest in bed, eat lightly and drink plenty of fruit juices and other liquids. If a cold persists . . . and especially if you develop a slight fever . . . call the doctor promptly.

High fever makes the difference between a "slight cold" and a "serious cold," because it usually means that complications have developed. If, in addition to fever, you also have chills, painful coughing or difficult breathing, report these symptoms to your doctor at once, for they almost invariably indicate pneumonia.

While winter is upon us, it is important to keep your general health at the best possible level. Try to avoid becoming "run down." You may do this if you get all the sleep you need, eat a properly balanced diet and avoid needless exposure to severe weather unless properly dressed. In addition, keep away from anyone already suffering from a respiratory ailment.

If you guard your health in these ways, the chances are that your resistance to colds, virus infections and pneumonia will be increased. In the event you develop one of these ailments, your ability to fight the infection and recover quickly will be greater.

If you would like more information on how to help avoid becoming a target for these common winter ailments, Metropolitan will gladly send you a free copy of its booklet, Respiratory Diseases. Just fill in the coupon below and one will be mailed to you.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 155-J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 54

and crucial, but he had gained confidence by then so that he never again worked under such strain and pressure as he had in those six weeks. He had to show an external confidence and a serene belief in his judgments which he often did not feel. He had to be a salesman and a promoter and a technical expert all in one.

It was all very well to think of Sylvia near a cool lake in New Hampshire, but Willis could not seem to make her understand that he could not dash away for a visit with things going as they were. Nevertheless, toward the end of July Willis finally did take three days off, making reservations on the night train Thursday, with return reservations on Sunday. He took his golf clubs in case there was an opportunity to shoot a little golf, and his black evening trousers, a cummerbund and one of those white linen mess jackets in case there should be a dance at the country club. He also packed his tennis clothes. It was a pleasure to watch the porter carrying his golf clubs, his tennis racket and his new pigskin suitcase when he boarded the evening train.

He arrived at the junction early the next morning, and Sylvia was there to meet him in the Hodgeses' four-year-old Ford runabout. Sylvia had on slacks, a man's shirt with a frayed soft collar, and sneakers, and he never forgot her expression when she saw the golf clubs.

"Oh, Willis," she said, "there isn't any golf."

"That's all right," he said. "I just brought the clubs along in case."

"And there isn't any tennis either," she said. "I don't know why I never described things to you. We're just camping out, you know. Willis, didn't you bring any old clothes?"

"Well, I haven't got anything exactly old," he said, "just some tennis clothes and bathing trunks, but I'll get along all right."

Sylvia looked relieved when he mentioned bathing trunks. "You can wear those most of the time and a shirt on top," she said. "Mother always insists on a shirt when we're on the porch."

"Well, that's fine, if it isn't cold," he said.

"It won't be too cold except at night," she told him, "but there are gnats sometimes. Maybe you'd better buy a pair of khaki trousers before we start."

It was a fine idea, and he told her so. It had been a long time since he had seen a small-town men's toggery, but he was able to get into the spirit of it, and it annoyed him that Sylvia seemed to think he couldn't. He was just as good at camping out as she was, he told her, and he liked to fish. Nothing was more fun than going fishing.

THE only trouble was that he had never camped out with any people like the Hodgeses, and that place at Lake Sunapee was different from anything he had ever known. The Hodgeses lived in a shingled cottage on the edge of the lake in a pine grove a long way from anywhere.

"Father bought it for almost nothing during the depression," Sylvia told him, when she tried to explain things while the Ford jolted over a very rough road.

He should have known, from Sylvia's nervousness, and from the moment he saw the family all waiting for him on the front porch, that his visit had an obvious implication. He was sure they had been discussing him ever since Sylvia had driven to the station, and, since there were only board partitions between the rooms, Willis heard his name coupled with Sylvia's frequently during his stay, although in tactful whispers.

"They won't be around after supper," he heard them whisper. "Sylvia will want to take him out in the canoe."

"He's really very nice," he heard them whisper. "It isn't his fault that he thought we were living on a golf course."

This last remark had been made by Mr. Hodges, hardly in a whisper.

As Willis told Sylvia later, he had been there on approval, like a new vacuum cleaner that could be sent back if it didn't work—not that there were any electric outlets in the cottage. In fact, they cooked on a wood stove and went to bed by lamplight, and as Mrs. Hodges said right away, he was a member of the family. Mrs. Hodges, who looked more like a frontierswoman than a professor's wife, shook hands with him warmly and understandingly.

"Of course I remember Willis, dear," she said to Sylvia, "and now you'd better go and peel the potatoes for lunch. You can bring them out on the porch here, dear, and perhaps Willis would like to help you after he puts on some camp clothes."

"Yes, yes, Sylvia," Mr. Hodges said, "my memory isn't so dim that I don't recall your young gentleman." Mr. Hodges had not shaved that morning, and he wore khaki shorts and a sleeveless undershirt. "You remember Laura, don't you?"

OF course Willis remembered Laura. Laura was wearing slacks, like Sylvia, and she looked frankly and happily ugly.

"I choose you for my team if we play games tonight," she said. It touched Willis that Laura remembered that he had been good at pencil-and-paper games.

"Mary dear," Mrs. Hodges said, "I don't believe you've ever met Sylvia's young man, have you? This is Tom's wife, Willis."

Mary Hodges was a stocky, red-faced girl in shorts. It seemed to Willis that girls with ugly legs always wanted to show them off.

"Hi," she said, and shook hands aggressively. "You're sleeping in the guest coop."

The guest coop, Willis found out later, was a remodeled brooder house that Tom had purchased from a nearby farm. Tom was always working on what he called "improvement projects."

"Hi, Willis," Tom said. His shirt and bathing trunks and bare arms were caked with clay. "Mary and I are laying a new pipe from the spring to the kitchen."

Willis must have looked startled. Sylvia might have warned him about the absence of plumbing, and Tom burst into a roar of laughter.

"There's no private bath, no telephone—and no water if we don't get busy. Come on, Mary, or we'll have to haul it in buckets."

Willis always prided himself on being able to get along with people no matter if their interests were quite different from his own. He liked to think that he had succeeded with the Hodgeses in a measure. He would not have minded the simple life if it had been simple, but the Hodgeses neglected the advantages of simplicity and the small creature comforts understood by practical campers. Not one of them knew how to split kindling properly or how to keep the stove going once it was lighted; and what was more, they honestly did not care.

All the Hodgeses cared about were ideas and talk. One minute they were telling jokes in French and next they were lapsing into German. They all talked at once—Mrs. Hodges, Sylvia, Mary, Laura and Tom. It seemed to Willis that Mr. Hodges was the only one who listened, but he too would occasionally leap into the discussion.

Almost the only time the Hodgeses were silent during his visit was when he and Sylvia walked down to the lake path. It was very hot and he stumbled occasionally over pine roots.

"You have to watch where you're going," Sylvia said. "This is an awfully rough path."

"You get a beautiful view from it," Willis said.

"Willis dear, I'm so proud of you," Sylvia said. "Everyone thinks you're wonderful. You're having a good time, aren't you?"

"Yes," Willis said. "It's great to get away from the city and get some new ideas."

"Can't you stay for a day or two more and not go back Sunday night?"

"I wish I could," Willis said, and he stumbled over another pine root. "It's been quite a while since I've been walking in the woods."

"You have to get used to it," Sylvia said. "Father's very interested in you."

"I suppose he is," Willis said. "I guess I can't blame him much."

"Oh dear," Sylvia said, "I didn't mean it in that way, but he probably will try to draw you out. You don't mind if he draws you out, do you?"

Of course he and Mr. Hodges would have to have a little talk sometime, but Mr. Hodges did nothing about it until Sunday afternoon, and then it happened unexpectedly.

ay, Wayde," Mr. Hodges said, "are you ood in a canoe?"

llis' father had taught him to paddle, one ner when he had been working for paper sts in Ontario. Willis and Mr. Hodges ed off the porch and pushed the Hodgeses' into the water. Willis was feeling tired se he had not slept well in the guest coop, is muscles were stiff from walking and ming. You could tell from the moment he picked up a paddle whether or not he about canoes, and Mr. Hodges must learned somewhere besides Lake Suna-Horace could ever have been in a canoe, uld have liked it," Mr. Hodges said.

orace, sir?" Willis said.

he Latin poet," Mr. Hodges said.

h, yes," Willis said, "Horace. I don't much about him, I'm afraid."

on't be," Mr. Hodges said. "Never be of Horace. Sylvia tells me you're mak- n thousand dollars a year. Do you hope ke some more?"

es, sir," Willis said. "And I think I will, if I'm doing turns out right."

lvia says you have something to do with ine belts—that right?" Mr. Hodges said.

ted as he was in ow of the canoe, could only hear Hodges without him. "Yes, sir," d, "it's the only I really know ? At least I hope don't," Mr. es said. "My s a blank when nes to belts."

ell, sir," Willis "frankly mine's k when it comes ur Latin poet, ce."

ear me," Mr. es said, "there o be zeros some- . Four zeros in housand dollars, ore in a million. 's the trouble money, there must be a lot of zeros."

lis wished he knew whether Mr. Hodges eing funny or serious, but it was a good k and one Willis always remembered. Hodges had been right. You had to ce a lot of things if you made money.

st May, sir," he said, "I met a friend of in New York—Mr. Hawley, president Hawley Pneumatic Tool."

awley," Mr. Hodges said, "Hawley—oh, didn't like him very much."

didn't like him much either," Willis "but I wouldn't like to have him know ell," Mr. Hodges said, "I'm glad you . Sylvia tells me you're reading the Five Shelf of books—fifteen minutes a day. " lis could not turn around. He hoped e would never again have a serious con- ion with anyone when he paddled bow anoe.

wonder," Mr. Hodges said before Willis answer, "if you're doing that to please . I wouldn't if I were you."

o, sir," Willis answered, "I'm doing it for f." ell," Mr. Hodges said, "I confess it initiative."

HER of them spoke for a while, and was glad to listen to the dipping of the es in the water.

m afraid," Mr. Hodges said, "you've quite a beating this weekend. Do you ke Sylvia?"

es, sir," Willis said. "It's been very inter- here."

e been interested, too," Mr. Hodges "but then you'd expect me to be, wouldn't Perhaps we'd better turn back now, or will be wondering where you are."

at was almost the only serious conver- that Willis ever had with Mr. Hodges, e always felt that Mr. Hodges had learned more about him than most people did—too much, perhaps.

The years immediately preceding the entry of the United States into the Second World War formed the most critical and important period in the entire business career of Willis Wayde. The business turmoil of those years frequently seemed simpler than many aspects of his private life. It was all very well to say that business and home should never mix: they invariably did. Although nothing was really settled after that weekend at Lake Sunapee, Willis discovered that Sylvia thought a great deal had been. Shortly after this visit she bought several books on cooking and began making out his laundry list and going over his shirts and his socks whenever she visited his apartment. Thus the idea of marriage came over them by degrees, making another problem on top of all his others.

THERE was also the problem of Lydia Hammond, who finally telephoned one evening when Sylvia was at Tenth Street. Sylvia had come up with him to the apartment after dining at Tony's, and she had been reading a cookbook to herself. He had told her that he had to go over the refinancing report on Rahway Belting.

He was right in the middle of the proposed common-stock setup, which demanded more close thinking than anything else, when the telephone rang, and it was Lydia Hammond.

"Hello, Willis darling," Lydia said. "Are you up there all alone?"

"Oh, hello," he said, "hello, Lydia."

"Why have you gone completely out of my life, darling?" Lydia said.

"Well, Lydia," he said. "I've been pretty busy lately."

He saw that Sylvia had closed the cookbook, and he smiled at her reassuringly, but Lydia was still speaking.

"Darling, why don't you come up here right now?" she said.

"Lydia," Willis said, "I've got to hang up. I can't talk to you right now."

There was a frigid silence when he set down the telephone.

"I'm sorry, Sylvia," he said. "It was only someone I used to know before I knew you were in New York."

Sylvia was white and tense and her voice was lightly brittle. "Why didn't you ever tell me about her?" she asked. "I'm sure I don't want to interfere with anything."

"Listen, Sylvia," he said. "There isn't anything to tell about her. She's just someone I used to know."

Sylvia drew a sharp, quick breath. "Willis," she said, "I wish you'd tell me when you think we can get married."

Willis squared his shoulders. The subject was out in the open at last.

"Now, Sylvia dear," he said, "I'm glad you brought this up, because it's been on my mind as much as yours."

He could not understand why he felt so nervous, except that he was dealing with a long-term future and life and love and all sorts of other things that were hard to express.

"I'm glad I brought it up too," Sylvia said. "It's awfully hard for a girl to be so indefinite. You do love me, don't you, Willis?"

"Of course I love you," Willis said.

"Then sit here and hold my hand," Sylvia said, "and don't look so worried, Willis. You want us to get married, don't you?"

"Why, of course I want us to get married, honey," he said, and he smiled at her and patted her hand, "but I do have a lot of other things on my mind right now. I'd like to wait until we know whether I'll be working for Beakney-Graham or whether I'll end up out in Rahway."

SOFT SOAP

Some time prior to the seventeenth century, English housewives learned to combine waste fats and potash into a semiliquid soap. Though it was harsh and inefficient by modern standards, such soft soap was highly prized in an era when all cleansers were scarce and expensive.

A person desiring a favor from some public official often paved the way with a gift of homemade soap. This practice was evidently quite common, for soft soap eventually became a standard term for any type of wheedling flattery.

—WEBB B. GARRISON

BUY-LINES by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

A CHILD'S GAY LAUGHTER brings joy to any home . . . but all too often laughter turns to tears because of the pain and discomfort of a chest cold. That's why I urge you to keep CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY on hand . . . for I've tried everything and my experience with my own young members of the "crib set" proves that it brings wonderfully quick, comforting relief! CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY really works wonders . . . you just rub it on your little ones' chests, necks and throats . . . soon they'll breathe easier and feel better. That's because CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY is a mild version of famous regular BEN-GAY (America's favorite rub-in for generations!) . . . and contains all the same pain-relieving ingredients with more lanolin to protect a child's tender skin! You'll find CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY at your Drug Store in the blue package . . . but I'll send you this:

FREE OFFER!

FREE SAMPLE TUBE of CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY . . . to let you see for yourself how fast it brings blessed relief! It's a GIFT . . . See OFFER #1 in box.

HAVE YOUR OWN NAME on your own beautiful fabric labels—to sew into the sweater you knit, the gift you make by hand, your own handmade fashions! Your personal label makes your handiwork look more "finished" and professional. And isn't it a smart way to say, "I made it" without really boasting? . . . and to remind daughter-in-law that it was you who crocheted the carriage robe? These are as luxurious as the finest Fifth Avenue shops'—each 2½" x 1½"—of rich, heavy-woven taffeta. Have your name (in 20 letters or less) embossed by hand on each label. Or "Grandma" or "Aunt Jane"! Send $1.50 for 12 labels; $2 for 20; $3 for 40. Check OFFER #2 in the box below.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS ARE IMPORTANT . . . so be sure your guests get a nice one of you the minute they enter your home. In other words, don't let unpleasant odors "greet" them at the door . . . use GOOD-AIRE regularly to keep the air fresh and inviting . . . for nothing I've ever tried beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear! It's so quick and easy, too . . . you just push the lever on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . household odors vanish! I'm not exaggerating . . . with a mere touch of the finger, odors from cooking, bathroom, pets and the nursery, along with odors from stale air and tobacco smoke fade away. All of which prompts me to say that GOOD-AIRE is good etiquette . . . a courtesy you owe your family as well as your friends! Costs only 98c for the regular size and $1.89 for the large economy size . . . at Drug, Grocery, Hardware and Dept. Stores. P. S. GOOD-AIRE is made by the makers of Bridgeport® Aer*A*Sol Bug Bomb and other Aer*A*Sol products which I also recommend most highly!

START THE NEW YEAR WITH A NEW LOOK . . . for a change is always exciting . . . for you and those around you! Let's begin with your hair . . . and if it's dull and lacks color, it's sure to detract from the way you feel and appeal. But you can easily change that by using MARCHAND'S Rinse after every shampoo . . . because it adds such colorful brightness to your hair that it glows and glistens with loveliness . . . attracts people as easily as moths are drawn to a flame. And whether you're a blonde, brunette or redhead, there's a MARCHAND'S shade made just for you . . . in your choice of 12 safe, Government-approved colors (with special shades for beautiful white hair!) that wash out easily with each shampoo. MARCHAND'S leaves your hair silky-soft and smooth, too . . . a perfect darling to manage. Still it costs only 25c for 6 Rinses and 10c for 2 . . . so you can easily afford to use MARCHAND'S Rinse regularly. And that's what I hope you'll do . . . for gloriously bright hair is a "must" for a glamorous new Y-O-U!

"THE LITTLE ENGINE THAT COULD" is the name of a FREE Booklet I have for your child and I consider it priceless . . . for it's an adorable story symbolizing the will to try which my own children find so enchanting they've had me read it aloud so many times they know the words by heart! And that delights me . . . because it teaches an invaluable lesson in character building! I also have a FREE Booklet for you . . . called "So Little Time" to Plan Your Child's Future! It was especially prepared for a young parent like you by MY BOOK HOUSE . . . to explain how your baby's habits are formed and how Planned Training in early years can help establish desirable character traits that will bring happiness, security and success in later life. I'm sure it will prove as helpful to you as it has to me . . . so thank MY BOOK HOUSE for offering you these:

BOOKLETS FREE . . . and check OFFER #3 in box for your copies! Enclose your name and address . . . with the names and ages of your children.

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y., for:

☐ OFFER #1.....FREE SAMPLE TUBE OF CHILDREN'S BEN-GAY.

☐ OFFER #2.....GENUINE WOVEN LABELS. Please enclose $1.50 for 12; $2 for 20; $3 for 40. Print the name . . . in 20 letters or less.

☐ OFFER #3.....FREE copies of "The Little Engine That Could" and "So Little Time."

"Why, Willis," Sylvia said, "I didn't know you were having any trouble with Beakney-Graham."

"Sylvia sweetness," Willis said. It was always harder to explain business to a woman than to a man. "If the Rahway Belting Company would make me an offer and give me some common stock, I'd leave Beakney-Graham because there would be a better future in Rahway."

He could not understand why Sylvia should look troubled, but then perhaps a woman's mind always worked differently from a man's.

"But they sent you there to Rahway Belting," she said.

"Of course they sent me there," Willis answered, "but I want you and me to have a future, dear. I don't have to stay with Beakney-Graham."

"But, Willis," she asked him, "do you think that's being loyal?"

He did not intend to be impatient, but she should have seen that loyalty had nothing whatsoever to do with the situation. "You've got to let me attend to these things, dear," he said, "and let me decide what's loyal and what isn't. What are you crying for, Sylvia?"

There was no reason for Sylvia to sit with tears rolling down her cheeks when he was trying to carry on a sensible conversation.

"Oh, Willis," she sobbed, "I didn't mean to make you angry. It's only that I'm so proud of you that I don't want—I don't want ——"

"Now there, Sylvia," he said, and he took her in his arms. "Just let me do the worrying. Everything's going to be all right. Old Jacoby wants to have a talk with me. He's asked me to his house to lunch next week. Everything's going to be wonderful."

"Oh, Willis," she sobbed, "of course you're loyal."

Loyalty was the queerest thing. It was something that kept cropping up in business, and it kept requiring a different definition. At any rate, he had made his point and he had never had to argue in just that way with Sylvia about loyalty again. You had to do the best you could with loyalty. She had stopped crying, and he gave her a clean pocket handkerchief.

It was always significant when a business acquaintance asked you to his home instead of to some restaurant. Mr. Jacoby had been slightly apologetic when he finally invited Willis. He had been meaning, Mr. Jacoby said, to ask Willis up to the house for quite a while, and he was sorry that he was asking him home for the first time in order to have a business talk, but things always got around the plant, and he had a few words to say to Willis which were confidential.

"It's very kind of you, sir," Willis said. "Thank you very much."

"Mrs. Jacoby wants especially to meet you," Mr. Jacoby said, "and I want her to sit in on the conference."

Willis knew that Mrs. Jacoby was the daughter of the late Mr. Seth Wilfred, a financier whose name was still very well known around the Oranges, and that she had inherited a very considerable sum of money at her father's death. Willis also knew that the Jacobys had two married daughters, one living in Chicago and the other in Philadelphia. There was no reason for Mr. Jacoby to make any explanations, but it was like him to have done so.

Promptly at half past twelve Mr. Jacoby put on his black alpaca coat and climbed behind the wheel of his old car.

"Get in, Willis," he said. "Mrs. Jacoby thinks I ought to have a chauffeur, but I guess I'm independent in some ways. You have to be with anybody like Mrs. Jacoby. I suppose you've heard she's pretty rich."

"Yes, sir," Willis said. "You can't help hearing things like that."

"That's right," Mr. Jacoby said. "And now we're going home to lunch I'd just as soon you'd call me Manley."

It was hard for Willis to call old men by their first names, and to stay respectful and at the same time be familiar.

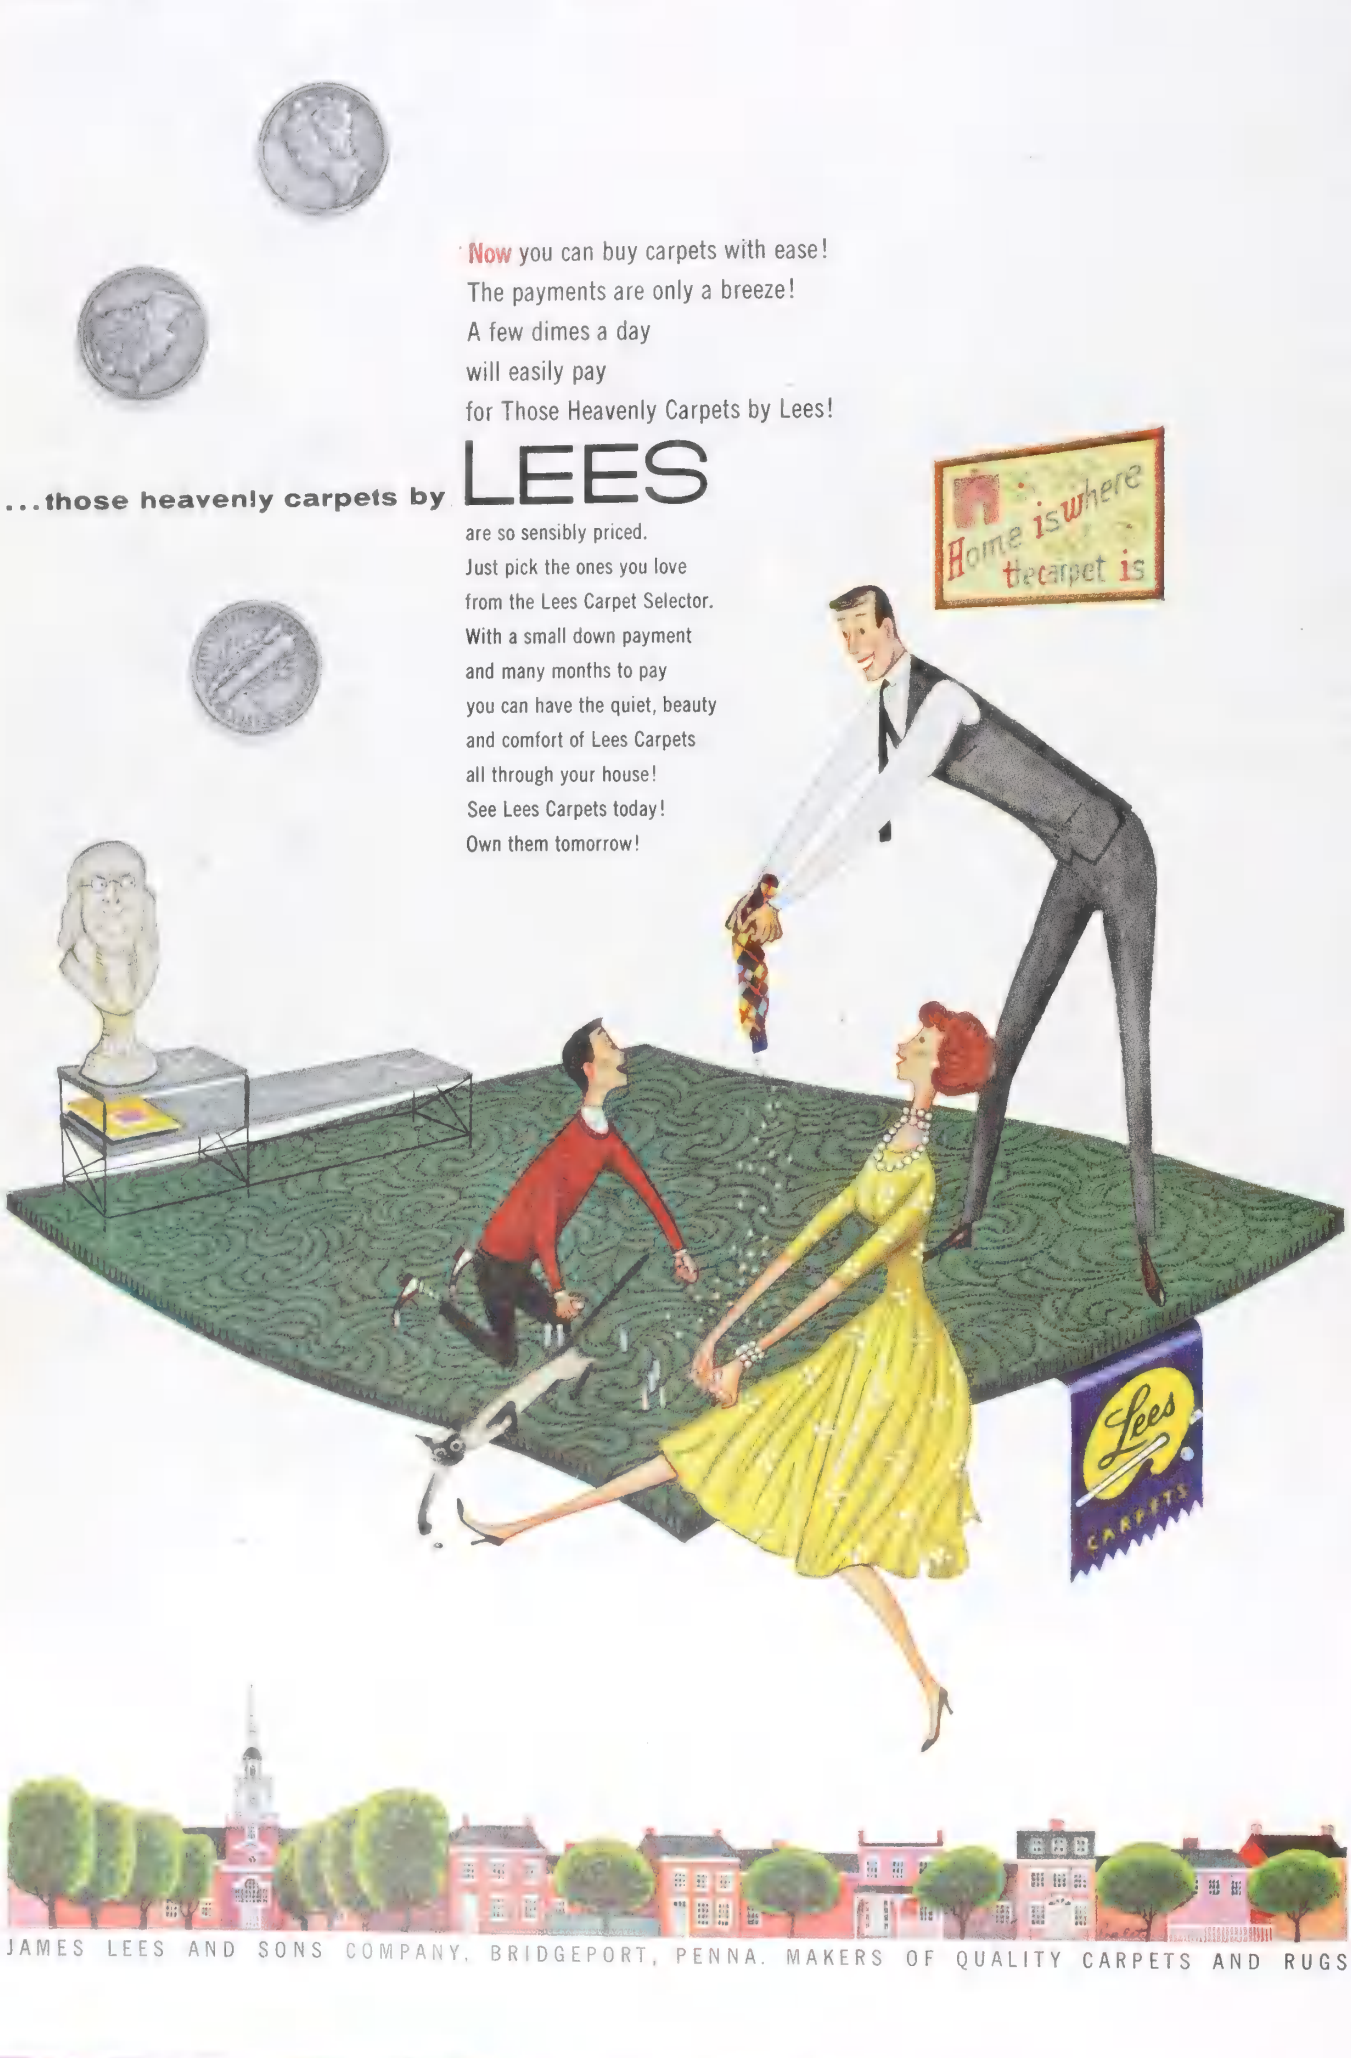
"Mrs. Jacoby—Edie, that is—makes me pretty comfortable," Mr. Jacoby said. "We live in the old Wilfred house, you know."

It was a grim house, standing on a lawn decorated by cannas on the ridge of basalt that rose behind the Oranges, but the view was magnificent. It was a warm, hazy day in mid-September, and you could see the buildings of downtown New York miles away across the marshes, rising dreamily through the mist.

It was all different from anything that Willis had imagined. After the plainness of Rahway Belting, he could not help being surprised when a manservant opened the door.

"Hello," Mr. Jacoby said. "Is Mrs. Jacoby downstairs yet?"

"Madam is in the east room," the man said.



The east room took up two stories and must have been intended to represent a baronial hall. There was a balcony at one end, which was occupied by musicians, as Mrs. Jacoby told him once, when her father had receptions for the directors of the Erie Railroad. There was also an immense pipe organ that no longer worked and a huge fieldstone fireplace. There were some heads of African animals on the walls, and some sentimental pictures. The floors were covered with Oriental carpets and the furniture was imitation French.

Mrs. Jacoby was seated on a sofa by the fireplace, and her lacy beige dress gave her almost a protective coloring. Her face, which was pale and distinguished, reminded him more of an old man's than a woman's. Her hair was snow-white, but her eyebrows were black and bushy, and her eyes were deep brown. She spoke in a precise, almost English way, because, as she told Willis later, she had been taught at a convent school in France.

"I'm delighted to meet you, Willis," she said. "I'm calling you Willis because Manley has told me so much about you."

"It's a great pleasure, Mrs. Jacoby," Willis said, and he tried to act as though he were not astonished by anything around him.

"You mustn't blame Mr. Jacoby for any of this," Mrs. Jacoby said. "He married into it quite late in life, and what could we have done except tear the whole thing down?"

"I see what you mean," Willis said, "but everything's very interesting."

"Manley," Mrs. Jacoby said, "if I send Henry upstairs for something else, will you take off that black alpaca coat? Look how nicely Willis looks."

"He's a new model," Mr. Jacoby said. "You know I like this coat."

"Manley never wants to forget he's a small-town boy," Mrs. Jacoby said, and she looked unblinkingly at Willis. "Perhaps you've noticed that Manley has an independent streak. That's why he insists on holding onto that one-horse factory. He doesn't need to, but he likes to be independent and he can't keep on being, with his arthritis. That's why I asked him to bring you up here—so I could look at you."

"How would it be if we had cocktails, Edie?" Mr. Jacoby said. "It might help us all to break the ice and you'd get to know Willis better."

"Not for me, thank you," Willis said quickly. "I don't usually drink in the middle of a business day, Mrs. Jacoby."

"Well, I'm going to ring for Henry, Edie," Mr. Jacoby said. "I'm going to have a Scotch and soda."

Mrs. Jacoby walked over to a mother-of-pearl-inlaid table and picked up a sheaf of papers and Willis gave a slight start. It was the final report and recommendations by Beakney-Graham for the Rahway Belting Company.

"Now," Mrs. Jacoby said, "we may as well sit down and we can start going over this before lunch is served. Manley tells me that you wrote most of it."

"Yes, most of it," Willis said, "but I was helped by other members of my company."

Mrs. Jacoby picked up a pair of heavy horn-rimmed glasses. "I read this with great interest," she said. "It's a well-organized report. I told Manley to employ Beakney-Graham."

The light from Mrs. Jacoby's glasses glittered disconcertingly as Willis tried to think of a suitable answer.

"I had an idea that the bank had suggested your company," he said.

Mr. Jacoby laughed. "They did," he said, "but Edie suggested it to the bank. She wears the pants around here, or at least she tries to."

"I wish you wouldn't get off these tiresome jokes, Manley," Mrs. Jacoby said. "I've always let you play around with that factory of yours and I've never interfered, except when it's been absolutely necessary."

Willis was glad to see that the houseman was walking toward them, carrying a silver tray and a decanter and tumblers, because the interruption gave him a moment to think over the situation.

"Manley," Mrs. Jacoby said, "be sure to take your medicine first, and I'll have some Scotch too. Are you sure you won't change your mind, Mr. Wayde—I mean Willis?"

"If you'll forgive me, I'd rather not," Willis said. "I'm afraid a lot of that report must have been dull reading, Mrs. Jacoby."

"I wouldn't say that any reports are light reading," Mrs. Jacoby said, "but my father trained me to manage my own affairs. I've managed all my father's interests since his death. I got out of the market in August, 1929. I got back in again in the summer of '32. I have my own offices upstairs."

"That's right," Mr. Jacoby said. "Edie's a very able woman, Willis."

Since his days at the Harcourt Mill, Willis had seen a good many rich men, and he was beginning to judge their abilities and weaknesses, but he was not as familiar with the wealthy and independent woman. He could only listen carefully. The difficulty was that she talked partly like a woman and partly like a man.

"Now you know as well as I do," Mrs. Jacoby said, "that Manley here hasn't got much business sense."

Willis found himself laughing nervously. "Oh, I wouldn't go so far as to say that," he said.

"I didn't say you would," Mrs. Jacoby told him, "but you know it and Manley knows it too. I'm worried about Manley, Mr. Wayde—I mean Willis. He's always liked that factory. I want him to keep it if he likes it, but he's got to have someone to help him. I think it's time for you to make him our proposition, Manley."

Mr. Jacoby coughed loudly. "All right," Mr. Jacoby said. "Edie and I want you to be executive vice-president of Rahway Belting. We're not getting any younger, and there aren't any young men in the family except our sons-in-law, both of whom are doctors. This may sound sudden to you, but Edie and I have been all over it. Would you mind telling us what your salary is at present?"

"Why, no," Willis said. "It's ten thousand dollars," and he smiled at them. "Just at present."

"That is the figure I guessed," Mr. Jacoby said. He paused. "You and I get on all right. You'll be executive vice-president and I'll back you all the way. You'll get twelve thousand dollars a year and thirty-three per cent of the common stock."

Although it was the percentage that Willis had planned to ask for, he had never thought that Mr. Jacoby would go so far immediately.

"That's quite a lot," Willis said slowly—"the stock, I mean."

"The idea," Mr. Jacoby said, "is to fix it so you won't refuse."

Willis waited a moment. It was no time to be too eager. "I'm very much flattered, of course," he said. "I didn't know you thought so highly of me, Manley."

He noticed that Mrs. Jacoby had taken off her glasses. "It's my stock you're getting, not Manley's," Mrs. Jacoby said. "It's never earned me one red cent, and I want Manley to be happy."

"I think it's very generous of you," Willis said. "There's only one thing that makes me hesitate." He could see how closely they both were watching him. "Another firm sent me here, you know. I'm not sure it would be loyal, under the circumstances ——"

He allowed his voice to trail into silence, and he had a momentary thought of Sylvia.

"Now just a minute," Mr. Jacoby began, "just a minute."

Willis raised his voice slightly. "It may sound a little old-fashioned," he said, "but I'd like to finish my thought, if you don't mind. There's a girl I want to marry. I wish she were here with us now, because I know you'd like her, Mrs. Jacoby. She's the daughter of a Harvard professor. She and I were talking about loyalty only the other night. I don't know whether Sylvia would think it was loyal of me to leave Beakney-Graham."

Willis had that quick feeling of triumph that comes of having said exactly the right things. Mrs. Jacoby was smiling at him.

"Manley always told me you were high-minded," she said, "but he never told me you were thinking of getting married."

Willis laughed diffidently. "It's been a secret up to now," he answered. "You're the first people I've told, in fact. You're older than I am and I'd value your advice. I wouldn't want either of you to think I'm disloyal."

He was glad that he had thought to ask their advice, because Mr. and Mrs. Jacoby began advising him simultaneously.

"You're not under any contract with them, are you?" Mrs. Jacoby asked.

"Oh, no," Willis said, "no contract, but just the same it bothers me."

"Now listen, Willis," Mr. Jacoby said. "It's time you thought about yourself and this girl you're going to marry. What is her name?"

"Sylvia," Willis said.

"Sylvia," Mrs. Jacoby repeated. "I want you to promise to bring her here and I think fifteen thousand would be better than twelve, Manley."

"It isn't the money," Willis said. "I only wish I felt right, Mrs. Jacoby."

"Now, Willis," Mrs. Jacoby said, "this is common sense. It's time you thought of Sylvia and any little ones who may be coming along."

Willis was always glad that he had threshed out the matter of loyalty with Mr. and Mrs. Jacoby, because it had started them all on the right foot, and he had Sylvia to thank for it.

His interview the next morning was frankly tough.

"I thought you were out at Rahway," Mr. Beakney said. "Is anything wrong out there?"

Everything was fine at Rahway, Willis told him. Then he had given Mr. Beakney the whole picture concisely, without pulling any punches, and he had ended on a note of how grateful he would always feel to Mr. Beakney and everyone in the office. He would never forget what they had done for him but he hoped that Mr. Beakney would put himself in his position and understand his situation. He was always very sorry that Mr. Beakney had not understood.

"Well," Mr. Beakney said, "so that's it. You've been sucking up to a silly old man and his silly old wife, while you were on our payroll."

"I'm sorry you look at it that way, sir," Willis had told him. "They've made me an offer and I've accepted it."

"I never thought you'd do this to me," Mr. Beakney said. "I had other ideas about you."

"I'm sorry you don't approve, sir," Willis said.

"That's neither here nor there," Mr. Beakney said. "I fear you've grown up to be too much for us to handle. Well, that's the way things go."

GOD THE FATHER

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

It was no surprise to the boy
When they told him about God,
He had known him for five years Driving home nails and straddling broad.

The boy had seen the golden one
With lantern light upon his hair Coming up through the kitchen floor
From his boat by the water stair.

God was sure upon his feet
No matter where his large feet stood,
He made things out of pine and nails,
And he filled his pants out good.

God could stand up on the sea
In a boat when whitecaps curled,
And he loved a little boy Beyond all there was in the world.

"I wish you wouldn't put it that way, sir," Willis said, "because I've always enjoyed working for you."

"All right," Mr. Beakney said, "let's not have any more last words. I'll only say you're graduating, and I'll make just one more remark which maybe is a compliment. I'd hate to run up against you in a controversy ten years from now."

This meant a lot coming from someone like Mr. Beakney. There was no wonder Willis always had a warm spot in his heart for Beakney-Graham.

The next few months were among the busiest and happiest that Willis had ever known, since there was nothing as exhilarating as one's first taste of tangible success and achievement. He only realized later that success has its dangerous aspects, especially early success. The cards were stacked against someone who made good too young. Willis could see now that he had once been in this dubious category. He could no longer wonder, as he once had, that Mr. Beakney had made no effort to keep him. In fact, Mr. Beakney must have been relieved to have let him go—gray suit, trimmed hair, polished oxfords, sharp mind and everything—because he had come along too fast for the age of twenty-nine.

What really saved him was marrying Sylvia Hodges. It was the most fortunate thing that had ever happened to him. Sylvia had better taste than he, better manners and a more cultivated mind. She knew so many things he did not know that he could not help being very proud of her. Though he was aware of his inadequacies when he was with her, somehow she never made him jealous.

They were married in Cambridge in October, 1936. Willis had envisioned a small house wedding with no one but the family, but Mrs. Hodges wanted them married in the Unitarian church. Laura would be the maid of honor, and Sylvia was selecting bridesmaids. Mrs. Hodges wanted to know whom Willis would invite to be best man and whom he would want for ushers.

Willis never realized until he read Mrs. Hodges' letter that in all his years in New York there had not been much time for friendship. This lack of friendship, which had never troubled him before, he felt was something he could not confess to Mrs. Hodges and least of all to Sylvia. He finally had to say that the few people he most wanted were unable to leave New York in the middle of the business week, that his father could be best man but that he would have to dispense with ushers.

He had thought that getting married would involve only a day in Cambridge, but instead Mrs. Hodges wrote that he must be there several days ahead to see about the license and to attend a few small parties; then there was the wedding trip, to which he had given no thought at all, but Sylvia had said that they must go somewhere. This was all very difficult, coming on top of everything he had to do at Rahway Belting.

If Willis had no friends, at least he wanted to appear in a proper light. His Ford runabout, which had seemed so desirable only that spring, was not what he wanted any longer and he turned it in for a new green Buick sedan before he motored up to Cambridge. He never forgot Sylvia's expression when she saw the car in front of the house on Craigie Street.

Sylvia ran down the path to meet him. Now that she was back in the family, she did not look like the girl he had known in New York, and when she kissed him in a shy way, because everyone was watching them, he felt like a distant relative.

"Why, Willis," she said, "where's the Ford?"

"Why, I turned in the Ford, dear," he said. "This is an improvement, isn't it?"

After all, he did not want to say in so many words that a fifteen-thousand-dollar-a-year man did not drive a Ford.

"Oh, dear," Sylvia said, "I loved the Ford."

"You'll love this a lot better," he told her, "once you get behind the wheel."

"Oh, darling," she said, "I hope people won't think we're throwing our weight around when they see us driving it."

"Why, sweetness," he said, and he slammed the car door casually, "it's only a Buick. You wait till we get a Cadillac before you start to worry."

"Oh, darling," she said, and she linked her arm through his, "we've all been waiting for you all afternoon, and your father and mother are here. You've got to go down right away to see about the marriage license. Tom will take you."

Getting married, Willis often thought, was like moving without any preparation into a foreign country about whose customs one knew nothing. From the moment he had stepped out of the Buick to the time Sylvia and he finally drove away in it from the wedding reception, he was a stranger in a strange land. Everything was on an entirely different basis from what it had been before, because the Hodgeses were trying to make him a member of the family, and even his father and mother were like strangers. They were all waiting for him in the house at Craigie Street, and he was surprised to have Mrs. Hodges kiss him. Then his mother kissed him, then Laura, and then Tom's wife, Mary, who told him they might as well get it over with now that he was going to be an in-law just like her.

Mrs. Hodges wanted Willis to see the presents right away, but Tom said Willis had to go to the city hall to see about the license before the place closed.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 62

Here's How: Wash and wipe dry, large or medium potatoes—then cut them in half lengthwise. Score the tops in ½″ squares, making cuts ½″ deep. Brush the skins and tops generously with pure, digestible Spry. Then bake your potatoes in a hot oven (450°F.) 40-50 minutes, or until deliciously tender and golden on top.

Here's How: Put ¼ cup of Spry in heavy kettle over medium heat. Then put in 4-5 pound piece of chuck, rump or round. Brown well on all sides. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cover and simmer over low heat about four hours or until tender, adding 2-4 tablespoons of water occasionally to prevent sticking.

Spry makes

Here's How: Cut 3-lb. frying chicken in serving pieces. Combine ½ cup melted Spry, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper. Rub Spry well into each piece. Put chicken in shallow baking dish. Bake, uncovered, in hot oven (450°F.) 50-60 minutes, or until brown on both sides.

Here's How: Use your favorite pancake ready-mix. Add one standard level tablespoon of Spry for each cup of dry ready-mix you use. Then follow directions for pancakes on the back of the package. See for yourself how Spry makes ready-mix pancakes richer than ever before!

ere's How: Trim crusts from slices of white bread. Brush pure, gestible, melted Spry on one side of each slice and fit into 3″ muffin ns, pressing brushed side down into pan to form cups. Bake in very t oven (450°F.) 10-12 minutes or until golden brown. Fill with creamed na fish, and serve as a main dish.

Here's How: Cut fish fillets into serving pieces; coat with seasoned flour. (If frozen fish is used, thaw first.) Melt enough Homogenized Spry in heavy skillet to give depth of ½″, heat until a drop of water sizzles in it. Put fish into pure, digestible Spry, maintain heat, and fry until golden (about 2 minutes on each side).

the difference!

Lever Brothers Company unconditionally guarantees that Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better. You'll agree, or we'll return your money.

ere's How for Stringbeans: Melt 2 tablespoons of Homogenized ry in heavy skillet. Add 1¼ lbs. of sliced stringbeans, salt and pepper, cup water. Mix lightly together. Cover your skillet and cook over edium heat 18 minutes, or until tender.

Here's How: Season your ground beef with salt and pepper. Then shape the meat lightly into the form of a steak. Spread the top surface with Spry. Broil 6-10 minutes. Turn, spread the other side with Spry and broil 6-10 minutes longer.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59

"If he doesn't get to City Hall today, he won't get married on Wednesday," Tom said.

This was plain fact, but Willis found that Sylvia was pulling him into Mr. Hodges' study.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "what are you going to get married in?"

"In a church, aren't we?" Willis said.

"I mean clothes," Sylvia said, and Sylvia looked strained and nervous.

"Well, won't a dark suit do?" he asked.

"No," Sylvia said. "Mother wants you and your father to wear cutaways. You will have to go and rent them, with silk hats."

"Silk hats?" Willis repeated. "I don't know whether I can get my father to do it."

"He's got to," Sylvia said. "And, Willis, have you got the ring?"

"Gosh," Willis said, "I forgot about the ring."

"You forgot it?" Sylvia said, and her voice broke tragically. "I suppose getting married is more serious for a girl than it is for a man. Do you want to marry me or don't you?"

"Now, sweetness," Willis said, "of course I want to marry you, or I certainly wouldn't have bought the Buick."

"Willis," Sylvia said, "if you mention that Buick again, I'll scream. That Buick hasn't got anything to do with anything."

He knew it was a time to be patient and understanding and that girls were apt to be upset at such a time, but the trouble was he did not know what he ought to understand.

"Now listen, honey," he said. "What's all the trouble anyway?"

At any rate, the question changed her mood. "Oh, Willis darling," she said, "I know I'm impossible. I'm sorry, dear."

"There, there," Willis said, and he put his arm around her. "It'll be all right when this is over. What sort of a ring would you like, honey? I saw sort of a cute platinum one the other day with little orange blossoms carved on it."

"Oh," Sylvia said, "why didn't you think of chromium?"

"Why, sweet," Willis said, "why chromium?"

"Because it's all over that Buick," Sylvia said, and she hid her head against his shoulder. He could not tell whether she was laughing or crying.

"I was just thinking of something striking, sweetness, that would go with the diamond," he told her.

"Oh," Sylvia said, "just put your mind on a plain gold band. I'll go to Boston with you tomorrow, but I've never heard of a girl picking out her own ring."

There was so much happening that Willis could never get events into chronological succession. He was constantly smiling and chatting with friends and relatives of the Hodgeses whom he did not know. Even his parents treated him sometimes like a stranger. His mother was shy with him at first. She had been worried, she said, when Willis had written her that he was engaged to a girl she did not know. It was wonderful to discover that Sylvia was just the daughter-in-law she had dreamed of having—a good, sweet, sensible, intelligent girl. Her family were all lovely people too.

"You've grown up so, Willis, that I hardly know you," she said. "Doesn't Willis look handsome, Alfred?"

"Yes," Alfred Wayde said. "He's been polished off, all right. How about a touch of rye, Willis?"

"Now, Alfred," Mrs. Wayde said, "I wish you'd ever been polished. You know you're proud of Willis."

"Why, yes," Alfred Wayde said, "I'm proud of you all right, son. Here you are, not thirty, with motorcars, golf sticks, everything. You're marrying a real nice girl. She's a little thin for my taste, but no doubt she'll flesh out. There's only one thing bothers me." He stopped and lighted his pipe. "Just don't get too smooth," he said, "or you'll turn into a stinker. A lot of people do before they know it, son."

"Alfred," Mrs. Wayde said, "you ought to be ashamed."

"I'm sorry," Alfred Wayde said. "I apologize if I offended you, son."

"You didn't," Willis said, "and I know what you mean, and you said it before to me once. Do you remember?"

"That's right," Alfred Wayde said, "up at Harcourt. I didn't mean to be repeating myself. Well, I'm going to bed now. My feet hurt in these new shoes."

Willis always liked to think that Sylvia's and his honeymoon had been a very happy one. He had heard that the most important recipe for a happy honeymoon was complete physical comfort. He had not told Sylvia where they were going because he had wanted it to be a surprise. All he would tell Sylvia was that he had reservations at a place in the Adirondack Mountains.

The name of the place was Chieftain Manor, which Willis had once heard Mr. Beakney say was one of the finest rest-and-recreation hotels that he had ever seen, and Mr. Beakney certainly had been right. Willis had never been to a hotel like Chieftain Manor. His initial impression persisted that Chieftain Manor contained everything that anyone could need in order to achieve happiness. Once you passed through its front portals that overlooked the putting green and croquet lawn, there were passages branching off in all directions to shops selling linen and lingerie and jewelry, sport shops, bookshops, barbershops, and hairdressers, cigar stands, newsstands, conservatories, and a broker's office. The manor was really larger than Willis had believed was possible, considering how far they were from anywhere.

"Oh, Willis," he heard Sylvia say, "is this it?"

"Yes, honey," he told her. "It's quite a layout, isn't it?"

"This isn't a hotel," she said, "it's a fantasy."

"A what?" he asked her.

"Oh, never mind, dear," she said. "Isn't it going to be terribly expensive?"

It was strange how apt Sylvia was to miss the point of certain things. For instance, she never could understand when it was worth while to spend money. Of course the main purpose of Chieftain Manor was to be expensive. It was a symbolic prize for industry and endeavor, a happy resting place only for those who had made good. Somehow Sylvia never seemed to see that if you worked hard for what you got, it was a pleasure to show that you had money.

"Oh, Willis," she said. "It's just so —— Oh, never mind. I only mean that it isn't very cozy."

"But it isn't meant to be," he said. "People who come here don't want anything cozy."

There was no time to say anything more because a bellboy in a horizon-blue monkey jacket and white trousers was beside the car.

"Hello, son," Willis said. "Take out everything, will you? And put the car in the garage."

Willis had traveled enough at Beakney-Graham to know his way around hotels. Thus the Chieftain awed Willis only while he and Sylvia first crossed the lobby. By the time he was facing the room clerk he was completely sure of himself.

"Mr. and Mrs. Willis Wayde," he said, "Rahway, New Jersey. Here's a confirmation of my reservation."

The only wrong thing that he had done, of course, was to tell the clerk that he had a confirmation for his reservation, since this indicated an insecurity that he always avoided afterward. Upon leaving the desk Willis was already able to glance in a calm and friendly way about the lobby. The cashmere sweaters of the younger women reminded him that, given the proper things, Sylvia could look as well as any of them, and Sylvia wore clothes beautifully, as well as or better even than Bess Harcourt.

They had the elevator all to themselves, with the two boys and the baggage. "You have suite C-Sixteen, sir," the head boy said.

Willis saw Sylvia glance at him with alarm, and he smiled at her proudly.

"That's right, son," he said, and it was right. The beautifully carpeted hall was almost perfect and so were the sitting room, bedroom and bath, furnished with chintz and antique maple reproductions.

"Thank you, boys," Willis said, and he handed each of them a dollar, and smiled again at Sylvia.

"Look," he said to her. "Flowers for you with a card from the manager. Well, how do you like it, Mrs. Wayde?"

If he had meant the suite to be a surprise, it had been, but Sylvia's uneasy manner told him that her mind was again on money.

"Willis," she said, "we don't need a sitting room, do we? I know this is lovely and I love you for thinking of it, but there's all the money we have to spend for the house and everything in Rahway."

"Sylvia," he said, "do you remember that green dress?"

It was lovely to see the color rise in her cheeks.

"Of course I do," she answered, "but now we're so much more responsible."

"That's right, honey," Willis said, "but I still feel just the same way I did about that dress. I guess I always will."

"Pete, I'm worried! This stuff doesn't seem nearly as stupid as it used to!"

"You're awfully sweet, darling," she said.

She said it as though she had made a new discovery, and the warmth of her voice made him happy.

Sylvia always was a grand girl, once you made her understand, and of course they had a wonderful time. Sylvia's evening dress was not bad looking at all, and he was wearing his new Tuxedo. It was pleasant to see people glancing at them as they walked across the lobby. Sylvia was dark and tall and there was character in her face and intelligence that meant a lot more than insipid beauty. Then he was not so bad looking himself either in those days, as he knew from old photographs.

"Shall we have a cocktail before dinner?" he asked.

"Yes, of course," Sylvia said. "Darling, I keep forgetting how handsome you look, and then I start wondering how I ever found you."

A waiter pulled back a chair for her at a table in the bar, and the happy released chatter of drinkers around them splashed over them like a wave on a coral beach.

"Will you have a dry Martini, dear?" he asked. "Make it two dry Martinis, son, and ask the barman just to squeeze a lemon peel over the surface, not drop it in."

"I don't care what it costs now. This is fun," Sylvia said.

"And when we finish these drinks it will be more fun," Willis told her. "Honey, I want to tell you something. You're more than wonderful, you're more than beautiful."

"We ought to stay here permanently," Sylvia said, "if you keep on saying things like that."

"You see," he said, "you're more than beautiful because you have—you have —— I wish I could say it in French."

"Don't," Sylvia told him. "You'll spoil it if you do."

"I know, honey," he told her, "and someday you're going to take me to Paris and teach me how to speak it right. You're more than beautiful. You're distingué."

"Why, Willis," she said, "you pronounced that rather nicely."

"Excuse my French," Willis said, and he laughed. "I won't say it again, honey, but I will say you're more distinguished than any other girl in this hotel."

They looked at each other and then Sylvia smiled. "Darling," she said, "do you think I'm as distingué as Bess Harcourt?"

He was startled when Sylvia brought up Bess Harcourt, because it was neither the time nor the place for it, and also her name evoked a picture and a comparison.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "did you hear my question?"

"Oh, yes," he said. "Beg pardon, honey. There isn't any comparison. You're both different in your ways, but then no two people can be identical, can they?"

"You know I saw her once," Sylvia said. "I don't believe I ever told you. I may have been shy about it."

"I don't see that it's anything to be shy about," Willis said. "Where did you happen to see her?"

"Oh, at a Boston dance," Sylvia answered. "She was pointed out to me."

"Well, frankly," Willis said, and as he was speaking he could imagine Bess Harcourt at that vanished dance, with her tawny hair, greenish-blue eyes and quick smile, "you've got a better figure than Bess. You're better-looking than Bess. You've got more brains and a better disposition." And then he laughed. "Of course I may be prejudiced."

Sylvia laughed too. "Just you keep on being prejudiced," she said.

The fine thing was that Willis had meant everything he said. He looked critically around the barroom. Already he felt like a habitué of Chieftain Manor.

"Honey," he said, "I think there's someone over there I know. Yes, I'm sure of it."

"Who?" Sylvia asked.

"That's Mr. Percival L. Nagel," Willis said, "sitting over there with that rather heavy blond lady."

"Who's Mr. Nagel?" Sylvia asked.

"Why, honey," Willis said—she might know how to speak French, but she did not

CONTINUED ON PAGE 64

Turn off the oven! Here's a top-of-the-stove ham loaf and it's marvelous with born-to-be-better corn ☆

☆ grown from special seed we developed ourselves to give you sweeter flavor and extra-tender kernels in DEL MONTE Corn

Even the best seed available didn't grow corn good enough to match our idea of what DEL MONTE Corn should be.

So for years we've been developing our own — exclusive strains that yield not only super-thin-skinned kernels, but high natural sugar content and rich farm flavor, too.

If you pride yourself on knowing good corn, you really ought to try this... DEL MONTE Corn, any style, the kind that's born to be better.

TWIN HAM LOAVES with CORN SAUCE

½ lb. smoked ham, ground
1 lb. fresh pork, ground
1 egg
¾ cup dry bread crumbs
½ cup milk
¼ cup minced onion
1 tablespoon prepared mustard
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Scant ¼ teaspoon ground cloves
2 No. 303 cans DEL MONTE Golden Cream Style Corn

Combine all ingredients except corn; mix thoroughly. Open corn; empty into a saucepan and refrigerate till time to heat. Remove labels from corn cans, wash out cans and pack carefully with equal amounts of ham mixture. Tie waxed paper or foil over tops of cans. Set upright on rack in deep kettle; pour hot water into kettle until it comes within ½ inch of tops of cans. Cover; boil gently for 2 hours. Remove from water; pour off excess liquid. Unmold; slice. Arrange in low serving dish with the corn, which you have heated and seasoned. If desired, garnish with hot, seasoned DEL MONTE Brand Green Beans, and pimiento strips. Serves 6-8.

Try all 3 styles: Golden Cream Style • Golden Whole Kernel • White Cream Style

Del Monte® Corn — the brand you know puts flavor first know everything—"P. L. Nagel is the president of the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62

It all went to show that you never lost money in the end by staying at a fashionable hotel, and it also went to show that it paid to cultivate a knack for names and faces. The only time that Willis had seen P. L. Nagel previously was during an unforgettable episode in Mr. Harcourt's library, but that had been a long time ago.

Mr. Nagel did not look quite as trim or quite as ruddy. His hair, which had been receding from his florid forehead, had thinned until his shiny scalp showed through what was left of it, and what was left was benignly white. It was undoubtedly P. L. Nagel.

"Well," Willis heard Sylvia saying, "and suppose he is the president of the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company?"

"They make conveyor belts in the Middle West, honey," he told her. "They're the biggest belting company in America. He tried to buy the Harcourt Mill once."

"Is that his wife with him?"

It pained Willis that Sylvia sounded disdainful. Of course the lady with him was Mr. Nagel's wife, because, obviously, she could not possibly have been anything else.

"I don't suppose he remembers me at all," Willis said, "but I was right there when he offered to buy the Harcourt Mill. He offered five million dollars."

This sum made no impression on Sylvia. "I don't see why it is," she said, "that people like that always seem to be the only ones who ever offer to buy something for five million dollars."

Willis only half heard her because the sight of the Nagels had absorbed all his attention. "Honey," he said, "I think I ought to speak to Mr. Nagel. Don't you think so?"

"Why?" Sylvia asked.

"It would be a wasted opportunity if I didn't, dear," Willis said. He pushed back his chair tentatively, and just then Sylvia spoke with a startling sort of urgency.

"Oh, Willis," she said, "please don't. We're having such a good time by ourselves. Willis, he'll spoil everything."

Willis patted her hand, gently, reassuringly. "Don't worry, honey," he said, and suddenly he felt curious. "What is it that upsets you so about my just speaking to him?"

"Oh, I don't know," Sylvia said. "I just don't feel he's good for you."

"Who?" Willis said. "Old P. L. Nagel not good for me?"

"Darling"—there was a sudden catch in her voice—"I don't want you to get to be like him. That's all I mean."

"Who?" Willis said. "Me? Like P. L. Nagel?"

There really had been a moment when he hesitated, since after all it was their honeymoon. There was even a moment when he knew what she meant about getting to be like P. L. Nagel, and then he stood up.

"I wouldn't do this, honey," he said, "if it wasn't important in a business way. I'll be back in just a minute, honey."

As he walked carefully around the tables toward Mr. P. L. Nagel, he had some vague idea of what Sylvia meant. For a second Willis seemed to be leaving something that he and Sylvia were building together which had all sorts of half-realized possibilities. It was, of course, ridiculous. In the end it was more of a twinge of conscience than an idea. At any rate, the whole thing was over in an instant. Willis squared his shoulders slightly. He was near the table now. Mr. Nagel was staring at an empty old-fashioned-cocktail glass, but he looked up quickly as one does, finally, when someone silently tries to attract one's attention. "Good evening, Mr. Nagel," Willis said. "I don't imagine you remember me, but I couldn't resist the impulse."

Mr. Nagel's timing was slower than it had been years ago. "Now just a minute, son," Mr. Nagel said. "Don't tell me who you are. I want to guess. I never forget a name and a face, do I, Myrtle?" He looked archly at Mrs. Nagel.

"It depends on how many old-fashioneds you've had, P. L.," Mrs. Nagel said.

Mr. Nagel shrugged his shoulders. "Now, Myrt," he said, "I bet you two hundred dollars I guess him."

"How many guesses?" Mrs. Nagel asked.

"Just two," Mr. Nagel said, and sat up straight. "Were you ever in the belting business, son?"

"Yes sir," Willis said. "I was, and in fact——"

"Just answer," Mrs. Nagel said. "Don't tell him any more."

"All right, Myrtle," Mr. Nagel said. "I don't need any more questions. This is Jim Budd who used to be in the Chicago office. I remember you perfectly now, Jim. Sit down and have a quick one with us, and bring your best girl over."

"Oh, P. L.," Mrs. Nagel said, and she gave a loud laugh. "Two hundred dollars. Look at him. He isn't Jim Budd."

"Now, wait a minute," Mr. Nagel said. "Of course he's Jim Budd," but then Willis' own expression must have told him he was wrong. Mr. Nagel took out his handkerchief and mopped his forehead.

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

EDITED BY JOHN M. HENRY

A successful man keeps looking for work after he has found a job.

RAYMOND DUNCAN
in Ellaville, Ga., Sun

What a wonderful world it would be if it were made up of the men and women whom our women and men could have married before they married whom they did. HARRY WALSH, Omaha, Nebr.

If you want something done, give it to a busy man. He'll have his secretary do the job. L. C. McCANDLES in Craig, Colo., Empire-Courier

If you think kissing has become an academic thing, probably it has.

BOBBIE CHATT,
Vicksburg, Miss.

Think twice before you say nothing.

H. G. HUTCHESON
in Augusta, Kans., Gazette

"I'm afraid you've got me wrong, sir," Willis said. "I used to be with the Harcourts—not that there is any reason why you should remember."

Mr. Nagel always was very quick on the uptake. "That's it," he said. "You were the kid who sat with me in that den. Myrtle, sweetie, this is the son of my very close personal friend, Alf Wayde. His first name is Harris."

"The name is Willis, sir," Willis said.

Mrs. Nagel gave another laugh. "That's another one on you," she said.

Mr. Nagel shook his finger at her. "Harris is pretty close," he said. "Who's the girl you're with, Willis? She's a snappy little babe, if I may say so."

"She's my wife," Willis said. "We happen to be here on our honeymoon."

Mrs. Nagel gave another of her laughs. "There you go again, Pops," she said. "I told you they were married."

Willis said, "I just came over to say hello. It's been a pleasure meeting you again, and Mrs. Nagel, too, and now if you'll pardon me, I must rejoin Mrs. Wayde."

Mr. Nagel shook his finger at Mrs. Nagel. "Now you see you've embarrassed him," he said. "We're not going to pardon you, Harris, until you bring Mrs. Wayde over here."

"Stop calling him Harris," Mrs. Nagel said. "It would be lovely if you joined us for a cocktail, Mr. Wayde."

"Say, Myrt," Mr. Nagel said, "let's get off this formal basis. We're all first names here."

Willis could not help feeling a pleasant glow, and a warm spot in his heart that was almost like loyalty.

"I know Sylvia would love to meet you, P. L.," he said. "I'll bring Sylvia right over."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "do we really have to go over there and sit with them?"

It was not fair of Sylvia, because even if it was their honeymoon the Nagels were a very important contact.

"Now, honey," he said firmly but very cheerfully, "it won't hurt. It will be over in a minute."

He could see that there had never been an opportunity for Sylvia in her whole life to meet people like the Nagels, but after all it did not hurt her a bit. In fact, after a few minutes he was really proud of Sylvia; and what was more she seemed to know instinctively how to handle types like old P. L. When Mr. Nagel kept holding her hand long after it was necessary, it was a little difficult to know what to do, but Sylvia handled it all herself.

"I'd like it back when you're through with it, Mr. Nagel," Sylvia said. "I need it so I can have a cocktail."

It was pretty good for Sylvia and it started everything on exactly the right note. Mr. Nagel said it was a very funny line and Mrs. Nagel asked right away if Sylvia and Willis would not join them at dinner—that is, if they didn't mind sitting awhile with some stuffy old people.

Willis could not remember what they had for dinner or much of what Sylvia or Mrs. Nagel had to say, but he could recall all the details of his talk with P. L. Willis could never blame himself for being very proud of that evening. While they drank coffee in the large lounge outside the ballroom, Willis in his thoughts could stand away from himself and enjoy that scene with its background of ballroom music as an artist might admire a canvas that was turning out better than he had ever hoped.

Finally Mr. Nagel raised his hand and yawned delicately behind it. "You know, this pine-scented air seems to hit me over the head," he said, "and I have got to hit the hay. How about some golf tomorrow, Willis?"

"Gosh, P. L.," Willis said, "I'm intending to do a little serious work on my golf while I'm here, but I'm afraid I'm not in your league, P. L."

"Oh, just comedy golf," Mr. Nagel said. "I'm not what I used to be. I'll call you at eleven, son. Come on, Myrtle. Good night, Sylvia sweetness."

Willis was instantly on his feet, and he stood for a moment gazing after the Nagels before he sat down again beside Sylvia.

"Now, honey," he said, "do you see what I mean about its paying to stop at someplace like Chieftain Manor?"

Instead of answering directly, Sylvia put her hand on his arm. "Now that they've gone, let's go in and dance," she said. It was nice to see how quickly Sylvia was getting into the spirit of the place.

It was agreeable to observe that they were one of the few young couples in the ballroom, for most of the other guests, who sat watching the dancers, were in stages of late middle age. There were not many people in Willis' age group who could afford the time off for play or the tariff of Chieftain Manor.

When they finally reached their sitting room, neither of them, unlike P. L. Nagel, felt like sleep.

"I think I'll read for a while," Sylvia said. "Would you mind getting me The Oxford Book of Verse out of my suitcase, dear?"

It was like the preview of an abundance of happy years, to be reading quietly there with Sylvia. Yet after a space of silence he became aware of a common fallacy in this conventional picture. No husband and wife ever seemed able to sit in the same room and read.

"Willis?" Sylvia said.

"Yes, dear," he answered.

"How is it that someone as stupid and vulgar as Mr. Nagel can be so successful in business? I don't see that he has any brains at all, only a few slow reflexes."

"You don't mean," Willis said, "that old P. L. pinched you or anything?"

He was relieved when Sylvia laughed. "Wh the thought never crossed my mind," she sai "but I wish he had. It might have made thin easier."

Sometimes Sylvia said the most extraord nary things, considering she came from Craig Street.

"Now, honey," Willis told her, "you've g to—er—kind of expect that sort of thing wh you get around with old men over sixty, esp cially if they're topflight executives."

Sylvia laughed again and something in h mirth began to make him nervous.

"Darling," Sylvia said, "what will I do Mr. Nagel does do anything?"

"Well, honey," Willis told her, "I've alwa thought that girls knew how to handle suc situations. I don't say it's pleasant the way ce tain men behave, but you know, honey, exec tives around sixty are all under a heavy stra of responsibility. You ought to feel a litt kindly toward them. We can't always b young, honey."

Of course he really did not believe that la thought, because time, in those days, was e tirely in his favor.

There was nothing like the Adirondacks t make one sleep when one finally did get t sleep, and there were never more comfortab beds than the twin beds in their suite at th Chieftain Manor.

Sometime in the middle of the night, hov ever, he was awakened by a sound fro Sylvia's bed and at first he had a startled ide that she was crying, and then he was almo sure that she was laughing.

"Sylvia," he said, "are you all right?"

"I'm all right," she answered through th dark. "I just don't seem to be able to go t sleep, that's all."

"Sylvia," he asked her, "are you laughing o are you crying?"

There was a silence in the room that lasted considerable time before she answered.

"I don't know what I'm doing—and don ask questions, Willis."

"Sylvia," he said, "you've got to tell m what's the matter. If it's anything I've said, I've been too—er—demanding or anythin honey, just tell me."

At last he was sure that she was laughin more than she was crying.

"It isn't anything like that," she sai "You're awfully sweet, darling, but ever thing's so different."

"So different from what?" And he waited fo quite a while before he asked the question.

"Oh, darling," she said, "just so differe from anything I thought anything was goin to be. It's on another plane, but I'll get used t it—only please don't talk about it any mo tonight."

Often Willis said facetiously that his min was like an alarm clock and that he neve needed to put in a call at any hotel switch board. At any rate he was always awake b seven, and Sylvia was still asleep that ne morning.

He was delighted to see that it was a beau tiful clear morning. He slid out of bed nois lessly, wrapping himself in the silk robe whic he had purchased especially for the trip an carrying Volume II of the Five Foot She with him, tiptoed to the sitting room. He cu tomarily did twenty push-ups, but he di twenty-five that morning, because of the elix in the air. It was still only twenty minutes pa seven when he had finished, ample time for h reading. When his fifteen minutes were up h experienced as he always did a fine sense o accomplishment.

He picked up the room telephone, askin for the pool.

"Am I speaking to the instructor?" h asked. "This is Mr. Willis Wayde. If I can down right now could you give me a half-hou lesson with the Australian crawl?"

He was back by ten minutes past eight pr pared to awaken Sylvia, only to find her awak already with a rather ugly blue flannel wra per over her pajamas, which reminded hi that he must take Sylvia shopping as soon a they were dressed.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "where under th sun have you been?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 66

MAKE THE TRUSHAY 2-DROP TEST!

Get proof of Trushay's richness you can see and feel! Pour just two drops of Trushay on the back of one hand; rub in gently with the back of the other. Then rub with palms to smooth evenly all over. Right away, you'll see and feel Trushay's extra richness. For there's richness enough in just these two drops to give both your hands a luxurious softness all over!

WHEN YOU PROTECT YOUR LOVELINESS WITH A LOTION, REMEMBER...

TRUSHAY IS RICHER

in protective beauty ingredients than all other leading lotions combined!

xt time you want to be particularly nice to your hands, take them out and buy m a bottle of Trushay! For Trushay's extra richness is delightfully luxurious as mooths into upper skin layers, and supplements natural oils. Never sticky greasy, this richer lotion is blissfully cooling and comforting as it soothes, ooths, helps heal chapped skin, counteracts detergent dryness. Why not try rich, grant, peach-tinted Trushay soon? It costs no more than ordinary lotions!

Trushay protects beauty all over the way no other leading lotion can, because, drop for drop, Trushay is richer in protective ingredients. So use Trushay as a luxurious body rub, a flattering powder base, to smooth heels, knees, elbows—and give all your beauty the protection of Trushay's richness! Trushay is actually so rich, you can apply it before washing chores, to guard hands even in hot sudsy water!

TRUSHAY® IS ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 64

"Oh," he told her, "it just occurred to me that I could have a swimming lesson in the indoor pool. They've got a good instructor there. It was a nice workout, honey."

"What were you doing that for?" she asked.

"Well," he said, "I've always wanted to learn the Australian crawl. In Clyde there was a young fellow who could do the crawl beautifully. I saw him do it once in the Harcourt swimming pool after he had whipped me playing tennis. His name was Ed Ewing, the one who married Bess Harcourt—not that any of it makes any difference, honey."

And this was true. None of it did make any difference. Bess Harcourt was a memory almost as distant as his days at the mine in Colorado. He simply remembered that Edward Ewing had been very good at the Australian crawl.

He was feeling wonderful. The coffee and the buckwheat cakes and the small order of breakfast steak and the toast and strawberry jam were all wonderful.

"And, honey," he said, "we'd better lay out our program for the day. First I'll take you shopping. I want to get you some tweeds and a housecoat, and then you and I have both got to have a golf lesson and then I'm going to play a few holes with old P. L. and then it will be time for lunch. Gosh, I'm glad we're here, honey."

He had expected a quick, sympathetic smile from Sylvia, which was the least that he deserved. Instead he was surprised that she looked dubious.

"Don't you think, Willis," she said, "that if you play golf with Mr. Nagel, we'll have to keep seeing the Nagels all the time?"

It amazed him that Sylvia could not see the advantages of their seeing as much as possible of the Nagels.

"Now, honey," he said, and he spoke slowly and carefully, "there is one thing we ought to get straight, with all kindness and without emotion. Please don't look so startled, honey."

"Then don't look so stern, Willis," she said. "We were only talking about the Nagels."

"I wish you wouldn't say 'only the Nagels,' honey," he told her. "They're pretty important, potentially, in my business future, but more than that they represent . . . well, a sort of principle, a kind of way of life for both of us."

"For heaven's sakes, Willis," Sylvia said, "I didn't mean to upset you, but just what have the Nagels got to do with our way of life?"

"You're not upsetting me, honey," Willis told her. "Just please let me encapsulate my thought, because it is a thought."

"What's that again?" Sylvia asked. "What were you going to do to the thought?"

"Oh," Willis said, and he laughed. "Maybe it's an inappropriate word. We always used to use it back at Beakney-Graham, but never mind it now, honey. You let me worry about business. I'll pay the bills. I can, but you let me run the business end of the combination, honey, and I'll let you run the home. But the Nagels are business, honey, and you let me run business."

PERHAPS the best way of judging whether or not certain years in your life were happy might be to determine how much you remembered about them; for the happiest years were those in which events slid into each other so naturally that all which remained was a recollection of growth and achievement. Judging the early years of Willis and Sylvia Wayde's marriage by such a standard, they were very happy ones.

Sylvia and Willis had both been very busy in different ways. The reorganizing of Rahway Belting was combined with all the routine adjustments that most young couples must face. The babies and the obstetrical bills, the buying of furniture, papering the front hall, New Year's Eves at the country club formed a disconnected chain of recollection. You could recall many incidents, but sometimes it was hard to tell exactly where those incidents belonged, chronologically.

This uncertainty about dates and facts was, perhaps, not so peculiar as it seemed, since life in Orange, when they began it, was on the unstable foundations known to all young couples who have to earn a living. None of their friends, for instance, had the remotest idea that they would live where they were for long. The moment they had higher salaries they would be moving. After all, this climbing up the ladder was all part of the American way.

The home which they had rented was a brown-shingled affair standing on an adequate piece of lawn and shut off from the sidewalk by a privet hedge. They had selected the house with the help of Mr. and Mrs. Jacoby, who felt it was important for Rahway Belting that the Waydes should live in a suitable neighborhood. It had taken them quite a while to furnish the house, or at least it had Sylvia, since Willis had delegated the whole problem to her. Sometimes he had to urge Sylvia to spend more money on the right things, like a good Oriental for the living room and a real antique dining-room table, but on the whole he admired her taste.

Willis had always thought of marriage as a process of settling down, whereas he soon discovered it was a series of disturbances. He did not intend this as a complaint, because many of these experiences had been highly enjoyable, such as meeting neighbors and the first time that Sylvia and he had entertained in their own home. There were invitations to dinner from the Jacobys and various stockholders of Rahway Belting. Then the minister came to call and they promised to attend the Congregational church. On the whole if you were friendly with people they were friendly in return, and there was a real community spirit in that neighborhood.

It hardly seemed any time at all after they had moved to Orange—in fact, before all the drapes were up—that Sylvia announced that she was going to have a baby. It must have

EARL McMILLEN, DESIGNER; RODNEY McKAY MORGAN, PHOTOGRAPHER

Here is a house designed to give more leisure time, with lots of room inside and out to enjoy it.

A COMPACT and SPACIOUS HOUSE

By CAROL L. MERCADO

Planned for informality and easy upkeep, this house combines the luxury of spacious living areas with the economy of compact working and sleeping zones.

The sheltered doorway, flanked by a potted evergreen and a floor-to-ceiling window, hints at the hospitality to be found inside. To the right of the entry, living and dining rooms flow together, separated by back-to-back fireplaces; dining-room hearth is raised for indoor barbecues. Screened porch and terrace add outdoor living space—the porch is perfect for insect-free picnics and rainy-day play.

The kitchen, compact and spacious too, has generous counter and cabinet area and a pass-through to the dining room to simplify serving. Laundry equipment lines up on the inside wall of the utility alcove; a breakfast bar faces the view. Service entry and heater room are easily accessible through the carport. Housework is kept to a minimum through easy-to-clean wall and floor finishes.

Outside, the green-stained wood shingles of the carport and master-bedroom walls provide contrast to the terra-cotta brick of the main house, the sparkling white trim and the gray asphalt roof shingles.

n just before Christmas because Willis re-nbered that he had been making a final k of the Christmas-card list at the office he afternoon that he found Sylvia waiting him in the living room with the tea things y. Tea had been Sylvia's idea and one he d, perhaps because tea always made him k of the Harcourt house; and their blue a tea set invariably reminded Willis that eday they must get a silver tea service.

Willis," Sylvia said, "the doctor says I'm gnant."

e was startled, not so much by the news y the way that Sylvia had delivered it, so lly that he knew that Minnie must have d it in the kitchen.

Well, well," he said, "so it looks as though made it, does it?"

uriously that simple remark of his seemed tartle Sylvia. "Oh, Willis," she said, "is all you're going to say?"

hen a wave of emotion swept over him. oney," he said, "I really think it's swell. In it couldn't be sweller."

When he sat down beside her he forgot all problems of Rahway Belting, and they had n pretty tough that day.

Gosh, honey," he said, "I've really got to off my coat and go to work now. I want o something for this kid, no matter what ex. I want it to have a lot of things you and dn't have, honey."

Willis believed that no man could possibly et any detail of the experience of becoming ther for the first time, but even so his most e recollections of parenthood eventually ame confused. This may have been only the that old Mother Nature plays on men, in ild way, as well as on women. Willis could ember a lot of things that happened und hospitals while he waited during nerv- hours for news, but he could no longer de whether these events had heralded the earance of Alfred, who was born in Au-, 1937, or Paul, in 1940, or Louise, right he middle of the war.

often amused Willis to hear Republicans r scathingly to the Roosevelt Administra- as "a government by crisis"; not that he not a good Republican himself, or that he roved for a minute the creeping socialism he New Deal. Life for any married man one crisis after another, business or do-tic.

here were plenty of things, businesswise, ake up Willis' attention in those last years he thirties. There was no doubt, with the stance of a new sales manager and a gen- shakeup in the office force, plus the new ds loaned the company by Mrs. Jacoby, he was getting Rahway Belting into a real petitive position. Willis had made it his sonal task to visit every one of Rahway ing's customers. Also, he devoted countless rs to the sales force. You always had to ember that a sales force, no matter how ctive it might be, was hopeless without a duct in which it could believe. Willis lived, and slept with Planeroid belting. He was too glad to share his ultimate successes his regard with Jerry Bascomb, whom he lucky enough to hire in June, '37, just r Jerry graduated from Tech. From the start Willis insisted on naming Jerry's entions that improved the Planeroid process Bascomb Patents. This was a good means nsuring loyalty, and to prove it Jerry was him still, and Willis was the godfather of of Jerry's children. By the beginning of 0, the Planeroid line was better than it ever been, and sales figures and earnings wed it was going places in a modest way.

E year 1940, when you came to think of was a headache year for nearly everyone in erica, and Willis' personal and private irs offered no exception. To begin with, ng Paul arrived that February and they ld afford with difficulty a nurse for the chil-n. Willis' whole budget was thrown out of ance, but this was only the domestic side of picture. Besides an uncertain business situ-on, Mr. Jacoby's health suddenly became so that he was obliged to cancel his usual ter trip to Arizona. Willis felt a premoni- when he went to call on Mr. Jacoby. With-knowing anything about illness, Willis could tell that Mr. Jacoby, in spite of his high spirits, was far from well, and Willis' gloomiest conclusions were confirmed when he met Mrs. Jacoby downstairs in the living room.

Only a few days before Mr. Henry Peters, who was a stockholder in Rahway Belting, had offered Willis some shares of Rahway Belting common. If Willis were to buy this stock, his holdings would be nearer 40 than 30 per cent. This was something which in all honesty he should tell Mrs. Jacoby, but he did not do so immediately because he was still shocked by Mr. Jacoby's appearance.

There was never any use mincing matters with Mrs. Jacoby. She looked worried and unhappy, but like the late Seth Wilfred she knew how to cut her losses.

"There's a heart complication," she said. "Manley won't go to the hospital. He has superstitious ideas about hospitals."

"I'm awfully sorry," Willis told her. "I didn't know things were as serious as this."

"Well they are," Mrs. Jacoby said, "but something serious happens to everyone sometime. How are things at Rahway?"

"Everything's going pretty well," Willis said.

"I know it is," Mrs. Jacoby said, "and it's a great comfort to Manley. He was only reminding me this morning how I had advised him to sell that plant."

Willis smiled, but at the same time he had a qualm of apprehension. If Mr. Jacoby should die, there might be every reason for Mrs. Jacoby to sell out Rahway Belting. It was time to mention the common stock he had been offered, but Mrs. Jacoby spoke again before he could start. "Henry Peters says you want to buy his stock," she said.

Although Willis was beginning to pride himself on his ability to handle situations, he found himself pausing clumsily.

"Peters offered it to me first, of course," Mrs. Jacoby said, "but I didn't want any more. Why should I, with Manley the way he is?"

Six sound reasons for falling in love with a new CHEVROLET

It's terribly handsome
When a lady falls in love—with man or car—she'd like to have good reasons to back up the whim of her heart.

Not that it's strictly necessary. Any woman could forgive herself—easily—if she just looked at the new Chevrolet and something went "ping" inside, left center.

For the Motoramic Chevrolet is terribly handsome. And maybe that's reason enough.

But there are five other good reasons. Like this:

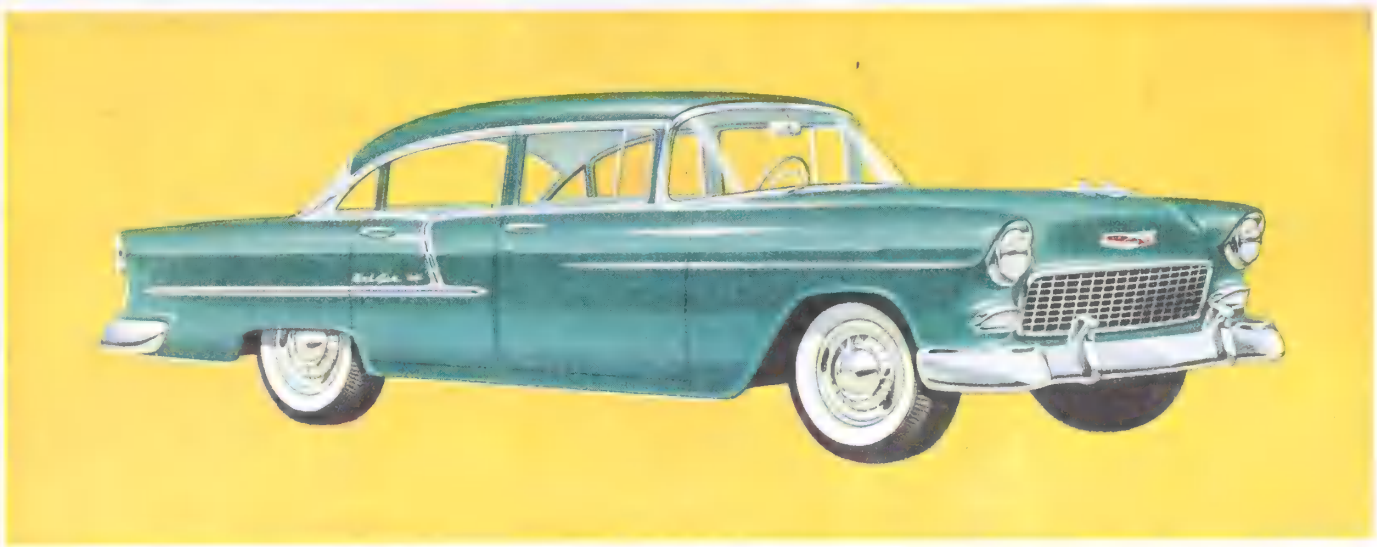
. . . But a lamb to control.
A lady likes to be able to manage the object of her affections (discreetly, of course), and here are power options* galore, designed for the flick of one slim finger. Just make a whim . . . and your Chevrolet gives it muscles.

It offers a wonderful feeling of security.
Wide-braced outrigger rear springs to take the roll and sway out of tight turns. New Glide-Ride front suspension (the engineers are mad about this!) that steers like stirring cream and rides like a little white cloud. And the safety of the almost open-air view you get through that swept-back windshield.



. . . And it thinks of all the little things that mean so much . . .
things like tubeless tires for greater protection against blowouts . . . High-Level ventilation, to breathe in outside air above the level of exhaust fumes and road dust . . . Anti-Dive braking control to check that unpleasant "nosing-down" in front when you make a fast stop . . . the clever planning that lets a lady at the wheel see all four fenders for easier parking.

It has an air of real elegance.
A lady holds her chin a little higher when she goes out with a Chevrolet . . . because anyone can see the inborn quality in every line, the richness of fabrics and fittings, the brilliant good taste of its exterior colors. And who wouldn't relish the assurance of that signature, Body by Fisher, which means to automobiles what sterling does to silverware?

. . . But, it's thrifty, too.
A Chevrolet lasts and lasts . . . it doesn't come whining around for this repair or that adjustment. It costs less to begin with . . . and the way it meters out gasoline warms the heart of any good hausfrau.

Chevrolet extra-cost options include smoother Powerglide automatic transmission, Power Steering, Power Brakes, and (on "210" and Bel Air models) Power-Lift windows and Power-Positioned front seats.*

Six good reasons? There are hundreds, really. And if you fall in love with a Motoramic Chevrolet no one will blame you—not even the most green-eyed husband. So why don't you just happen to stroll by your Chevrolet dealer's today—and risk losing your heart?
Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Mich.

MOTORAMIC
Chevrolet
MORE THAN A NEW CAR . . .
A NEW CONCEPT OF LOW-COST MOTORING

Willis often thought it was a pity that Mrs. Jacoby had not been a man.

"I am very glad that Mr. Peters consulted you first about this matter," Willis said, and he hoped he was not speaking too quickly. "I was just going to take up the question with you myself, but seeing Mr. Jacoby so ill made it completely leave my mind."

There was a pause, a very brief one, but it was long enough to make Willis highly uncomfortable. "I'm sure you were," Mrs. Jacoby said. "You're too shrewd to play around behind my back."

"I'm awfully glad you realize that, Mrs. Jacoby," Willis told her.

"Of course I realize it," Mrs. Jacoby said. "There is no need to worry about me, Willis. I don't want to have control of Rahway Belting. All I care about is the earnings. Rahway Belting won't mean a thing to me except as another holding in the portfolio"—she lowered her voice—"if Manley passes on."

Willis cleared his throat. "Would you mind telling me, Mrs. Jacoby," he said, "if Mr. Jacoby should—er—pass on, are you planning to sell your stock?"

"I won't sink any more money in it," Mrs. Jacoby said. "Let's stop beating about the bush. I won't have any sentimental feeling about Rahway Belting—if Manley passes on."

He was always grateful to Mrs. Jacoby for having stated her thoughts so frankly. He could understand that Mrs. Jacoby was actually saying that the end of an era was approaching, and that he must begin looking out for his own interests—if Manley Jacoby should pass on. He was certain that he never would have thought of writing Mr. Bryson Harcourt—that he would have thought in only the vaguest way about combining the Klaus patents with the Planeroid patents—if Mrs. Jacoby had not said that she would no longer have a sentimental interest in Rahway Belting in the event of Mr. Jacoby's demise.

It was a relief to meet someone like Mrs. Jacoby, who did not have the Harcourts' sentiments, because anyone with common sense knew that sentiment had nothing to do with industrial transactions.

It was fortunate that Willis started that same evening to give serious thought to the possible merger of Rahway Belting and Harcourt Mill, because Mr. Jacoby died two weeks later. Of course the whole picture changed immediately.

Willis decided to get in touch with Mr. Bryson Harcourt two days after Mr. Jacoby's funeral. In order to avoid office gossip he wrote the letter himself in his living room in Orange.

"Dear Mr. Harcourt," Willis wrote. "I am Willis Wayde, whom I hope you will remember from the old days at the Harcourt Mill. Although it has been a long time since we have met, I have a warm spot in my heart for Harcourt, and any news I hear from the mill is still to me like news from home in a very real sense.

"Knowing how busy you must be I shall state my reason for this letter briefly. I find myself here in general charge of the Rahway Belting Company, and I believe I have an idea regarding its future which I think may interest you as much as it does me. I would prefer to tell you the details verbally and so I ask whether I may call on you at your convenience and by appointment.

"It so happens that I must make a few calls in Boston next week. You may not have heard, by the way, that the Walton people up there are ordering our new Planeroid conveyors, and this is keeping us pretty busy in Rahway. If you will write me—or better, send me a wire—I can arrange my schedule to fit yours.

"It will be a genuine pleasure to see you again and to talk over old times. I hope that Mrs. Harcourt and Bill and Bess are all well and that you are enjoying a good winter.

"Sincerely, as always."

Thinking it over later, Willis could see that there were a number of things wrong about his letter, but it never occurred to Willis for a moment that Mr. Bryson Harcourt would have thought the letter was an application for a job. He was shocked when he found a night letter on his desk at Rahway three days later.

"Roger and I delighted if you can return to us again," the telegram read. "Meet me at my house, Beacon Street, five-thirty Tuesday, and please stay to dinner."

There was an overcordiality in the telegram that indicated Bryson Harcourt's transparency. Old H. H. would never have sent such a telegram, but it was clear that Willis was still favorably remembered back at the Harcourt Mill. There was also an indication that things were not going well, since they were overanxious to have have him back.

"Delighted to meet you five-thirty Tuesday," he wired. "Sorry gave impression seeking position because am happy here."

He wanted to make it plain from the start that he expected no favors. He was presenting a simple business proposition.

Willis spent many hours planning his approach to Mr. Bryson Harcourt. He wished to show that he was calling on Mr. Bryson Harcourt as one who still appreciated the many kindnesses the family had shown him, but he also wanted to have Mr. Bryson Harcourt realize that he was a successful individual in his own right.

The maid who answered the door was dimly familiar. He was surprised that she remembered him much more clearly than he did her.

"I'll take your coat, Mr. Willis," the maid said.

"Oh, thank you," Willis said. "I hope Mr. Harcourt is expecting me." He glanced unobtrusively at his wrist watch. It was two minutes after five-thirty.

"Oh yes," the maid said, "Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt are expecting you upstairs, Mr. Willis."

Although it had been nearly ten years since Willis had seen them, Mr. Bryson and Mrs. Harcourt still had the durable outdoor quality that he remembered. There were gray streaks in Mr. Bryson's dark hair, but he still had a young look. There had always been a warmth and kindness about Mr. Bryson and this quality had not gone. There was a moment, as Willis stood in the doorway of the upstairs parlor, when he realized that the balance between them all had changed. He knew before either of the Harcourts spoke that they were anxious to see him in the way people were when you had something that they wanted.

"Why, Willis," Mrs. Harcourt said, "how well you look!"

"And you, too, Mrs. Harcourt," Willis said. She had the florid complexion he remembered, but her hair was growing becomingly white. "It is a genuine pleasure to see you again."

"I told Bryson that I wanted to have a glimpse of you and then I'd go," Mrs. Harcourt said. "How are your father and mother—well, I hope?"

"Oh, yes, thanks," Willis said. "They're on the West Coast, you know."

"You're staying to dinner, aren't you?" Mrs. Harcourt asked.

"If it would not be an inconvenience, it would be a great pleasure, Mrs. Harcourt," Willis said.

Imagine your bathroom bathed in whisper-soft Wisteria, Honey or proud Peacock! These—just a hint of Dundee's exciting decorator-chosen Cavalcade of Colors that awaits you at your favorite store. And look-good, feel-good Dundee Turkish towels promise a long, dazzling life... fluffy and thirsty—every inch of the way, and delightfully priced!

Dundee Towels

DUNDEE MILLS, INC., Griffin, Ga. ▪ Showrooms: 40 Worth St., New York City

① Other Dundee Fabrics: DIAPERS • FLANNELETTES • DUNFAST ALL-PURPOSE COTTONS

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGE 44

Vogue Design No. S-4576. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 40; 30 to 40. $1.00.

Vogue Design No. 8469. "Easy to Make" collars; sizes Small (32–34), Medium (36–38). 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8461. "Very Easy to Make" skirt or tie-on skirt; 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8490. "Easy to Make" jacket or overblouse; 12 to 20; 30 to 38. 60c.

S-4576 8469 8461 8490

hat's splendid," Mrs. Harcourt said. asked Bess and Edward over. She's ter- anxious to see you."

et's see," Mr. Bryson Harcourt said, be you don't know that Bess married ard Ewing. I don't remember whether were with us or not when they got en- d."

h yes, I was, as a matter of fact," Willis "It will be a great pleasure to see them again."

hy don't you take Willis across the hall, " Mrs. Harcourt said, "for your little but don't be too long because we all want ar about him."

is just like old times having you here, s," Mr. Harcourt said, and he took Willis e arm and led him past the stairs into the er sitting room and closed the sliding "Will you have a cigar, Willis?"

o thank you, sir," Willis said, and he ed. "Mr. Harcourt taught me a lot of s, but he never could get me to like s." ell, I'll have one if you don't mind," Mr. n said. "You're looking very fit, Willis." always make it a point," Willis said, "to little bending and stretching and a few ups every day, but sometimes I think I on hard work."

et's see," Mr. n said. "What is ame of that place you are work-eeling of frustra- which Willis had tten, returned to hen Mr. Bryson that question. the Rahway Belt- Company, sir," said. "You may heard of the Pla- conveyors that anufacture. Of e it is a small any. I happen to head of it at the ent." He tried to as casually as ble, and he smiled. 's why I came see you, sir."

lis' instinct was telling him that the ities of the interview were over. Mr. n nodded as he always did when he rying to put facts together.

ear me," he said, "I had no idea that you so responsible there. I'm sorry, selfishly, se we are looking for a new plant man- t Harcourt. I hadn't thought of you as the head of your own organization."

LLIS laughed in a deprecating way. "It isn't my own organization, sir," Willis "I'm acting as president only for the ent. I'm sorry you have to look for a new manager, because I know they are rather o find."

. Bryson shook his head. "It isn't find- em—it is keeping them," he said. "You emember my Cousin Roger?"

n, yes," Willis said, "I remember Mr. Harcourt very well."

. Bryson puffed for a moment on his "Of course," he said, "I keep forgetting. urse you know Roger Harcourt as well lo. He has a disagreeable streak, but I y don't know what I'd do without him."

lis nodded understandingly but he did nswer. It was far better to let Mr. Bryson talking.

. Bryson said, "It is like old times talking n, Willis. I had half forgotten what good s we used to be, and how you used to over to see Bill and Bess."

will be a great pleasure to see Bess this ng," Willis said, "and I hope that Bill is ll." Mr. Bryson laughed exactly as he ng ago when Bill's name was mentioned. down in Bermuda now. Ever since he ed Anne Gresham, they stay at her fam- lace there for most of the winter. I keep to talk mill to him but he'd rather work s father-in-law. Let's see, Willis, how old ou?"

"I'll be thirty-three in November, sir," Willis said.

"Just Bill's age. I should have remembered. Well," Mr. Bryson said, "time certainly marches on, but there is one thing that puzzles me."

"What's that, sir?" Willis asked.

"You know," Mr. Bryson said, "father always used to tell me not to exhibit undue curiosity when I was talking business, but I can't help being curious. If you don't want a job, why have you come up here to see me, Willis?"

WILLIS waited for a moment, deliberately because he wanted to be sure of Mr. Bryson's full attention. "Well," Willis said, and he tried to speak slowly, "I don't want to startle you, sir, and maybe this whole thing should have something more of an introduction." He checked himself and sat up straighter. "I was wondering if you would be interested in buying the Rahway Belting Company, Mr. Harcourt." It was the most decisive thing that he had ever said. "Please do not turn it down without thinking of it, Mr. Harcourt. You see, there would be no cash involved, only a negotiated exchange of stock. You could call the whole thing Harcourt Associates, if you wanted, and if you want, you can get me with the deal. I don't see why I couldn't manage both the Rahway plant and the Harcourt Mill."

Mr. Bryson sighed. "I wish Roger were here, but as long as he isn't, you'd better begin at the beginning, Willis. Frankly, I'm looking for fewer and not more complications and I don't exactly see how any sort of combination could possibly simplify any of our problems."

"I think I can show you," Willis said, and it was not hard for him to present his ideas, because he had rehearsed them so often. Willis had been a good salesman even before his final training at Beakney-Graham. There was no trouble, he always said, in selling anything to anyone, provided you believed in the thing you wished to sell. Willis had never believed in anything as fully as he had in joining the Harcourt Mill with Rahway Belting. He had his facts so clearly that eloquence was not necessary. Right from the beginning, he and Mr. Harcourt were in tune and in step. Mr. Bryson was confused and weary of the details of the Harcourt Mill. The beauty of the Rahway-Harcourt promotion was that Willis and Mr. Bryson desired two different things which fitted together like a jigsaw puzzle. Willis wanted a chance to move forward, while Mr. Bryson wanted to move back. It was beautiful to see Mr. Bryson react to every stimulus.

"I really think you have something, Willis," Mr. Bryson said. "The further we go into this the better it seems to look."

The time had come to draw back slightly. Willis paused for a moment, seemingly lost in thought. "I agree with you, Mr. Harcourt," he said, "but I think we both ought to remember that there may be some sort of catch in this thing that neither of us sees, and fortunately we both have plenty of time to think it over."

"I'm glad we have time," Mr. Bryson said, "because I can see that this is pretty complicated. It does take thinking over."

"It certainly does," Willis said, "and I can't tell you how glad I'll be to get someone else's reaction. I may as well tell you frankly that I haven't discussed this with any of our people at Rahway. In fact, it may very well be that our majority stockholder, Mrs. Jacoby, may be entirely against the whole transaction."

"Let's see," Mr. Bryson said, "who is she?"

"The widow of the late president of Rahway Belting," Willis told him. "Mrs. Jacoby has an excellent head for business. She is the daughter of the financier, Seth Wilfred."

The mention of Mr. Seth Wilfred, he could see, gave Rahway Belting a new stability and a

EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVE

Philosopher William James, his lecture to the student body at a women's college completed, launched the question period by acknowledging the hesitantly upraised hand of an exceptionally beautiful undergraduate.

"Doctor James," she wondered, "would you please tell us what, in your opinion, is the principal aim of education?"

Said the world's greatest expert at stripping a subject to bare fundamentals: "To know a good man when you see one."

—MARY ALKUS

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

says Candy Jones

(Mrs. Harry Conover)

Conover School Beauty Director

"I've seen this soap help girls from 11 different countries—with every type of skin—dry, normal and oily."

"It's such wholesome beauty care!" says chic Paris stylist, Georgette. "No wonder American complexions are so pretty!"

"French women are wise in the ways of beauty," says glamorous Georgette, "but I must say I've learned a lot about complexion care since I started using Cashmere Bouquet.

"My skin tends to be oily, so Candy taught me the special Conover beauty-wash method. Twice a day, I cream Cashmere Bouquet's rich, mild lather over my face with my fingertips. It leaves a fresh glow, a softer, smoother feel. And I love the flowery fragrance!"

P.S. "Cake make-up helps oily skin keep that glowing, Cashmere Bouquet look all day. Cream-base foundations lend the same perfection to dry skin."

Candy

Complexion and big bath sizes brighter background, but a disturbed look had come over Mr. Bryson.

"I can't understand why you haven't talked this over with Mrs.—er—Jacoby," Mr. Bryson said. "It would seem to me that she is a key figure in your picture."

Willis nodded like a younger man acknowledging an older man's rebuke. "I suppose I should have," Willis said, "before I came up here to bother you about something which is so theoretical, but the truth is I was hoping I might get a little something more concrete to give Mrs. Jacoby when I finally did see her." Willis shook his head slowly. "Frankly, there has been no opportunity to take up any matter with her because of Mr. Jacoby's illness and death. His funeral took place only a short time ago."

For a few seconds they both were gravely silent.

"I wish I had some way of predicting," Willis said. "I hope Mrs. Jacoby will see things my way."

"I certainly hope she will," Mr. Bryson said, "and I don't see why she shouldn't. Suppose we go on the assumption she agrees."

"I think that is a very good idea, Mr. Harcourt," Willis answered, "as long as we are just thinking out loud."

"Good heavens!" Mr. Bryson said. "I haven't been so absorbed for a long while. It is a quarter of seven o'clock and I hear voices. It must be Bess and Edward. You'll stay over tomorrow, won't you? I'd like to have you talk to Roger."

"It would be a great pleasure, Mr. Harcourt," Willis said, "as long as it is definitely understood that we are just thinking out loud."

Willis was beginning to be interested in how the years had treated people. When Mr. Harcourt pulled open the sliding doors, Willis could see Mrs. Harcourt and Bess and Edward Ewing in the sitting room across the hall. Mrs. Harcourt had changed into a black velvet evening gown, and Bess was dressed in green. A green dress, as Willis had told her once, went particularly well with her bluish-green eyes. Her hair, Willis could see in those seconds while he walked across the hall, was still yellow but, like his own, darker. She looked taller than he remembered; and he could tell—because a man could always tell such things—that Bess Ewing had made a special effort for him. The gloss of her hair and its somewhat aggressive curly quality told very plainly that Bess had been to the beauty parlor that morning. It was pleasant, of course, to realize that Bess wanted to look well on his account.

When he had last seen Bess, his knowledge of young women had been confined only to her, to the few girls he had known at Clyde High School, or had met at classes at Boston University, and to one or two of Bess' friends. It was very different now. Mrs. Harcourt and Bess, in her green satin and pearls, had a slightly provincial look. Sylvia, even in an old dress, would have attracted more attention than Bess Ewing.

Bess' voice had a high note, which Willis had always associated with her when she was pleased and elated. "Why, Willis," she said, and she held out both her hands, "you don't look a bit different."

He thought that her hands held his a moment longer than was necessary before they dropped away.

"I hope I've changed a little for the better," Willis said. "This is a very great pleasure, Bess."

"Well, you sound just the same," Bess said. "You always did sound like Emily Post."

WILLIS felt his cheeks reddening. "And Uriah Heep," Willis said, and he laughed louder than was necessary. "Don't forget Uriah Heep."

Suddenly Bess' lips lost their malicious smile. "That isn't accurate now," she said. "You don't look humble any more."

"Uriah Heep stopped being humble too," Willis said, and he laughed again—"that is, if I remember Dickens."

"Oh, Willis," Bess said. "let's stop. I'm really dreadfully glad to see you."

Then she must have remembered that Willis had not yet said a word to Edward Ewing. Edward was standing waiting, wearing a dinner coat, which made Willis wish that he had brought his own Tuxedo.

"Willis," Bess said, "you remember Edward, don't you?"

It seemed to Willis that they shook hands in very much the same way they had across the tennis net at the Harcourt place, but Willis was also aware of certain shades of difference. He felt no wishful envy for Edward Ewing now. He felt not only a mental but a physical superiority, because Edward had accumulated a corpulence about his face and waistline.

"I certainly do remember," Willis said.

"I'm awfully glad to see you again, Willis," Edward said. "How's everything going?"

"Fine," Willis said. "Fine. I'm living in Orange—married and have two children. And you, Edward?"

"We have four." Edward said. "That is, the last time I counted up. Four's right, isn't it, Bess?"

"Right," Bess said. "And no more in sight on the immediate horizon. But then, Edward and I had a head start over you and—oh, dear, I have forgotten your wife's name, Willis."

"Her name is Sylvia," he said. "You can remember it by the quotation, 'Who is Sylvia? What is she?'—from Shakespeare, if I'm not mistaken."

Bess said, "Since when did you take up Shakespeare?"

"I wouldn't say I have taken him up," Willis said, "but I like to relax with a book now and then when little Al isn't pulling potted plants off the window sill on top of himself."

"Little Al sounds very active." It was Mr. Bryson Harcourt interrupting.

"Indeed he is," Willis said, "considering his age."

"Well, boys will be boys," Mr. Bryson said. "See here, hasn't anyone given you a drink?"

"Edward," Bess said, and Willis remembered her executive tone of voice, "you're keeping bar for father, aren't you? Go and please get Willis his cocktail. What else do you relax with besides Shakespeare, Willis?"

"I always try to relax with something worth while," Willis answered.

"What do you consider better?" Bess asked. "A blonde or a brunette?"

Willis laughed heartily. "Gentlemen prefer blondes," he said.

Of course Willis meant it only in a kidding way, but it seemed to please Bess.

"Do you still like blondes?" she asked.

"Oh, yes," he said, but he did not like Bess Ewing in that way any longer, and he was sure that pique or resentment did not enter into his feeling.

Mr. Bryson interrupted them. "I don't know what you two are talking about," he said, "but it's time to go down to dinner, and before we go"—and he spoke in a louder tone—"as long as we are all in the family here, I have a word to say that may interest us all. Willis and I have been having a very interesting talk. It may be that we will have Willis with us again, at least for part of his time, at the mill." Mr. Harcourt raised his glass. "Here's hoping so, Willis, and you'd better have another before we go downstairs."

"Oh, no, thank you, sir," Willis said. It was not what he would have called a two-drink night, and he needed to watch everything. He was surprised that Bess looked as though she had just received an answer to an outlandish wish.

"Oh, Willis," she said, "I'm so glad."

Willis had been in the Bryson Harcourts' Boston dining room on several occasions years ago, but he saw it with a new eye while he told Mrs. Harcourt about Sylvia and the children. It looked more worn than he remembered, but he had to admit that the added dinginess only indicated that the Harcourts were not obliged to care how things looked. He and Sylvia, he was thinking, would have been criticized, but not the Harcourts; and, besides, the room was durably handsome.

"What a very beautiful epergne, Mrs. Harcourt," Willis said.

"Why, Willis," Mrs. Harcourt said, "I didn't know you were interested in old silver."

There was wine, which must have been a claret—red wine with red meat. Willis took a sip of it before he answered.

"Well, frankly," Willis said, "it was Mr. Henry Harcourt who obliged me to take an interest in antiques. You see, he had me make an inventory of all the antique furniture in the office at the mill." Willis smiled. "Now antiques have become a hobby with me, and a recreation which Sylvia and I can share. It's sort of fun to hop in the car on Saturdays and go around to antique shops. And I've found that antiquing is a hobby that pays in other ways."

He paused and glanced around the table. Bess, who was sitting on his right, had stopped conversing with her father. "How do you mean, antiquing pays in other ways?" she asked.

Willis had not meant to deliver a public dissertation, and as usual Bess had caught him off guard. "Why," Willis said, "I only meant it never hurts to have an interest that you can talk about intelligently. Frankly, it interests me that the heads of a great many large businesses seem to collect antiques. They're apt to appreciate someone who knows about them."

"Is that why you mentioned the epergne?" Bess asked.

Willis felt his face redden. He wished that he could outgrow this telltale habit. "No," he said, "it was only that I happened to like it. Isn't it here to be admired?"

"Oh," Bess said. "Well, come around and see some of my epergnes sometime."

It was a little hard to interpret this remark, but everyone began to laugh.

"I certainly will," Willis said, laughing with the rest, "now you ask me."

"Here's 'If Harry doesn't propose first!'"

Then Willis had an unexpected shock. Be knee was touching his beneath the table. T dessert was floating island, not a favorite his. He could not very well draw his kn away, considering the status of the Harcou Rahway deal.

"Don't you like your floating island?" B said.

"Why, yes," Willis said, "very much, Bes

"It always makes me feel young and chi ish," Bess said.

"It always makes me think of home and t children," Willis answered.

He was relieved when Mrs. Harcourt push back her chair. "Come on, Bess," Mrs. H court said. "You and I can talk about Da ney's school while the men talk about bu ness."

THERE was a moment's comfortable silen in the dining room when Mrs. Harcourt a Bess left them. Willis' mind had moved m mentarily into the future. He was thinking o dining room that he and Sylvia might ha someday, with a table and a dozen very go Chippendale chairs—and then his thoug were interrupted by Mr. Bryson Harcour voice.

"Are you sure you don't want a cig Willis?"

"No, thank you, sir," Willis said, "but might I would like a cigarette."

Mr. Bryson said, "If you will excuse me think I'll call up Roger Harcourt so we can sure to meet with him in the morning."

"Brandy, Willis?" Edward asked.

"Just a little, thank you," Willis said. "J a very small touch."

When he tasted it, he knew it was some Mr. Henry Harcourt's brandy, and he thou of Mr. Percy Nagel in Mr. Harcourt's priv study long ago.

"I don't know what it was that you w talking to my father-in-law about," Edwa said, "but if it involves your coming back the mill, I hope it works. I gather things rather confused up there. I don't know a thing because I am in a law office, but Bes always fussing about the mill—not that we pend on it much."

Willis discovered that he suddenly had warm spot in his heart for Edward Ewing.

"Of course the plant is small in a mod sense," he said slowly, "but still it has possibilities. I remember that Bess used to sentimental about it."

"Sentimental is right," Edward said. "F family is always quarreling about the mill."

It was just as well to assume that Edwa Ewing might not be as dull as he looked. It w not a time to show undue eagerness or a ti to be fishing for information. It was better drop the subject of the Harcourt Mill.

"How's the tennis?" Willis asked.

"Tennis?" Edward repeated, and it w clear that he had entirely forgotten.

"I don't suppose you remember," Wi said. "No reason that you should. We playe set at the Harcourts' one summer when I w working in the mill office." He laughed eas "I was lousy, perfectly lousy."

"Oh," Edward said, "yes, I remember, a we had a swim in the pool. I've given up ten and taken up golf."

"Is that so?" Willis said. "Well, I'll take y on at that sometime. I'm not quite so lousy golf."

It would be a compensation, a squaring the circle, if he could play golf and beat E ward Ewing.

"Not that I'm any good," Willis said, cause it was never correct to say that one w good at golf. "But I get a whale of a lot of out of it."

"How much do you go around in?" Edwa asked.

"Oh just a beginner's score," Willis sa "In the middle nineties or perhaps a stroke two below."

"Oh," Edward said. "Well, we must hav game."

Since Edward had not mentioned what could go around in, he was, of course, a be player. It was ridiculous that Willis sho have had a faint feeling of frustration. It wa relief when Mr. Bryson returned to the din room.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 73

IT'S MADE BY SWIFT

so you can feed your dog as well as you feed your family

PARD HAS THE

Good Beef Taste

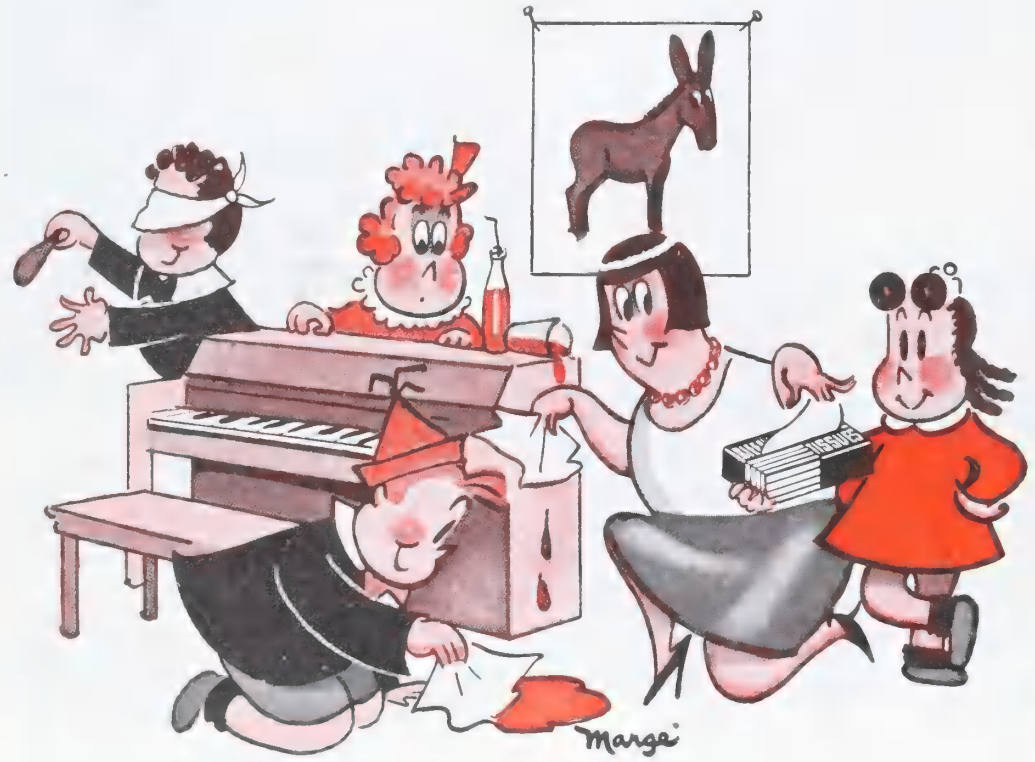
DOGS LOVE!

Ever noticed? Some dogs walk up to their food, take a few bites, and turn tails down. Others come bounding and lick up every last morsel . . . and those for sure are the Pard-fed dogs. You can't miss with Pard! It has the wonderful rich taste of beef that comes from juicy beef variety meats, ground beef bone and beef fat. And Pard has everything a dog needs, too, even extra vitamins. No wonder dogs prefer Pard to red, raw meat alone! When you shop for the family, be good to your dog, too. Get Pard with that good beef taste!

SWIFT & COMPANY

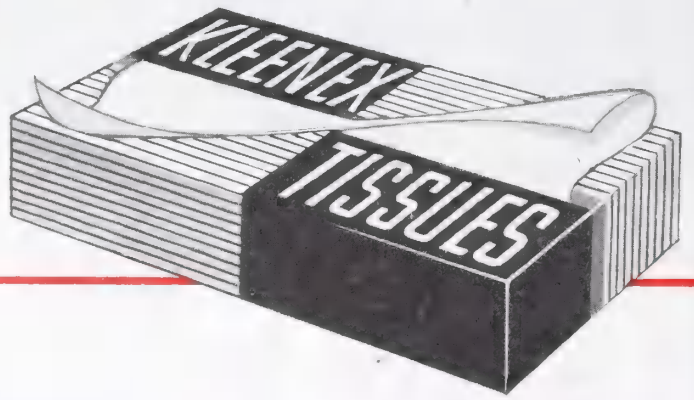
Nutrition is our Business

FACTS ABOUT PARD YOU SHOULD KNOW:



* PARD contains every food essential to a dog's health and well-being. It's extra rich in beef protein. PARD contains no "fillers".
* Eight out of 10 dogs in actual feeding tests have passed up lean red meat for Pard—proof of PARD'S great taste appeal.
* There's as much nourishment in one can of PARD as in a human dinner of lamb chops, potatoes and beans.

Did you ever?



By LITTLE LULU

When you rush to save your furniture from moisture rings that mar,
Did you ever find some tissues can be near—and yet so far?

Use Kleenex tissues—each pops up so you can quickly grab it!
For heaps of party uses, you'd best get the Kleenex habit!

Newest Addition!
JUMBO KLEENEX
Bigger tissues—1 square foot
For bigger blows-bigger sneezes...for every cosmetic use

Be thrifty—Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

For extra softness—extra strength

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. © INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 70

on't get up," Mr. Bryson said, "please. r hopes we can both be down at State t at half past nine tomorrow morning. I that isn't too early."

h, no," Willis said. "It will be a real ure to see Mr. Roger again."

can drop by and pick you up," Mr. Bryson "I forgot to ask where you were stopping, ."

hank you very much, sir," Willis said. at the Ritz."

Vell, that will be no trouble at all," Mr. on said. "I suppose if we don't go upstairs ill be criticized."

hat's right," Edward said. "Bess gave me ord for us to come up as soon as possi- nd you know Bess."

h, yes," Mr. Bryson said, "we all know '

"Come here and sit beside me, Willis," Mrs. Harcourt said, "and please tell me some more about the children."

"Well," Willis said, "there isn't much to tell about Paul except that he's a pretty hefty youngster, Mrs. Harcourt, but Al's quite a boy—just in what I think is called the toddling stage. I wish I had a snapshot of him here."

"Why did you name the second one Paul?" Bess asked. Her voice came to him from across the room, showing that she had been listening all the while.

"Sylvia named him after her grandfather," Willis said. He turned quickly back to Mrs. Harcourt and to little Al and Paul and Sylvia's ideas of decoration and nurses and hospitals, all subjects which Mrs. Harcourt understood and commented on intelligently. "You're quite right, Mrs. Harcourt," Willis said, "Orange is hot for Sylvia and the children in the summer, but she and the children do get off to Lake Sunapee for a month. The Hodgeses have a little camp there by the lake."

Willis stood up when he had finished talking about Lake Sunapee.

"It's been delightful renewing old associations, Mrs. Harcourt," he said, "and thank you for asking me to dinner. I've enjoyed every minute of it, but I must go now so that I can be ready for Mr. Harcourt in the morning."

He shook hands with Mrs. Harcourt. Then he squared his shoulders, assuming the alert posture that he had learned at Beakney-Graham.

"Good night, Bess," he said. "It's been a real pleasure seeing you again. It's been just like old times."

Bess had assumed her most tantalizing expression—at least it had been tantalizing once. "Well, not quite like old times," she said.

"Well, no," Willis said, "not quite, Bess."

She dropped his hand, but she was still smiling. "If you finish all this business," she said, "that you have to be so fresh for in the morning, would you like to come and have tea with me, or something stronger? You'll need it after a day with Cousin Roger."

"Well, I wouldn't quite say that, Bess," Willis said, "but it would be a great pleasure to have tea and to talk over old times with you and Edward."

"Edward won't be there," Bess said. "He has to have his squash at teatime. It will be just you and me. The children never come to tea."

"Well, that will be all the better, Bess," Willis said, and he laughed. "Tea for two is a wonderful idea. As soon after four-thirty as possible."

(To be Continued)

WHEN MIGRANT CHILDREN ARRIVE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

hen Mrs. Martinez left, Doctor Horst ed her hands, hastily applied pink lipstick patted her smooth blond hair, which she ed straight back (for practicality's sake) olled snugly at the neck. The house calls d have to wait, she decided, or she'd be or the meeting.

at was in May, 1948. The Northwest rban Branch of the American Associa- of University Women was newly or- ed that year with twenty-five members, of them young mothers; a few, like Doc- orst, business or professional women. It d out to be just an ordinary meeting with and refreshments . . . until Doctor Horst a spur-of-the-moment decision. Crum- up her original sketchy notes, she began g the story of the Martinez baby and the Mexican-American children she had d:

sa, the twelve-year-old with long dark ls, who had so proudly showed the doc- r report card from Texas. The card re- d that Elisa was in the second grade and ttended class only twelve days in the year. . . . And the three Gomez boys, had just arrived from Texas with their ts in a big truck. They were making summer home in a converted chicken on one of the farms, went without shoes ar round and now the soles of their feet ecome as tough as shoe leather. . . . And Esperanza, who lived in one small clut- room in a barracks building with her ts, two brothers and new baby sister. The use, about fifty yards from the barracks, lways infested with flies, so the mother a "potty" in the room for the children. arried all the water for washing and cook- om a faucet outside.

ese people were American citizens, the r emphasized, but always "outside" the nunity because of their lack of education, ity to speak fluent English and low ard of living. What was worse, she ght out, their children were growing up ut a fair chance to better themselves. Yet farm workers were performing a needed e in helping harvest crops that brought vegetables to the tables of city dwellers. dn't A.A.U.W., as a group of young ers interested in other young mothers, do thing to make these people feel welcome ncourage them to send their children to ls and to health clinics whenever pos- ' fore Doctor Horst had finished, nearly member was thinking the same thing. before they went home, they had ap- ed a committee. By July, several weeks numerous planning sessions later, they ready to announce a half-day play school migrant children—an experimental two- project, to be held in the basement of a eran church, with several volunteer hers." The farmers, when queried, agreed s a good idea, but couldn't predict how workers would feel about it. So Mrs. is Bentley and another member drove o the farms to find out.

eir first stop was an attractive white house encircled by wide green lawns, shrubs and flowers. But walking up the driveway past the main building and barns, they saw the workers' small shacks and barracks covered with tar paper and imitation brick, as described so vividly by Doctor Horst. A large dark-haired woman stood fanning herself with a red fly swatter as she idly watched two small children playing in a mud puddle in the yard.

"Hello," Mrs. Bentley called as she walked over and introduced herself. "We came to invite your children to a new play school that opens next week. We'll pick them up and drive them home if you'll let them come."

The woman shook her head and looked away. I guess she doesn't understand—now what do I do? Phyllis Bentley wondered.

At that moment her six-year-old son, who had been waiting impatiently in the car, came running up the driveway. "It's too hot in there," he yelled.

I have made mistakes, but I have never made the mistake of claiming that I never made one.

—JAMES GORDON BENNETT

The dark-haired woman suddenly turned back to Phyllis, but now her eyes were bright with interest. "Will your children go to the school?" she demanded.

"Why, yes," Phyllis said, remembering that the "teachers" would have to bring their own children because they had no place to leave them.

"All right," the woman agreed, "my children go too."

Phyllis Bentley had a hunch the school was going to be a success.

Her hunch was right. A simple play school that first year, it grew each summer, adding new features and moving into larger quarters through A.A.U.W.'s determination to make it a real community project. Contributions making this growth possible have come from local churchwomen's groups, civic organizations, the Illinois Council of Churches (which hired two college students to direct the project) and the Community Chest. Last July the migrant school celebrated its seventh year by moving into six rooms at Old North Elementary School for four weeks and enrolling more than 200 children in preschool, primary, intermediate and elementary classes. The total budget had climbed to $2354.89, included two big chartered buses and a rented car for the student workers.

It is no longer a play school, except in the preschool room, where youngsters aged two to five have a wide choice of toys and crayons and paints. (There is a large supply of tissue on hand, too, for runny noses.) The teaching program, carried on entirely by volunteers, some professional, mostly laymen, covers instruction in reading, writing, handcrafts, dancing and rhythmics—and practice in getting along with other children.

This morning the primary children are learning songs and rhythmics with Mrs. Ruth Ralph seated at the piano with her small red-headed daughter close by her side. The children watch her lips as she plays and sings, "I know how to brush my teeth, brush my teeth," to a simple melody. Then they sing along with her, moving their hands up and down in front of their faces as though they were holding a toothbrush. In the next verse, they pretend to brush their hair. These little songs, Mrs. Ralph feels, help the children learn English words and pronunciation as well as good health habits.

Upstairs, children in a senior class have just finished a reading lesson, when Mrs. Julia Abbott calls them out into the hall to learn a waltz for the parents'-night program on the last day of school. As the pianist strikes up Let Me Call You Sweetheart, the girls move about methodically, taking great awkward steps. Mrs. Abbott holds out her hand to a boy, but, too bashful to dance, he slides farther down against the wall and out of reach.

The piano can be heard in the intermediate classroom next door. When the pianist switches to Chiapanecas, the Mexican clap-clap song, the youngsters, who are supposed to be studying, join in the clapping. Miss Clara Louise Slack, their teacher, signals for silence, and points back to the alphabet on the blackboard. Working with non-English-speaking children is a new experience for Miss Slack, who teaches third grade in Lake Forest, Illinois.

In the migrant school it's sometimes difficult to divide the children according to age and grade levels, because some have had previous schooling and speak a little English, and others have had little or no classroom training. Five-year-old Jorge, who speaks only Spanish and should be in play school, refuses to be separated from his eight-year-old cousin José, and sits alongside him in intermediate class every day. Miss Slack tried to tell Jorge's mother that the work was too difficult for him, but she replied casually, "He's got to learn sometime." Although Jorge never says anything in class, he smiles and nods when Miss Slack counts and has learned to recognize his own name in print. With José guiding his hand, he can even write his name.

No one has to ask Orelia and Rosita what they like best about the school. They duck out of primary class almost every ten minutes, dragging four-year-old Raquel by the hand into the girls' room. Orelia, seven, the oldest and tallest, turns on the faucets, and Rosita, six, and her little sister stretch up on their toes to slosh their hands around in the water. (On a visit to the home of one of the teachers, Orelia could hardly wait to ask the question: "How many bathrooms do you have?" Her own home, a small two-room shack, has a brand-new TV set, but no bathroom.) The girls' stolen recess is soon interrupted when twenty-year-old college student Faith Enke finds them out and orders them back to class. They don't mind too much, because there's always another time—and they love to hear Faith speak Spanish, just as casually and competently as though she had known how all her life.

Faith, who is majoring in Spanish at Monmouth College, Illinois, worked with migrant children first as a high-school volunteer in 1951, then as one of two students hired by the National Council of Churches (at $40 a week) to help direct the project during the summers of 1953 and 1954.

On Thursdays every available volunteer hand is needed for the rummage sale. Even husbands are recruited to haul huge cartons of clothes and toys out of storage rooms and attics—cartons the A.A.U.W. has been filling all winter long with the help of church-women's groups. Promptly at nine each Thursday, when the school doors open, a crowd of migrant workers' wives surges into the basement of the school. Bargain hunters dream of prices like these: old fur coats sometimes as low as 50 cents; women's hats never more than a dime; toys for a penny or so. Yet, despite the low prices, the sales sometimes bring in as much as $400 in a single day.

Upstairs in the health-clinic room, Doctor Horst is finishing her Thursday examination of babies, aided by members of the Des Plaines Junior Woman's Club. The small room is full of people getting in one another's way: Doctor Horst's own five-year-old Katy, interested in everything her mother does; two young daughters of Mrs. Faye Mercer, who keeps the health records; a volunteer interpreter; Doctor Horst's nurse and another from the public-health service; and last but not least, three farm mothers with crying babies. Doctor Horst shows the amazing ability to examine a small patient on her lap and talk to other people at the same time.

As she grips the foot of the infant between her knees to hold him steady while giving the inoculation, she explains that she is pleased by the improvement in health among migrant children since 1948. "I've seen no cases of head lice this year, and only a few with malnutrition." She is bothered, however, by the number of young rotting teeth. "Parents indulge the children too much—let them eat all the candy they want," she says. But more and more migrant patients are asking for inoculations and vitamins, she adds, something they never did years ago.

Improvement in health is one concrete result of the A.A.U.W. migrant school. The growing interest of the community in the farm worker is another. But Mrs. Dorothy Bishop, 1954 chairman, feels that education is still the greatest need. "We're amateurs and we're doing the best we can. But the summer instruction really should be taken over by the public-school system, using public-school methods. And there should be classes in English for adults." Since there is the problem of limited public funds for education, Mrs. Bishop is not likely to realize her hope any time soon.

Clinic and the rummage sale over, children race out to the buses. Just one day is left before the end of the term. Two high-school girls help Mrs. Bishop lock up, then wave good-by to the children. "Gosh," wonders one, "what am I going to do with myself for the rest of the summer?"

END

These are Beth Anderson's hands. She soaked them in detergents. Only the right hand was given Jergens Lotion care – and look at the difference. This photograph is unretouched.

Proved: There's a sure way to stop "Detergent Hands"

"Jergens Lotion proves more effective than any other lotion tested for stopping 'detergent damage'," states a national research laboratory.*

Recently, 447 women volunteered for a grueling experiment. They wanted to find a way to combat "detergent hands" – a serious problem today.

They soaked both hands three times a day in detergents. After every soaking, Jergens Lotion was smoothed on their right hands. Left hands were untreated.

The results astounded everybody. In 3 or 4 days, left hands were roughened, reddened, and sore – yet the hands given Jergens Lotion care were soft, smooth and white, without a trace of damage.

Many other lotions were tested the same way. Not one proved as effective as Jergens Lotion. Not even 100% lanolin did better (and no hand care contains more than 15% lanolin).

The famous Jergens Lotion formula has been steadily perfected for 50 years. It positively stops detergent damage, and ends roughness and chapping from other causes. Never sticky or greasy, it keeps your hands soft and lovely.

When you try Jergens Lotion today, you'll discover lovely new improvements. You'll find it's a heavier and creamier lotion, with a delightful new fragrance. The price is still 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

*NOTICE to doctors and dermatologists. For a summary of this report, write to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

The overdone look in clothes as well as weight gave Diane a dowdy dumpy look relieved only by her slim, pretty legs.

Diane's diet dwindled her measurements to model proportions: Bust 34, waist 22, hips 34. She is 5′ 6½″ tall, small boned, now weighs 110 pounds.

LILLIAN BASSMAN

"I was a hopeless fatty . . . now I'M A MODEL"

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

BLOND, blue-eyed Diane Macom is the home-town girl who made good in her own home town. In fact, she did such an admirable job of turning herself from dowdy-fatty (160 pounds) into tiny-waisted beauty (110 pounds), the president of the P.T.A. in New Brunswick, New Jersey, invited her, recently, to return to her high school to talk to the girls on good grooming.

Following are Diane's answers to the questions she is most often asked about her beauty transformation.

What thrills you most about having lost 50 pounds?

Losing the inferiority complex that went with them! It's wonderful to be able to enjoy people and have fun without feeling awkward and self-conscious about my appearance. As the pounds dropped, I developed the kind of pride that made me want to care for my skin, my hair, my posture. And clothes! Mother used to shop for mine in the "chubby girls" departments. I was so discouraged about my sack-tied-in-the-middle look I never used to bother to go along. Nowadays, I have a million pretty things to choose from—on the Size 7 racks! CONTINUED ON PAGE 125

DIANE'S TIPS TO TEEN-AGERS

As a fatty, I never used to care about my clothes—now I'm "nasty neat." Sweaters are put away in plastic bags; lingerie folded carefully in cases in my bureau; everything has its special place in my closet. Saturday mornings I polish my shoes (try black polish on brown loafers for a rich, dark shine) and wash and press my slips, petticoats, blouses.

Wednesday night is hairdo night for me. I shampoo and partially dry my hair and set it in three big forward pin curls on each side, one fat pin curl on top, no curls in back. It stays up overnight and when I comb it out in the morning it has the casual, barely curled look I like.

Except when I'm posing for pictures, I confine my make-up to a minimum (that's the way Jack likes it). A clear red lipstick is my favorite color. For evening the slightest film of make-up base, a dusting of powder, my (his) favorite perfume, and I'm all set!

I don't even bite my fingernails any more. Mother promised me she would give me a little reward for each nail I let grow. By the time they were all grown to a neat, presentable length I was so proud of my accomplishment, I wouldn't accept the reward! Now my nails are treated to a manicure one night a week, and a soft pink polish.

Good taste is a beauty asset any girl can acquire. The too-sheer blouse, huge hoop earrings, spike heels, three-petticoats-at-once all spell "overdone" no matter what your age. I make a real effort to be conservative—and imaginative at the same time!

NEHRU AND MADAME PANDIT

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

name was not Nehru. It was Kaul. But many years ago one of our enterprising ancestors attracted the attention and favor of a Mogul emperor. The emperor persuaded Kaul to seek his fame and fortune in the glittering capital, Delhi. Kaul was quick to take the hint and was given a house and vast rich farmland as a gift from the emperor.

Now it happened that a deep canal ran through the property. As a means of identifying our branch of the family from the other Kauls, the word "Nahar" (canal) became attached to the name and we became Kaul-Nehrus. (Nehru, one who lives on the canal.) With the passing of the years the Kaul was dropped and we became known simply as "the Nehrus."

Speaking of names, there is a great deal of misconception regarding the "pandit" part of my brother's and sister's names. "Pandit" means scholar, but all Kashmiri Brahmans are known as "pandit." It is not an honorary title given to Prime Minister Nehru out of admiration and devotion, as some journalists and authors have written. Jawahar is a pandit only because he was born, like hundreds of others, a Kashmiri Brahman. He does not choose to use the pandit designation now, as it does single one out as a Brahman.

My sister Nan's surname by marriage, Pandit, is entirely different. Pandit just happened to be her husband's family name. The Pandit family has had a number of brilliant scholars, but, though Brahmans, they were not Kashmiris, so they did not use the word as we did. The name Pandit for them has no more meaning than Smith, Jones or the very common Indian name, Singh.

Our home was a mixture of East and West with father living the life of an elegant country squire as well as a prosperous lawyer. He loved hunting, shooting, riding and tennis. He was the first person in our home town to buy a "horseless carriage," which was his pride and joy. The model-T motorcar created a sensation! Many others equally wealthy longed to possess one but were somewhat afraid of this invention of the devil which roared over Indian bullock-cart roads at twenty miles per hour, scattering all that came in its path.

I dimly realized that we were richer than other members of the family. The meaning of wealth, however, never struck me until one year when I visited some cousins in Lahore at Christmas. Permission to make such a trip was most unusual, but my governess had just been married and many rules were relaxed. Mother was not well and the task of keeping an eye on me fell upon my sister. Nan was about eighteen and did not wish to be bothered by a younger sister, so I did pretty much as I pleased.

I went merrily off on the exciting train trip to Lahore in West Punjab. After the gay welcome from my cousins I noticed something vaguely familiar about the dresses the girls were wearing. It suddenly dawned on me that they were wearing Nan's and my old discarded dresses, which had all come from England. I was rather taken aback and felt very embarrassed, but they did not seem to mind. Father had had the ridiculous notion that every stitch we wore must come from abroad, so the household orders went out regularly to Liberty's in London. When we outgrew our things they were passed on to grateful relatives.

MOST of my cousins were boys, and playing with them, I grew up a complete tomboy. I loved playing English-style football and climbing trees, despite my governess' horror. She vainly tried to impress upon me that it was "dreadfully unladylike." I disliked dolls and tea parties and was far happier rough-and-tumbling with the boys who treated me as one of the gang.

To understand fully how un-Indian the greatest Indian leader and first Prime Minister is, we must look into his character and into his past. When independence and the right to govern one's country were distant dreams, Jawahar wrote an anonymous article about himself:

> . . . The most effective pose is one in which there seems to be the least of posing, and Jawahar had learned well to act without the paint and powder of the actor. With his seeming carelessness and insouciance, he performs on the public stage with consummate artistry.
>
> Whither is this going to lead him and the country? What is behind that mask of his . . . what will to power? These questions could be interesting in any event, for Jawahar is a personality which compels interest and attention. But they have a vital significance for us for he is bound up with the present and probably the future, and he has the power in him to do great good for India or great injury. . . .

Prime Minister Nehru (left, rear) posed for family portrait in 1924 with sisters Madame Pandit and Krishna (both with daring bobbed hair), his daughter Indira, Ranjit Pandit, and (front) mother, father and Nehru's wife, Kamala.

Men like Jawahar with all their capacity for great and good work are unsafe in a democracy. He calls himself a democrat and a socialist, and no doubt he does so in all earnestness, but every psychologist knows that the mind is, ultimately, slave to the heart. Logic can always be made to fit into the desires of man. . . . A little twist and Nehru might turn dictator, sweeping aside the paraphernalia of a slow-moving democracy. He might still use the language and slogans of democracy and socialism, but we all know fascism has fattened on this language, and then cast it away as useless lumber. Jawahar has all the makings of a dictator in him—vast popularity, a strong will, ability, hardness, an intolerance of others and a certain contempt for the weak and the inefficient. . . . In this revolutionary epoch, Caesarism is always at the door. Is it not possible that Jawahar might fancy himself as a Caesar? . . . Therein lies danger for Nehru and for India!

Though the above may have been written in a mood of self-confession, much of what he wrote then has been borne out. Thirty years of struggle and sacrifice have left their mark on Jawahar; each year has taken away something of the warmth, gaiety and outgoing charm that were so characteristic of him.

The brown eyes that were ever ready to sparkle at some witty sally often hold an expression now of hard defiance or weary frustration. His face is that of a tired man who seems to be driven by some internal force which never relents, never lets go. His smile today is the smile of a self-possessed man, a polite Prime Minister, fully aware of his power, defying any criticism. The dreamer has little time to weave dreams nowadays as he used to do. His features are still fine-lined and sensitive, yet there is a certain set stubbornness about the lips.

Immediately after the first green-and-white-and-orange Indian flag was unfurled against the burning blue Indian skies, a period of great struggle and tragedy faced the country. Instead of being able to build a new India, Jawahar had to sit back and hold together the pieces of the old one. Overnight, with religious riots and wholesale killings, the dreams that Jawahar and others had built were shattered. Death and destruction faced us on every side. It was amazing how Jawahar, with no thought at all of personal safety, went about unguarded and unarmed.

Crisis after crisis confronted him. All day he worked and night after night he paced his room, feeling helpless at being unable to wipe out the religious hatreds which had seized the people.

Indians are emotional, voluble, quick-tempered people, and an avalanche of slashing criticism poured in upon Nehru. He is proud of his iron constitution, but during the first months after independence the mental anxiety and strain took their toll and he has never been quite the same since.

Naturally officialdom surrounds him. He lives the role of Prime Minister every hour of the day. His home, the official P.M.'s residence, lacks a warm, homey atmosphere. Jawahar takes little interest in his house, though, occasionally, if a picture has been moved he will notice and comment on it.

A constant stream of callers comes and goes, led in and out by guardian secretaries. Diplomats come treading carefully, anxious and deferential, careful of protocol, yet straining to rouse a spark of interest or agreement from the polite, enigmatic and difficult man seated behind the P.M.'s desk. They seldom come away with more than "friendship."

Overburdened with work, Jawahar has no recreation whatsoever to take his mind from the ever-pressing problems before him. Waking at dawn, he performs his morning yoga exercises, one of the old habits he still retains. Without them, he says, he could never get through the day.

Sometimes appointments are given to people during the breakfast hour if there is no time to see them later on. At 9:30 Jawahar rushes off to his office, returning at 2 P.M. or later for a hurried lunch. Then he dashes back to his office and remains until 7:30 or 8. He comes home to find a host of people waiting for him. Without a moment's respite he sits down with them until dinner, which may not be served until 10 o'clock.

By then, he is so tired he can hardly keep his eyes open. But even after dinner there are often appointments continuing until midnight. Then he drags himself upstairs to his room, but it is not to sleep. He reads the reports and papers he has missed during the day. How does he keep it up? I also wonder.

Jawahar dislikes air conditioning and refused to have his bedroom air-conditioned even in the stifling heat of Delhi's summers. However, his office and a couple of reception rooms in his residence are air-conditioned for the benefit of official guests.

He loves his garden and after breakfast every morning when he can spare a few moments he takes a quick stroll around the lawn, noticing a new bud that has blossomed, or perhaps a shrub or tree that shows new leaves.

If there are no official callers in the morning and my sister Nan or his daughter, Indira, or I are with him for company, he loves this time of the day best. Breakfast is his favorite meal and consists of orange juice, a large bowl of oatmeal with lots of sugar (another childhood habit), eggs, toast, coffee and more fresh fruit.

Menus for his official dinners are arranged by the Comptroller of the Household, a government servant, in consultation with Indira. When I am in Delhi, Indira usually consults me if there is an official dinner or a large buffet party.

DINNER with the Prime Minister is not the awesome event one might imagine. All official guests receive a formal invitation: "The Prime Minister requests the pleasure of (your) company to dinner at 8:15 P.M." Replies must be sent in writing to my brother's secretary.

When you arrive at the P.M.'s residence (promptly on time; it is unforgivable to be late) your car is stopped at the gate.

"Your name?" a uniformed guard inquires. He holds a copy of the guest list and checks you off as you enter.

Indira and Jawahar receive the guests together. After all have arrived, Jawahar mixes freely. He is good at social small talk and, if he has not had too strenuous a day, can turn on the charm and make gay little jokes. He is perfectly at ease with people from all over the world.

Chilled fruit drinks are served, but no cocktails or whisky. Recently Nehru made a statement in the press that it "sickened" him to see how many cocktail parties people dashed about to in Delhi—often going to three or four in one evening! He is no faddist about drink, but he objects to a giddy, meaningless merry-go-round, wasting time, energy and money.

During the hot summer Indira usually plans a buffet party on the lovely spacious lawns, and the hedges and shrubs are attractively decorated with strings of white electric lights. Jawahar dislikes the colored lights used for lawn lighting at most functions in Delhi.

At a formal sit-down dinner guests are assembled in a large banqueting hall. The meal begins with soup (something Jawahar has never liked and only sips out of politeness). Next comes a simply prepared fish with sauce and fresh lime (lemons are scarce in India). A vegetarian dish is substituted for orthodox Indian guests. Sometimes a Kashmiri curry with rice is served, though the spices are greatly cut down for foreign taste. The meal concludes with a very good dessert, as the cook knows Jawahar's weakness. Among his favorites are all kinds of puddings, especially chocolate or coconut puddings. He loves chocolate cake and every variety of pie. However, in a hot climate there is nothing more refreshing than ice cream, which is usually what we serve, topped with a rich chocolate sauce.

Coffee is served in the drawing room, and it is here that Jawahar takes the guest of honor into a corner to chat. These chats are really the business of the evening. World problems, foreign policies and controversial issues often are earnestly discussed.

The party is usually over by 10:30 or 11 at the latest, and after the guests have gone har goes to his "den" to work there until ight. His secretary is always standing by atter what the hour, as Jawahar dictates thing. The only things he writes in long- are a few short personal letters.

cidentally, I must mention the Nehru fam- ooks. All our cooks of the three house- s—Jawahar's and Nan's in Delhi and mine ombay—are cousins. They are quite re- table, all belonging to a sect of the un- hable caste (although that designation has been abolished by law). This particular s known for two skilled professions: cook- nd robbery! Father always had an un- hable cook to produce the lavish Western he loved. Our present cooks are relations e cooks who served father. Once these ws give an employer their loyalty (or as put it, "eat his salt") they are forever ful, devoted—and honest!

the time of the British the salaries of net Ministers were 5000-and-odd ru- Nowadays the salaries are 2250 es (approximately $450) plus 500 rupees) sumptuary allowance free of income tax. har, however, takes only 2250 rupees) and no allowance. After income-tax re- on he is left with only 1700 rupees ($350). e was some talk of doubling his salary but fused to accept. Any friends or relations ng with him as his guests he pays for out s own pocket.

vahar grew up from childhood in the care n English governess and, later, private s. He was sent to England to attend Har- and then Cambridge, where he was just verage student, making only average s, which seems sur- g because he took lf and his schooling seriously.

pposals for the mar- of Jawahar started to to father while my er was still at Cam- e. Father's heir was dered one of the eligible young men in India. He was ngly handsome, clever and the son of a rich man. Jawahar himself, despite his ern outlook and upbringing, had no say in the choice of his bride. He willingly al- father to choose one for him.

is the custom in India even today, to a extent, betrothals and marriages are dis- d by the prospective father-in-law considers a n girl acceptable, the horoscopes of the e are studied to find out whether or not are in harmony.

the exchange of horoscopes one delicate esy is observed on behalf of the girl. It is s her family which has the right to ask for rospective bridegroom's horoscope. If is any disagreement or rejection of the sal, the girl is saved embarrassment by aceful excuse that her family found the copes "incompatible."

e or two maharajas who were friends of were quite willing to break with tradi- and permit their daughters, who were esses, to marry Jawahar, a "commoner." ather shied at becoming thus intimately ed with the princely clans. His only son ery dear to father and his prime consider- was for Jawahar's happiness. Also, he d to make certain that his son should ntellectual companionship in his wife, hing which father had sorely missed in vn marriage. My mother knew little of s or world affairs.

AT made father decide on Kamala I can- ay. She was a Kashmiri Brahman and ovely indeed (though her pictures do not r justice). Father was quick to see that hing more lay beneath the surface of her ling charm. But there was much talk at me because she did not seem the type was seeking; her English was poor, she ainfully shy and awkward in the presence ngers and at social gatherings. After the copes were studied and found to tally, asked Kamala's parents to send her to our home town, Allahabad. Kamala d to stay with an uncle and aunt of hers ur own governess was assigned to teach nglish, music and painting.

Kamala naturally resented this private finishing school for marriage, but there was no escape. She led a life of strict routine and was permitted to see her fiancé at his home. She came frequently as a guest but was not permitted to spend time alone with him. This may have been a very dull courtship by Western standards, but there is no doubt that on their wedding day the two were romantically in love.

The wedding was even more grand than that of any prince or maharaja. Father arranged for a special train to take the three hundred guests to Delhi, where Kamala's parents lived. An enormous area was dotted with tents for the guests, and the gateway, decorated with flowers and tinsel, proclaimed NEHRU WEDDING CAMP. Those who attended this wedding still talk of the extravagance and lavish arrangements.

INDIANS do not use wedding rings. Each caste or community has its own marriage symbol which one is supposed to wear, like a wedding ring, forever. Being Kashmiris, we adhered to our own custom, which is to wear gold earrings attached to a cord looped over the top of the ear. The earrings have a tassel of gold or silver thread, and if one is very rich the tassels are made of pearls. Kamala's were pearls. These tasseled earrings are today the cherished possession of Kamala's daughter, Indira, though she has never worn them. Her taste is simple in the extreme; and besides, the symbolism would be wrong. Indira is married to a Parsi. (Many people mistakenly think that he is a son or nephew of Gandhi because his last name is the same.)

Nothing in life is to be feared, it is only to be understood.

Bound to the family now by love, Kamala applied herself to learning Western ways. Her shyness gradually vanished and, as mother was more or less an invalid, Kamala soon acted as father's hostess. How she strove to make Jawahar proud of her! He was—and so was father, who took all the credit for finding her.

The only cloud in Kamala's happiness was my sister, Nan. Both were the same age and Nan was very spoiled, having been much made over by father. When Kamala became one of the family she, as the daughter-in-law of the house, had preference over Nan. Which was naturally not to Nan's liking at all!

The usual jealousies that exist between sisters-in-law took shape. There were often petty quarrels, tears and pricked feelings. Nan would brook no rival in her own home—nor would she permit even Jawahar's wife to come between her and her brother. Or even father! Nan is strong-willed, and had always had her own way. As a result, Kamala often suffered in silence, rather than have unpleasantness.

I was not involved in these upsets as I was so much younger. To me Kamala was always an adored older sister. Though I was too young to understand the clashes, I always sided with her against mother and Nan.

Kamala had a lovely complexion which needed no aid to enhance it. Strangely enough, in spite of illness which eventually developed into tuberculosis, Kamala never lost her delicate, fresh young beauty.

From the time that she was married in 1917 till 1921, four fleeting years, she lived a life of sumptuous luxury and happiness. Then politics entered our home and swept everything before it. Mr. Gandhi appeared on the horizon with his theory of nonviolence to combat the British and achieve our independence.

Jawahar was the first to join him, to give up his life of ease and comfort to work in the villages. Father flatly refused to do so. He was furious with Jawahar for joining Gandhi. Once, in a rage, he ordered him out of the house!

Mother was frantic and Nan wept, but Kamala stepped instantly to her husband's side, slipped her hand in his. I have no doubt that this gentle touch of hers gave Jawahar much strength, for he dearly loved father and was loath to hurt him, much less quarrel violently with him.

But his jaw was set and there was no backing out.

Whenever you've found you've added a pound...

have grapefruit instead

It's a welcome pleasure any time you slip your spoon into a fresh half grapefruit. It perks you up and satisfies you, and at the same time helps you keep your weight in line.

Florida grapefruit for dessert means mighty few calories, but lots of health benefits. Plenty of vitamin C, for instance. That's the buoyant-health vitamin, one you can't store up but need a fresh supply of every day.

Vitamins crowded in . . . calories crowded out! Reducing is easy—when you have grapefruit instead!

Worth its weight in health: Keep on hand ready-prepared grapefruit sections; canned grapefruit juice, chilled and ready to pour; or frozen concentrate—a can makes 1½ pints of juice.

Watch "Twenty Questions" on TV each week. Consult newspaper for day and time.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

GARLIC BREAD
½ cup butter or margarine
¼ teaspoon French's Garlic Powder
1 loaf French Bread
French's Paprika

Cream butter and garlic powder. Slash bread diagonally to within ½ inch of crust. Spread butter mixture between slices and over top. Sprinkle loaf with paprika. Place on baking pan. Heat in moderate oven (350°F.) 10-15 minutes.

A nifty-jiffy treat made with French's Garlic Powder!

FRENCH'S SEASONINGS
do something wonderful for Garlic Bread!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "Quick 'n Easy Flavoring Tricks!"
The R. T. French Co.
9065 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.
*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

- French's fine seasonings bring you a garden of fresh vegetable flavor.
- Choose French's Garlic Powder or Garlic Salt . . . Onion Salt, Savor Salt, Celery Salt to flavor salads, soups, meats.
- French's Spices and Herbs are pure. You get true natural flavor.

FRENCH'S SPICES AND EXTRACTS

Without a sign of regret, Kamala slipped into the new life. No more did she dress in silks and gold-thread saris and the fabulous jewelry our parents had given her, jewels which were the envy of the richest maharajas. Wearing thick hand-spun cloth, she followed Jawahar into the villages and worked side by side with him. She was a priceless companion and helpmate to Jawahar. Through Kamala, he reached the people as alone he never could have. He himself admits that he loves to be in a crowd, but is never one of it.

KAMALA died in the prime of her life, the disease taking hold more rapidly because she never took time to look after herself. Father sent her and Jawahar to Switzerland, where they stayed two years, and she returned almost well. But back in India, the Nehrus were caught up in the throes of politics. For the next ten years she seldom knew a moment's peace or security. Jawahar was imprisoned again and again. Kamala's frail body finally succumbed, though to the last her spirit never failed. She died in Badenweiler, Germany, with Jawahar and Indira at her side. Those who knew her well feel that, had she lived, Jawahar might be a different man. In her quiet way she wielded over him an influence no one else seems to have.

When Nan was thirteen there was a friendly understanding between our parents and another well-known family that she should marry their only son. This was quite usual, but it was in no way binding to either party. Nan was not allowed to forget this, however, because mother had set her heart on the match; father kept an open mind.

When she was eighteen Nan was very pretty, though not so lovely as she is today. Having been brought up to associate freely with men and women, Nan had many opportunities for meeting young men. Quite a few were in love with her, including a young prince. But Nan did not seem to like any of these young men enough to marry. It was not surprising she should meet and fall in love with a man regardless of his caste or creed. We had not been brought up to differentiate between one caste and another and had no narrow religious bias. But most Indians at that time were still bound by tradition and custom. Nan did not confide in anyone but kept her feelings to herself.

When our parents began to discuss Nan's marriage to the young man whom they had had in view since her childhood, Nan rebelled. There were tears and tantrums and many bitter arguments. Mother could not possibly conceive of refusing such a match. Father kept aloof, secretly sympathizing with Nan because the young man, though eligible and belonging to a good Hindu family, was somewhat of a prig and not the type he would have chosen for his daughter. However, one day father discovered the real reason for Nan's refusal: her desire to marry another. Then there was trouble.

Even Jawahar, Nan's hero, sided with the family against her. What hurt father deeply was the fact that Nan did not confide in him. Had the young man observed the Indian tradition of asking for Nan's hand in marriage either directly or through a third party, perhaps things would have been different.

Meanwhile Nan sulked, Jawahar lectured to no avail and mother wept copiously at the idea of all her plans and dreams for Nan being shattered. Father's anger was most probably intensified by his strong attachment for Nan.

One day father summoned Nan and told her to pack and get ready to go to Mahatma Gandhi's ashrama. Jawahar was to escort her.

Gandhi lived outside a town called Sabarmati on the banks of a river, forty-eight hours' journey by train from our home. There Nan was supposed to stay until she came to her senses and father's temper cooled. Gandhi and his wife received Nan with much affection Gandhi had already won Jawahar to the caus of independence through nonviolence, and th gentle soul rejoiced to have this occasion t play the peacemaker and heart mender. In th ashrama, Nan had to wear homespun clothe and put away her silken saris and jewelry. Th days passed by peacefully. Gandhi's wife Kasturba, mothered Nan, and Gandhi himse kept Nan constantly by his side. He had lon talks with her and taught her to spin. Th close association with Gandhi was the begir ning of a deep bond that was to grow and la throughout his lifetime.

At last the day arrived for Nan to retur home. Her reunion with father was mo touching. Father put his arms around her an kissed her in forgiveness, for she had bee much closer to him than to mother.

Nan learned on her arrival that her frien had gone overseas, so she bowed to the ir evitable, as always, and gradually went abou her normal life. Yet perhaps something wer out of her which she never got back. Su rounded by admirers, Nan has fewer friend than one can count on the fingers of one hand

The years passed and in 1947, after Nan ha become a prominent figure and ambassador to two of the world's most important diplo matic posts, Mosco and Washington, sh met the friend of he youth again. He r turned to India at th invitation of Jawaha During the years he ha been abroad he had don all he could to explai India's struggle for in dependence to th American people. H reward was that he wa recalled and appointe ambassador. Both h and Nan were then gray haired, both distin guished-looking an both had lived the bette part of their lives in different worlds. The met as friends in a detached sort of way After a couple of years he suffered a heart a tack and died.

DEAR DEPARTING GUESTS

By GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

To my grateful eye
How their halos glow
Who say good-by Just once and go!

Some months after Nan's return fro Gandhi's ashrama we went to Kashmir for th summer. Jawahar had recently married an father's idea of giving him a honeymoon tri was to take all of us and several friends in large party to Kashmir.

We were camping near a small town calle Achbal. There was a stream running throug our location and during the afternoons, whic were fairly warm in May, father used to lie o a camp cot in the middle of the stream an have his siesta. The rest of us spread ourselve out on the grass on either side. One day fathe looked up from his book and was horrified t see a huge king cobra rearing itself besid Nan's head. She was reading, also, quite un conscious of impending disaster.

GENTLY father said, "Nan, don't stir. Ther is a cobra near your head!" He repeated th and all of us who heard turned our heads frozen with fear. Father repeated, "Nan— don't move!" and automatically Nan raise her eyes. What she saw paralyzed her! Every body held his breath. One sound or false mov might have proved fatal. A cobra is never sup posed to strike unless it is either attacked o frightened. After a few seconds the cobr quietly slithered away, but it seemed hour to us.

After it had gone everyone rushed up t Nan, who felt quite a heroine. Later that eve ning a mendicant came to our camp. H had heard of the cobra incident, for in Indi news travels faster by word of mouth tha even by radio. He saw my father and told hi that this was the most wonderful thing tha could have happened. Nan would rise t great heights and achieve much fame, he de clared, but her personal life would not b too happy. This prophecy turned out to b correct.

When she was twenty-one Nan marrie Ranjit Pandit. The marriage was practically a arranged affair. Ranjit was a friend of one o our cousins, with whom he had studied i ngland. He had seen Nan in Bombay once nen she had accompanied father and had llen in love with her. Our cousin suggested father that he should invite Ranjit to spend few days in Allahabad and get acquainted th Nan. Father, though very modern in his tlook about many things, did not believe uch in love marriages. So he consented and njit was invited.

One evening I was surprised to hear some-e singing in the guest room. I lingered near e door, curious and a little amused. Father—d in fact the entire Nehru family—was well own for his unmusicalness. I had wanted to rn singing when I was younger, but father used to give permission. After much disssion I was allowed to have some lessons, t father thought it a waste of time and after months made me give it up. Hence I was ken aback to hear anyone singing in our me. In a few minutes the door of the room ened and a young man stepped out.

'Hullo," he said. "Who are you? The little ter?"

I nodded dumbly and Ranjit put his arm rough mine and lked me off into the rden.

'You sing beautily," I said, "but far does not usually e singing. What are u doing here any-w?"

'That's a secret," said njit with a smile, "but you are going to be sister-in-law I might well tell you. Would u like me to be your other-in-law?"

At first I did not un-stand, then I was exed. I asked him a zen questions to ich he gave amused dies. I wanted to know
e had fallen in love
h Nan, and if so,
en and where. If far knew he had come ask for Nan's hand nowing father's per I was nervous for njit because I had ed him instantly and ed father would also).

Madame Pandit on her wedding day. Her husband, Ranjit Pandit, gifted lawyer and linguist, died in 1944.

Ranjit Pandit was tall, attractive, a clever yer and a brilliant scholar. He was one of se persons who brought life and laughter any room they entered. He loved to ce. He was gay and witty and full of fun.
her, of course, liked him and Nan must have found him charming and attractive.
er a very brief courtship they were engaged married in the orthodox Hindu fashion.
he wedding was a grand affair, though not grand as Jawahar's because by this time er also had joined Gandhi and given up practice as well as much of his wealth to National movement. Nevertheless, festivi-lasted for a week. It was the last big wed-g we had in the family.

lan looked very lovely as a bride. Indian s are not supposed to look bright and py on their wedding day because usually marriage has been arranged and they do know either the husband or his family, so are a little frightened. That Nan looked sad and wept at parting from the family not unusual.

E wear a very simple sari for the actual ding ceremony, usually shell pink or h-colored. Nan's was made of hand-en material. Being pledged to the freedom vement, all of us had to give up wearing ign cloth, as that was part of the National gram. The bride does not wear much elry either. After the ceremony she dresses n all her finery and then goes to her husd's home. Now all this has changed. Mares, except among the very wealthy, are pler and many young people prefer to ry by registration.

anjit was a Brahman, like us, but not a hmiri, hence many of our relations obed to Nan's marriage, but that made little difference to father. He liked Ranjit and that was sufficient. Even if Nan had not been keen on marrying him, father would have persuaded her. Ranjit soon became a much-loved member of our family.

I was thirteen when Ranjit came to Allahabad and I adored him. For the first time I realized how wonderful it was to have an elder brother. He taught me to play tennis, to swim and to do ballroom dancing. We went out riding together, boating and hiking. He even got me interested in Sanskrit (which I was learning but did not like) because he himself spoke and recited Sanskrit so beautifully. An uncle of Ranjit's was a famous scholar and grammarian and many members of his family spoke Sanskrit as fluently as they did other languages. Ranjit was one of the most gifted persons I have ever known. He not only had a flair for languages, but he was also a very clever lawyer. Later, during one of his long prison terms, he translated some old Sanskrit classics into English. For a few years Nan shared his enthusiasm for sports, but, never very keen on outdoor activity, she gradually gave it up. Ranjit taught her to dance when they were in Europe, but she never danced in India. When the Pandits lived in Calcutta, where Ranjit practiced law, he found many friends to share his hobbies. Later, however, Nan persuaded him to settle in Allahabad, our home town.

I think that was disastrous, since Ranjit's talents found no scope in our small town. Furthermore, he was overshadowed by the strong personality of my father. Ranjit soon gave up practicing as a lawyer and took to politics. But he was not the type who could stand prison life. Repeated sentences broke his health, which had once been splendid, as well as his peace of mind. To be able to put up with prison life one has to have a kind of mentality that will adapt itself to numerous rules and submit to many indignities. Ranjit contracted pleurisy soon after he was arrested in 1942, but the authorities did nothing about it and would not release him until his condition was serious. Then it was too late. Nan, who had been released earlier, had gone to Bengal to see the famine-relief work. Not knowing how seriously ill her husband was, she did not return at once. When she did, she found Ranjit at death's door. He died, in January, 1944, as he had lived, bravely and uncomplainingly, quietly bearing the intense pain he suffered. What his thoughts were one does not know, but they must have centered round his family.

Since we had not been brought up in the orthodox Hindu manner, none of us followed the usual pattern of mourning. It is customary for a house to be in mourning for thirteen days. After that one goes about one's daily work, but for six months the person who is bereaved should observe mourning by not attending social functions. The orthodox widow had a very hard time in the old days, and does even today, in certain parts of India. She was ostracized by society, made to shave her head, to wear a plain white sari and no jewels. She could not eat the same food as others but had to eat something tasteless and unappetizing.

Nowadays all this has changed. If a young girl becomes a widow she is no longer forced to wear a white sari or shave her head; she wears sober colors, unless she herself wishes to wear white, and she leads a normal single life. She can wear jewelry and some even put the little red mark on their foreheads which is merely an auspicious sign and a sort of beauty spot, but which used to be definitely prohibited for widows. Nan observed the thirteen days of mourning. Then she took up her normal activ-

Looks good? Wait till you taste it!

FRENCH'S MUSTARD does something wonderful for Hamburgers!

✓ French's pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.

✓ French's rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.

✓ Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference French's makes!

FREE! 32-page COLOR RECIPE BOOKLET "Seasoning Makes the Difference!"
The R. T. French Co.
1000 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

ities again. She wore white or gray for some time and then blue and purple. Nan was forty-four when Ranjit died.

Soon afterward she went to America with her youngest daughter and attended the Pacific Relations Conference. She was invited to make a lecture tour and that was her introduction to America. Her two other daughters, Lekha and Tara, were already in the United States, attending college. When they went there was much criticism in India. Our leaders, including Jawahar, had repeatedly asked students to give up studying and to join the freedom struggle. Yet my nieces were sent away to prevent their becoming bitter or getting involved in politics, while boys and girls in the thousands courted arrest and suffered long terms of imprisonment. Since then Nan has become wholly absorbed in her career and, as the holy man predicted, she has achieved much fame.

In 1926 I was sent to join Jawahar and his wife, Kamala, in Europe so that I could look after Kamala, who was ill, and help to run their apartment. My brother assumed stern responsibility for his lively young sister and made me toe the line. I was not allowed luxuries, treats or spending sprees.

In Europe Jawahar, Kamala and I lived very simply, but when father arrived a year later he insisted on showing me the Continent, in style. Traveling with him, I was like any modern-day debutante, surrounded by attentions in hotels and restaurants, and flattered by father's friends. I adored it all. We went to the theater, shopped, discovered and explored new places, did the tourist spots—laughing and arm in arm, making a lark of it. We even shared a bottle of wine or champagne with our meals. Jawahar, though disapproving because he thought it was bad for me to acquire such giddy habits, sometimes joined us with Kamala.

Jawahar, serious-minded as he was, wanted me to benefit in other ways by my stay in Europe, so I joined the international summer school in Geneva. Jawahar also attended lectures there, off and on, but I went regularly. I loved doing so. Apart from the fact that I met many interesting young people from all parts of the world, Geneva was at that time full of important political figures attending the League of Nations. Many of them came to lecture to us. I met Einstein, Von Ribbentrop and later, in Brussels, Madame Sun Yat-sen, Ernst Toller, Henri Barbusse, Romain Rolland and many writers, artists and politicians.

Another episode made my schooling memorable—my first puppy-love affair. My friend was a French-Swiss lad, slim, good-looking and very poetic. He had broken away from his family and was studying art. Gaston had read many books on India, especially the poet Tagore's translations, which enraptured his fanciful young mind. His cousin used to teach me French and that is how we met.

At first he was rather shy and did not quite seem to know if it would be proper to invite an Indian girl to go out with him. One day he gathered courage to ask Jawahar, in the typical French manner, if he might "take me walking." Jawahar, much amused, gave his consent. When we were alone Gaston would hold my hand, always a little cautiously, and recite Tagore's poems to me in French. When I returned to India he wrote a heartbroken letter saying, "If only I were a Hindu prince I would have asked for your hand in marriage."

During these days in Europe I came to feel much closer to my brother, Jawahar. I remember one particular incident in Paris. I had come home with Gaston rather late one night to find my brother, frowning, waiting up for me.

Next morning Jawahar must have decided that he had better give me the age-old, heart-to-heart talk—"What Every Girl Should Know." He was certain that mother had never breathed a word to me. And father, of course, would be the last person in the world to assume such a responsibility! Jawahar squared his shoulders. "Betti"—he summoned me by his favorite pet name for me. We stepped out onto the terrace balcony of my hotel room for privacy, and he went on. "Betti, my dear little sister, there is something I must—uh—er—explain to you." He stopped. He swallowed. He cleared his throat. But he did not go on.

Politely I waited for what came next. The sun shone merrily on the Paris scene below us. Muffled sounds of busy streets and traffic floated up to us. I felt like singing with all the bliss and youth within me. Whatever in the world ailed Jawahar? I wondered. I hadn't the faintest notion what he wanted to say.

At last he blurted out in a rush, "Darling, you go out alone with a lot of young men. That is as it should be, but I hope you know all about everything—er, you know, er—I suppose every girl must know, dash it all!"

I didn't know. At nineteen I was saucer-eyed with innocence. The bees and the birds were just bees and birds to me. Most Indian girls of twelve know all about sex, but I had grown up as a tomboy, concentrating on games with boys and games alone. Vaguely I knew there was something dark and mysterious about babies. Nan had once given me a book to read, What Every Girl Should Know, but it filled me with dread and more mystery so I tossed it aside. I did not know, therefore, what Jawahar was getting at and I said so.

"But don't you understand that when a girl goes out with a boy alone anything might happen?" he demanded.

"What? What could happen?" Nothing—alas!—had "happened" to me so far.

Jawahar promptly lost his temper. "You are exceedingly stupid! If you don't know what I mean, well, let us leave it at that and trust to God that nothing happens."

"If you can't be more explicit, the fault isn't mine," I said. "I haven't the least notion what you are driving at."

Jawahar clapped his hands to his head. "You idiot! When you go out with a boy, doesn't he try to kiss you and—and get close to you?"

"They hold my hand and quote Tagore, but no one has ever tried kissing me." I hung my head in disappointment. "They keep telling me I'm une Hindoue and as such I have to be adored at a distance!"

Jawahar paused momentarily, then struggled on. "That may be, but one day someone will try to be more ardent and take advantage of you because you are so stupid."

"Why should anyone do that?" I asked.

"Oh, God!" he gasped and decided to end the topic.

Later I went shyly off to Kamala, whom I'd always loved as a sister, and asked her what Jawahar meant. At first she went crimson, then by bits and pieces she carefully and delicately explained. I was terribly amused and went off into shrieks of laughter, to Kamala's utter astonishment.

One phase of Paris left me quite indifferent in my youth—the fabulous, glittering world of fashion. I always wore saris except when traveling; then I wore a Western dress. On hikes or tours I donned comfortable slacks like all the other girls. Clothes did not interest me at all then. Now when I am in Paris I never miss a fashion show. I have been to Jacques Fath's, Christian Dior's and Paquin's.

The first time I walked into Jacques Fath's with a French friend I saw people belonging to the salon looking curiously at me. I wondered why. After a while the woman in charge of the mannequins, who knew my friend, approached and inquired discreetly:

"Where did madame, the Indian lady, get her coat? It is one of ours—and I know we did not sell it to her."

Janine, my friend, introduced me and I explained that my sister, Madame Pandit, had given the coat to me as a hand-me-down. The coat had been made by Fath especially for her. The salon matron's relief was overwhelming. She feared that an original model had been copied.

The gay days of Europe were soon to be put far behind. In December, 1931, I went to prison with Nan and seventy other Indian women from our home town. All over India women by the thousands were entering British prisons for political convictions. It was the fever of independence which made us willing to bear any hardship. We were sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and we did our full term.

When Nan and I were released and returned home we found no one there. Father had died in February, 1931. Jawahar, thin-faced, buried in his books and solitary thoughts, was in prison. Mother was with Kamala in Calcutta and both were ill. Nan's three daughters were in Poona, near Bombay, in a small boarding school run by a friend. We decided to go there and bring them home.

It was while we were in Bombay that I met my future husband, Raja. He was a lawyer practicing at the Bombay High Court. His family lived in Ahmedabad and owned textile mills. We were at a rather noisy party in a friend's house. Raja sat smoking his pipe and talking quietly, oblivious of the noise around him.

Our host warned me that Raja was difficult and not at all interesting—in fact, he was rather peculiar! But I liked Raja almost immediately. He was different from the rest.

The next day he invited Nan and me to dinner. After that Nan and I went off to our home in Allahabad. A few weeks later I had a letter from Raja, a very casual one saying how "nice" it had been meeting me and that he hoped I would be in Bombay again soon. We began to exchange letters.

After some months I wrote that I would be passing through Bombay on my way to Ahmedabad. Raja met me at the railway station and persuaded me to spend only a brief time in Ahmedabad and to hurry back to Bombay, which I did. We had ten days together. Not once did Raja become romantic—and to think how Jawahar warned me!

One evening, as I was preparing to leave, Raja said casually, "When shall we be married, my dear?"

I was rather taken aback and yet thrilled. "Oh, Raja," I faltered, "I am very fond of you but I am not sure I love you."

Raja assured me that I was in love with him though I might not be aware of it. Would I please just say "Yes"?

I TOLD him I would let him know on my return to Bombay.

During that week Raja wrote to me daily. They were beautiful letters and Raja was persistent as any suitor. The separation made me realize how fond I was of him and how much I wanted to be with him again.

When I returned to Bombay, I told Raja that I would marry him. For a while I think we both lived in a dream world. But one morning I came back to reality with a bang. In the newspapers I read that mother had been taken ill in Allahabad. I telephoned to Raja and said I must leave at once. Then I went to Lucknow where mother had been rushed for treatment.

The only person to whom I had mentioned Raja was Nan, and on my return I told her that I had promised to marry him. She was glad—so happy for my happiness! I asked her not to say anything about this since mother was so ill and Jawahar was in jail. We kept the secret between us.

Jawahar was finally released from prison and, after many distressing days and nights, mother passed the crisis of her illness and began to recover. It was then that I asked Nan to tell Jawahar about Raja. It did not seem unnatural for me to have chosen my future husband without consulting anyone else. I had always had freedom to do as I pleased—within reason.

The family knew nothing of Raja and his family, but I was confident they would like him and approve.

When Jawahar spoke to me about Raja there was a twinkle in his eye and he said, "Well, my dear, I hear you are contemplating marriage. Could you enlighten me somewhat about the young man?" Then he proceeded to ask what was Raja's profession.

"He is a barrister—just starting his practice," I replied.

"And his family background—what about that? Who is his father?"

I said I hadn't the faintest idea.

He asked next how many brothers and sisters Raja had, and again I looked blank. What college had he attended at Oxford? I shook my head. Why did I call him "Raja" when his initials were "G.P."? What did "G.P." stand for? I looked back, round-eyed and speechless. More questions followed and, alas, I did not know the answers to any of them.

"This is preposterous!" Jawahar stormed. He threw up his hands and left the room.

I had been so engrossed in just Raja, like any other young girl in love, that the other facts seemed unimportant to me. However, eventually things were straightened out and we were married in October, 1933. Raja's family were Hindu Jains, a caste which is very orthodox, and did not take easily to progressive new ways. They are strict vegetarians among other things. Jawahar was concerned about this and asked me privately how I was going to fit into such a family. How would I get enough to eat? I laughed. What, when did how much food I ate was the last thought in my head.

But all of a sudden, by marriage, I was transplanted into a different world, frighten-

"That's not a record—yesterday I carried $18.65 worth."

alien and "foreign." I was utterly miser-and terribly, terribly hungry. Love doesn't e on an empty, or nearly empty, stomach.
e were tears, temper, stormy rebellions.
was upset for my sake, but kept telling at we would soon have our own place to far away from the family. Then I could om morning till night, and anything I t it did not work out as we planned.

hs later we finally moved into a place of wn, but still I was not free from my in-
There were numerous battles and argus to prevent us from cooking meat in the ment. Being a Nehru, with my full share e famous temper, I finally blew up and tened to leave Raja unless we were left to live our own lives! Only then—for of scandal—did the family reluctantly raw. But though my brothers-in-law heir wives stay with us and eat with us are vegetarians and others are not), to ay my mother-in-law will not eat a meal house because meat is cooked there. She nts to have a cup of tea or coffee, but s all. However, we have reached an unnding and the tea visits are as intimate riendly as a six-course meal.

hodox eating was not my only trouble.
my wedding day I was dressed in a -colored hand-spun sari with a gold
r. I wore a strand of pearls, pearl-and-nd earrings and pearl bracelets—all that ed of mother's jewelry. I was married gistration because Raja and I were of nt castes and could not, therefore, have du ceremony. Both of us were glad for it.
sliked the elaborate and expensive ordeal ing into thousands of dollars and often verishing the parents for the rest of their of most Indian weddings. But many of rthodox relations on both sides do not nize a civil marriage and still consider e are living in sin.

er the wedding Jawahar gave a lunch l the guests. In the evening Raja and I ed to my home, as is the Kashmiri
m, to have a quiet dinner with my family.
t evening my in-laws dressed me up in a ous gold-tissue sari and presented me set of beautiful diamond, emerald and bracelets, earrings and necklace. When hed home I found Jawahar waiting for the doorstep. I thought he would be to see me so glamorously and richly
d. He embraced me and said bluntly:
r heaven's sake, darling, take off all that y stuff! Must you wear all the family at once?"
lt a little crushed. Then Kamala, Nan thers came to greet me; and Kamala, who d fabulous jewels herself, told Jawahar ep quiet, for once. I was a bride, she ed, and I should look like a bride.
ther, on her sickbed, kissed me and mur-d happily, "My little duckling is looking beautiful." She examined all my jewels eemed relieved that I had not married a r.

wever, when I went to Ahmedabad, s home town, to spend a few weeks with ople, I had a rude shock. My mother-inalled me aside. "Pick one or two pieces ur wedding jewelry, my dear," she red, "and give the rest back."
uld not understand.

TLY but firmly it was explained that g I had worn belonged to me; it belonged e family. Not being used to sharing my gings with anyone, I drew myself up and ned her grandly that I did not want any r "community jewelry," that I would it all back at once. It was many years when the family had a semilegal division e spoils, so to speak, that I came into might be called my bridal inheritance.
er my two sons were born I did very little or political work. I was determined not glect the children and vowed they would have the kind of childhood I had had—thing money could buy, but not my er's or father's lap to crawl onto when-wanted. Somehow I did not see how a career could be managed except at the of close companionship with my sons.
wever, there was something else which ght I could do and still be at home. I began writing articles and stories. These were published in Indian newspapers and I felt that I was launched. In 1942 Raja went as a political prisoner to a British jail for sixteen months. Left alone with the children, I found writing a great source of mental release and satisfaction. During the hours when the children were in school I closed my door to the outside world and plunged into my first book. It was an autobiography called With No Regrets. After that I wrote others, among them a children's biography of Gandhi.

Raja came out of prison in 1944—thin, sunken-eyed and ill. He was not himself again for a long time.

In 1947 my American publishers invited me to lecture there and Raja and I went together. It was a happy and quite marvelous experience. Two years later Raja and I were again invited to make a joint lecture tour. This time we took the boys—wildly excited—with us. We broke our journey in Cairo and changed planes to accompany Jawahar part way on his first trip to the States. My sons, Harsha and Ajit, had a hilarious time on the plane with Uncle Jawahar.

ONCE in the States, Raja and I were ready for a strenuous lecture tour. But first we put the boys in the Cranbrook School in Michigan. They were happy there among American students of their own age. After three months of touring and lecturing, Raja went back to India. I stayed on to give the boys a tourist's trip around the States. We loved America and made numerous friends amongst the good-natured, generous people whom we met everywhere. The three of us finally returned home after visiting Paris, Rome, Venice and Geneva.

Indian women have a strong penchant for cosmetics, as they have been making their own creams, lotions, scents and coloring devices for centuries. The little red dot (it can be black, or any other color, but is usually red to match one's lips) is just a beauty spot intended to add to one's glamour. Red is an auspicious color and the dot is always worn on festive occasions if not at other times. It is the equivalent of the beauty mark worn by Western women on their cheek or chin.

Nan does not wear the dot, which we call kumkum. Neither do her daughters. She wears lipstick, but rarely uses a bright shade. Nor does she use nail polish.

Westerners are sometimes startled by seeing diamonds, both large and small, being worn in a tiny pierced hole at one or both sides of the nose. This custom is prevalent mostly in South India, but women from other areas also wear it. In our family there was a superstition that if the girls had their noses pierced they would die young, hence no Nehru girl could have it done. Neither Nan nor I had any desire to wear a nose ring, but we both had our ears pierced when we were quite young, and wore earrings. I am still fond of them, but Nan never wears any jewelry except pearls, a ring and a watch.

Her beautiful gray hair is naturally curly, but to keep it well groomed she often has a blue rinse either at home or in a beauty salon. When at work, Nan wears glasses, but she almost never wears them in public.

Nan's greatest concern is her figure. Because she is small, every extra pound goes to unwelcome places and makes her look dumpy. A bad photograph distresses her, as it would any woman. Since she is not fond of outdoor sports or strenuous physical activity, Nan does not attempt to reduce by exercise, but only by dieting. One day a week she goes on a liquid diet. It doesn't work miracles, but it certainly keeps her trim.

Although very conscious of her appearance, Nan has never had an eye for color. When she replenishes her wardrobe on returning to India, she usually buys sari materials in grays, purples, blues and blacks. Then she asks some of us to buy brocade borders or blouse pieces to harmonize with the saris. One innovation Nan made after her first assignment to America as ambassador was to buy plain nylon by the yard for saris. She used to get six-yard lengths and then attach a border or a different-colored piping to it. As saris are difficult to wash and press, the nylon ones proved very helpful, but somehow they never fall as well as pure silk does. In the States,

EASY RECIPE

Sunny clings under a cut-out crust

1 No. 2½ can cling peach slices
½ cup granulated sugar
1½ tablespoons cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
Pastry (basis, 1 cup flour)

Drain peaches. Turn slices into 8½ inch round baking dish. Heat 1 cup syrup from peaches. Blend sugar, cornstarch, salt, cinnamon. Stir into hot syrup. Cook and stir until clear and thickened. Add butter. Pour over peaches. Roll pastry into 10-inch circle. Make 4-inch cuts across center. Place over peaches. Turn points back. Crimp edge. Bake at 400° F. about 35 minutes. Serves 5 or 6.

Extra welcome on a wintry day—sunny, summer-sweet cling peaches from California! And isn't it nice to know—tender clings keep their shape, put up a pretty show on your table baked in a pie or simply spooned from the can for quick desserts or salads. Your thriftiest fruit. Check the label for the best-buy words, "cling peaches!"

Cling Peach Advisory Board

Cling Peaches from California

Chocolate Marshmallow Soufflé

Marcia Camp's Thrilling New Recipe

TRY IT!

EASY-TO-FOLLOW RECIPE

(Makes 6 Servings)

3 tbsps. butter or margarine
3 tbsps. flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 c. milk
¼ c. sugar
3 1-oz. squares unsweetened chocolate, grated
32 Campfire Marshmallows
3 eggs, separated
1 tsp. vanilla

In a saucepan, melt butter or margarine; blend in flour and salt. Add milk and cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and smooth. Add sugar, chocolate and marshmallows; stir until chocolate and marshmallows are melted. Remove from heat. Beat egg yolks. Add egg yolks and vanilla to chocolate-marshmallow mixture and mix well; cool. Beat egg whites until stiff but not dry. Fold egg whites into cooled chocolate mixture. Turn into 1½ quart casserole and place in pan of hot water. Bake in moderate oven (350°) 1 hour or until done. Serve warm or chilled with cream or custard sauce.

Ingredient Marshmallows

Campfire Marshmallows are ingredient marshmallows—pure, wholesome, extra delicious. Light, fluffy, always fresh—four individually sealed Packettes in one economy pound package.

Campfire MARSHMALLOWS

The Magic Ingredient

Write for FREE Recipe Book—new salads, frozen desserts, ice cream icings meringues, candies, etc. Write for FREE copy today to—

THE CRACKER JACK CO., Desk 38, 4800 W. 66th St., CHICAGO 38, ILL.

if it is winter Nan is apt to wear a mink cape over her sari. She loves high-heeled shoes which lend height to her five-foot stature. As she sits at a top-level conference table, flashing the famous Nehru smile, the deferential government officials around her melt a little and (I'm sure of this, for some have told me) make a mental note to tell their wives that gray or lavender silk worn by a woman over forty is the most flattering color in the world!

In India there is a notion that public figures have to be exceedingly simple to be really great, the exception being Jawahar, who is always a model of fastidious grooming. Hence, though she is never sloppy, Nan caters to the Indian public, and when she is in India she dresses as simply as possible, wearing mostly hand-spun saris with black coats or sober-colored shawls—never her mink!

Nan's three daughters Lekha, Tara and Rita, are all married. Only one was a love marriage; the two others were arranged in the Indian tradition giving the young people time and opportunities to get to know each other. None of the girls seems at all ambitious to follow in their mother's footsteps, though Tara has recently taken an interest in writing. All three were educated in the U.S., the older two at Wellesley and Rita at a school in Pennsylvania. All the Pandits share a warm feeling for the U.S. Nan may at times strongly disapprove of American politics, but she is more at home in America than in India. She has more personal freedom there to go out with whom she likes, although there is nothing to prevent her from doing so at home. But perhaps if she were seen dining with the same man twice in India eyebrows might be raised—whereas abroad nobody shows any concern.

I love change and moving about. To be more pleased with foreign things than our own is a common trait, and I have my share of it. Those who are of the contrary mind, who like their own things best, who think that nothing can be more beautiful than the world before their doorway, are really happier, even if they are not so knowing. I do not envy their wisdom, but their luck. —MONTAIGNE

People have often wondered why Jawahar has never remarried. There were and still are many women of all nationalities who would be proud to have him for a husband. Perhaps he is too wedded to his work to be able to lead a family life. When he was younger he may have felt it would not be fair to Indira to give her a stepmother.

He is deeply attached to his daughter, and her two boys are his greatest joy. Part of the routine of his day is a visit with his grandsons each morning while he is doing his yoga exercises. When he stands on his head their glee knows no bounds. It is not an easy exercise and requires a great deal of practice.

Jawahar delights in taking the boys to a cricket match or to see folk dancing or for an occasional airplane ride.

Indira has much of her mother's nature. She works silently, without any desire for the limelight. As her father's chatelaine, she has a demanding role. It is a little hard on her, since she cannot be much with her husband. At one time there was a clash of loyalties between husband and father. Indira did her best to spend some time with each—and with her two lively little boys—but it was not a very happy arrangement. More often than not the choice had to go to her father and his work. However, Indira's husband now has a job in Delhi, so life is a little more domestic for them than it used to be.

DELHI society being what it is, many women admirers make a great fuss over Jawahar. Some keep hoping that he will succumb to their charms. It is quite an effort to keep these women at a distance, and those who do so are not very popular. Indira and I seldom bother, but Nan, who is and always has been very possessive where Jawahar is concerned, keeps rival women at arm's length.

Oddly enough, it was one of these admiring females who was responsible for Jawahar's trade-mark: the rose in his buttonhole. This particular girl waited for many days on the doorstep to get a word with him. Nothing would discourage her. Finally one day she arrived just as Jawahar came out of the house to get into his car. She stepped forward and handed him a rose. Jawahar loves flowers and this was a very lovely yellow rose. He smiled at the girl and spoke a few words to her. That was all she wanted and her patient vigil had been rewarded. From that day on she made it a habit to arrive daily with just one beautiful rose which she offered to Jawahar with great devotion.

At first Jawahar was merely amused. He didn't want to offend the well-meaning girl, so he slipped the rose into his buttonhole. When teased about it, he gave up wearing the flower but later, as the roses kept coming, he wore them. Now it is the gardener who leaves a rose on his dressing table for him to wear each morning.

IN India some of our people are critical of Jawahar's love of English manners and the English way of life. But the habits of years are not easily changed. He has often said he is a "queer mixture of East and West, out of place everywhere, at home nowhere." Even Gandhi confirmed that Jawahar is more English than Indian in his make-up. He is often more at home with foreigners than with his own countrymen. It was Gandhi again who once jokingly said "When Jawahar talks in his sleep he speaks in English." Since independence he has made more of an effort to speak in Hindustani. But at home all of us speak a good deal more in English than in our own language. Especially when Jawahar is in a temper English words flow—or explode—more readily than Hindi.

Jawahar has a characteristic attitude toward the press: it is common knowledge that a foreign correspondent can get an interview with him fairly easily, but an Indian journalist seldom does. If any writer, foreign or otherwise, dares to be critical of some statement Jawahar has made, he is apt to become persona non grata. This applies, unfortunately, even to friends of many years' standing.

On the whole, Jawahar still admires Britain more than any other nation. Many find this incomprehensible after all we suffered under the British. He has respect and admiration for some of the Americans he has met, but no friends among them. He thinks Americans are a very rich, childish and naïve people still in their infancy so far as diplomacy goes; hence they should not imagine that money aids will solve the world's problems.

In India as well as England his friendship with Lord and Lady Mountbatten has been much talked of and criticized. They remain, however, his closest personal friends.

Jawahar has become a nonstop smoker. He reaches for a cigarette the minute he awakens and has one before falling asleep at night. When he went to prison he gave up smoking as soon as he entered the prison gates. He was never forced to do so, but other political prisoners were not allowed to smoke, and he did not want any special privileges. No matter how long he was in prison—six months, eighteen months or three years—he never touched cigarettes, but the moment he came out he started smoking, almost at the gates.

Formal religion has not played a very important part in Jawahar's life. He never goes to a temple, prays in the conventional way or meditates in the Indian custom. But he has the Bhagavad-Gita, which is a sort of Bible, near his bedside table and now and again he reads a verse or two from it.

The Prime Minister's income is fixed at about $450 a month. When a member of the family or his personal friends stay with him at his official residence, he is charged $2 a day for their room and board. Only state guests are entertained by the government.

Any adventurous feat always wins Jawahar's admiration. By nature he is daring. In his youth in Switzerland he adored hiking and climbing in the mountains. Mountains have lways had a special fascination for him. lence, when news came of Hillary and Tenng Norkay's conquest of Everest he was juilant and especially proud that an Indian herpa, a humble but great man of the eople, had finally reached the summit after o many valiant tries. He could scarcely ait to meet Tensing and shake his hand.

When they did meet, Tensing's utter simlicity and bewilderment with sudden fame ent straight to Jawahar's heart. An attachent almost like father and son grew between em. When Tensing was about to leave for ondon to receive the George medal from ueen Elizabeth, Jawahar wished to give him me useful gift. He opened his wardrobe late ne night and spied a fine brief case. Then he ame across a formal dress coat called a sherani (the kind my brother wears most of the me, a fitted coat, reaching to the knee). This oat had belonged to father and to Jawahar it as a special talisman. This, too, he gave to ensing, after a tailor had cut it down to fit im perfectly. Tensing proudly wore this coat n every formal occasion while he was in Engnd and on the Continent.

There is an amusing sequel to the giving of ese gifts. A cousin of ours had married a lungarian girl. She happened to be at the ondon airport when Tensing arrived. Introuced to him, she thought the brief case he arried looked familiar. She inquired about it nd Tensing told her, with a dazzling smile, at it was a gift from the Prime Minister. It as she who had given the brief case as a irthday gift to Jawahar!

A great deal of criticism followed Jawahar's ecision to attend the coronation of Queen lizabeth. The majority of our people did not ink it proper for him to go, but, once his ind was made up, he turned a deaf ear to riticism. He was greatly impressed by the ageantry of the coronation ceremony as well s by the orderly behavior of the vast crowds. he dignity of the young queen impressed him lso.

While in London for the coronation, picures appeared in the Indian newspapers of Jawahar wearing a tweed suit and sporting a bowler hat! To the Congress Party followers in their trailing cotton dothis, this was high apostasy. But until he was thirty-four or thirty-five years old Jawahar always wore Western dress. After he joined Gandhi he wore Indian-style clothes. Traveling abroad, he prefers to wear Western clothes except at formal functions.

Winston Churchill, who was once Jawahar's bitterest enemy, paid him many compliments at functions held during the coronation. Jawahar, in turn, made many pretty speeches also praising Churchill. Nothing changed beneath the surface, however.

It is said that power corrupts a man. It has not corrupted Jawahar. It has, however, had the effect of perhaps coarsening him to some extent. He was always inclined to be a little dictatorial—this must have been inherited from father—but nowadays he brooks no criticism and will not even suffer advice gladly. He is highly conscious of his place in history. The very manner in which he holds himself erect as he enters a room or steps to a microphone gives one the impression that he is aware of the power of the Prime Ministership and also that he is still the idol of millions of his people. Still, there is no disputing the obvious: he has broad vision of international problems, and his mind knows no barriers but roves toward vast horizons.

Jawahar is ambitious for India. Whether his one-man control of the country has made him a benevolent despot is a matter of opinion. All one can say is that he is not the Jawahar of old: warm, understanding and affectionate, quick to redress a grievance and to punish a wrongdoer. Too many burdens, none of which he will share with anyone, are weighing him down.

In the eyes of the world he is undoubtedly the only man in India who can guide and control her destiny in these difficult times. Nevertheless, there is danger for him and for India if he is spoiled too much with adulation. In his own words, "It must be checked. We want no Caesars!"

END

Old Iceboxes and Refrigerators are a DANGER to Children

We discard at the rate of 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 a year our iceboxes, refrigerators, freezers and other airtight cabinets . . . and unless we take precautions they endanger the lives of our children.

- When a cabinet is abandoned, always remove the doors. It is the only sure way to make an airtight chest harmless, to avoid tragedy.
- If cabinet is needed indoors for storage, remove either the door or its latch stop so that it cannot lock automatically.
- Drill holes in all cabinets from which you have removed only latch stops! If a child should close himself in and grow panicky he will have air intake and can make his voice heard.
- Or destroy all such boxes altogether. Anyone who discovers an airtight cabinet hazarding children is advised to take the above steps immediately or report the matter to local safety councils or government officials so that they may do so.

Easy does it!

1 Combine 1 cup Carolina Brand or River Brand Rice, 1¾ cups cold water, 1 tspn salt, 1 tbspn butter or margarine in heavy saucepan (about 3 quarts).

2 Turn heat high. When beginning to boil, reduce heat to medium low. Stir once with fork.

3 Cover tightly and cook 12-14 minutes or until all liquid is absorbed.

. . . and quickly, too. Of course you want rice that's easy to prepare — but you don't want to lose the rich flavor of natural white rice and you don't want to pay more for less!

River Brand and Carolina Brand Rice give you the true natural flavor of white rice as nature intended . . . cook to fluffy, snowy-white perfection in only 14 minutes. Cost less, too! Up to 3 times as much rice per package as artificially processed brands.

CAROLINA BRAND the King Size extra long grain rice.

RIVER BRAND the popular low-cost regular grain rice.

14 MINUTES FROM START TO FINISH!

The new 14-minute method recipe now on every package

RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.
New York, N. Y. · Houston, Texas · Memphis, Tenn.
El Campo, Texas · Eunice, La. · Jonesboro, Ark.

© 1954 RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.

THE LARK SHALL SING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30

done something better—perhaps they should have sent him away out of Greenhurst, away to something more than this partnership in the house-agents business. But he had elected to stay here and work in this little office—and after all, Mr. Milward reflected, it was a snug little business; prospering and likely to go on prospering. It would have been no bad thing for Roselle to marry into, but she had had her chance and she had rejected it—rejected Jeff and Greenhurst and gone off to London.

Jeff's voice roused him. "Lucille's coming here first, isn't she? I mean, before going out to the house."

"Yes. Don't be late for the train, Jeff. And try to persuade her not to stay out there all alone; she can stay with us and you can drive her over to Wood Mount whenever she wants to go."

Jeff went out, and Mr. Milward was left to go on with his work, but his mind was not on what he was doing. A series of pictures was passing through his mind. Lucille in tattered shorts, roaming round the beautiful, half-wild garden of Wood Mount, leading Nicholas—four years her junior—into mischief, even into danger. Roselle, a year younger than Nicholas, had trembled when they took risks, wept and fetched bandages in all the gory sequels.

Lucille had been—how old?—sixteen when her father died, and from that time onward she had shouldered most of the responsibility of the household. She had been housekeeper, nurse, mother to the younger ones; she had tried to impose economies, but it had been impossible to make her mother understand that money values had changed—and so the bills continued to come in and the money continued to pour out, until her mother's death two years ago.

Two years. Lucille had been twenty-two—and for the year after that Lucille had tried to make ends meet. Then they had all gone—Nicholas, indeed, had already gone away to do his national service—and now it was the turn of the others. Lucille had gone as secretary-companion to an old lady in Cornwall, Roselle to work in London, Julia as a boarder to school, Simon and Dominic to live with a childless uncle and aunt in Shropshire. The house had been let, furnished, for a year. A year, Lucille had said, and now the year was up, the tenants had gone, but Lucille, her brothers and sisters were not coming back. Lucille had given up her post in Cornwall and was to be married, the house was to be sold.

Mr. Milward sighed heavily. He would lose his favorite, Lucille; his wife would lose Nicholas—and Jeff . . . well, Jeff was only twenty-four; young men of twenty-four—did they love forever? When Mr. Milward looked up and saw Lucille standing in the doorway, he had to pause for a moment to wonder whether he were still dreaming.

"Uncle Bill." She was kissing him gently, giving him a delicious feeling that he tried to describe, afterward, to his wife and which she told him was not in the least godfatherly.

This was the real Lucille, and the other—the one people called hard or cold or overbearing—that was the Lucille who had learned, a little too early, that life could become harsh, that age and illness could turn indulgent parents into selfish or even neurotic patients. This—this was his own beloved Lucille.

SHE drew away from him and sat on the edge of his desk to study him frankly. "Older; much, much older," she pronounced. "Uncle Bill, my pet, you've got two more white hairs and your mustache has faded."

"Did Jeff meet you?"

"Yes. I came straight here; then I'm going to Wood Mount, and then I'll come back and see Aunt Maggie."

"She's got your bed ready; she says it's quite ridiculous to go out to the house and stay there all alone."

"But I'm going—I must. There are a thousand and one things to do. What does the house look like?"

"It looks splendid. Jeff was out there yesterday. I suppose he told you that." He hesitated. "Lucille ——"

"No, darling," she said instantly. "Jeff tried that, and it's no use. The house has got to go."

"A family is a family, Lucille."

"I know that, but we tried it for a year, didn't we? And you know perfectly well that we couldn't afford to stay on."

"But the others ——"

"The others are perfectly happy. Roselle likes her job and she likes her flat; Julia's made no complaints, which means she hasn't got any; the boys are perfectly happy with Aunt Mary. After all, she begged and begged for them—you can't accuse me of posting them off like a couple of parcels. She wanted them—and they wanted to go."

"Little boys of that age don't know what they want, Lucille. And your Aunt Mary had no children of her own at that time, and—as far as I understand it—no prospect of any. Now she has a baby of her own, so ——"

" —— so she could have written to say that circumstances had changed, and so on and so on. But she didn't."

"Perhaps she thought it would come better from you."

"Well"—she smiled at him indulgently—"I'll write and ask her. If she doesn't want to keep them, they can come to me in Cornwall. In any case, they would spend as much time as possible with me."

"With"—Mr. Milward fidgeted nervously—"with you and your husband?"

He looked at her firm chin, her magnificent eyes, her soft copper hair. What man was this—this stranger, this Digby Russell, who had claimed her? Nobody in Greenhurst had ever made any headway with Lucille, he remembered. Jeff—perhaps fortunately—had never felt very warmly toward her; he was always on guard beside Roselle, waiting for the first hint of unkindness, of bullying. Lucille—a bully! The fantastic thought brought a smile to Mr. Milward's lips, and then he remembered what he had to say, and grew serious again.

"When your Aunt Maggie and I read your news—not about your decision to sell the house, but of your engagement—we were worried, because we felt that you might, perhaps, be making another mistake. We"—he held up a hand for silence, for she was plainly ready to interrupt—"we thought your leaving the house was a mistake."

"I waited a year," said Lucille steadily. "If mother's money hadn't been in that trust—if it had come to us instead of going to Aunt Mary . . . but even if we'd had the money, what was the use? Julia was the only one who showed any sign of wanting to stay in the house, but I told her that we'd let it for a year, and if she had any complaints, she could let me have them as and when they arose. She's said nothing." She got off the desk and drew a chair close to her godfather. "Uncle Bill, darling, I had enough. I had nearly eight years of nursing and managing and—and ——"

"I understand." He patted her hand gently. "But we feel—your Aunt Maggie and I—that you made a mistake in going away," he told her. "Now you're running away again—this time from a job that perhaps didn't turn out as well as you hoped."

"He's a very nice man," said Lucille, without turning. "He's thirty-five—a solicitor; he's not rich, but he's comfortably off. He lives with his mother; she's a widow and he has always lived with her. The house has a nice lot of ground, so when the children come they can climb trees, and—and run around and—and feel at home."

"Where did you meet him?"

"In Bude. The old lady I looked after ——" She paused and turned slowly round to face him. "Now that was a mistake, if you like," she said. "To go from nursing one frail old lady straight to being a companion to another ——"

"But I thought ——"

"I know. So did I. You thought from her advertisement that she was a rich, spry old creature who wanted someone to go around the world with her. Willing to travel extensively—that was what she put, wasn't it? The only travel we ever did was from the house to the sea—eight miles in a hired car once a week in summer. But I couldn't blame her for being ill and not being able to go about. . . . And then I met Digby Russell. He was her solicitor, and he took me out and drove me about and—well, there you are."

She stopped, and Mr. Milward rose to his feet almost as though he were about to propose a toast to her happy future. Instead, he looked at her a little sadly.

"When are you going to be married?" he asked.

"In about two months—in Cornwall. Digby's mother felt she couldn't make the journey all the way here for the wedding."

"Tell me about yourself. Do you think I'm pretty? Do you like my dress? Do you go for my type?"

"I wish you sounded as though you knew what you were doing," he said gently.

Jeff drove the four miles that separated Wood Mount from the small town of Greenhurst. With the last of the houses came almost at once broad open country, dipping beyond Greenhurst and then rising to the wooded slope that gave the house its name. Glancing at Lucille, he saw that she was looking round with a gaze which in anybody else he would have called hungry.

SHE had changed a little. She was quieter, less sure of herself, and that was decidedly a change for the better. She was, he had to admit, strikingly beautiful. He had forgotten—or perhaps, engrossed in Roselle as he had been for years, he had not noticed—what a beauty Lucille was; he had seen her, chiefly, as a somewhat obstructing elder sister. Striving to be just, he told himself that she had never done or said anything to influence Roselle—that is, to put her off him; on the other hand, a word or two in his favor might have helped.

It would be natural, he thought, to ask how she was. Rounding three more curves of the road in order to get the right casualness into his tone, he put the question.

"How's Roselle?"

Lucille turned to look at him in astonishment. "Don't you know?"

"How should I know?" he asked. "She doesn't write."

"She's still in the same job—with that travel agency. She's still in the same flat too. I don't know how it is, she doesn't—she doesn't seem to come through in her letters. They're sort of impersonal. But she's well. Julia stayed with her at Easter."

Julia, thought Jeff with a smile. The other family redhead; the family rebel. The ugly duckling. How old was she now? Simon was eleven, Dominic nine and she came between them; Julia—ten!

"How're the boys?" he asked.

"Nicholas is out of the army, I think—at least he wrote to say he was coming out, but he gave me no dates."

"What's he going to do?"

"As little as possible, he says." Lucille sighed. "How does one get jobs for young men?"

"He'll find one for himself. Any news of Simon and Dominic?"

"Very little—you know the kind of letter boys of that age write. Dominic says nothing and Simon says next to nothing. Aunt Mary says they're well and happy and getting good reports at school. When I'm married, I'm going to see about getting them down to Cornwall."

An obliging gent, this husband-to-be, reflected Jeff; he was going to be a husband and home provider and residential hotel all in one.

Perhaps Lucille read his thoughts. She said, "Some men mightn't take on a ready-made family, but I made it clear before I ——"

Jeff grinned. He had—so often—heard Lucille making things clear.

"Well, I hope he's a good guy; he sounds it," he said. "What's he look like?"

And that, thought Lucille, was the trouble. He looked . . . she fought the memory back, but it welled up obstinately, and she remembered it with shame. The first time she had met him, she had thought, Tame rabbit. But even then he had been kind and gentle and protective. Later, he had listened patiently when she had talked of her family. He had been audience, sympathizer; and he had—finally—placed his heart and his house at her disposal.

"What happens to his mother?" Jeff broke into her musings. "You said he had an old mother, didn't you?"

"She'll live with us. At least, we're going to live with her."

"Ah. How'll she like Julia and Simon and Dominic?"

"Why shouldn't she like them?"

"Keep your wool on; I didn't say she wouldn't, and you know it. Don't let's pick another quarrel, Lucille. I dare say it'll work out: if she's a nice old lady, they'll cheer her up; if s a nasty old girl, they'll kill her off. Well—we are."

e turned into the short drive and Wood unt stood before them in all its white liness. Jeff took the key from his pocket ushered Lucille into the hall; once inside, ave a glance at her face and then, hands in kets, wandered away, whistling softly and elessly, and left her to roam through the tered rooms. He went into the garden, sat he low wall of the terrace and, lighting a rette, looked thoughtfully at the lovely old se. A long time later Lucille came out and beside him, and stared at the place in which had been born and reared.
hosts, ghosts and more ghosts. Her mother he library, which overlooked the magnifiholly hedge that she had loved—the ge that took two men two months to trim.
father in his old study. Herself in the old nursery . . . she pulled herself up sharply.
ugh of that. It took a fool to make a wise sion and then look round for reasons to et it.
To run it, I'd need money," she said
ly. "Where would I have got money?"
Couldn't you have persuaded your fiancé ome and take it over?"
No. I thought of it—but he's tied to his ness, and he's got his mother to think of.
couldn't leave them—and I don't suppose want to. No—it'll have to go, Jeff."
Any regrets?"
Yes." She stopped, staring up at the house.
omething in her silence struck Jeff and, ning to her, he stiffened in surprise. There e tears on her cheeks—and although he had her cry, many times, he had never seen her like this. She had wept from temper, from riness, from exasperation—but this quiet, tle melancholy was something different.
assured, overriding, I'll-fix-it-all Lucille yne . . . groping for a handkerchief and ging on to the nearest support—himself.
s was where he ought to whip out a clean are of linen and mop her up—but he'd his handkerchief to clean up his hands, r a grope round the carburetor. All he ld do was look sympathetic and wait for to pull herself together.
Feeling better?" he asked at last.
he nodded. "Yes, thank you." She blew nose; a loud, defiant blast sounded in the of fate. "How much d'you think we'll get the house, Jeff?"

ARD to say; big houses don't fetch much vadays—and there's no bus service out
e. Not more than seven thousand, dad says.
're asking eight. Lucille ——" Well?"
Have you told the others that you're ing?"
Yes."
What did they say?"
Nothing—yet. I wrote to them all from rnwall and—and explained. And I asked m to write and let me know which of their ngs they'd like to keep. Most of the stuff have to go, of course, but if they could ose ——"
Not everything they'll choose is portable, know."
I know, but"—Lucille moved restlessly—ere it is, Jeff. We've all got to accept it, t's all."
eff said nothing. There was nothing more say.

t looked no different from Lucille's other respondence. There was about a page and a f, written in Lucille's careless scrawl; Simon skimmed almost to the end of the first ge when a faint, undefined feeling of nausea pped his stomach. He went back to the first e and read it more slowly, right through to end; then he found that his appetite had him.
He folded up the letter and put it back in its velope. Laying it beside his plate, he stared it for a long time. He could not remember ything in his life that had given him this sick ling of disaster. He was surprised that his cle, glancing at him as he asked for the jam, med to see nothing unusual about him.
s aunt, getting up from the table, issued inuctions about the morning's plans and ted nothing out of the ordinary. It must, then, thought Simon, be all inside him; he felt green, but he didn't look green.

"There's nothing else, is there, Simon?"

"I don't think so, Aunt Mary."

"You'll find your lunches in the fridge. If Dominic wants more milk, use the small bottle."

"Yes, Aunt Mary."

"You needn't wash up, just pile the things neatly."

"All right, Aunt Mary."

"Go up, will you, and keep the baby quiet for a moment—he's yelling his head off."

Simon went upstairs and stood by the cot; his two-month-old cousin went on howling, but Simon scarcely heard him. Lucille's letter was in his hand and he was reading it through again. Perhaps Lucille hadn't really meant it.

But there was no mistake; the sentences were clear, decisive and quite, quite final, for Lucille spoke not merely as an older sister, but also as a guardian. She was, he knew, the one who ordered all their lives; that is, amended Simon, staring at the baby, his life, Julia's and Dominic's. Nicholas was grown up; Roselle was eighteen and could decide for herself—she had decided for herself, and now she was living in London. But Julia and Dominic and himself—the three young ones—had always obeyed Lucille.

Final words; shattering words. The howls of the baby were no more than an echo of the desolation that filled Simon's heart.

He went into the bedroom he shared with Dominic and stood by the window listening to the familiar Saturday-morning sounds. His thin, brown face with its perpetually harassed look that was caused by the weight of responsibility he always felt for Julia and Dominic now looked strained, old beyond his years. He heard his uncle leaving the house.

Later, his aunt left to spend the day with a friend and took the baby with her. Peace descended upon the house and Simon and Dominic were left alone. But this fact, which 62% of your children's daily needs of vitamins A and D—that's what they get from every two ounces of new enriched Nucoa!

Every helping of this modern margarine helps your youngsters to those vitamins so essential to healthy growth, keen vision, clear skin, strong teeth and bones.

To encourage growing young bodies, there's lots of sweet skim milk in Nucoa—it's as rich in milk minerals as the most expensive spread. And no spread could taste fresher—because only fresh-made salad oils go into Nucoa.

Above all, Nucoa is the only leading margarine that gets its color from nature—golden vitamin A of carrots.

How about serving your family Nucoa?

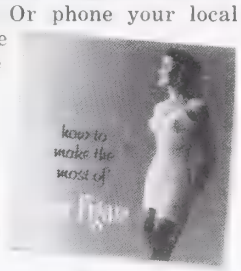
New enriched NUCOA® is so good it's digestible even for babies



Spencer's lightweight New Corselet individually designed for you

The newest of all-in-one foundations is Spencer's Corselet – individually designed, cut and made for you alone to meet your particular figure requirements. No details are overlooked to give you the foundation comfort and beauty of your life.

Gently, it zips you into a single unbroken line of new loveliness. Sheer elastic is combined with your choice of nylon, rayon satin or cotton. Your Spencer Corselet smooths your diaphragm; slims your waist; trims that hip and thigh-line, because it will be actually created for you to solve your individual figure problem! A hidden feature flattens abdomen and feather-weight boning promises stay-put comfort.

MAIL COUPON below for valuable FREE Spencer Booklet. Or phone your local Spencer Corsetiere for FREE Figure Analysis. Look in yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop." Spencers are not sold in stores. Be sure to ask about Spencer figure-perfect Slips – an exciting new exclusive!

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

Please send FREE 12-page booklet. I have marked my figure problem.

I would like to make money as a Spencer Corsetiere ☐

1-55

Mrs.
Miss _____
(Print name and address)

Address _____

City _____ State _____

MAIL to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. (In Canada—Rock Island, Que.)

SPENCER

individually designed foundations and brassieres

as a rule brought Simon a great deal of pleasure and relief, was today overshadowed by Lucille's letter.

Dominic was where his brother expected him to be: up a tree in the garden. After an attempt at making him come down, Simon decided to go up. He was an expert climber; a year ago, he had spent almost as much time aloft as aground—but then they had all been at home, and at home there were a great many more trees. Nicholas had rigged up a hammock for Julia under the shadiest apple tree. He had helped Dominic to build his magnificent tree house. The tree house—what would happen to the tree house now? And where would Julia find a place where she could read, hour by hour, quiet and undisturbed? Where ——

He reached the branch on which Dominic sat, and with a spring and a twist, settled beside him.

"'Lo," said Dominic.

Simon, glancing at him, was struck by a feeling of regret that Dominic and the others were so good-looking and Julia was so ugly. He never agreed—audibly—when people said that she was ugly, but he acknowledged to himself that she did have a rather monkeyish sort of face and somewhat stringy red hair, and she looked even worse in the summer, when her freckles came out. It seemed a shame that Dominic should have the fair, clear skin and the almost girlish lashes.

"Shall I read you the letter from Lucille?"

Dominic's large, beautiful gray eyes rested indifferently on his brother. "Tell me about it."

"Well . . . it's a sort of funny letter this time. Lucille says —— Dominic, I'm telling you something."

Dominic, upside down, was swinging to and fro with skill.

"Dominic!"

Dominic, reappearing, shook his hair out of his eyes. "I bet Julia can't do that. She tried to do it before, when we were at home, and she couldn't. I bet I do it better than her."

"Lucille's getting married, and ——"

"Look," interrupted Dominic, pointing a grubby forefinger; "you can see right into the nursery from here."

"Are you going to listen or aren't you?"

"I did listen. Lucille's going to get married. What's funny about that? When you're as old as that, I shouldn't be s'prised if you got married."

"But don't you remember? Lucille said that after a year we could go home again. She said we'd all go home and live at home again—if we wanted to."

"Well, all right," said Dominic calmly. "Tell her we want to."

"But I'm trying to explain. The house is ——" Simon stopped, swallowed. "It's going to be sold."

"Well, it can't be," stated Dominic flatly, "'cos we're all going back there."

Simon sat for some moments weighing his fears against a feeling of relief. The certainty in Dominic's voice bore out the confidence that he himself had felt regarding their eventual return home. He tried to put himself back to the time when Lucille had called a family meeting, and told them all about her plan to let the house. He had tried to understand all the financial details; he had even tried to put forward his point of view.

It seemed to Simon, looking back, that there had never really been more than one possible end to the discussion. Julia had wanted to stay at home, just as he and Dominic had wanted to stay at home. He and Dominic hadn't been insistent, and Julia had—but nobody had really listened to Julia. Nobody could take advice, he supposed, from a girl of nine, as she had been then—and nobody was going to agree to give up a good year's let and stay in the house just because Julia had three hundred and five books in it. It had seemed, then, a silly reason for staying. Now . . . somehow, it didn't look so silly. It was one thing for her books to be stored in the attic for a year—but if Lucille sold the house, where could the books be put? Lucille's new home . . . but would her husband want Julia's books? And if Julia's books had to go, where would Dominic's tree house go? It had taken them—Julia and Dominic and himself, with Nicholas' help—nearly ten months to build. They had spent days—long days—in it. Dominic hadn't spoken much of home, in this last year; but whenever he did, it was his tree house that he spoke of.

And for himself —— If he had known, thought Simon, if he had dreamed that it would be more than a year . . . but when they sat in the library that evening and Lucille had explained, perhaps he hadn't been listening properly because he had been thinking of—of—well, he'd better keep his mind off that now, or the feeling in his inside would get worse, and he couldn't really be sick properly up in a tree.

"Perhaps I'd better read you the letter," he told Dominic.

"You've told me all what's in it."

"No—only partly. Lucille's going to live in Cornwall, she says. And she's taking some things and the rest is going to be sold."

"Our things—sold?" Dominic turned to stare at him, for the first time giving the matter his full attention.

"Well, yes," said Simon. "Not our things; just the furniture, like chairs and tables and beds and things."

"Then what about our things? What about all our stuff up in the attics?" demanded Dominic.

"Lucille says she's going to sort everything out—she's at home now—and she says we're to write to her and tell her which of our things we want, and she'll see we get them."

There are two things to aim at in life: first, to get what you want; and, after that, to enjoy it. Only the wisest of mankind achieves the second.

LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH:
All Trivia
(Harcourt, Brace and Company)

"See we get them?" Dominic's eyes narrowed, and Simon saw in them incredulity and the beginning of anger. "How d'you mean, see we get them? They're ours, aren't they?" Dominic's voice rose. "We've got them. We've got them at home. What's she think she's going to do—chuck out all our things just because some silly fatheads go and say they want to buy our house?"

"Nobody said anything about chucking them out. All you've got to do, she says, is tell her what you want, and she'll see you get it."

"All right, then," said Dominic triumphantly. "I want my tree house—see? Tell her to send me that."

"She can't do that."

"Course she can't, and that's why she's talking tripe—see?" explained Dominic. "She can't send me my tree house, can she, and she can't send Julia her books, can she, all three hundred and five of the great, thumping things, can she, and she can't send you Long John because they won't let you have your dog here—see?"

It was said. The name was spoken.

For a whole year, Simon had kept the name of Long John hidden away, deep inside him. Never once had he mentioned him. And as Dominic had never spoken of him, as Julia had never written of him, he had assumed that they had forgotten. Now he saw that Dominic had not forgotten, and that Julia, too, must remember. Nobody could forget how he, Simon, had saved Long John's life and carried him home—an eight-weeks puppy—and nursed him until he was well and strong and scampering round the house on his three and a half legs. Nobody could forget how he, Simon, had labored, long and patiently, to teach Long John the mysteries of life; for the van which had left him half a leg short had also been responsible for rattling his brains a little out of place, so that there were certain things—things that came naturally to other dogs—that Long John had to learn. How to come downstairs, for example; it was no use his thinking that he could take off at the top and just float down. How to bury a bone; it was no use his going off to find the ideal burying ground and then going all the way back to fetch the bone, because the cat liked bones, too, and always got ther first—and even if the bone had still been there Long John wouldn't have been able to locat it, because he could smell only the smell-be fore-last. People laughed at Long John—unt they got to know him, and then they stoppe laughing, because they discovered he had wha Nicholas called an unusual personality. Wha dog, except Long John, would get hold of a the things belonging to a visitor he didn't car for, and carry them and put them outside th front door, just as a hint? What other do could sing duets, or chase two separate rabbi in two separate directions—both at once What other dog, if it came to that, ever looke like Long John? A sheep-dog coat, a bul terrier chest, a noble great-Dane head and long, bushy banner of a tail waving behind.

Long John. Did dogs forget, in a year Would he remember, after so long at M Hewett's farm, which was his real and whic was his temporary home? Would he under stand that Simon had wanted, so desperately to bring him here, and couldn't?

If Lucille was going to sell the house, wer he and Dominic to live here, with their aun and uncle, forever and ever? And Julia—Juli didn't really have any home. It had been a ranged that she would spend her Christma holidays with Roselle in London and her sum mer holidays here in this house—but the sum mer holidays would begin in three weeks an the room which, last year, had been Julia's wa now the nursery and the baby was in it. Sure Lucille knew? Didn't she understand? But she was going to be married and live in Corn wall —— People, Simon remembered with stab of fear, people didn't as a rule cart alon their whole family when they got married. An if there still wasn't enough money to live a home ——

Money! It all came back to money. The father had once had some money, but it had a got spent. His mother had had some money quite a lot of money, Lucille said, but it was a in what they called a trust, and when she die it went to her sister, Aunt Mary, and that wa why Aunt Mary had offered to have Domin and himself to live with her. But Lucille hadn said it would be forever!

A rush of nausea shook Simon and h turned to Dominic.

"I'm going down," he said.

"No," said Dominic, "wait. You haven said anything."

"Yes, I have. I've told you what Lucil said."

"Well, I don't care what Lucille said."

Dominic's voice had the calm matter-o factness that Simon so envied. Dominic nev wasted a thought on anybody else's point view; he stated his own, and if anybody di agreed with him, he assumed that he had n been heard properly, and said it all ov again. He was not, now, being defiant: he r ally didn't care what Lucille said; Lucille w free to say anything she liked, but he, Dom nic, was going to have his say too.

"Lucille's our guardian," Simon pointed ou "If she says anything has to happen, then has to be."

"Rot," said Dominic firmly. "It isn't all h house—it's our house too. She told me once. And she can't do anything on her ow without asking us."

"Yes, she can. We're minors."

"We're what?"

"We're sort of too young, and we don have a say."

"Oh, don't we?" inquired Dominic. "We I do. And I'm going to say I want to go hom She said we'd come here for a year, and t year's up; all right, we go home—see?"

"Don't be silly."

"What's silly?" asked Dominic in genui surprise. "She won't know what we wa unless we tell her, will she? How does s know we want to go home unless we tell her

"But she says the sale's practically ar ranged."

"What sale?"

"I've told you—the sale of the house. A you have to do is sign some papers, and th people buy it and pay for it, and then it'll theirs."

The steady patience, and some other qu ity—something of desperation—in his vo rought Dominic's gaze round to rest on him nce more, and this time the gray eyes were ool and calculating. "How much have you ot in your purse?"

"My purse? What's my purse got to do ith it?"

"Well, how much have you got?"

"I think one pound six . . . no, seven illings."

"How much have I got in my money box?"

"About two pounds, last time you asked e to look."

"Is that enough—two pounds and one ound seven—to get home on?"

"Home on?" Simon could only echo the ords stupidly.

"What's it cost to go from here to there in train?"

"Don't be silly," said Simon, with what for m was sharpness. "We'd never be allowed."

"Of course not," agreed Dominic calmly, ut they'd never know. I mean, not till we'd one."

"If you tried to do anything like that, why, l they'd have to do would be to ring up l the stations we stopped at from here to ondon, and they'd get us out of the train and nd us back."

"No, they wouldn't. We're not like Uncle om's Cabin. We'll just go, and we'll leave a tter on the hall table and say not to worry, nd Lucille'll ring up when we get home and ll them we're there with her, and then it'll e all right and we can talk to her and tell her out not selling the house to any other eople."

It was spoken with such confidence, such rtainty, that Simon could find nothing to y. And in any case, this was not the moment r stopping to wonder what their aunt and ncle might think; it was only necessary to onsider what would happen if he and ominic didn't go home. Lucille would act, nd their home would be sold and life—real fe—would be over. No! This wasn't the time shilly-shally. Dominic had the right idea, which was to get there. If they waited, it would be too late.

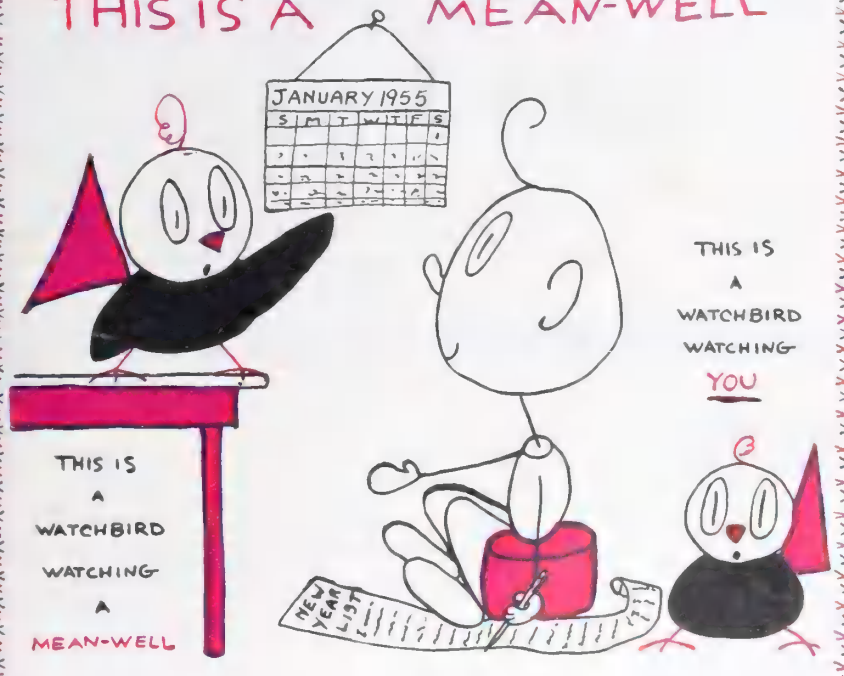
"We could take our lunch with us and eat it in the bus on the way to Shrewsbury to catch a train," said Dominic.

From Shrewsbury, they could get a train to London. They could cross London and catch a train to Greenhurst—they had done the journey up here and all they had to do was reverse the order. Greenhurst—they would be four miles from home when they reached the familiar little station. And from Greenhurst they could walk.

It was breath-takingly bold. It was revolutionary. It was the first step in lawlessness. . . . But it would lead them home.

"Well, are you coming?" asked Dominic.

Simon stared out through the branches, over the trees in the neighboring gardens and to a far-distant point on the sky line. A huge, shaggy head and—at the other end—a banner waving.



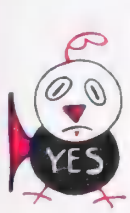
"Come on," he said. "Careful; I'll go down first."

Julia read the letter at the end of a compulsory cricket practice which she had found—as she found all games—very boring. Saturday was, on the whole, she considered, a gruesome day. Laundry-sorting day, cricket-practice day, long-walk day, letter-writing and choir-practice day. Gruesome, all of it.

Life, on the whole, was terrible, and if one couldn't get away from it and read, and read, and read —— Oh, well, now there was Lucille's letter to read.

Long, long after she had got to the last scrawled line, she looked up and found, to her surprise, that the fat Belinda Grant, who had brought the letter all the way out to the games field, was still standing beside her. She stared for a moment, and then realized that Belinda hadn't, after all, been there very long. It had been only a few moments, but they had been long enough for her to go home and back.

THIS IS A MEAN-WELL



By MUNRO LEAF

Here you see a Watchbird on New Year's Day talking things over with a Mean-Well. This Mean-Well has made a long list of things that it has promised to do in this New Year and it really means to do them—like brush its teeth regularly, wash its hands before eating what it should, go to bed and get up when it should, to be helpful around the house, and lots of things that would make living with it a pleasant and a happy time —— there are two kinds of Mean-Wells—those that do what they mean to and those that don't. Which are you going to be for 1955?

BUT

WERE YOU A MEAN-WELL THIS MONTH?

Now break the grip of

RHEUMATIC PAIN

A fine Bristol-Myers product

CONTAINS 3 PAIN-RELIEVING INGREDIENTS USED BY DOCTORS . . . PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

When nagging pain of rheumatism makes you miserable . . . get fast, deep-down relief with new, greaseless Minit-Rub!

New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with skin-soothing lanolin—in a special vanishing cream base. So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn your skin—yet its penetrating heat sensation relieves pain even deep-down.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains—as a chest rub for cold miseries, too. All drug counters, 39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

NO MORE LINT!
NO MORE CLINGING!

When your dry cleaner uses amazing new... Buckeye Clean-charge* for brighter cleaner clothes insist on Lint-free Cling-free cleaning completely safe and effective on all fabrics and on all colors

Your cleaner is your clothes' best friend

It's new . . . a miracle process! Now all fabrics . . . from dark, soft finished woolens to new synthetic "man-made fibres" . . . can be dry cleaned through the Buckeye Clean-Charge* process with this amazing result: the fabric actually repels lint . . . even minute lint and dirt particles. The fibres themselves are cleaner, and stay cleaner . . . colors and patterns remain bright and fresh looking longer. Fabrics are re-textured and troublesome "clinging" static is removed. The Buckeye Clean-Charge* process has been tested and approved by leading independent laboratories. Send your dry cleaning to the progressive cleaner in your community who features Lint-free Cling-free cleaning!

ask for LINT-FREE, CLING-FREE cleaning!

* patent applied for: product and process

THE DAVIES-YOUNG SOAP COMPANY • DAYTON, OHIO

"Is that your sister's letter?" asked Belinda, whose ruling passion was a desire to find out all about everybody.

"Yes."

"What's she say?"

"You mind your own business," requested Julia fiercely.

Belinda's eyes opened wide in surprise. Julia Wayne was credited with a great many faults, but—in spite of her red hair—bad temper was not among them.

"Come on," said Belinda, "they've put out the milk and biscuits."

"You go. I don't want any."

Belinda went, wondering, as she did so, why she called Julia her best friend. She glanced back: Julia was still standing where she had left her, staring into space. She might say that her sister had said nothing, but it was ten to one she'd written her a few hard words on how many bad marks she'd got last month for reading—not reading in class, or reading the proper schoolbooks, but for reading in bed, in chapel, or under her desk during the French lessons. Julia wasn't the boasting type—one had to give her that—but she did rather harp on the three hundred and what-was-it books she had at home up in the attic. She'd never thrown a single book away in her whole life, not even her baby books; some of them even had teeth marks on them. Julia played games only when they were compulsory, like cricket. The rest of the time, she just read. Julia wasn't pretty, but she wasn't like anybody else. That was one reason why it was nice to take her home every fourth Saturday, when they were allowed to sleep at home for two nights.

Eleven o'clock: milk and biscuits. She might as well take two shares and say she'd take one lot to Julia.

It was just like that interfering poke-nose of a Sister Ignatius to go by just as she'd started on the second lot of biscuits. Oh, well ——

"Why didn't you take them to Julia?"

"Well, I did ask, sister, but she said she wasn't hungry."

"Send her to me, please."

Julia, summoned, ate her midmorning refreshment meekly. This school was always stuffing things down you, like pigs to market. And asking silly questions.

"Did you have a letter from Lucille this morning?"

"Yes, sister."

"I hope everything is all right."

"Yes, thank you, sister."

"Is there any special news?"

No monkey ever looked blanker. "No, sister."

Sister Ignatius sighed, and decided that it was no use. Julia Wayne led a life of her own and it was not the life of the school. There was a lot in Julia, if one could find out where it was and what it was, but she was—as her sister, Lucille, had expressed it, crudely but vividly, in one of her letters to mother superior—not so much a cog in the wheel as a spanner in the works. It was a pity, but she did not seem to fit in here. Julia appeared to be well, and as it was impossible to find out for certain, one could only hope that she was happy. Belinda's parents liked her and frequently invited her down for the month-end visit; perhaps this afternoon, when the big car took the two girls off, Julia would get her color back and forget whatever it was in her sister's letter that had given her that curious look in her eyes.

JULIA always enjoyed the drive: Belinda's parents sent a car and a chauffeur; and the journey, apart from Belinda's too-often-heard voice, was full of the peace and quietness that Julia loved. Belinda saw that her friend's irritation of the morning had gone; Julia was as calm as usual, and only a little more preoccupied, staring through the glass partition at the chauffeur's back.

Roselle wouldn't care and Lucille wouldn't care, and she didn't know about Nicholas, but Simon and Dominic—Simon would be feeling sick right down in the pit of his stomach, reading the letter. But what could Simon do? Who listened to them at their age? Nobody'd listen . . . but if they knew that for the whole of the past year she'd just been waiting, that was all, for the year to end, so she could look forward to going home for the holidays—home, instead of —— But if she had to do it forever? Oh, please, God, please, God, please, God, I know I only pray properly when I want something, but I swear, I swear I'll try and do something in return—if You'll just stop them from selling the house. Don't let Lucille sell our home, please, God, please! Perhaps if You could make something happen to any of the people who want to buy it, whoever they are—if You could smite them, just so that there could be time to stop Lucille —— Please, God ——

"What did you say?" Belinda's question brought Julia back with a sickening jolt.

"I didn't say anything."

"Yes, you did. You muttered something. Isn't it funny, I thought you said G-o-d."

"What would I say God for?"

"Hush! If Morley hears you, he'll think you're swearing."

"I might be praying."

"You wouldn't be praying in the middle of the afternoon like this. . . . Oh, Julia, you forgot to ask him to slow down at the Greenhurst crossroads."

"No. It doesn't matter."

She hadn't forgotten. She always leaned forward and tapped on the glass, and they went very slowly, slowly past the road that cut across this one and led —— Well, she couldn't have borne it. Not today. And anyway, it was a long, long way. Even from here, it was a long way—and from Belinda's house, it was . . . . well, it was miles and miles and miles. If she could stop the car now and get out —— But she hadn't much money with her; not enough for a train fare. She could pay for a bus for part of the way. If she got as far as Penley's farm, she could make Doreen Penley lend her her bicycle. But if she was seen in her school coat and hat, so far from the school, people would notice.

She could borrow a coat and a skirt from Belinda and hitch it up a bit here and there—then she could get home without attracting attention on the way. If she could get home tonight and stay with Lucille for just one night and come back the next day, Belinda's mother needn't tell the nuns anything. If she could only talk to Lucille . . . if she could only explain that home was a place where you kept your things and that your things were your life and that being parked with people for holidays, just with two suitcases, was the same as being cut in half and never being able to join up with your other piece. Up in the attic were all their treasures and it was no use Lucille saying, "Tell me what you'd like to keep." If one hadn't wanted to keep them all, they wouldn't be up in the attic, would they, waiting until one could get at them again? Books—great, heavy books, hundreds of them. Whole sets of them. The whole Swallow and Amazon set; the whole Doolittle set; all the Pollyannas; the Katy ones and the Little Women ones; four different Robinson Crusoes and two Wind in the Willows; all the Musketeers. Huge big books of Arthur and his knights, and a book on horses and four volumes of Shakespeare, as new as on the day she got them.

And it wasn't only herself she was thinking of. She wasn't the only one who had treasures. . . . There was the wonderful, the great, spacious, strong, livable-in tree house that was Dominic's retreat. And Long John. Oh, Simon, Simon, don't mind too much! I'll go and see Lucille, I swear I will. You can't go, Simon, but I can. I'll go; I'll make Lucille see that home is home and that people ought to have one —— "Belinda ——"

"What?"

"Belinda, when we get to your house, may I borrow some clothes and wear them? I'm tired of school clothes."

She had only to stay behind when Belinda and her mother drove out to fetch Belinda's father. She had only to slip out when they had gone, and telephone back to the house and leave a message: Miss Julia Wayne had been summoned home by her sister and would return the following day.

The bus on the first part of the journey cost one and eightpence; that left her two and fourpence, which wasn't enough to get her to Penley's farm, but she could walk.

Miss Stocker—thirtyish, fat, immovably placid and the firm's only other employee—glanced up from her deadly accurate typing, noted the tearstains and wondered, by no means for the first time, why people with nothing to cry about did so much of it. "Don't cry; try," her mother had said, and it was good advice. Somebody ought to have told this Roselle Wayne that; look at her now, hanging up her coat and dropping tears all over it.

"Hey, stop that, young Roselle," requested Miss Stocker, not unkindly. "Tears don't melt troubles. What's gone wrong?" This time, she added to herself.

Roselle glanced fearfully toward the door marked "Private."

"He's not here," said Miss Stocker. "He was at the dogs last night, and if he backed what he said he was going to back, then he lost his pants. He'll come in looking surly and then we'll have to watch how we go. What's gone wrong?"

Roselle made no answer; she was wiping her eyes and taking a grip on herself with a resolution born of her fear of Mr. Newbery, her employer. If he came in before Roselle had finished her letters and laid them on his desk —— Feeling as she did this morning, sarcasm from Mr. Newbery would be more than she could bear. She sat down, opened the incomprehensible series of squiggles she had put down at his dictation and stared at them hopelessly. Miss Stocker sat on the edge of her own desk and regarded her colleague with a puzzled frown.

"Look, Roselle," she said slowly, "what I can't make out is why—if you hate it all so much—why you ever came to London!"

Roselle raised a countenance upon which disillusionment, regret and fear were equally visible. "I didn't know it would be like this!" she said. "I thought ——"

She walked to the window to recover herself, and stared down at the traffic swirling round Hyde Park Corner. Here she had stood a year ago, on her first day in the office, and had felt an uprush of excitement and joyous anticipation. London—at her feet. Well, there it was, still at her feet. She hadn't known before she came to London how noisy a big city could be; now it was a buzz and jangle in her head, day and night. There was no peace, no space, no time, no kindness, no understanding of lonely, green girls who came from the country. If she had been able to get home—out of London—at weekends, things might have been better. Sometimes she had thought, lately, of going down and staying with the Milwards at Greenhurst, but they—and everybody else in Greenhurst—thought she was a successful business girl in London, and she wouldn't have been able to pretend. And now . . . since Lucille's letter had come this morning, she knew fully, for the first time, how much she had missed home, and how much she regretted ever leaving it.

HOME! Was she to live forever and ever in that drab, cheerless room? Even that was more than she could afford. Her salary came in a little envelope every Friday morning, and it melted away by Tuesday morning, and left her with nothing. If she lost this job and couldn't get another—and there was no home to fly to —— She hadn't liked housework much before, because she had preferred to think of herself as a business girl—but now! Oh, anybody could have that dreary room and this dreary, dreary job and this cruel, terrible city. All she wanted was to go home and never never never leave it again. And Jeff was there—Jeff, who had loved her ——

"Don't cry, poppet," came Miss Stocker's comforting voice. "I don't know who had charge of you, but someone should have told you long ago that your type isn't made for rough wear. Why don't you take my advice, Roselle, and pop off back to where you came from?"

"I c-can't. My sister wrote. I got a letter from her this morning to say she's going to—to get married."

"Well, sisters do get married, you know. It's bound to come later if it doesn't come now."

"It—it isn't that. She says she's going to live in Cornwall and s-sell the house."

"Sell the house? Your house?"

"Yes. She's made up her mind, and it's all practically s-settled. The people who were tenants have gone away and Lucille says she's put the house up for sale."

"Why all this Lucille says and Lucille does?" asked Miss Stocker, with a touch of irritation. "Does she have the only say-so?"

"Well, yes. You see, she's the—the sort of head of the family. Ever since my father died, Lucille's had to see to everything—even things like money, and choosing schools, all the things that parents usually do."

"Look, Roselle, why don't you go back and have a nice talk with that sister of yours and see if you can't get her to have another think about selling the house? Why don't you have a shot at ——"

"Oh, Miss Stocker, I'd do anything, anything, anything!"

"But that's only talking—that's not doing."

"It's too late." Roselle's tone was one of sheer desolation. "It's too late. Lucille said she was going to be at home today, to see about everything—all the final details. I'd have to go at once."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 90

TWELFTH NIGHT, THE CASTLE

By ELIZABETH HENLEY

Love, for all nights, this one
Bank well hearth fire!
The frozen grasses stand so sere
In yard and cart track's mire,
And on the flagstones blows
Forlorn our Christmas tree
Awaiting dawn's snow sparrow,
The winter chickadee,
To hang its boughs with their small notes
And search its last stale cake,
And know by token tinsel
How much our hearts forsake.

Carol and masque and pageant
Go down with guttered candles—
And now on upper hall and stair
There patter silken sandals:
Grandmother ghosts, as little girls
Of long ago, have bidden
The children in the chambers
Of next September hidden
To watch our house, its revels,
While bay and holly burn,
Then with a brace of candles each
To cheerless room return

Like sparks blown out from chimney
Which in dark mirror glimmer
From gilt and glass, from hall to hall,
Grown ever lighter, dimmer.

So near are we to death,
Love only will remain—
Fear sings with icy breath
On midnight-waltz refrain.
This night of brilliant planets
And robin's whirling flight,
Make safe our house for this new year,
God give us all good night!

He looks to you for safe, "tender-skin" care

Love him—comfort him—give him your wisest care

His thinner baby skin really needs this softer tissue

e trusts himself to your love—and to your actical care, too. You watch daily over his by needs to guard him from the smallest urt."

One way you can add to your baby's daily mfort is by choosing a bathroom tissue that gently soft. The new ScotTissue gives his inner skin safe, gentle care. Yet it is strong d absorbent for quick, neat cleansing.

Get several rolls next time you shop. The g 1,000-sheet roll goes further, is your wisest y for the whole family. Another great ott value.

"ScotTissue," Reg. U.S. Pat. Off

You're careful to keep his shirts fluffy-clean and soft. Be sure his bathroom tissue meets his special "tender skin" needs too. The new ScotTissue is softer than ever. Yet it is strong to prevent tearing and shredding

1000 SHEETS—OVER ½ MORE THAN THE 650 SHEETS YOU GET FROM MOST OTHER TISSUES

Softer than ever

ROLLS OF SCOTTISSUE EQUAL MORE THAN 3 ROLLS OF MOST OTHER TISSUES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 88

"Well, then, go at once," urged Miss Stocker.

"I c-can't. If I left here, I'd have to give a week's notice."

"Who said so?"

"Mr. Newbery said so, when he engaged me."

"You wouldn't have to give any notice—not if you didn't take your pay. That's what's called giving a week's salary in lieu of notice. You could—well, here he comes. Now look, don't go and get upset."

Mr. Newbery strode through to his sanctum without pausing to extend the courtesy of a morning greeting. A moment later he walked to Roselle's desk and threw onto it her letters of the previous day.

"Those can be done again—with corrections," he said acidly. "And if it's all the same to you, Miss Wayne, Fiji is not spelled with four e's."

The door crashed; Roselle's tears flowed afresh. Some time later, Mr. Newbery came in and dropped an envelope on each of their desks, his expression indicating clearly that the contents were twice as much as either of them was worth.

Roselle's soft lips set into a firm line. She pushed a sheet of paper into her typewriter and typed two lines on it. Drawing it out with a jerk, she put it, and with it her pay envelope, into a larger envelope, and addressed the latter to her employer. Rising, she dropped the package on Miss Stocker's desk and then walked to the peg on which her coat hung.

She got to the door before her movements showed any sign of hesitation, and then, as she seemed to pause, Miss Stocker sprang into action. Without speaking a word, she managed, in urgent pantomime, to convey clearly that it was as well to get going while the going was good, that Roselle had all her good wishes, that she would like to see her again, sometime, somewhere; and yes, the notice was quite all right and she'd retype it, because lieu wasn't spelt with a w, but quick was the word and sharp the motion, and go on, go on, before the old hippopotamus came out.

Roselle darted swiftly across the room to drop a light kiss on her friend's hard brown cheek. Then she was gone.

Good timing, Nicholas thought, and went on with his packing. A fellow got out of the army after his two-year term, and just as he was making for home his sister said, "Hold it; there's no home: we're selling." Well, she'd have to think again. A nice girl, Lucille, but uppish; and though, two years ago, even one year ago, he might have been regarded as too young to have a say in family affairs, he was now twenty-one, and he knew what he wanted—and what he wanted most of all, now, was a home. The tenants were out; good. He would see to it that nobody else got in. Except themselves, that is. Newest fiction: The Return of the Waynes. Watch the bookstalls.

Home; well, it was no use wasting time conjecturing—the thing was to get hold of some form of transport and get going.

He shook his money out of his newly acquired tobacco pouch. Sixty-seven pounds, eight shillings and the odd pence. He oughtn't to have bought that trumpet off that fellow—but it was a bargain, and he couldn't regret it. He took it out of its case and played a few passages. Lovely! Oh, lovely! No, he couldn't regret it.

WELL, he ought to be able to pick up one of those broken-down little cars he'd been nosing round inspecting lately; if it held up long enough to get him home, he'd tinker it up and make it as good as new. He mightn't be a bright boy in lots of ways, but (a) he could play a trumpet, and (b) he knew an engine when he saw one. He'd go out to that fellow in Chiswick and see how much he'd knock off that little scarlet number.

Nicholas went to Chiswick and entered the vast garage in which, in a far corner, reposed the scarlet number. While he was looking at it, he was joined by a smooth-sounding salesman who introduced himself as Mr. Druce, entirely at his client's service.

Nicholas emerged forty minutes later with eighteen shillings and some odd pence in his pocket, the owner of a motorcycle and sidecar. It was not until the money had been counted out and checked in the office that Nicholas remembered that even if he had wanted a motor bike, he had no use, or no liking and no desire, for a sidecar. But here it was; he'd got it. Well, it was transport. He wheeled it into the road, kicked it to life and started on his journey.

Lucille might be the eldest, but he was the man of the family, and from now on he was going to have a say in their affairs.

From Shrewsbury, the journey had been uneventful—there had, that is to say, been no alarm, no pursuit. It was a shock to discover when they had crossed London that they were just in time to meet, head-on, the rush of workers leaving the city and bound for weekends in the country.

They stepped from their bus in the station yard straight into a seething, struggling mass of humanity and Simon, keeping a desperate hold on Dominic, fought and battled against the tide.

When they found the right platform, however, he saw that if they got through the crowd and onto the train at all, it would be a miracle. Hundreds—thousands of people, it seemed to him—were jostling, struggling, fighting their way on.

"Look," he said, "you stay close by me and when I say push, you push."

Suddenly there was a parting of the crowd in front of them, and Simon pushed Dominic into the opening. The next moment the crowd had closed inexorably and he found that Dominic had been jerked from his clasp and was being taken irresistibly toward the train, while he himself was being forced back; with a sick feeling of disaster, he realized that Dominic was lost in that cruel mass of humanity—Dominic ——

And then he saw him. He vanished again and then his face—anxious, searching—appeared at a window. Dominic was on the train and Simon couldn't get through to him—and perhaps he would be frightened and try to get out and ——

When Dwight Morrow was asked the secret of his success in dealing with others, he replied, "I never judge anyone until I discover what he would like to be as well as what he is."

Dizzy with fear, Simon moved backward in the hope of isolating himself from the crowd and becoming visible to his brother. If Dominic could see him—if he could signal to him to go on, if he could make him understand that he would come on the next train ——

But he was too small. He couldn't see over all those heads. He shouldn't have come; he shouldn't have left Aunt Mary's and come on this terrible, this ill-fated journey. He had been responsible for Dominic, and he had failed him.

A great sob shook Simon. Straining on tiptoe, craning his neck, he wept openly, and a man passing on his way to the exit stopped to look at him. After a moment, he put a hand on Simon's shoulder.

"What's the matter?"

Simon glanced up. He saw a tall, broad man—a man who gave the impression of strength and dependability, a man with firm lips and kind eyes, and a sympathetic look.

He dashed the tears from his eyes. "It's Dominic—it's my brother. We got separated and he's littler than me and I was in charge of him and ——"

"Where is he?"

"He got on the train—he's there, but he can't see me, and he'll go in a minute and ——"

The man lifted Simon and swung him with the greatest of ease onto his shoulder.

"There—oh, there!" Simon called. "Dominic! Dominic!"

Simon, from his magnificent grandstand, waved frantically; from the window, Dominic saw him and raised a hand in response. Simon pointed in the direction—he hoped—of Greenhurst. Dominic nodded and smiled—and then the train drew out and took him away, alone.

The man lifted Simon down and stood looking at him. "Well, there you are," he said. "All you needed was a bit more height. Where were you bound for?"

"Greenhurst."

"That's in Hampshire, isn't it?"

"Yes. Thank you for helping me," said Simon. "I'll wait for the next train and perhaps it won't be so crowded."

The man studied the small, white, tired face. "Have you come far?" he asked.

"We came from near Shrewsbury—first we took a bus and then we got a train. We—we're going home because"—a tear forced its way out and Simon ignored it—"because we—we wanted to. But we didn't ask if we could come."

"That doesn't sound very sensible. Didn't ask whom?"

"My uncle and aunt. We live with them, but my sister was going to sell our house in Greenhurst and we—we came to tell her not to." It was a relief to tell someone—someone who looked so reliable.

"My name's Debrett—Robert Debrett." The man paused imperceptibly, as though expecting Simon to recognize it, but Simon gave no sign. "What's yours?"

"Simon Meredith Wayne. I'm eleven and Dominic's nine."

"Well, Simon, how about some tea?"

SIMON shook his head. "No, thank you very much," he said politely. "I feel rather sick in trains and so I don't like to eat much." He shifted his case and held out a small, grimy hand. "Good-by, sir, and thank you very much."

"Hold on now." Robert Debrett hesitated for a few seconds to examine the impulse, and then decided to give way to it. "There's no need to go on by train. I've got my car here; I'll run you down to Greenhurst."

"Oh ——" A flush of relief, of hope, crept into Simon's cheeks, and the look in his eyes made Robert Debrett ashamed of the few seconds' hesitation. "Could . . . I mean, if you're really going that way ——"

"I am," said Robert, who had been going to his flat in Knightsbridge. "But as we're driving, suppose we have some tea first; or I tell you what, we'll get out of town first and then choose a nice place out in the open—how's that?"

This wasn't, thought Simon, studying him gratefully, like talking to strangers, a thing he had been warned against. This was no stranger; this man had understood at once that Dominic was being carried off alone; this was a man nobody could call anything but good and kind.

"We'll go to Greenhurst and pick Dominic up at the station," said Robert, answering the scrutiny. "Then I'll drive you home and we'll explain to your parents how we got together."

"I haven't any parents, but ——"

"Well, I'll explain to your sister. Let's get going."

"This is a Rolls, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"I knew by that thing on the front. Nicholas taught us about cars."

"Nicholas?"

"He's my brother. He's been in the army, but I think he's out now."

"A sister and a brother—and Dominic."

"And Roselle—and Julia."

"Quite a family. Who's in charge—the uncle and aunt?"

"Oh, no! Lucille's the—the head of the family. But Lucille's going to get married and she wrote and said she wanted to sell the house, but our things are in it and ——"

Robert Debrett stole a glance at his young companion; a smile appeared on his lips, and a gleam of amusement and interest in his eyes.

"Yes? Your things were in it, and so ——"

Simon proceeded to tell him.

The road went on, and on, and on. It was a hot road, and dusty. Of the original two and fourpence, eightpence had gone on a milk shake in Lowdale; that left one and eight; Julia counted it for the third time. She would be able to buy something to eat at Penley's—if she ever got to Penley's. How many more miles? If only she had her gym shoes on—but these were her best strap shoes with the thin soles: at least, the soles had been thin, but now they had worn practically away. Once on Doreen Penley's bicycle, she would be able to put the miles behind her so easily, so effortlessly.

There was a bit of poetry—she didn't like poetry much, but she couldn't help thinking of that bit now:

Does the road wind uphill all the way?
Yes, to the very end.

ell, this one certainly seemed to. ot! If it was hotter than this in the ra, then she was sorry for the Saharians, s all; they could have it, camels and es and all.
hen Julia reached Penley's farm, it was arn that Doreen Penley was away from e—and she had taken her bicycle with e news was shattering. Julia saw Mrs.

ey looking at her curiously, and fought to ar unconcerned. Doreen was a friend, but Penley—she wasn't exactly an enemy, reflected, but she was by no means an If she got suspicious—if she rang up the ol ——
What are you doing out of school?" ind Mrs. Penley.
My sister's thinking of selling our house, we've got to go there and decide which ur things we'll keep and which will be " said Julia, with every appearance of uousness.
ere was nothing like the truth for conng people, she thought. Mrs. Penley d quite different; she'd been prepared lot of yarns, but she'd known all the about the house being sold.
Why didn't you
ome by train?"
I wasn't at ol; I was staying my friend Be-
It wasn't until on the bus to Lowdale that I hadn't got gh money with so I thought I come here and he rest of the ey on Doreen's nd send it back rrow by the r."
Well, you can't all that way;
better wait for Penley to finish
e hayfield and un you back in ar."
hank you, but ot a bit tired," Julia. If she d, she knew certainty that Penley would do some telephoning. She "Good-by, Mrs. Penley." ood-by. I'm sorry Doreen wasn't here." doesn't matter. Good-by."

went out into the yard and through the arm gates. She heard the kitchen door behind her, and then, with a swift rush, oubled back and went into the feed room.
ad remembered that Doreen's wasn't the bicycle on the farm; she had seen an-lying in a corner of the feed room—e, she had no idea, but it had looked doned. It was probably an old one of enley's. Yes—it was there, in the corner.
a examined it. It was old and rusty and plorable condition—but it had wheels, oted with deep thankfulness; she could her way home and rest her aching feet.
ould send the bike back tomorrow.
wheeled the machine outside and looked ously down the road. There was nobody
. The tires were flat, but there was no —and in any case, she could not stop it. The bike was too large; she found o pedal at all she must shift her hips side to side on the saddle; at this rate, hought grimly, she would get home ss—but she was off her feet.
ering a too large bike like this was lt—but she had only to stay on and keep ng and she would get home in time. It ot work; it was grueling work; but she get there. Nine, perhaps ten miles—it othing. Lots of people had been hun-than this, tireder than this, hotter than and they had kept on. She would keep . pedaling, pedaling . . . pedaling. The was long and bumpy, but there were no s along the route. She was safe from vation, from pursuit. The road was hers.

The road was not quite hers. Some miles ahead plodded a gentleman called Pietro Faccini.

Signor Faccini was on his way to America. His brother, Giuseppe, had sent him the fare—all the way from New York to the village of Costanza, near Genoa; all Pietro had to do, said Giuseppe, was to take the boat from Genoa to New York; there he would be met and given a job, given a home, given money.

It had been an alluring prospect, and Pietro had given his notice at once to the restaurant proprietor at Costanza. But he had not gone to Genoa. He had seen Genoa many times; he would not merely go to Genoa and get on a boat and see nothing but ocean—he would join his brother by a longer, more interesting route. He would see other places on the way—France, Switzerland, England; from England, he would get a boat that would take him to New York, and by then he would have become a much-traveled man of the world, a cosmopolitan, a man able to discourse—and how well he discoursed it was not for him to say—upon the capitals of Europe.

The money, unfortunately, had run out. Before he could board a ship, it was necessary to have passage money; to earn this, he had taken a job with the Venetian Brush Company—and he was marching along the highway in order to save his train fare, and he was presenting himself at front doors and taking off his new English hat with a flourish, before discoursing on the subject of brushes.

It might be the new clothes he wore that gave him his confidence—he could not say. Not that they were new clothes; they were second or third hand. They were too big here, too small there—but they were all of a piece; there were the elegantly striped jacket and waistcoat and the striped trousers of the same pattern; his shoes were of canvas—not clean and not even whole, but a man could not have everything—and the trousers were fortunately long enough to hide them.

Glancing back over his shoulder, Pietro saw that behind him, in the distance, was a little girl on a machine that looked to be too big and that wobbled dangerously. Pietro moved himself cautiously to the extreme edge of the road; he had no wish to find his new suit brushed by dusty bicycle wheels.

Behind him, Julia came on. She had fallen off twice, and her clothes were torn and disheveled. Her hat was gone, her elbows were showing through her sleeves, her face was tear-stained and mud-streaked and there was a buzzing in her ears. She had very little idea where she was—but this was the road and somewhere along it was home. She would come to it in time . . . perhaps.

She saw a figure ahead, and then it became two figures, both dim, both hazy. She steered for a point midway between the two figures, and plunged on.

Something hit Pietro straight between the shoulders and sent him flying. His suitcase went one way, his hat another; Pietro himself went into the ditch, and on top of him came a large bicycle.

"Mother of God," he said in his own language, "am I a cow that I should be ——" He stopped. Wet, filthy, dripping mud, he stared over the side of the ditch into a pair of frightened, streaming eyes.

"Oh," gasped Julia, "oh—are you hurt?"

Pietro said nothing, for suddenly his heart was too full for speech. He could only gaze at her, this thin little girl with the red stringy hair and the dirty face and the torn clothes, this exhausted-looking, this dreary little miss who—herself scratched, bleeding—could yet look at him and, forgetting herself and her troubles, cry out in concern for him, Pietro Faccini—could ask if he was hurt.

He scrambled out and held a muddy hand to help her up. "Me? Hurt? How can a toss into a ditch hurt me, a so-big fellow?" he asked in magnificent astonishment. "All that is for me is a little mud, yes? And I say to myself, how lucky for me that I had my bad clothes—that will not be spoil. A hot sun to dry them, and then a brush—see, I have a whole boxful of brushes."

The suitcase had burst open, and a good proportion of Pietro's stock in trade lay in the ditch.

"Oh," said Julia, "you were selling brushes and I've spoiled them!"

"You? No, no, no!" protested Pietro. "And nothing is spoiled—nothing. Now let me look and see if you have hurt your arm."

"It's nothing," said Julia, surveying a number of scratches and bruises. "That was the last time I fell off."

"You fell off before?"

"Yes; twice. The bike's too big, and I shouldn't have ridden it when the tires were flat, and the road was bad and they came off

NEXT MONTH

He saw some of the light die down in her and was ashamed; watched her going off and was sad, conscious of being wrong, unable to say so. . . .

But what could Jerome say? If he loves a woman, body and soul, and yet cannot trust her, what can any man say? What was it about Lisa which drew other men, and women, to her as surely as Jerome had been drawn? Guilty and uneasy, he learned to be on the

LOOK OUT FOR TIGERS

A new story

By NELIA GARDNER WHITE

complete in the February JOURNAL.

• Flowers express man's hope for everlasting peace. Their delicate beauty and fragrance shut out doubt and darkness by symbolizing the love we hold for those we've lost.

And, because we love, we grieve. But, because we have faith, we look forward to immortality. To our soul's unspoken question on these solemn occasions, flowers whisper comfortingly, "Hope!"

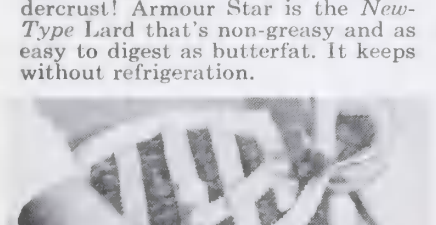
Because . . . like life . . . flowers flourish and fade. But there is something in their vital beauty that cannot wholly perish.

When you can't be there with those who grieve, Flowers-By-Wire carry your sympathy across the miles.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
Send Flowers Worldwide
INTERFLORA

LOOK FOR THE FAMOUS F.T.D. MERCURY EMBLEM. IT IDENTIFIES THE RIGHT SHOPS!

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan



New-Type Lard Makes My

Winter Fruit Pie with a Flakier Crust

—says Marie Gifford, Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

Make the crust for this heartwarming Winter Fruit Pie with New-Type Armour Star Lard and I promise you flakier results—even a stay-crisp undercrust! Armour Star is the New-Type Lard that's non-greasy and as easy to digest as butterfat. It keeps without refrigeration.

How to weave lattice top.

How to make fluted edge.

Use my easy 5-Minute Recipe for flaky-tender 2-crust pie. It's on every carton or tin of Armour Star New-Type Lard. Line 9-inch pie tin with half the dough, allowing ½″ overhang. Add the Winter Fruit filling. Dot with butter and top with lattice crust. Bake in 425° F. oven 25 to 30 minutes.

To Make the Lattice Top, cut remaining dough into ½″ strips. Weave diagonally across filling. Press edges and overhang together. Crimp edges high to keep filling from bubbling over.

Winter Fruit Pie Filling. Drain and combine 2 cups cooked dried Apricots with one 9-oz. can (¾ cup) crushed Pineapple. Combine ¾ cup sugar and 1 Tbsp. flour and toss with fruit until coated.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET:
32 new pie recipes and success hints. Write to:—Marie Gifford, Dept. 150, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago. An Armour Star Lard carton top will be appreciated.

The Modern New-Type Lard

Armour Star Lard

in the end and after that it—it wasn't very easy to ——"

Pietro, watching her throughout this speech, was appalled by what he saw. Questions rushed to his lips and he choked them back. Later; for the moment, it was enough to recognize that she—like himself—was being driven by necessity. She would not ride on a machine of that kind—so many miles—unless something compelled her. She was, perhaps, running away—but it was plain to see that she was almost at the end of her resources.

Pietro dragged the bicycle out of the ditch, handed it to Julia to steady and then stuffed brushes—clean, muddy or bent brushes—into his suitcase. He selected a clothes brush and, kneeling before Julia, dusted the worst of the dirt from her skirt. He borrowed her handkerchief and cleaned her cuts as best he could and then, ignoring his own lamentable state, flashed his beautiful white teeth at her in his enchanting smile.

"Now, my idea!" he said. "I am sick of carrying this box; if you will take him and sit on the bicycle, I will push you—and him."

"Oh—no! I'll walk," protested Julia. "You can't possibly ——"

"Oh, no, no, no, no! That will not do," said Pietro. "We have to push the bicycle and carry the box—yes? So we shall have two birds with one stick—one stone. Why shall we push this bicycle with no one upon it? I am too big, so you cannot push me; so you will sit up on it and I will push you. Now see how well we shall go."

Too tired to argue, grateful beyond words for the thought of progressing, even for a short distance, without having to use an effort, Julia, assisted by her new friend, sat perched sidesaddle, the suitcase balanced on the handle bars, while Pietro walked firmly behind her, pushing, guiding the bicycle. It was slow, but it was progress. It would take time, but they would get there.

"Are you going to Greenhurst?" she asked.

"Yes. Greenhurst. My what you call headquarters is there—my office. I go there to tell them the names of the ladies who wish to have brushes."

"Will you be able to get other ones for the ones that are spoiled?" she asked anxiously.

"Of course! If I ask, they will give me more," said Pietro, with a confidence he was far from feeling. But the future was the future; it had never worried him before and it would not worry him now. This little girl—this little miss—still she thought only of him and not of herself. It was extraordinary. She was well brought up, so much was plain; a scarecrow she may look now, but it was clear to see that she was of good family; he knew good family when he saw it—who should not, who had waited on them all his life?

Questions welled up in him, and went unvoiced. She was alone with him on this lonely road; she was too tired to care, but presently she would remember; if he asked questions about her—her name, her business—she would become alarmed. He must keep between them a distance—not physical, for that was impossible, with his shoulder against hers—but he would speak only of general matters. He would discourse.

Pietro discoursed—of Italy, of his native village, of his impending voyage to join his brother in New York.

But discoursing, under the circumstances, was killing work. As Pietro flagged, Julia revived, and so it came about that, mile by mile, he learned more and more of the reason for her being here on a too-large bicycle upon a too-long road. Listening, his heart rose within him, and he forgot his fatigue, forgot his ruined clothes and his ruined prospects, forgot the dusty road and the miles still before them. His body marched, but his spirit knelt—for this, he told himself, this was heroism. This thin child with the freckled face and the unkempt red hair—she was of the stuff that made heroes. Alone, she had set out to save her home. Alone, she was on her way to oppose fate; alone, she meant to battle, to stand up to this sister who so coldly, so heartlessly would throw away that most precious of all gifts—a home. This little creature—a one-woman crusade. Ah, it was magnificent! He, Pietro Faccini, would enroll himself on her side. He would say something to this sister. Only wait; her ears would burn. Before he went out of their lives, he would use his gift of discourse—he would place himself behind this brave, this incomparably courageous little miss, this Julia, this gallant little signorina.

There was only one other traveler in the carriage, but Miss Cornhill wished very much that the girl had not chosen this particular carriage to cry in. Crying in public was something so incredible, so inconceivable in a girl of such obviously good background—of what Miss Cornhill termed true breeding—that she came to the conclusion that she must have suffered a recent—a very recent—bereavement. Her not being in mourning was only another sign of the laxity of the times.

Miss Cornhill was an extremely neat person. She was neat in figure—even at forty-eight; she was neat in her person and neat in her habits. Her life had been a model of neatness. She had trained as a nurse—trim, starched, hygienic—and had then taken a post, first as junior, then as head matron in a famous school. She had retired at forty-five and now lived in a neat little boardinghouse in Bournemouth, and kept her tiny room a model of neatness. Life, she used to tell the children under her care, should be lived tidily, with quietness and self-control.

Roselle, observing the model of self-control sitting before her, wiped her eyes resolutely and looked out at the familiar scene. So near home—and the nearer she got to it, the more she dreaded what she would find when she reached it. Where could she, Roselle, find the money to run the house? Work was not enough; if they were to live there, they must eat; expenses must be incurred; bills must be paid. Perhaps Lucille was right, and living at Wood Mount was a dream that couldn't be realized. Perhaps they would never again live there—perhaps they would all have to go away and live forever with strangers.

Miss Cornhill, stealing a glance at her traveling companion, saw the tears start afresh, and noted other things: the girl was too thin. There was something about her, a look, which Miss Cornhill termed the London look—something out of a packet for breakfast, bolted down; a quick-lunch-counter meal in the middle of the day; no tea, and a boiled egg cooked on a gas ring for supper. She needed a sharp talking to—but Miss Cornhill was by no means disposed to administer it.

The time went by, and presently the train began to lose speed and she saw the girl get up and reach for her luggage. Miss Cornh rose quietly to help her down with the hea case, and as she did so saw that the girl's fa was deadly pale. A little uneasy, she let do the window and glanced at the tiny platfor coming into view.

"This doesn't look like a station," she o served.

"No, it isn't. Greenhurst station is a lit further on—this is Greenhurst Halt," e plained Roselle, "but it's nearer my home, a I can walk from here."

A little nearer—but there would still, s remembered with a sinking heart, be a go way to walk, and she felt . . . she felt ve giddy.

The train stopped; Miss Cornhill sat dow and watched Roselle alight. She was, she sa the only passenger to do so; the slight you figure had an oddly forlorn look on the d serted platform.

Then she saw Roselle sway, and her pr fessional instinct took her instantly out of t carriage and to Roselle's side. Her movemer were swift but unflustered; she knew qu well what she intended to do: she must le the girl to that bench over there and let h sit down and recover herself; there would n be time for more, for she would have to g back to her carriage.

But Miss Cornhill was unacquainted wi the train driver's notion of what a halt mea She reached the bench and made Roselle down; she did not wait for thanks, but turn to board the train once more—and saw th it was in motion. With it, she realized with feeling of hopelessness, went her luggage and her handbag. She was left here, pennile at a halt at which it was not likely that ma trains would stop.

The porter, appearing at length, confirm her fears: no train would stop here before t next morning. Miss Cornhill went over Roselle and sat on the bench beside her.

"Are you feeling better?"

"Yes, thank you. I'm terribly sorry—I thi I made you lose your train."

"Never mind," said Miss Cornhill wi composure. "I shall take the bus to Gree hurst and get another train there. The or thing is"—she hesitated and a spot of col appeared on her cheeks—"it will be necessa for me to borrow a little money from you. you will give me your address, I shall kn where to return the loan."

"Oh"—Roselle's wide blue eyes open wider with distress—"I—I have very lit money with me."

"I gave Maxwell a complete workshop for Christmas. So far he's used it to unscrew a stuck jar top."

am not asking for a large sum," Miss nhill said frostily. "A pound would be gh to get me home."

've only got two shillings and eightpence," Roselle, and produced a tiny purse and ed it in unhappy proof. "But if you ldn't mind coming home with me, my r would let you have the money."

oing to a stranger's house on such an nd was the last thing in the world she ed to do, but Miss Cornhill realized that e was no other course open to her.

Shall we go?" she said.

ey would not, Miss Cornhill saw with f, be carrying the heavy suitcase; this was e left with the porter for collection, the said, by the local carrier. With the small they set out along the little lane that led e main road.

My name is Cornhill—Miss Cornhill," she as they walked.

Mine is Roselle Wayne."

ow do you do? This is a nice part of the try, I think," said Miss Cornhill. "I once ed through ——"

e stopped. They had reached the end of ane; they were on the main road, which ched wide and empty to right and left of . No, not empty; a motor bike and sidecar d be seen in the distance.

ey walked on and suddenly, behind them, heard the horn of the motor bike sound, go on sounding. It was a dreadful noise—raucous; but there was an urgency about ignal that this girl appeared to recognize. Cornhill saw her turn, and pause, and ; and then suddenly she had given a cry, she was running—running toward the r bike with tears pouring down her face. rhaps, thought Miss Cornhill, hopefully, aps this young man would have a pound vo —— cholas had stopped beside them; he had d Roselle's hands in his and was babbling ring of questions, and listening to an herent and tearful account of how she to be here. He looked at her with a t sense of shame at having felt, some-s, that she lacked spunk. Spunk? She was f it! Walked out on her job, thrown her y back in her boss' face, hopped a train come home to stand up to Lucille.

e acknowledged, somewhat absently, the duction to her companion. Cornhill; how u do. He listened to her short and concise mary of the situation.

And so," she ended, "if you will very ly advance me a pound or two, I shall go ght on to Greenhurst station."

cholas dived instinctively for his money, then stopped short and colored deeply. terribly sorry," he said. "I—you see, I ght this bike today, and it cleaned me out. ook—you just pop into that sidecar and Roselle, can sit behind me and ride n. We'll be home in a couple of seconds, we'll prize the dough out of Lucille."

iss Cornhill sat with as much dignity as ble in the little seat; Roselle perched her-behind Nicholas and clasped his waist. Cornhill, clutching her hat, glanced at lle, and saw her smiling lips and trans-ed face—and then the sidecar went a canter and her thoughts became fixed y upon the subject of self-preservation.

ominic's train did not stop at the halt; it drew up at Greenhurst Station, he got and, forgetful of the fact that Simon had ed the tickets, fished in his pocket at the er; finding nothing, he was about to ex-matters to his old friend the ticket ctor, when he heard his name called, and ed up to see Simon coming toward him. Were you all right?" asked Simon.

Yes. A lady gave me some tea. How did come?"

Mr. Debrett brought me in his car." n looked up, and Robert Debrett looked n at Dominic.

Well," he said, "and so here we all are. s go home, shall we?"

e was anxious to witness the end of the r. They had left without permission, and ed without warning; this sister, Lucille, going to get a nice little surprise, and he ld like to be there when she got it; he would not judge unseen, but he had what he thought must be a fairly accurate mental picture of her—old for her years, probably, good-looking, if these youngsters were anything to go by, but lacking in imagination or enterprise. Marrying and clearing out. It would be an unhappy ending.

It was nothing to do with him—but he was going to take the boys home and deliver them safely; having handed them over, he was going to wait until Simon had said his piece; he had said it more than once on the way here, fearlessly and sensibly; if he faltered when facing Lucille, he, Robert Debrett, would put in his oar, would speak a few plain words before taking his departure—or being shown the door. Her ears would burn.

They went toward the car, and Dominic looked from Robert Debrett's face to the huge poster outside the station—and back to Robert.

"Oh," he said slowly, "that's you, isn't it?"

"Yes," admitted Robert.

It was a pity to be recognized now, he thought, for Simon had been unaware of his identity, and oblivious of the stares of the other customers at the café in which they had had tea. But Dominic, to his relief, appeared to have transferred his interest to the car. The three of them got into the front seat, and Dominic, sitting between the other two, volunteered to act as guide.

"Straight on," he directed, "till I say turn."

It was not spectacularly beautiful country, Robert thought, but it was nice and open—and quiet; remote. The town was not pretty, but it was pleasant; his passengers pointed out the shops they knew so well, and he saw the house agent's where somebody called Jeff worked with his father: Jeff, who seemed, from the artless remarks dropped by Simon on the way here, to be a particular friend of another sister named Roselle.

"There's our gate," said Dominic suddenly.

There was no sign of a house; it must be in those woods over there, thought Robert. Ahead was a wide gateway, and he was preparing to turn into it when it struck him that there was now an astonishing amount of traffic. A bicycle had just reached the gateway; a motor bike and sidecar was approaching noisily from the other direction. The scene, hitherto one of calm and order, changed without warning into a series of calamities. Dominic stared at the girl sitting on the bicycle and reared himself up with a loud yell: "Julia!" The girl, hurling herself off the bicycle, rushed at the car, waving her arms wildly. Swerving to avoid her, Robert found the motor bike bearing down on him and, as he wrenched the wheel over, he saw the machine part and become two separate entities, the motor bike continuing to come straight on and the sidecar performing a crazy solo all over the road. It was impossible, he saw, for him to stay on the road and avoid running into either the motor bike, its errant sidecar or the bicycle which a man was attempting to drag out of the way. He headed for the ditch, swung the wheel and took the dip as gently as he could; the car lurched, heaved and then sank slowly onto its side.

"You two all right?" asked Robert.

They were both on top of him, but nobody was hurt. Nicholas could be seen looking down at them, struggling with the door; he opened it, and pulled them out one by one, facing Robert at last with an expression of almost ludicrous penitence.

"I'm sorry," he said. "The blasted thing came in two."

"It's all right." Robert turned to run an eye over his car. "It won't do it much harm. How's everybody else?"

EVERYBODY but Miss Cornhill had come off without a scratch, but she was lying on the grassy bank onto which the sidecar had climbed before overturning and spilling her out. She was on her back, her face to the sky and her expression one of puzzled resignation. As Nicholas ran to her and knelt beside her, she moved her eyes, but seemed unable to turn her head toward him. White-faced, he spoke to her falteringly.

"Are you . . . how d'you feel?" he inquired.

"I . . . perhaps it's my back," said Miss Cornhill. "I—I don't seem able to—to move."

MONEY . . . in Your Spare Time
Write us for details and supplies.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
829 Independence Square Philadelphia 5, Penna.

MONEY IN VALENTINES
Send for Samples

Cash In On EVERY Occasion with MIDWEST Greeting Cards
Make bigger profits ALL YEAR. Show friends fast-selling Valentines, Easter, Mother's, Father's Day Cards, plus best Birthday, Get-Well assortments, etc. 6 new Valentine packs. Secret Pal Cards, unusual new ideas, exceptional bargains in Cards, Notes, Gifts, Gadgets, Personalized Stationery. Profits to 100% on big line. Samples on approval. Write.
Midwest Card Co., 1113 Washington Ave., Dept. P-5, St. Louis 1, Mo.

Copyright 1954 by Associated Blue Lake Green Bean Canners, Inc., Portland 4, Oregon

Nicholas looked at the circle of faces now looking down at Miss Cornhill, and his eyes met Robert's with an agonized question. Robert knelt beside him and passed a swift, exploring hand over her limbs.

"Try to sit up," he urged gently.

"I—I can't."

"Put a hand under her," Robert said, "and ease her up—slowly."

Nicholas slipped a hand gently under Miss Cornhill's back and encountered something hard. Groping, he found that it was the wind screen of the sidecar; tracing its outlines, he located half of it wedged firmly beneath Miss Cornhill's coat, the other half was caught in the thick hedge. Miss Cornhill's immobility was explained.

They got her up and Pietro dusted her down, using his finest brush. Nothing could be done to repair her torn coat or her split shoulder seams, and only time could remove the shame of feeling her hair hanging in wisps about her brow.

Nicholas led the company through the gateway and along the drive; Roselle walked beside him, Julia followed with Simon and Dominic, and the three new friends of the family formed the rear guard.

Miss Cornhill looked at the house with relief. She had not known quite what to expect; two of its members had been traveling with scarcely a penny to their name. But she could put away her misgivings; with its charming pillars, its graceful flight of steps, this house had something she recognized and saluted: trimness, neatness, grooming.

The door had opened and the newcomers had a momentary glimpse of Jeff beginning to take his leave of Lucille. Then Lucille's glance went past him and, putting him aside slowly, she came out onto the steps like a sleepwalker, her eyes staring down at the company assembled below. Her lips opened, but no sound came.

"Hello, Lucille—we're home," said Nicholas.

He went up the steps in two bounds, took her in his arms and kissed her lingeringly, and Robert Debrett, watching him, felt an unfamiliar sensation and examined it with some misgiving. For the first time in his spectacularly successful career, he was watching another man play a role he coveted.

The next few hours were busy ones for everybody. Fires had to be stoked to provide extra bath water; garments had to be shared out among those who needed them, food had to be prepared. There was no question of the visitors' going to other quarters; Miss Cornhill, though now able to borrow money, could not travel until her own clothes were repaired or others obtained for her. Pietro was fitted out in a suit belonging to Nicholas; Robert was still immaculate, but his car gave him the excuse he needed for staying, and he seized it firmly. He was in this thing—well in—and he was enjoying it. He would have to go soon—but not tonight.

In the meantime, they could all make themselves useful. Miss Cornhill would have liked to be upstairs seeing to the children's baths and clothes, but she felt that on this, their only night with Lucille, she should leave them together. She therefore turned her energies to providing supper, and found her way to the kitchen, to discover that Pietro was already there, peering distractedly into drawers and cupboards and assembling the results of his search on the kitchen table. He greeted Miss Cornhill with an exasperated wave of his arms.

"Here there is nothing," he said. "I tell myself that I shall make a good dinner for everybody, and where are the things to prepare? Look."

Miss Cornhill looked. On the table were three tins of baked beans, three tins of sardines, two loaves of bread, a packet of butter and a dozen eggs: Jeff's response to Lucille's request to him to lay in a few provisions for her use during her stay at Wood Mount.

"I plan a little thing—my little specialty," went on Pietro. "Terrine of duck—but where shall I get everything? I need so little, but it is not here. How I do it, I shall tell you: a duck—large, of course; the feet of a calf and some pork, and one or two things more—some red wine, some brandy, thyme, spice to mix, onions, garlic, shallots, some ——"

"You could put the beans on toast," suggested Miss Cornhill.

"Beans on —— But who will eat that?" Pietro shuddered.

"Or you could see," said Miss Cornhill, "if there were any potatoes in the garden and boil them and mash them up with the sardines—it makes them go a surprisingly long way. Or ——"

"Sardines . . . mashed with —— But no! How shall we eat that? You see me here," declared Pietro passionately, "ready to cook. For my little Miss Julia, a gâteau—yes! Gâteau Pêche d'Artagnan. With some ice and some ——"

"If you will try to be practical, Mr.—er ——"

"Pietro, Pietro, Pietro. But I must cook!" he declared. "And see, mees, how little is there to take for my use! Where is the store place here? Where is the ——"

"We weren't expected, and there's nothing to eat."

"But this—ah, yes!" Pietro's smile broke out like sunshine. "This young man, this Jeff—he will have to get food," he said. "I will find him."

Jeff was found and dispatched into Greenhurst; the shops would be closed, but he must beg or borrow, declared Pietro. Just some little things: a duck or some chickens; ham, pork, veal, wine, brandy, peaches; some tender young peas—very young, very tender; fresh shrimps or prawns for a little cocktail, perhaps—but above all, the peaches, ripe, luscious; for Mees Julia, nothing could be too good.

Jeff returned with more sardines and more beans; Nicholas had dug potatoes from the garden; Mrs. Milward sent butter and bacon and more eggs. Pietro set to work with spirits only momentarily dashed, and planned to raise the standard of living as soon as he could get a word with Lucille. Robert, whose object was, for the moment, to avoid Lucille, appointed himself Pietro's assistant, with the idea of keeping out of her way.

Lucille was upstairs with the children. She felt too dazed to think clearly about anything. She had spent the afternoon completing, with Jeff, the formalities necessary to the sale of the house; throughout their interview, he had shown clearly that he considered she was acting unwisely, but the criticism was wordless and she had ignored it. She was not doing this, she told herself hardily, because she wanted to, but because she believed it to be for the best—for all of them.

This unlooked-for development, this shattering, unexpected response to her letter, brought back all her doubts and uncertainties—but nothing could come of it, she decided, except a disagreeable interlude of argument and protest. None of them would have any feasible proposition to put forward; they wanted to keep the house, but they could not provide the money with which to do it. She dreaded the morning, when Nicholas would—she could see—present the case.

In the meantime, there was supper, and as she looked round the table she came to the conclusion that she was dreaming; they were not really here; it was something she had built up in her mind, the result of worrying too much over the house. But they looked real enough: Miss Cornhill, dignified in spite of torn seams; Robert Debrett, calm and—she couldn't help thinking—completely at home; Pietro, dancing into and out of the dining room bearing dishes which—from his reverent handling of them—might have contained caviar, but which turned out to be full of baked beans.

The telephone shrilled as they went into the hall, and Lucille went over to answer it. Some instinct drew Simon to her side; the others waited where they stood, frankly listening. Lucille, looking them over, saw that there was a quite unmistakable eve-of-battle look about them.

"Greenhurst two-four," said Lucille. "Yes. . . . Yes, Aunt Mary. . . . Yes, they are." A faint flush crept into her cheeks. "I was going to ring you up as soon as —— Yes, they —— I beg your pardon?" The flush deepened; the tone, from one of warmth and reassurance, had grown formal and chill. "Yes, certainly; you must do as you please. . . . Good-by."

She put down the receiver, her brows drawn in anger. There was a short silence, and then Simon was heard clearing his throat nervously. Dominic came over to join him, and Lucille looked down at them; it became clear that her anger was not directed against them.

Simon looked up at her. "I suppose that was Aunt Mary?"

"It was," said Lucille.

"Did she sound . . . cross?"

"Not at all," said Lucille calmly. "She sounded relieved."

"What for, relieved?" asked Dominic, puzzled.

"Because you're not going to live with her any more," said Lucille in the same even tone.

"You mean we can't go back there?" shrilled Dominic.

"Can we, Lucille?" asked Simon.

"You cannot."

"Oh." An expression of deep relief came into Simon's face. "Oh—jolly good."

"Oh, jolly hopping good," chanted Dominic. "I'm glad, and Simon is too—aren't you, Simon?"

Cheerful homemakers choose
PEQUOT PASTELS

"I chose candlelight, pink and green for my family circle."

The center of bedroom decor is the bed. Pequot colored sheets are a sound beginning to make each of your bedrooms have its own personality. Pink for the daughter—blue or green fitted sheets for the boy—candlelight for yourself and husband. Pequot colored sheets lend themselves to decorate the dressing table and make up into lovely matching drapes. Pequot pastels are the background of a cheerful, personality home. Choose them at your favorite store.

Pequot Mills

PEQUOT SHEETS

"All About Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic With Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets for every woman. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to: Dept. L-4, Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

on, glancing at Lucille's face, decided his was not the moment in which to s his satisfaction. He moved close to e and she took his hand and squeezed tionately. Lucille's eyes rested on them, e addressed Roselle.
hat happened to your job?" she asked.
ell, I wanted to give notice in any case," oselle. "I—I gave a week's notice in salary."
ce versa," prompted Jeff in an under-t I don't understand," said Lucille, you ——"

paused. The telephone bell had shrilled
This time she looked at Nicholas.
hink you'd better," she said.
holas lifted the receiver. "Yes? . . .
ng. . . . Yes, sister, she's here. . . . Yes,
But I can assure you that —— Yes,
. . . Yes, sister." He replaced the re-his face expressionless.
crept to his side. "Wasn't that ——" pped.
s, sister," said Nicholas.
. I mean, was she ——"
s, sister. You're expelled."
ok time to penetrate.
—what am I?"
u're expelled," repeated Nicholas.
e sacked. You've got the boot; the the air; the brush-off. Briefly, you're d."
four walls were insufficient to contain emotions. The others were at the front n their way out to the greater freedom garden; with a wild shriek, she rushed the procession, and walked out—on nds. The door closed on a vision of able bloomers.
lle, without speaking, walked into the g room, and after a moment Robert o the door and glanced at her expressly.
ll," he said, "you seem to have run me complications, don't you?"

ey are nice, no?" confided Pietro to later, as they washed the dishes toy nice."

d they are all so beautiful, no? All Miss Julia, I think—but she will grow t in some years."
doubt."
ke this family already. I feel one with here," said Pietro, the handle of a n spoon indicating his heart. "I am for my brothers and sisters all the time.
g family, how good it is, no?"
are say," said Robert.

lle was upstairs gathering more news
s she put the children to bed.
, Simon, didn't you say anything to ft a letter for Aunt Mary. I said we ere, and not to worry about us. I left e kitchen and I put a milk bottle on it wouldn't blow away."

—you could have written to me!" Luid.

we couldn't. We wanted to see you, nd so we came. But Dominic got car-way, and I couldn't see him"—Simon to stare at the horrid memory—"and
r. Debrett brought me here in his car."
you know who he was?"
. He was awfully nice, Lucille. He gave and two ices." There was a pause and Lucille ——"
the morning, Simon," she said hastily, new note in his voice. Tomorrow they argue it out—not tonight.

. But, Julia ——"
now you think I came because of my Lucille, but I didn't—not really. It was ohn."
ng John?"
new Simon wouldn't say anything, and on feeling bad about him. You said —you told us all it would only be a aid we'd try it for a year, Julia. You lways do what you want to do in this
——"
You have to ——"

"Even if we could understand, Long John wouldn't. Dogs don't forget. And then there was the tree house—how could anybody move a tree house?"

"We'll talk about it in the morning, Julia. Not now."

It was hardest of all to understand Roselle.

"You mean—you can't mean that you never liked it? You were so madly keen to go, Roselle—you wanted to live there and to work there."

"How can you know, until you go away, what it'll be like without a home? I didn't like to worry you because I knew you were just as worried about it all as I was—I knew that if you could have us all home again, you would. I didn't know you'd meet someone and ——"

"He knows all about you all and he's longing to meet you. My home will be your home too."

No answer. And no spark of enthusiasm, Lucille noted. This was all going to be more than she could cope with. A dull feeling of depression settled on her.

We do not feel that there is anything "foreign" about the words chipmunk, hominy, moose, raccoon, skunk, all of which we have borrowed from the American Indian. We are not conscious that the words brandy, cruller, golf, duck (light canvas), isinglass, measles, selvage, wagon, uproar are from Dutch. And so with many other words in daily use. From Italian came balcony, canto, duet, granite, opera, piano, umbrella, volcano; from Spanish, alligator, cargo, contraband, cork, hammock, mosquito, sherry, stampede, tornado, vanilla; from Greek, directly or indirectly, came acme, acrobat, anthology, barometer, catarrh, catastrophe, chronology, elastic, magic, tactics, tantalize, and a host of others; from Russian, steppe, droshky, ruble; from Persian, caravan, dervish, divan, khaki, mogul, shawl, sherbet, and ultimately from Persian, jessamine, paradise, check, chess, lemon, lilac, turban, borax, and possibly spinach.

—ALBERT C. BAUGH:
A History of the English Language
New York, Copyright 1935
(Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc.)

Her thanks to Miss Cornhill were cut politely, but firmly, short. Miss Cornhill was, in fact, far too busy to listen; there was work to be done and she was secretly amazed at the pleasure she was finding in doing it. Something within her that had been struggling for release had now welled up, and she knew that her two years of retirement had been rather dull ones. She was back to work—familiar work, congenial work; she was extraordinarily happy.

Lucille left her and went to seek out Pietro. Her speech of thanks to him was interrupted while he gave her a picturesque but distressingly detailed description of the state in which he had found Julia. Lucille listened and looked at his expressive hands, his large, flashing eyes and his thick black curls, and wondered once more whether she was dreaming.

Robert Debrett, after their brief encounter in the drawing room, was proving difficult to get hold of; if there were any reason for avoiding her, Lucille would have thought that he was doing so.

She found him at last in the kitchen, putting away the dishes; there was no sign of Pietro. This time her thanks were neither cut short nor snatched from her and returned with flowers; Robert merely listened attentively until she came to a faltering end.

"You mustn't thank me," he said at last. "I enjoyed it very much."

She looked at him; he was acting, she knew, but why would he act now—unless it was from force of habit?

"You can't have enjoyed having your car wrecked," she said with a flash of irritation.

He gave her what, with rising anger, she felt the film director would call a hooded glance.

"Your brothers," he told her quietly, "are charming. And very plucky."

His manner seemed to indicate that they were plucky to come home and face her. A sense of injustice rose in her and he saw for the first time what Mr. Milward had so often seen and deplored—the too-swift rise of her temper.

"They ran away," she said. "What's plucky about that?"

"Your letter was a challenge. They rose to it—beautifully."

"I think you've rushed to one or two unfortunate conclusions, Mr. Debrett," she said. "This thing has many sides and you've only seen one of them."

He turned to study her—a long, speculative look—and she felt her anger increasing. He saw her—of course he would, after spending those hours with Simon and Dominic—as the hard, selfish eldest sister throwing the home to the dogs and going off to find happiness for herself.

A longing to push his head under the cold tap before which they were standing filled her, and showed clearly on her face. Robert watched her, and smiled happily to himself. This was going to be livelier than he had anticipated.

She opened her mouth to speak, and he waited with keen interest—but the door had opened, and Miss Cornhill had come into the room.

"I wonder," she asked Lucille, "if you could tell me whether there are any hot-water bottles in the house? I think the children would go to sleep more quickly tonight, after all this excitement, if they had one each. If you could ——" She stopped abruptly, her face paling. "W-what—what is that noise?" she asked.

"It's all right," said Lucille. "That's only my brother Nicholas giving off a trumpet solo."

"Ah," said Miss Cornhill.

"Virtuoso," commented Robert. "He's quite a —— My word, what's that?"

They listened.

"I think," said Lucille slowly at last, "that it must be Pietro . . . singing."

"Suffering tomcats," murmured Robert; whether as an ejaculation or a comparison was not clear. "I'll go up and choke him."

"Hello," said Nicholas as he went in. "Too much row here?"

"Yes. I thought Pietro was with you," Robert said.

"He was—until he joined in. Now he's in the garden looking for—I think—rare herbs. I did tell you I was sorry about your car, didn't I?"

"Yes—several times. Between you and me, nothing could have turned out more fortuitously."

"Nice word; what's it mean?"

"It means that I'm glad I'm here."

"You won't be in the morning. There's going to be a large-scale attack against Lucille; and you can see, now that you've met her, that we'll only be five to one—which isn't enough. You taking sides?"

"Yes."

Nicholas whistled. "No—really? Hers or ours?"

"Mine and mine only. Your sister and I had a brief interview a moment ago, and I came out of it with less than full marks. The look on her face as I left her said clearly, 'This man must go'—and this man is bent on staying."

"Well, for myself, I'd be glad to have you around when the storm breaks," said Nicholas frankly. "You're a sensible age and you've got a sensible look and the two boys like you. You could stand behind me and prop me up every time I look like sagging."

There was silence; as it lengthened, some of the brightness went out of Nicholas' face.

"What's the matter?" he asked at last. "Don't you feel we've got a case?"

Robert propped a pillow behind his back, and made himself comfortable before answering.

One will do what used to take two!

wonderful new kind of Dish Towel

KENDALL Dish Towel
PATENT APPLIED FOR

The Kendall Dish Towel is super absorbent. No need to get "sogged down" any more with dish towels never really suited to do a good drying job. Not when you use this new, wonder drying aid, made from an entirely different type of cotton-rayon fabric!

The Kendall Dish Towel shortens kitchen time — does dishes twice as fast. It leaves no lint and it is wonderfully soft — a joy to use! Its chamois-like magic won't wash out because the secret of its success is in the unusual blending of the fibers.

Generous jumbo size Kendall Dish Towels come with red, green, blue or yellow border stripes. Sold in leading stores . . . or mail coupon for a sample towel.

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

By the makers of Curity Diapers

Introductory Offer

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. KJ-15
Enclosed is 50c in coin for Kendall Dish Towel.
(Only one towel to a family.) Print clearly.

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
Favorite Store _____
Good only in Continental United States and Hawaii

"You've got a good case," he said thoughtfully, "but as I see it, you're going into court a bit unprepared. All the emotional—the sentimental—factors are in your favor, but your sister is basing her arguments on solid facts. I hate to seem to butt in on your ——"

"Skip it. You're right—I'm only feeling this thing instead of thinking it."

"Yes. As I understand it, you can't keep the house because you haven't the money to run it."

"At the moment we haven't; agreed. But blast it, I've only just come out of the army! I didn't buy the bike for pleasure—there was a strictly practical idea behind it: I had an idea that if I could get a job in Greenhurst, I could tool myself to and fro every day—there's no bus service. If I get a job, if Roselle runs the house, that's something, isn't it? It's a start. Not that I'll earn much at first, but all we need, for the moment, is money enough to meet the food bills and the rate bills. You don't just chuck a home away because you're short of money. You look at your potentials, don't you? You list your assets; you see where you can rake in dough. Isn't that right?"

"Your sister's going to be married, and ——"

"Well, let her. Let her go to this Digby character and marry him and raise little Digbys; nobody's stopping her. All we're asking is for time, that's all; time to organize. She's worked so fast that there were people coming to look at the house tomorrow—think of it, tomorrow! She can't do that! She ——"

"Pietro's coming back," said Robert, sitting upright and glancing out the window. "Look, Nicholas, don't worry too much—we'll work out something. If there's a fight—which I hope there won't be—I'll come in on your side."

"Thanks. The real fighter," said Nicholas moodily, picking up his trumpet once more, "is young Julia. If Julia were older, she could handle Lucille. I could handle Lucille—if she were a man instead of a girl."

Robert said nothing. He could, he thought, handle Lucille—in spite of being a man.

Lucille slept little that night, but before she slept she had come to a decision: she would telephone to Jeff in the morning, and ask him to come out and drive her in to see his father sometime during the morning.

Nicholas sought her out after breakfast and found her in the bathroom, washing the garments Julia had come home in. He came in, kicked the door shut, sat on the edge of the bathtub and began without preamble:

"Well, what about it, Lu?"

"If you mean the house," she said, without pausing in her work, "I'll talk about it later. Jeff's calling for me soon and taking me in to see Uncle Bill."

"This is nothing to do with Jeff or Uncle Bill," pointed out Nicholas. "This is purely our affair. Look, I've got a proposition: let me take over the house."

She turned from the basin, dripping hands idle, to stare at him.

"It's very simple. You're getting married—incidentally, congratulations, and I hope you'll be very happy, and I think he's a lucky guy if he doesn't knuckle under. He's been very kind and said we can look in on you at any time, but we want to be here, in our own home, Lu, and not in yours. I propose that you go ahead with your life—which is right and proper—and let me take on this house and the kids."

"And support them on what?"

"I can get a job in Greenhurst."

"A third-rate, run-of-the-mill, small-man job in a ——"

"Small town; yes, that's why I want to start there. We're known here in Greenhurst, Lu. In any other place, I'd be just another ex-army guy looking for a job; here in Greenhurst I'm Mr. Wayne of Wood Mount. It may look unenterprising—I used to think it was, but now I don't any more. If I didn't get in anywhere else, Uncle Bill would find a place for me in his office—but I will find something. Now Roselle: I know it's only a reaction after London, but she's burning to cook and wash and work in the house, and so I want her to run the house for us—and a couple of paying guests."

"You think Roselle can tackle a ——"

"Half a mo—I haven't done yet. Schools: Julia's no problem—she can go as a day girl to Greenhurst. It isn't a ladies' seminary, exactly, but she'll enjoy tooling back and forth on a bicycle—and coming home every day. The boys are more difficult, but I thought I'd see my old headmaster. I'll crawl in on my knees and spill the whole story, and see if he can't let 'em in on the, as it were, installment plan—I pay so much now and more as and when I can afford it. If you help me a bit there, it would be useful, but I don't know how this Digby fellow of yours is placed financially. He's supporting his mother, isn't he?"

Lucille hesitated. "No—not exactly. He lives with her—I mean, they're in the house they lived in before his father died; they've just gone on living in it."

VACANCY

By MARY WRIGHT LAMB

Untenanted, my heart, for now
a day,
I have attained some measure of delight in solitude; 'tis orderly and bright, and has its compensations. I must say that former lodger had a thoughtless way!
He danced and sang and burned
a brilliant light till dawn; I truly didn't get a night of restful sleep throughout his stay!

He's gone. And I can't say I'm one to care!
Him and his never knocking at the door!
He always left his laughter lying where it chanced to fall! I'm glad I'll see no more of him and his fancy friends, Delight, Despair!
Him and his puddles of sunlight on the floor!

"But he has to fork out a bit toward her upkeep, I suppose?"

"No. She's got money of her own."

"Well, that helps; I mean, it might leave you with a bit, and if you sent it along—when you could afford it—we wouldn't proudly spurn it. So there you are. I know you don't think I'm up to carrying the weight, but I'm certain I am, and I'm certain it'll work out. Now you can talk."

Lucille did not seem disposed to talk; she was rubbing the clothes once more, but the energy had gone out of her movements. Nicholas watched her, and a new sense of her beauty rose in him and filled him with an indefinable regret. He had looked at her all his life and he had known that he had a pretty sister—but he had accepted the fact with all the other facts concerning his family. It was only lately that he had come to understand that his mother's illness had been a drain on their resources—and upon Lucille's youth; it was only now that he seemed to see the strength and the courage with which she had lived through all those difficult years. He looked at the glory of her hair, the creamy smoothness of her arms. He wondered, for the first time, whether Digby Russell deserved her and her beauty. A stranger—a total stranger; she was leaving them and going to him.

"If you don't mind," said Lucille slowly, "I'll leave it till I've seen Uncle Bill."

"He'll be on my side."

"Why this talk of sides?" Lucille's voice rose. "This isn't a war—this is a family problem, that's all. And I'm beginning to resent the way I'm represented as the all-time, heavy-footed, bullying head of a bunch of cowering orphans. It's a false picture and you know it."

"I don't know it—yet. Your letter wasn't a proposition, you know; it was a plain statement of fact: we're selling."

"Not from choice—you knew that quite well."

"Not after discussion—I knew that quite well too. I don't altogether blame you; two years ago, I wasn't much use to you—and neither was Roselle. But you shouldn't have assumed that we wouldn't want a say in things now."

"Roselle couldn't get out of this house fast enough—a year ago. If I'd suggested selling it then, she wouldn't have had a word to say against the suggestion. Who's to say that in another year she won't have changed her mind again?"

"A year from now," said Nicholas, "she'll be married to Jeff."

She looked at him scornfully. "No, she won't. She had her chance and she didn't take it. For the past four months, Jeff's been going about with the Arkwright girl. Miriam Arkwright. His mother told me."

"Well, I'm sorry for Miriam, that's all—she's got a big disappointment coming. It's interesting to come back, Lu, and find that you can be as dim as other girls; I've got so used to looking up to you as the great know-how. Roselle has learned a lot in the past year. My bet is that after a decent interval to soothe his pride—and to give Roselle a fright—Jeff will come at her again, and then we'll sling the boarders out and he and she can marry and settle down here; the house will divide quite well and they can have their own bed-and-bath-and-sit. So take what I've said seriously—and leave me the house and get married and be happy and don't worry about us. You've done your whack for this family. I thought a lot when I was away—and I realized that the years mother was ill were bad ones for you. You don't have to go on carrying us all; we've all got our leg muscles now. . . . What's this Digby chap like?"

"He's ——" Lucille frowned. It was difficult not to remember that on her first meeting with him, she had been singularly unimpressed. But she had to remember that it had been at a tea party and he had come with his mother and handed round toasted scones—a situation in which few men looked their strongest. "He's tall—wears glasses, but they suit him; he's got a long, rather clever face—in fact, he's a very clever man. He's kind and—and patient."

"If his mother's got money, why this arrangement of her living with you when you're married?"

"Well, it seemed pointless for her to move out just because Digby was marrying me. There the house was, and there was all their furniture, and it's one of those large, rather solid, ugly, old-fashioned houses that wouldn't fetch much if they sold it—and so it seemed more sensible for us all to go on living there. There's lots of room—for her and for you all."

Nicholas thought the picture remarkably unattractive. He rose and opened the door.

"I'll go into town and see Uncle Bill myself," he said. "And do a bit of scouting round."

"One moment." Lucille closed the door cautiously. "When are all these strays leaving?"

"What—Corny and the chef and Robert? What's the hurry?" Nicholas asked. "We owe them something."

"They can't settle down here forever. If you don't want that suit you lent Pietro, you could donate it to him, couldn't you, and let him go on his way?"

"Then you would have to do the cooking—or Roselle would. Why not leave well alone? He's happy in the kitchen, and Corny's going round the house in a fever, tidying as she goes."

"Well, Robert Debrett isn't cooking an isn't tidying; you can get rid of him."

"Ah." Nicholas looked at her frow brows. "Has he said something?"

"He hasn't said anything; I imagin thinks he doesn't have to: just being ar is enough to enchant people—he thinks."

"Oh, look, Lu, you've got him all wr He's all right."

"He's staying here solely in order t what we're going to do—and I won't ha It's nothing whatsoever to do with him."

"It was my fault that he had to ditch car."

"It isn't in the ditch now, and it isn't hu I went out and looked. Besides, he e fabulous sums—if he wants to hang aro he can go into Greenhurst and get a roo the George."

"But I like him."

"And I don't."

"All right, then—you tell him to go."

She made no reply, and after a glanc her angry face Nicholas went out and, ning in the safety of the landing, ran d stairs and met Robert in the hall. Taking by the arm, he led him out into the garde

"When do you want to go off?" he inqu in a low voice.

Robert looked at him. "I don't want he said. "Not yet, anyhow. But if I'm in way ——"

"We're all for keeping you as long as can stay. All but one of us, that is."

"Ah," said Robert. "I'd already gath that."

"I know. You said so, and you were r Some people make it so plain, don't t You know how you stand with them, a events. But my advice is to treat a cer person with consummate tact. If you d give people the opportunity, then they c so to speak, serve notice on you, if follow me."

"If she really feels I'm ——"

Nicholas looked pained. "If you're goin take that gentlemanly attitude, then I'm w ing my time. I didn't tell her so just now, I have an idea we're stuck with Pietro per nently. He likes us, and keeps saying so. Cornhill will depart in due course—but w she's here, you hang on. We like having round."

"Thank you."

"Would you do me a little favor?"

"Yes."

Nicholas grinned appreciatively at promptness of the reply. "Well, when turns up this morning to take Lucille town," he said, "could you pretend yo got an urgent date with the fellows wh doing your car?"

"Yes. But why?"

"It's only a two-seater, and you could c to drive Lucille in and bring the car b for Jeff."

"But that leaves Jeff marooned out he

"Quite right. But you'll find he won't w his time. Or I hope he won't."

There was a pause while Robert exami all the aspects of this plan. The more looked into it, the more highly did he Nicholas' intelligence.

An hour later, he was seated in Jeff's with Lucille beside him, driving toward Gre hurst.

They said little at first. Lucille leaned ba glad to be for a little while out of the hou she was feeling tired and confused. This t yesterday, she had arrived in Greenhurst w a cut-and-dried plan; today, she was leavin house into which all her brothers and sist had flocked, bringing strangers with them and she was driving into town with Rob Debrett, the screen's most-sought-after bac lor, feeling nothing but irritation at the c tainty that he meant to stay and see the af out to the end. Well, he wouldn't have t satisfaction.

"Worried?" inquired Robert presently.

"In a way," she admitted.

"You're lucky to have a nice family l this. I was an only child, and I missed a of fun."

"You have quite a lot of fun now, judg from the newspapers."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 98

AFTERNOON SOCIAL

A cup of coffee and a chat with friends. What could be more atisfying? And that's just the kind of afternoon relaxation NBC Radio gives you, as your long day wears on, and the ironing, the ewing, and the kitchen chores seem to stretch out interminably. Switch on the radio, keep it tuned to NBC, and a houseful of entertaining company drops in. And the stories they have to tell!

Stories about Woman In Love whose romantic ideals come face o face with the realities of domestic life. The familiar problems of Pepper Young's Family, so like your own. The inspiration and sacrifice of Right To Happiness. The exciting turmoil of Backstage Wife, whose husband is a matinee idol, adored by millions of other women. The love, laughter and tears of Stella Dallas and Young Widder Brown. And still the company streams in through the magic door, your radio: Woman In My House, Just Plain Bill, Lorenzo Jones, Mr. Jolly's Hotel for Pets and It Pays To Be Married.

Entertain them in the living room if you like. Or your bedroom, nursery, or kitchen radio will bring them right to your side wherever you're working. And with these folks around the house, your chores get done almost without your knowing it. Invite them over today. If it's absorbing stories you want in the afternoon, only your NBC station brings them to you.

NBC RADIO

a service of RCA

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 96

Her tone was cool, and he found the coolness bracing. This was, he knew, no deliberate withdrawal to make him believe, as some women tried to make him believe, that the glamour of his person and position was having no effect. This girl really wanted him out of the way; she suspected his motives and refused to have him, a stranger, prying into her private affairs. She was right and he was acting reprehensibly in not removing himself at once—but he realized that he wanted, more and more, to stay. There was barely enough excuse for staying, but it was enough: Simon and Dominic liked him, he had brought them home, and in doing so had been deprived of the use of his car. He was ashamed of his lack of delicacy in staying on, and astonished at the dismay with which he regarded his eventual going.

He examined the dismay, and put it down to an instinctive attraction toward the family life that he had missed. This was a real family; a large, a charming family—an interesting family. He wanted to stay with them—just for a little while. He was enjoying himself; he was strangely happy. They all wanted him to stay; all but this girl seated beside him—this lovely redhead. There were a lot of redheads nowadays, but not many natural ones. This girl's beauty would have taken her a long way in his profession; she certainly had the looks . . . and she certainly had the temperament.

Lucille got out at Mr. Milward's office, and Robert drove away to the garage. She stood and looked after him thoughtfully, and then turned and went into the dim little entrance.

Mr. Milward settled her in a chair by the window and heard her out without interruption. His advice was unexpected.

"You must send for your fiancé," he said simply.

Lucille stared at him. "What for?" she inquired.

The question seemed to him an extraordinary one from a woman who was about to take a man as a life partner. A great many answers came to his mind: for help, for counsel, for guidance—even for comfort. He looked at Lucille mildly.

"This concerns him as well as yourself, Lucille. Your decision will be your own, but your fiancé has the right to know what is going on."

"Uncle Bill, is Nicholas' plan ——"

"It has a great deal to recommend it," Mr. Milward told her.

"But it sounds . . . crazy! How can I just walk out and leave him and Roselle to—to run the place? All he's got in the world is a few pounds, a motor bike and a trumpet. And Roselle's sweet, but what help will she be?"

He put on his glasses and looked at her in silence for some moments.

"You must learn," he said quietly at last, "that you're not in charge of them any more, Lucille. You —— One moment!" He held up a long white hand and waited for silence. "You have been splendid all these years; splendid. But things have changed now; Nicholas is a man and you can—you must—pass the burden over to him. You don't have to worry, any more, about whether things will work out or not; their success or their failure will depend on Nicholas' strength—or weakness. You must not deprive him of the right to test himself."

"But—but he hasn't the faintest idea of what running a house entails! He ——"

"He'll learn."

"And money—where will ——"

"He will get a good job here in Greenhurst, and he's extremely sensible to realize it. In fact, I think his whole scheme is full of sound sense. He is known here, and liked—and trusted. This is a progressive little town, and he will do better here—for the present, at any rate—than in a place in which he is unknown. You mustn't feel that you're leaving them all entirely without friends, you know. You can go away and live a happy life with your husband; everything will be well here."

Lucille was staring at him, and he saw that there was a strange look on her face. If it had been anybody but Lucille, he would have said that she looked forlorn. Then, to his astonishment, he saw tears spring to her eyes and roll down her cheeks.

"My dear," he said gently, "you're not to worry about them."

"I'm not w-worrying," sobbed Lucille. "I-I'm just thinking."

"Of the future?"

"N-no." It was a desolate sound. "But everybody—all of you, all you say is 'Go.' Nicholas told me to g-get out—oh, not in so many w-words, but that's what it amounted to. And now you've just said the same thing. Go away. Go and get married. Go away and leave Wood Mount and all of them in it—leave your home, leave your family, and go on down to C-Cornwall and stay there. I kept the home together—you know I did. You just said so. And now you say that all I've got to do is—is walk out and leave it and ——"

He got up and walked in his slow, measured way across the room. Standing by her chair, he put his hand on the hair he loved so much and stroked it tenderly.

"Lucille, you're going to a home of your own. Soon you'll have your own children, your own family."

It sounded weak; it was weak, thought Mr. Milward. She wasn't going to a home of her own; she was merely joining her husband and his mother. He wondered, with a recurrence of misgiving, what sort of man this Digby Russell was—he must find out.

He waited outside while Lucille put the call through; when she joined him, he thought she was looking better.

"He's coming," she said.

Mr. Milward gave a small, inward sigh of relief. "Good," he murmured, and walked to the door with her. "By the way, where's Jeff?"

"He stayed at the house," she told him. "Mr. Debrett drove me in—he had to come to see about his car. I hope he finds they've got it ready for him."

"You mustn't let him escape without your Aunt Maggie getting a glimpse of him, you know; she's very much excited. She surprised me very much; I didn't think she knew so much about these famous personalities. I suppose he'd be too grand to come and have a little dinner with us before he goes?"

"Why too grand? Who are these film stars, anyway?"

"Well, busy people," pointed out Mr. Milward mildly. "If you can persuade him to look in, it would give your aunt pleasure. I must say that, for myself, I'm a little out of touch—but Jeff says he's a fine-looking fellow."

"He's got a straight nose and a good opinion of himself—and here he comes."

The car stopped and Robert got out. It took him, Lucille noted, exactly twelve seconds to find out that golf was the passion of the old man's life. She stood by while they discussed clubs and scores and tees; she saw Mr. Milward standing on the pavement in the sunshine, looking up at the tall, handsome actor with his mild blue eyes glistening with pleasure.

"I was just saying to Lucille that if you could find time before leaving us . . . my wife . . . a little dinner . . . very quiet ——"

Nothing would delight Robert more. Tomorrow; if his car was not ready—and it didn't look like being ready—Jeff would go and fetch the four of them in the big car: Robert and Lucille, Nicholas and Roselle.

They drove away; Lucille had no comment to make. She had seen steady, solemn, slow old Uncle Bill charmed as a snake was charmed. Potent, that was the word. It was like a tablet: if you swallowed it, it worked almost instantaneously. Well, Nicholas could do almost the same damage without any star backing. Some people did it for nothing, and some people commercialized it and netted a packet—that was all.

"How long will the car be?" she inquired, and hoped it sounded merely a polite inquiry.

"They couldn't tell me. No serious damage."

"Good. Doesn't your—your studio get agitated when you vanish like this?"

"They might if I were in the middle of a film. At the moment I'm in the middle of a holiday."

There was silence, but she felt that she had made her point. When they reached the house, she drove it home ruthlessly.

"Thank you for taking me in," she said. "I always feel better when I've talked to Uncle Bill. He made me telephone my fiancé."

"Oh yes?" Robert got out and opened the door for her.

"Perhaps I ought to have thought of it last night—but I was too bewildered. He's coming here."

"Really? When does he arrive?"

"He should be here," said Lucille, "at any moment."

Dominic left the breakfast table and went straight out of the house, across the lawn, through the paddock and so to the home of his spirit.

When he came down, he found Jeff coming out onto the lawn, and with a frown of anger made his report.

"Somebody went up my tree house," he informed him.

Jeff looked down at his accusing countenance and arranged his features in the proper expression of concern.

"Well, now," he said, "you can rule me out; I haven't had time to go climbing up trees. And my father's too old to get up there."

"Then who?"

Picking the right wife is a major step on the road to political success. As a group, congressmen's wives are the most remarkable helpmates I have encountered. They average higher, judged by the occupation of their husbands, than any other group. Frequently it is the wife the voters are electing, and they know it. Perhaps this explains why so many wives succeed their husbands. Senator Margaret Chase Smith is a late example of a wife who not only succeeded her husband but was then promoted. —WILLIAM BENTON
Former senator from Connecticut

"Not the tenants. They were rather big, both of them; if they'd tried to get up, the tree would've come down." Jeff pursed his lips and pondered. "Now you come to mention it, though, I do remember seeing a boy who ——"

"I knew all the time!" Dominic gritted his teeth. "I bet it was that stinking Derek Arkwright. I bet it was. I told him if he ever went up there, I'd kick him. It was him, wasn't it?"

"He was too far away for me to be sure," said Jeff, playing for safety. "It might have been any boy."

"It was him, I bet. I'll go and kick him."

"Oh, but wait now! Suppose it wasn't Derek Arkwright?"

Dominic was already setting off. His lips were set firmly, and it was clear that he was going to kick Derek Arkwright as soon as he could get near enough. There was a slim chance that he hadn't been up the tree, but a good kick would ensure that he didn't go up it in future.

Jeff looked after him with some apprehension, and turned to find Simon beside him, looking extremely anxious.

"Hello," said Simon. "Have you seen Dominic anywhere?"

"Dominic? Yes—I think he's gone off to look for Derek Arkwright."

Simon's desire to keep his young brother out of trouble remained uppermost in his mind.

"I'll go and find him," he said.

But search as he might, he saw no sign of Dominic. He turned back at last, and for the first part of the return journey he kept to the paths by which he had come. At the first crossroad, however, he hesitated; his footsteps slowed, dragged and finally stopped altogether, and his eyes went to a distant point and remained fixed there.

It could do no harm to skirt Mr. Hewett's land. Even if he just caught a glimpse in the distance—the tip of a tail, the wind lifting a shaggy coat—it would be enough. That was all he wanted, just now. It was all very well for Julia to talk as though she had got her books back forever; she could believe, if she wanted to, that nothing would ever separate her from her things again. Dominic could do the repairs in his tree house and talk as if he would never again be away from it for so long as a year; he was young and he couldn't really understand. Julia was young too; Julia had said that if you thought about things as you wanted them to be, they often turned out that way. Perhaps she was right—but it was too much to risk. One parting was enough. He couldn't—he wouldn't go through that again. Never. Never, never. Long John was fairly settled—it wasn't fair to see him again and to make him believe it was for good, if it wasn't going to be for good. Dogs had just as many feelings as humans, and Long John must have suffered just as much as he had when they had to leave each other. It wouldn't be fair to let him know that they had all come back.

If he did know, would he remember? Could a dog forget in a year? He wasn't very old—he wasn't three yet. Did young dogs have better memories than old dogs? It wouldn't hurt, anyway, to walk past. The footpath was a long, long way from the house, and even if Long John was outside, it wasn't likely that he'd be near the path. He'd be out in the fields chasing rabbits, or digging up things.

There was something there . . . moving; something . . . there in among the trees, just near the house. A long way away, but who could mistake that banner of a tail? Who could ——

He was turning this way. How far could dogs see? It was too far to be able to recognize anybody, that was one thing.

He was coming nearer. No, he had stopped, and was just looking. He probably thought it was a trespasser, but anyway, he wasn't moving any more; he was just standing.

It was time to get on. It wouldn't do to look backward too much . . . he was still standing there. He was moving . . . he was coming . . . he was ——

Simon's nerves could bear no more. He looked blindly in the direction of home, and began to walk quickly. After one more backward glance, he broke into a run, and ran, and ran, and ran, his heart thumping madly within him.

They had been walking for some time. The beech tree was not the place that Jeff would have chosen to walk round—it stood in the very middle of the lawn, in full view of several windows—but he had given up all hope of getting Roselle into a more propitious spot. She was being gentle and sweet, but she seemed to be more than a little absent-minded; she walked slowly but steadily; all he could do was walk beside her.

His voice penetrated at last through her meditations, and she turned to him.

"What did you say, Jeff?"

"I said"—Jeff cleared his throat—"I just said that it had seemed a long time. That you were away, I mean."

His normal calm and sensible manner had left him; he was a picture of gloom; his brow was furrowed and his mouth drooped. She was here beside him, and he had so much to say—but none of it would come out.

"It was a long time," he said again.

"It was a year," said Roselle.

"Yes. I—I missed you very much, Roselle."

There seemed to her to be nothing to say to that. He had not wanted her to go, and she had gone; it was sweet to come back and find that he hadn't forgotten, but she could not explain that she had not—at first—missed him in the way that he had missed her. When she had wept, in London, and longed for home, she had not thought of him—at first; he had been part of the enormous ache in her heart. She had never known Wood Mount without him, and that was why she could not reply and tell him that she had missed him, because it would have meant explaining that she thought of him as part of her home, part of her background, part of everything she loved.

Jeff's heart slid slowly down and rested on his brogues. She might go away again—and ne, perhaps, she would stay away for-Unless—unless he laced up his courage d her what she meant to him.

out out a hand and took one of hers, ey did a complete circle round the tree t speaking. Words rushed to his lips ere choked back again; he longed to but what, he asked himself dismally, as the use? He had opened his mouth de already, and he was a cad, a brute, down philanderer who hadn't the right
Roselle's boots, even if she wore boots.
s weak-kneed and faithless, and he o be cut into small pieces and thrown dogs. He had betrayed Roselle. He had d her love.
ad kissed Miriam Arkwright. had kissed her. But he had never—never—forgotten Roselle. And Roselle re now, and he loved her and if he ell her so, openly and without equivo-she would go away again, and be lost forever.
thought stabbed him into action. Tak-irmer grasp of Roselle's hand, he led o the shelter of the rhododendrons. He d the thickest bush and stopped, and e stood beside him and realized, with a g wave of emotion, that until she had m again, she had not known what he meant to her. He had thought only of he had been selfishly absorbed in her reams. He was patient and loyal and and she knew—at last—that she loved selle ——" s, Jeff?"

ve you, Roselle. I love you very much.
u—could you love me . . . a little?"
s, Jeff. I could. I mean—I do."
as undoubtedly the most concise con-ver drawn up, but, enfolded in each arms, neither of them had any thought t of relief.

n they were assembled for lunch, there sign of Simon.
went looking for Dominic—but that long time ago," said Jeff.
's back," said Julia. "I was up in the orting books, and I saw him."
ll, he'll turn up," said Nicholas.
ert Debrett was at the door, and he ed to shut it. As he did so, he saw disappearing into the pantry at the end corridor. He went out and Lucille ed him; together they reached the door, Lucille made to pass him, but swift movement he put out a hand and d her. She looked past him into the and then stood silent.
on was staring through the window at npty square of garden outside. Lucille at he was panting and, although their ce had not been accomplished without he was unaware of their presence in the was waiting for something—but what come through the pantry window? could—but of course! This was the w through which Long John had always This was the window which had been en always, for the comings and goings estless puppy; there were old scratches e window sill, and the plants growing h the window had always been in a state, battered and trampled by his huge window was closed now, but as they unmoving, there was a sound outside.

hing—something heavy—seemed to have ed onto the flower beds that the tenants arefully restored. Something was to be
. . . and now it was to be seen. Two ous paws and a head—a huge, shaggy and a pair of brown eyes peering out of almost obscuring fringe.
ille walked forward and unlatched the
w. Before it had opened more than a a hairy body launched itself past her, a chair and onto the waiting boy. There thump as the two hit the floor together, hen boy and dog were inextricably mixed d a hysterical tail, two groping hands, a n smooth head and a black-and-white y one appeared and vanished and apd again. The dog's yelps were joined by other, quieter, murmuring sounds as Simon talked in the language that Long John knew so well. His eyes were shining; on his cheeks stood the tears he so rarely shed.

That evening Lucille entered the drawing room, where the household was assembled. Nicholas looked up from the hearthrug, on which he was sprawled playing draughts with Julia. Robert, playing beggar-my-neighbor with Dominic, gave no sign of interest beyond putting down two plain cards for a king, instead of three, and then sweeping the trick absently and illegally into his own pile.

"Hey, that was mine!" protested Dominic.

"It was? So it was—and I owe you one more. Next thing you know, I'll be cheating purposely. Tck tck tck. Here you are."

Nothing, Lucille thought, could look more ideally domestic than this gathering. Miss Cornhill, there on a window seat, sewing something of Dominic's and looking as though she had been in the family for generations; Pietro drawing a map of Italy for Simon, as they both lay on their stomachs on the floor. The entire group looked placid, pleased and . . . permanent. There was even the dog. They were, one would have said, looking at them now, a tight little, right little family. Except for that big, handsome deb's dream sitting there doing a children-adore-me act.

It might be an act, she reflected, but the children did like him. Simon's large, serious eyes followed him wherever he went; Dominic had admitted him to his tree house—and for a man who seemed to take so little exercise, Robert Debrett had got up the tree with remarkable skill and swiftness. He and Nicholas—brothers, no less.

The thought came to her suddenly that it was unfair to expect Digby to stand up to this competition. There was nothing the matter with Digby; if the children had seen him first, they would have—they might have liked him.

Lucky you! Every lovely Lady Pepperell Sheet goes on sale in January!

EVEN FABULOUS NYLON SNUG FIT SHEETS AT LOW JANUARY PRICES!

What a wonderful chance to try Pepperell's petal-smooth practical nylon Snug Fit Sheets (top and bottom)! In white or 4 colors, they're pure luxury. They're economical, too, wear as only nylon can, and wash and dry in a jiffy. Think what you'll save when you do them at home—like nylon undies!

SAVE ON WHITE AND COLORS IN REGULAR LADY PEPPERELLS AND FAMOUS SNUG FIT®

Stock up now while they're sale-priced! Fill your linen closet with all the Lady Pepperell Sheets you need—regular and Pepperell Snug Fit . . . the fitted sheets with the unique seaming† that makes corners 1½ stronger to wear far longer! All in white and six colors.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL BUY . . . PEPPERELL BLANKETS

Fluffy Pepperell Blankets are color-schemed to mix or match with Lady Pepperell Sheets. And there's a whole wonderful line-up — even one of luxurious Acrilan*, the new wonder fiber—all surprisingly modest in price.

†Patent applied for ® Chemstrand Acrylic Fiber*

Lady Pepperell SHEETS AND BLANKETS

WHITE • COLORS • REGULAR • SNUG FIT • NYLON

PEPPERELL FABRICS ®

One didn't, as she knew from her own experience, appreciate his good qualities at a first meeting—but once they got used to him —— She rejected the term, seeking one more loyal. To have to present him to the children—even to Roselle and Nicholas—with their eyes, their minds full of Robert Debrett . . . it was unfair, and it was going to make things very much more difficult.

Robert looked up for a moment from his game and met her gaze, and he saw with some surprise that the expression in her eyes was less openly antagonistic than it had been since his arrival. He went back to his game, speculating quietly on the reason for this.

Lucille, indeed, was feeling that she had done him less than justice. It was not his fault that he was a famous and sought-after figure; it was not his fault that he had roused in her irritation and a feeling that he was using this interlude to indulge a liking for family life. He hadn't sought them out; he had performed a kindness and in so doing had come among them. If she thought he was staying too long, certainly nobody else did; and as he had made it clear, without saying anything, that he would go immediately Digby came, perhaps she had been giving him somewhat less than his due.

Wood Mount. . . . She was to leave it, but not to strangers, which would have been comparatively easy. She was to go away and leave everything, everybody she loved here in this house. Everybody, that is, but Digby. She was to live in Cornwall, in the Russells' great, ugly, echoing house; Mrs. Russell would have her own rooms, but they were to eat together. Digby's mother—for breakfast, for lunch, for tea, for dinner every day. The long, thin face, just like Digby's; the quiet, flat voice and the even flatter statements. Large rooms, quiet rooms; yes, certainly quiet; there would be nothing of the hurly-burly in which she had lived and moved all her life. One couldn't, of course, take one's childhood, one's girlhood into marriage. Husbands were like magnets: you got drawn in and sucked up and there you were, attached; stuck. Wherever he went, you went, even unto what used to be called the Outposts of Empire. Your old life was left behind and you set forth with your mate.

Mate—Digby.

Digby—mate.

It didn't go, somehow. And she felt sure that he would not care to be referred to as a mate; there was something earthy, even coarse about the term that wouldn't, she knew, appeal to him. He would be a tender lover, perhaps; a reliable, a good, a fine husband—probably; but mate? Perhaps not.

Certainly not.

Definitely not.

She was roused by the extraordinary, the fantastic and at the same time quite real picture of Miss Cornhill shepherding the younger members of the family to bed. Pietro went to the kitchen to concoct the preliminaries of tomorrow's special dish. Robert uncoiled himself from the floor and leaned out the window to look at the lovely night.

"Stars, millions and millions," he said, without turning. "Nicholas, would your sister trust herself with me out there under them?"

"Surely," said Nicholas. "She's armed against fascinating strangers—she's got this Digby chap, remember?"

"If I don't remember, I feel she'll remind me." Robert turned to look at Lucille. "How about it?" he asked. "It's a wonderful night."

"Go on, Lu," urged Nicholas. "If he gets above himself, give our old call whistle—remember it?"

HE pursed his lips and gave vent to a shrill, melodious theme: from upstairs, on the instant, came the children's responses: the same notes, the same signal.

Lucille suddenly could not speak. The call was one which went farther back than their own childhood—their father had used it, and his father. It was a small thing—a special family whistle, useful sometimes to locate one another in crowds, on expeditions; a special call to special people. But she had not used it for over a year—and in the life to which she was going, there would be no whistling. Whistling was out.

She stood up, leaving a remark over her shoulder as she went out of the room.

"I'll get a coat," she said.

She walked with Robert through the paddock and along the path beside the fields beyond. The air was cool and clear, and Lucille, with a sudden feeling of enjoyment in the exercise, quickened her step and found Robert lengthening his stride.

They went, at first, in silence; then she began to ask him about his work, and found herself learning something about his life. She put aside, for the moment, all the reservations she had felt about him. She wondered fleetingly what Digby would say if he could see her now. He would be upset, rather.

In the meantime, she was enjoying herself very much. It was impossible to know whether Robert Debrett was enjoying it too.

They stopped at the mill and looked up at the ruined shell silhouetted against the sky.

"We used to swim here," Lucille told him. "It was cold, but it was fun. Nicholas nearly drowned once—fooling about."

"He's a nice fellow," said Robert, "and if it doesn't sound too presumptuous from a comparative stranger, I think his idea of keeping the house is a good one. Are you going to let him do it?"

"I don't suppose letting him will come into it," said Lucille. "It's almost twenty-four hours since I was the head of the family. Now I'm just hovering on the edge of things, watching them all."

"It must be good to know that things will go on satisfactorily when you've gone away; it must make you feel better."

"Well, it doesn't make me feel better; it just makes me feel . . . lonely. I suppose I've got so used to ordering them about that I don't take kindly to the idea of . . . just stepping out. That's what Uncle Bill said, anyway."

"How long have you known your fiancé?" he asked, as they walked on.

"Digby? Seven—eight months."

"He's round about thirty, isn't he?"

"Thirty-five. He doesn't look it; he's the type that doesn't age much. In twenty years he'll probably still look slim and boyish and I'll look like his mother, instead of like his wife."

"Twenty years. . . . Marriage is a long contract," he mused. "I suppose it doesn't seem long when the Lucilles and the Nicholases and the Roselles start appearing. I think it's a good idea, this one of your parents—having a family in two separate halves."

"No, it isn't a good idea. Just when my parents were beginning to relax, they had to go back to the beginning and bring up Simon and the other two. My parents weren't young enough; they couldn't stand up to it when things like staff and money became difficult. Were your parents young?"

"My mother was; my father was twenty-four years older than she was—but it worked out very well. As a matter of fact, she died before he did."

"Were you famous before they died?"

He laughed. "No. I was in a small repertory company doing odd parts and painting scenery in my spare time. It wasn't until I was cast as Bassanio in the Merchant film that I got going. I looked fine in those tights—and of course, the part's what Julia would call a pet of a one."

He talked no more about himself; he went on to speak of Julia, and Simon and Dominic; from Dominic, they got somehow to Denmark and from there to Europe and travel, and Robert learned the story of the old lady who was to have taken Lucille to the cities of her dreams—and who had remained at home.

The shape of Wood Mount appeared before them, and Lucille sighed a little to herself. It was over—but it had been a pleasant hour from which in some strange way she had derived strength and comfort. Perhaps the incident would emerge, in later years, as one of those wistful, faintly embarrassing little romantic episodes her mother had sometimes related to her. She could tell her children about the walk, and touch up the details with a little glamour and romance. She need not explain that he had taken her hand firmly into his, at the end, in a merely friendly, brotherly way; she could say he took it—and leave it at that.

There was no news of Digby the next day. Nobody noticed the omission except Lucille—and Robert Debrett; and neither of them was disposed to comment upon it.

When they were ready to set out to the Milwards' for dinner, Robert sat in front beside Nicholas, who wanted to handle a Rolls for the first and probably, he added, the only time; Lucille and Roselle sat behind.

The dinner was in the nature of a celebration. When they had settled down afterward in the little drawing room, the party was interrupted by a telephone call from Julia. A man had come, she said.

"You mean Digby?" said Jeff, who had answered the telephone.

"I don't know. I suppose so. Pietro let him in and he just said he wanted to see Miss Wayne, and Pietro took him into the drawing room, and I came down in my pajamas to telephone and tell somebody about him."

"But haven't you seen him?"

"I saw him from the bedroom window when he came. It was a taxi, and it went away and left a sort of thin man with glasses. If that's Digby, I think he looks a bit gruesome."

"Just once I'd like to ask you to do something and not have you say, 'Sure I could fix it if I only had the proper tools!'"

Jeff remembered that the telephone was o the hall table, just outside the door of t drawing room. He also remembered the carr ing quality of Julia's voice.

"Don't talk so loud; he'll hear you," warned.

"No, he can't hear—he's shut in the dra ing room. Shall I tell him to go away a come back tomorrow?"

"No, don't be an ass, Julia; you can't that. I'll tell Lucille—look, I'll call her. may not be Digby."

"I bet it is. He looks just like a Digby. said he would, didn't I?"

"Shut up, Julia, or he'll hear you. I'll p Lucille on, and you go on in and ask him come to the phone."

"In my pajamas?"

"Haven't you got a dressing gown, f Pete's sake?"

"No; my luggage hasn't come from scho yet. These are Nicholas' pajamas."

"Well, never mind whose pajamas they ar you go and call Digby—I'm going to fet Lucille."

LUCILLE returned to the drawing room announce that her fiancé had arrived by trai and was waiting for her at Wood Mour Robert was the first to break the silence th followed.

"I'll drive you back," he said.

"No, I'll take her," said Nicholas. "Or no perhaps you'd better; then you can lea Lucille with him and come back here, and needn't break up the party."

"All right," agreed Robert.

They began the drive to Wood Mount, ar Lucille sat silent, squaring up to the fact wi all the honesty of her nature that Digby coming had put an end to a peaceful, even magical interlude. From now on, argumen would begin—and whatever happened at t end, she herself would be going away fro Wood Mount forever.

And long before that—tomorrow, pe haps—Robert Debrett would also be goi away—forever. The thought left her with cold feeling.

They spoke scarcely a word on the wa home, but Lucille got out of the car with t curious feeling that a great deal had bee said. Robert helped her out and watched h as she went up the steps.

"Good luck," he called softly.

She looked back at him and tried to spea No words came, however, and she mere raised a hand and then went into the hous

The picture that met her eyes in the drawi room was not an encouraging one. Digby wa sitting on one side of the fireplace; opposi sat Julia, cross-legged, pajama-clad, with a expression on her face that spoke of utter an abysmal boredom. Digby, glassy-eyed, wa still doing his best, but his almost joyo bound from his chair came as near to enthu siasm as she had ever seen him display.

"Ah—Lucille, my dear."

"I think I'll go to bed now," said Juli rising with a huge yawn. "I was talking to hi till you came, Lu."

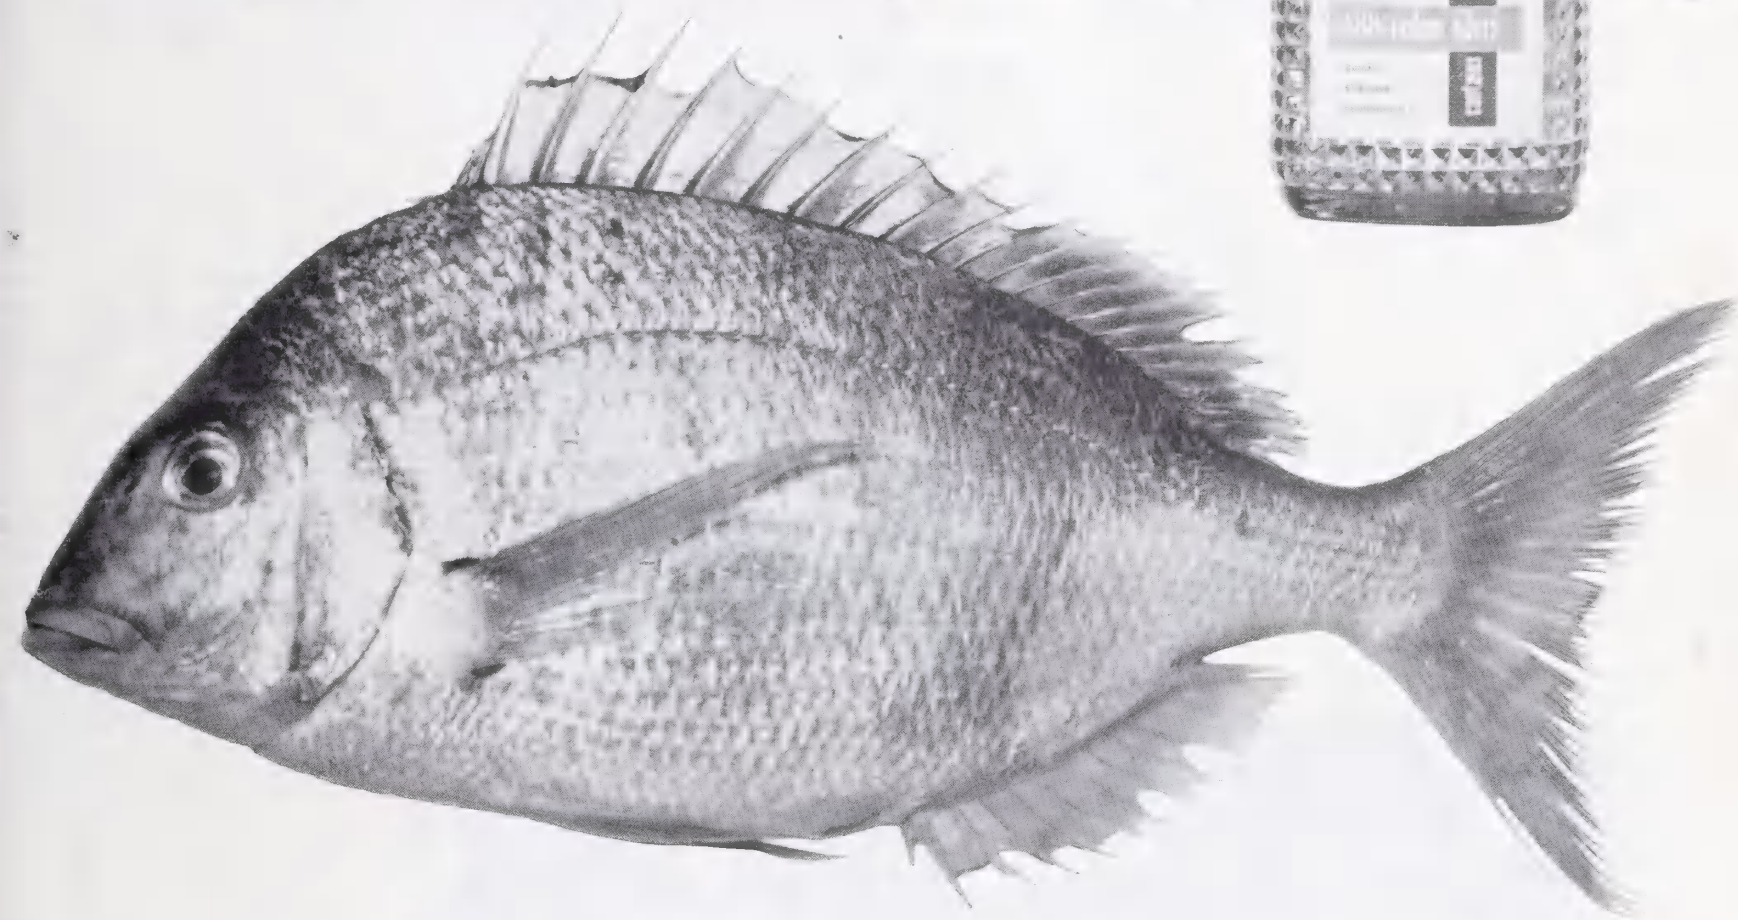
It was plain that she felt this act merite all Lucille's gratitude. As she went out an closed the door, Digby's lips parted in stifled sigh of relief. If they were all like tha And he had done his best. He had ignore the remarks overheard on the telephone; h had treated her as one should always, he ha heard, treat children—as though they wer grown up. He had talked of every subject i the world calculated to hold the interest of ten-year-old—and she had sat there lookin at him as though he had been something on slide; unwinking, wondering and plainl bored.

"I came as soon as I could," he said. "Ho is everything?"

"Working out," said Lucille. "Did anybod offer you a drink, Digby?"

"No—I don't want one, thank you. I hop you've room for me; Julia seemed to indicat that the house was full."

"Your room's ready. I'm sorry I wasn here when you arrived—we were asked t dinner at Uncle Bill's."



"Uncle Bill—ah, Mr. Milward," said Digby pleased to be able to show his grasp of th

CONTINUED ON PAGE 102

when you've fish to fry...keep by !

proved 3 times as effective as imitations !*

wick kills unpleasant indoor odors like nothing else possibly can. It's the only usehold deodorizer that contains chlorophyll. And when tested against imitations, air-wick was ientifically proved to be 3 times as effective. Other products try to look like wick, but none of them works like air-wick. That's why more women buy air-wick than all other household odorizers combined...not only in the United States but also in Canada and 54 other untries around the world! So for greater economy and effectiveness, use only genuine air-wick to kill sagreeable odors from cooking, stale tobacco smoke and other sources...upstairs and down.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

...remember! 5 o'clock is cooking time...so 5 o'clock is always air-wick time

e findings of 2 authoritative research laboratories.

SEEMAN BROTHERS, INC., NEW YORK, N. Y.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 101

cast. "I expect I shall be meeting him tomorrow. Has anything at all been settled, Lucille?"

He was certainly a conscientious man, she reflected, looking at him with a gaze that she fought to keep from becoming too keen, too analytic. He had come to discuss this matter, and here he was, discussing it.

"Let's leave it till tomorrow, Digby," she said. "I'm rather tired tonight."

"As you like, of course. But as we're alone ——"

"Now, we're alone, it's high time we were making love." . . . The words of the currently popular song, the tune of which Nicholas played a dozen times a day, came to Lucille's mind. But that sort of song—like whistling—would not go down well with the Russells. Digby and his mother called themselves musical and went to a great many concerts, but they would not enjoy "Now, we're alone."

"Let's go up and I'll show you where I've put you; it isn't the room I wanted you to have," she said, as they went up the stairs, "but things have been rather confused lately."

"The foreign-looking man who let me in ——"

He paused. Pietro had appeared on the landing, clad in a pair of Robert's pajamas and a dressing gown that had once belonged to Lucille's father.

"Ah. The lover!" he cried. "I tell Mees Cornhill, and she say 'No, that cannot be'—but I was right, so! Signore, you are a very lucky man; very lucky. You have a beautiful wife; she will have beautiful children. Men will be at her feet; they will adore her. You, too, adore her, no?"

"Well, yes, I do, rather," said Digby, endeavoring to edge past the speaker.

"I will not keep you; she is taking you to your bedroom. Soon"—Pietro gave a leer that made Digby's scalp crawl—"soon it will be the other way about, no? I give you both my salutations; you will be so happy, so happy, so happy!"

At the second repetition, Pietro was well on his way downstairs. Digby looked at Lucille and she saw that his face was pale.

"My word!" he murmured. "Very foreign."

"In here," said Lucille, opening a door. "Will you be comfortable?"

"Thank you—yes, of course. This is a beautiful house," he commented. "I can understand why you hesitated before parting with it."

She paused on her way out, looked at him for a moment, and then decided that she would take it up in the morning.

"Good night, Digby."

"Good night, my dear." He came over and kissed her, and she put her hands on his shoulders and looked at him earnestly.

"I've got a nice family," she said slowly, "but you might find them difficult to get to know."

"I've got a long time to do it in," he reminded her. "The rest of my life."

"You may need it."

"Who's this Debrett fellow that appears to have rescued Simon? Not the actor, is he? Julia must have got it wrong."

"No, she got it right."

"My word, you must have your hands full with them all."

Not the jealous type, Digby, she reflected, shutting the door and going downstairs again. He thought she was going to bed, but she wasn't going to bed yet. For two pins, she thought rebelliously, she would go back to the party. They had all been happy, they had all been enjoying themselves; it was mean to think that Digby had put a damper on everything, but he did have a way of reducing things to a sensible level. She ought to be thankful that he was so levelheaded, but ——

She was in the kitchen when the others returned, sitting at the table, cutting sandwiches for them all. Nicholas looked in and then ushered in Robert and Roselle.

"Where's Digby?" he asked in surprise.

"In bed. He was—he was tired, and there was no point in his waiting up."

"None—unless he wanted to meet Roselle and me," observed Nicholas dryly. "Food good. Tuck in, fellows."

LUCILLE made coffee, and they all sat round drinking it. It was long past midnight, and she ought not to have waited up for their return, but she felt happy—and strangely relieved. Digby had come, and perhaps it wasn't going to be such an upheaval after all.

Roselle was the first to go upstairs to bed. Nicholas yawned widely. "Good night, Robert; good night, Lucille."

He went out, and Robert looked across the table at Lucille.

"I'm looking forward to meeting him. He must be an extraordinary man."

She looked at him a little warily. "Why?"

"Because if I'd come a long way to see you, and found you alone, I wouldn't have gone up to bed . . . alone," he said deliberately.

"I don't suppose you would." Lucille's voice was suddenly cold. "You'd probably have done what you wanted to do, instead of what somebody else wanted you to do."

"Hard words—but no doubt true," he acknowledged. "But he must be the bloodless type."

"He wouldn't make one of those smoldering screen lovers. But he's got some qualities almost as good—decency and kindness, for example. And the fact that he can go placidly to bed and leave his future wife alone with you doesn't mean that he's underestimating your charms; it simply means that he ——"

"—— underestimates yours," put in Robert, and saw her rising to her feet. "If I promised to keep my mouth shut, would you stay?"

"No; I'm tired. Good night."

"You're angry with me, aren't you?"

"No. I'm tired, I told you."

He was between her and the door; he did not look as though he were deliberately barring her way, but she hesitated for a moment.

He looked at her, but he knew, suddenly, that he could say and do nothing that would help him to an understanding with her. His name and his fame had put a barrier between them, a barrier she had erected to defend

The Best Cooks way to QUICK MEALS

2 QUICK-TO-MAKE DISHES made more delicious with

STOKELY'S Finest CUT GREEN BEANS

Tender, slender, and garden fresh with slices of corned beef and mustard.

Stokely-VanCamp

Sweet and fresh as if you had just hulled them—with a pork chop and parsley.

STOKELY'S Finest SWEET PEAS

against any assumptions he might egarding her susceptibility. She thought ught he was irresistible, and it was use- try to tell her that his work was his and his life was whatever, wherever he to make it. He was an actor, and he me into contact, in the course of his with scores of beautiful women; they en costars, colleagues; sometimes they en more—but he was aware that he had before, outside his professional orbit, woman who had disturbed or distracted r more than a moment.

l now.

said that she was beautiful, desirable, ld her that he loved her, that he wanted ry her, that he wanted to go upstairs ll that pale imitation of a man out of l and throw him out the window, she think that he was piqued at her aloof- d anxious to break down her barriers. was nothing he could say that she believe; the more convincing it sounded, re she would applaud the act.

noved aside and opened the door for Good night," he said. "I'll be leaving Mount in the morning, but I would like k you for ——"

have to thank you," she broke in ly, and then without another word past him and out of the room.

losed the door behind her, kicked two savagely and stood staring down at le.

kfast was not a comfortable meal, but , looking at the assorted elements round the table, felt that things might een a good deal worse.

and Digby were the first down; the came in one by one and Digby, she ced to acknowledge, tried his best with he fact that he had made little impres- them discouraged her, but she was not surprised. Roselle sat dreaming of imon was engrossed in Long John, ic intent upon his food. Julia consid- at she had done enough by entertaining for a crushingly boring half hour the before; it was now somebody else's Nicholas—he was not impressed, Lucille ee.

f Digby did not excite admiration, she eel thankful at least that his was not a ality to rouse the children's antagonism. reeted him, answered his inquiries as to ealth with detached politeness, and him.

ert Debrett was by far the most com- e among the grownups at the table. He o the kitchen to superintend Pietro's g of his omelet, and bore it to his place t.

ille," said Dominic, "can't I have an like Robert's got? Here, Long John. he likes corn flakes!"

u're not to feed him at table," said angrily. "Stop it, Dominic. He isn't " isn't begging," denied Dominic. "He's ing."

u're not to feed him," repeated Simon. u're cruel," said Julia indignantly to

, I'm not. Long John knows it's wrong snuffling at people at table. He never do it."

ll, I'll take him out after breakfast and ll with him," promised Julia. "I will, ohn darling—I will. Ball, fellow!"

RE coming out with me," Nicholas r, leaning across to hand his cup to for refilling.

ere to?" asked Julia in surprise.

're going to see the headmistress of the in Greenhurst. Uncle Bill fixed an ap- ent for us," said Nicholas.

as some time before Julia could speak so unexpected, so crushing was the Mouth open, fork dropping with a onto her plate, she gazed at her brother, ess.

chool!" she gasped finally. "A school?" you think you'd finished with them?" Nicholas.

—but ——" Julia's mind darted in of life lines. "But I haven't got any proper clothes to put on! Only my other school clothes, and you can't go to other schools in other school clothes!"

"You can take off the distinguishing marks," said Nicholas. "We leave the house at eleven."

"But ——" A ray of hope illuminated Julia's countenance. "They won't have me. I've only just been expelled."

"But you didn't do anything bad," said Dominic in an attempt at reassurance that drew upon him the full glare of Julia's wrath.

"I didn't ask you to say anything," she shouted. "Why don't you mind your own beastly business?"

"Quiet," said Nicholas. "And finish your breakfast. You'll need your strength."

"I—I don't feel very well," said Julia. "I've got an awful pain suddenly."

"That's tough," said Nicholas. "You must go and lie down—when we get back."

HOPE died, and Julia sat hunched in despair. The others were silent; Simon looked across at Lucille thoughtfully for some moments and then made a wary circle round the point on which he wanted enlightenment.

"Lucille ——"

"Yes, Simon?"

"I was only wondering," said Simon, "about me and Dominic. I mean, will we have to go to new schools, like Julia?"

It was Nicholas who answered the question. "You'll go—eventually—to my old school," he said. "But there's no hope of getting you in straightaway like Julia. She's the lucky one; you and Dominic will have to wait until the school's ready to take you—to wit, next term."

"Is Julia's a day school?" said Dominic.

"Yes."

"But how will she get there?" asked Simon.

"She'll get there on a bicycle."

"Yes—but where from?"

There was a moment's pause, and then Nicholas spoke quietly. "From here," he said.

There was complete silence in the room. Julia, her mind swept clear of her own affairs, could only stare. Simon had turned white; Dominic had a good deal to say, but was having difficulty in deciding where to begin. Lucille, watching them, was feeling the effect of a double shock. She had known nothing of the arrangement made by Nicholas to see the school. And this sudden public announcement of it was made, she knew, to cut the ground from under her feet—to prevent arguments, to bring her face to face with the fact that there was, in fact, to be no argument; she had made her plans for the future, and Nicholas had made his.

She saw, dimly, that he had acted with promptness and good sense. Her fiancé and her fiancé's mother were unknown quantities, and however helpful they might turn out to be, they could not provide a home for the children. It was not Lucille's own house—it was old Mrs. Russell's, and the children could be no more than welcome visitors. Their own home was here; she wondered miserably how she could ever have thought otherwise. They had no home but this—and now she was leaving it, but Nicholas had stepped into her place, and they were all going to stay here with him.

She felt sick and shaken, but hardest of all to bear was the relief she had heard in Digby's voice after Nicholas had made his announcement. After one meal with them, after less than an hour in their company, he showed plainly that the noise and confusion, the caper-and-toss of a healthy and boisterous family, were not his idea of gracious living. He had done his best. Everything that patience and amiability could do, he had done—but if this chaos was to be repeated at every meal, his aloof countenance said plainly, he would prefer a tray in the study.

Lucille struggled to be just: he was an only child, she reminded herself, and he lived in a morgue. She had looked forward to opening the closed windows of his house, his life, and letting in stimulating drafts of fresh air; he was kind, but he was not gay because he had never had gay companionship. His evenings were passed with his mother and their music, and it was not his fault that he had more than a touch of heaviness. She—she and the children—could have made him smile, made him younger.

She and the children. But the children, she knew now, would not come—or if they came once, they would not repeat the visit. She had no home to offer them, and she could not—at this late stage—go back on her assurances to Digby that she would not mind living with his mother in his mother's house. She had thought, without knowing that she thought it, that the arrangement would not be for long; Mrs. Russell was old, and old ladies did not last forever. But now, in a flash of blinding certainty, Lucille knew that some old ladies did—and that Mrs. Russell would. She would go on, tough, indestructible, until Lucille's youth was over, until Digby had settled immovably into dullness and middle age.

EDEN

By LIONEL WIGGAM

Everything shone, everything glistened,
All of it new, all of it theirs;
Holding his breath, he marveled, listened:
The lakes were little ungazed-into mirrors,
The grasses grew upright till they might lie there,
The sand lay unruffled till they might walk there,
The air hung unstirring till they might talk there,
Nothing could perish, nothing die there.

Not even love: it would unfold forever,
Forever new and forever theirs.
Here in these groves they would lie down together,
Dreamlessly sleeping, his hand in hers.
Here in the mornings, as even this minute,
She would advance up a hill with her laughter
Rippling before her, the mists closing after,
Her hand reaching toward him with some treasure in it.

The family—here at Wood Mount.

Herself—with the Russells down in Cornwall.

She lifted her head to find Robert Debrett's eyes on her, studying her quietly, and into her answering glance she tried to put all the anger and despair and frustration that filled her, all her dim conviction that this was, in some way, his fault.

Her reason told her that he had nothing to do with it—her instinct told her that his presence among them at this crucial time had been responsible for the confidence, the ease and assurance with which Nicholas had arranged their future. The ideas had come from Nicholas, but if Robert Debrett had not been here to back him, encourage him, Nicholas would not have found sufficient courage to act so effectively. She would have put forward alternative schemes, Mr. Milward would have urged caution, Jeff would have bided his time. It was Robert Debrett—cool, poised, completely sure of himself—who had provided the stiffening. He might not have said much—he might not have said anything—but he had shown Nicholas clearly that he thought his course was the right one.

Perhaps she ought to be grateful. Perhaps this was just what they had all needed: a man of wide knowledge and experience, sufficiently interested in them to want to help—to guide. Perhaps, if she could see clearly, she would see that this role was the one that Digby might have, should have, filled. Perhaps it was her own fault that Digby had proved so totally inadequate—perhaps her own decisiveness had led him to believe that no guidance, no help, was needed.

But the fact remained: Digby was sitting here beside her at the table, looking like a man whose troubles were at an end. He was relieved—he was deeply thankful to know that Simon and Julia and Dominic—and Long John—would not shatter for long the peace of his home. It was too late for him to adapt himself to a large and growing family; he had been reared to quietness and good behavior, and no doubt he felt at this moment as though he had just breakfasted in the jungle—or at the zoo.

Robert Debrett's eyes were still on her, and she became aware, to her horror, that there was no anger and no reproach in her glance: there was only a desperate appeal. She had no clear idea of what she was asking him—or telling him; she knew only that the panic in her heart had shown for a moment in her eyes as she looked at him.

She came out of a trance to realize that the others had gone out, leaving her with Digby in the dining room. Lucille could hear Jeff's voice, and she knew that Nicholas had met him in the hall and had taken him into the drawing room, and that Robert and Roselle were in there too.

An overwhelming sense of her isolation swept over her. It was too sudden, this severance, she thought desolately; they were behaving as though she were already gone.

She got up and walked across the hall, and Digby, after some hesitation, followed her. Lucille made no attempt to approach the subject by a circuitous route: she faced Nicholas and released something of her feeling of reproach.

"You've worked fast," she told him.

He looked at her. "Yes," he admitted. "But ——"

"And without a word to me."

"I told you exactly what I was going to do," he said. "The only surprise is that I did it."

"You had no right to do anything definite without talking it over with me."

"I've got your letter in my pocket," he said mildly. "You'd given orders for the sale of Wood Mount before you'd so much as asked us all what we thought of the idea. You meant well, but you forgot that even if you didn't want to live here any more, we might want to."

"I told you that we couldn't—that I thought we couldn't afford to keep the house. If you had any other ideas, I was the person you ought to have discussed them with."

"Why, Lucille? You've done your whack for us all, and I'm grateful and I think you did a good job. Now it's up to me to let you get out with a clear mind—a clear conscience, if you like. It was nice of Digby here to offer to take us all in, but it wouldn't have worked. Now you can be at ease, be happy; we can look in on you and you can look in on us and you'll be able to feel that everything's ironed out nicely. I'm only sorry you dragged Digby all this way for nothing."

"Not for nothing," said Digby politely. "I wanted to meet you all, rather."

LUCILLE stared at her brother. She wanted to ask him where he was getting money from; he could not take over a house and a family, pay household bills, pay school bills without money. If she asked him; if he said that Robert Debrett—a wave of fury rose and almost choked her—then she would forget her upbringing and she would personally throw every penny back in Robert's handsome, calm, unreadable countenance.

She heard Jeff clearing his throat nervously and turned to face him.

"I came to tell you, Lucille," he said, "that . . . well, as a matter of fact, the house—the house has been sold."

Bewilderment, shock, a feeling of utter misery swung the drawing room round Lucille and settled it again at a somewhat crooked angle. "Sold?" she managed to ask.

"Last night," said Nicholas.

She stared at him, comprehension beginning to creep into her mind. "Who . . . bought it?"

"I did," said Robert.

"I did," said Jeff.

Never powder over a "bare" skin

First—this satinizing base!

Sheer, greaseless—it refines, conceals, protects!

Why do so many women find that powder or make-up overloads pores . . . streaks in laugh lines . . . emphasizes imperfections rather than conceals? Because the tiny flaws of a "bare" skin catch hold of tinted make-ups. Skin often looks coarse, even aging.

Always—before you powder or make-up—film on a flattering base of greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream . . .

Immediately it gives a protective base over just-cleansed skin.

Powder clings flawlessly for hours.

Heavy make-up won't catch in pores or lines . . . won't "crack" in cold weather.

And because Pond's Vanishing Cream is greaseless, make-up doesn't streak, discolor, or get "patchy" at the first blush of skin-heat.

Compare the difference on your own skin! Without Pond's Vanishing Cream—a coarsened, older look. With a filmy protective base of Pond's Vanishing Cream—a sweet freshness . . . a fine-textured, satiny finish. Your skin looks so much lovelier, younger!

Antonia Drexel Earle—

"A light film of Pond's Vanishing Cream is the perfect way to start my make-up. So sheer . . . never heavy or greasy . . . no other make-up base could possibly look so naturally lovely. And Pond's Vanishing Cream gives my skin real protection!" says the enchanting Mrs. Lawrence W. Earle.

To brighten winter-dull skin—this quick 1-Minute Mask!

This very night—free your skin of those flaky patches, that drab, tired-of-winter look with this remarkable at-home treatment: Cover face with a deep mask of snowy-cool Pond's Vanishing Cream. The Cream's "keratolytic" action dissolves away flaky, dead, winter skin. "Tones-up" your complexion! After 60 seconds, tissue off. Now—your skin feels revived . . . and see how much clearer, fresher, brighter it looks!

"I did," said Nicholas. "We all did. All three of us. We put down one third of the price apiece—roughly. In case you're wondering where my share came from, I'll tell you: from the bank. A little thing called a mortgage. The house fetched eight thousand: three thousand from Robert, three from Jeff, the other two from me. The bank got a bit stuffy about security, and Uncle Bill said he'd take care of that. I'm keeping a third of the house for myself and the three kids; Jeff and Roselle are having their bit, and Robert's putting a bathroom in the top flat and using it as a weekend and holiday home for the sole purpose of keeping in touch with Pietro's cooking. Pietro's a fixture, and so is Corny—Miss Cornhill. She ought to go, she says, but she can't make herself do it. And so there you are. You can have a lovely wedding—and none of us hanging round your neck."

He stopped, and nobody spoke for some minutes. Lucille could not have spoken if she had tried; the others were silent, watching her.

At last, clearing his throat a little importantly, Digby decided to voice the appreciation of the Russells.

"I'd like to say," he began, and found the words dying on his lips. Lucille was looking at him, and the expression on her face was so . . . he groped, rejected and finally settled for "ferocious." She did, he thought in astonishment; she looked positively ferocious.

"Please keep out of this," she said in a low, dangerous voice. "This is nothing whatsoever to do with you. It's between Nicholas and myself and nobody—nobody else."

"Except Jeff and Roselle and Robert," Nicholas reminded her.

The hot, tight feeling in Lucille's throat moved to a spot behind her eyes. She felt them smarting, and knew with a sort of horror that in a moment she was going to open her mouth and cry. No, not cry; howl, she told herself in panic. She was going to open her mouth and howl like a dog, howl because it was all over and settled; finished, tied up—to everybody's satisfaction . . . except her own. She was free; she could marry Digby and live happily with him and his mother and Bach and Beethoven and all the other great masters. Her way was clear.

And she was going to howl.

But not here. Not in front of them all. Not with Robert Debrett's cool, quiet, all-seeing eyes upon her. Not with this feeling in her mind that he had done this—somehow—to force her hand. She was too confused to think, too miserable to speak.

Robert Debrett was quite clear on all points but one: how he was to extricate Lucille from an unsuitable engagement. That she had pealed to him he was completely certain had not meant to—but she had been fr ened, and she had turned to him with a spoken plea.

She loved him; if she didn't, she wou have allowed him to stay in Greenhur word from her would have sent him aw but she had not said it. That was enc She thought, the poor sweet, that she stuck with Digby; he would learn soon en that Lucille was not for him.

Robert met Digby's glance briefly; the bent and laid his lips on Lucille's. The took her in his arms and did the thing thoroughly.

At the door, Nicholas turned and stu Digby curiously. In many ways one cou help liking him; it wasn't his fault that been harnessed all his life to a neat little out, and never once been allowed to ge of a trot. He would make a decent so husband for the right girl, but he, Nich had never really thought that Lucille wa right girl.

He heard Digby's voice. "You were wa for me to go away, I presume?"

"Quite right," said Robert. "It's not to tell a girl you love her when her fia around."

"An honest man might have consid coming to me first," pointed out Digby.

"I thought of it," said Robert, "but I pened to like you, and I also—since being honest now—had an idea that you finding the setup rather more than you gained for."

"I was prepared to do my best," said Di "I'm not a family man and I don't preter be. I'll be as honest as yourself and a that—for my mother's sake—I am reli that Wood Mount is not to be sold."

Nicholas looked at his sister. "Can't say something?"

"I've got nothing to say," said Lu "except that if Digby doesn't like my fa he's only got to say so."

Robert took her arm and turned her g to face him. "Listen," he said slowly. "I you. I would like you to know that before—except when reading it from a scri have I asked a woman to marry me. If love this fellow, then say so and we'll all k where we are. But if you feel that—later you could get to like me, I'd be very p to wait."

Lucille's eyes went to him. She put hand and he grasped it; with her glance ing on him, she spoke slowly and drea

"I have an idea," she said, "that I'm a to be jilted."

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27

outstripped all the others and it alone will reach full maturity and ovulate.

"The follicle at this time is about one fourth the size of the ovary. It becomes more prominent as it finds its way to the inside of the ovarian capsule, which it causes to bulge. This finally breaks, the ovum being extruded. It has been known to precipitate enough internal bleeding to produce peritoneal irritation of considerable importance. There have been cases of ruptured tubal pregnancy less severe than some of these ovulatory episodes."

"Then it is this rupture which causes the pain?"

"It is generally considered to be, although some believe that the pain is at least partially due to pathological processes developed in the uterus and tubes, perhaps in response to excessive ovarian secretion. There is also the possibility that intermenstrual pain may be, to some extent, due to the swelling of the ovary itself."

"I guess I ought to consider myself lucky that my trouble is no worse than it is. What I don't understand, Doctor, is why I should bleed outside when the trouble is inside the abdomen."

"The 'spotting' which you described is much less than the bleeding experienced by some women, which may be severe enough to resemble a menstrual flow. It is either a small amount of blood leaking down the tubes lowing the ovulation, or the result of engo ment of the uterus with a leakage through uterine lining. It can be controlled by mone treatment if this seems necessary advisable."

"What about the vaginal discharge?"

"A mucous discharge occurs to a great lesser degree in most women. Since it symptom of congestion and activity of uterine glands, it is often rather violent before or at the end of the menstrual flow sometimes at mid-period, as in your ca wouldn't worry about it. And, Mrs. Hill —

"Yes, Doctor?"

"You told me you were anxious to ha child. In one way you might consider you fortunate; at least you know definitely w ovulation occurs. It is common knowl that pregnancy has to take place, with fe ceptions, during the week following ovula which is known as the 'fertile period.' Th accomplish pregnancy just after this i menstrual pain has occurred. Unless the some other factor which we have not as investigated, I prophesy a very fair chanc success."

"You couldn't tell me anything that w make me happier, Doctor."

Another article in this series by Doctor Saffor appear next month.

THE DOCTOR ALWAYS DOODLED

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33

hen Nature has been good to you, Miss n. Yes, I think she has. You're an ordinarily pretty woman, for one thing."
e sat up straight in her chair. "Why, you, doctor."
scowled at her. "Don't thank me. Thank ancestral chromosomes." He returned to oodling. "Perhaps you're leaving to get ed?"
h, no," she said, with an audible gasp.
ou seem startled at the idea."
m not startled. I'm just ——" ow that I think of it, why haven't you married before this?"
ecause I've been too busy earning a liv-Jane said. "And besides, I'm never to marry except for ——"
or love?"
es, for love. I suppose you think that's hly old-fashioned and romantic."

," he said. "As a matter of fact, I it's fundamental. I got married on a al basis, as a matter of biological ur-, so to speak, and it didn't work. I don't my wife—my ex-wife—for divorce." ou didn't love her?"
o."
e drew a deep breath. "Doctor, have er loved anyone?" looked up, stared at her blankly for a ent, then smiled. "Yes, once. When I leven years old."
h," Jane said.
was in love with a girl in grade school,
home in Cincinnati where I was born.
as a plump little thing, with blue eyes blond hair—lighter than yours—and I ht she was an angel from heaven."
id you tell her so?"
o. I was too bashful. The closest I ever to it was when I sent her a homemade tine—a picture of my heart with an stuck through it."
nd did that win her?"
o, it did not."
ow sad," Jane said. "What became of little blond angel?"
he grew up and married a streetcar con-
r."
think that's very sad," Jane said.
ell!" the doctor said. "We're getting off bject." He started to doodle again. "You
't yet given me your reason for wanting ve."
e said, "Must I have a reason?"
es, you must."
hy must I?"

"Because you're not the type to act irresponsibly. You're a sensible young woman. You ——"

"How do you know I'm sensible? You don't know anything about me, really. I mean, all you know is that I'm an efficient nurse and—you said I was pretty—but I mean you've never really noticed me, or ——"

"Of course I've noticed you!"

"Not really, I mean. That is—I mean ——"

He threw down his pen. "What do you mean?" he demanded. "Why are you leaving your job? You can't just walk in here—at the end of a long, hard day—and tell me you're quitting without telling me why."

"Maybe I don't know why."

"You do know."

"Why do I? Sometimes people just act on instinct."

He looked at her, ran both hands through his close-cropped brown hair and then, picking up his pen, went back to his sketching. "Miss Martin," he said, "I believe you once told me that you'd read my book?"

"Yes, Doctor Palmer."

"Did you understand it?"

"Well, I think I got the main point."

"Then you know that in the human nervous system—yours, for instance—there's a bundle of nerve fibers, called the pyramidal tract, that runs from the brain all the way down the spinal cord?"

"Yes, doctor."

"In other words, there's a connection between the cerebral cortex and the lower reflex centers?"

"Yes, doctor."

"And you also know," he said, doodling industriously, "that this connection means that people are probably conscious of their actions, even when they're responding to some so-called instinctive or primitive impulse?"

"Well, yes, I ——"

"Miss Martin, I assume that your pyramidal tract is in good working order. Therefore, when you decide to walk out of my life ——"

"Your life, Doctor Palmer?"

"I mean, my office. When you plan to walk out of my office you know what you're doing, and you know very well why you're doing it."

Jane sat forward on the edge of her chair. "All right, then, I do know. But I'm not going to tell you the reason."

Without looking up, he suddenly barked at her, "Damn it, why not?"

She didn't answer and, lifting his head, he saw that her eyes were unusually large, unusually bright. "You've never sworn at me before," she said.

"I apologize."

"You needn't. I liked it. It made you seem . . . human."

He glared at her. "Have you any idea that I'm not?"

"Oh, I'm quite sure that you're human—anatomically."

"What do you mean, anatomically?"

"I mean I assume that your pyramidal tract is working too."

"Of course it's working! What are you driving at?"

"Well, I mean that you're probably conscious of what you're doing in asking me all these questions."

"Certainly I'm conscious. I want to find out your reason for going, so that I can try to persuade you to stay."

"You want me to stay?"

"Very much," he said.

"Why?" Jane asked. She leaned forward till her bosom was pressing against the edge of the desk. "You must know why!"

"I've already told you why. I depend on you. I need you."

"You need me?"

"Yes. This office has never been run as smoothly as it has since you came."

"Oh," she said. "It's the office that needs me."

"It certainly does." He was sketching slowly now. "That's what I've been trying to tell you."

"I see," Jane said. She put her hands on the desk and pulled herself to her feet. "If you'll stop doodling, I'll tell you my reason for going."

He stopped. But he didn't look up. He was staring at the design he had drawn and his voice sounded queer as he said, "What is your reason?"

"I'm in love with you," Jane said. "I've been in love with you for more than a year—maybe from the first day I came to your office—and I'm not going to stay here and eat my heart out. Because I know you've never thought of loving me. You've never looked at me as a woman. You're not looking at me now, and you never will. You'll probably never love anybody and I—I want to get out before I go all to pieces. So good-by, Doctor Palm——"

Her voice broke. She whirled around, stumbled against the chair and then started blindly for the door.

"Miss Martin! Wait!"

"No, no!"

"Come back here."

"No, please. I just want to ——"

"But I've got a phenomenon to show you!"

"A phenomenon?"

"Yes. Come and see."

She turned then and walked back warily toward him. He was still staring at the piece of paper on the desk before him. "It's a remarkable example," he said, "of a purposeful act that did not involve the factor of consciousness."

SHE stopped a step short of his chair. "If you're going to talk neurology ——"

"No. Look here." He reached out and caught her wrist and pointed to his handiwork. "See what I've drawn without knowing it."

Jane leaned down and looked at the result of his doodling.

"Oh!" she said. "Oh, Jonathan!"

There on the paper, surrounded by a border of lacelike squiggles, was the drawing of a heart—not an anatomical, but a conventional heart—pierced by the conventional Cupid's arrow.

"Jonathan," she whispered, "do you mean it?"

"I must mean it, don't you think?" he said. "Because it's an exact copy of the only valentine I ever sent to the only girl I ever loved."

"The only girl you ever loved," Jane said, "till now."

"Yes," the doctor said, "till now."

Then he laughed, and stood up, and took her in his arms. END

"That's a new kind of grunt for an answer. What does it mean?"

It's SO wonderful!

Alka-Seltzer®
BRAND SOOTHING RELIEF FROM ACID INDIGESTION
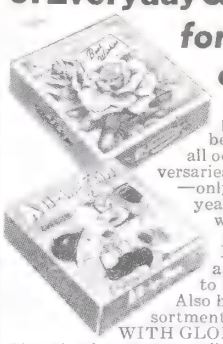
AT ALL DRUGSTORES
MILES LABORATORIES, INC., ELKHART, IND



CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

Keep it Clean WITH ANGUS
ALL-PURPOSE-DOUBLE CLOTHS

No need to buy a dish cloth AND a cleaning cloth... Angus is the answer to EVERY CLEANING NEED. Not "rags", but full-size, quality double cloths... Soft, Durable, Highly Absorbent and they PROTECT THE HANDS.
FORREST YARN CO., LANSDOWNE, PA.

Make Extra Money!
Sell One Year's Supply of Everyday Greeting Cards for only $1.00

Sensational value! Complete, balanced collection of beautiful greeting cards for all occasions—Birthdays, Anniversaries, Get-Well, Baby-Birth, etc. —only $1. Enough cards for one year's needs in average family, would cost more than $2.00 if cards bought one at a time. Friends, neighbors amazed and delighted. You make up to 50c on every box you sell! Also humorous "All-in-Fun" Assortment. MORE EXTRA CASH WITH GLORIOUS EASTER CARDS! Also 40 other easy-to-sell money-makers.
I TRUST YOU WITH SAMPLES! Rush your name and address. SEND NO MONEY! We'll mail you sample of two popular assortments, entirely on approval, with FREE illustrated Catalog of all big-profit items, plus money-making plans. Act TODAY!
WALLACE BROWN, 225 Fifth Ave., Dept. A-9, New York 10, N. Y.

15-Minute Meat Loaf

When Hunt's home economist developed this recipe she said, "Busy homemakers and career girls will appreciate this one!"

And you will! Because, besides being a "quickie" – just fifteen minutes cooking time – it is truly delicious with its savory tomato gravy!

Be sure to use Hunt's Tomato Sauce when you make it. For Hunt's brings you true tomato goodness seasoned just right. No starchy fillers, no "soupy" flavor. The beautiful color tells you that it's all tomato.

When you and your family have enjoyed this delicious 15-Minute Meat Loaf, you'll want to try Hunt's Tomato Sauce in many of your own favorite recipes. Simply add it to stews, soups, casseroles, meat loaf, spaghetti. You'll gain flavor for your cooking!

1½ lbs. ground beef 1½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper 2 tbsp. chopped onion
2 tbsp. chopped green pepper (optional)
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce 2 tbsp. sugar
¼ tbsp. Worcestershire Sauce

Combine beef, salt, pepper, onion, green pepper and ½ can Hunt's Tomato Sauce. Press into greased 9 x 12 x 2-inch baking dish. Bake on lowest shelf in hot oven (450°F.) for 10 minutes. Broil 5 minutes longer. While meat cooks, combine remaining tomato sauce, sugar and Worcestershire. Boil about 3 minutes. Add meat drippings, if desired. Cut meat in half crosswise. Arrange sandwich fashion on platter, pouring sauce between and on top. Serves 6.

WANT RECIPES? There's a delicious one on the back of every can of Hunt's Tomato Sauce – at your grocer's. Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, California.

Hunt-for the best

Seldom apart, Sarvises stroll with wheelbarrow of laundry to car, drive to launderette. On 2½ Florida acres ($2200) they lived in trailer while building a home.

How Young America Lives— at seventy-five!

"Chirp Cottage," their 3-room guesthouse, and "Birdsong," the 6-room main house, join via breezeway. Interiors are almost done.

Retirement, for Guy and Maude Sarvis, rings the bell for starting a whole new life.

BY BETTY COE SPICER

PHOTOGRAPHS BY CARROLL SEGHERS

Birdsong, Woodsmere on Lake Lucy
Orlando, Florida

Dear Editors: We have no retirement blues, believe me! I never felt more creative in my life, except when giving my four wonderful babies to the world. I still look around me sometimes and wonder if I didn't die back there in 1951 and if this isn't my personal kind of heaven! Until he was almost fifty my husband taught in the University of Nanking in China, a mission college where we lived on a substandard missionary salary. Needless to say, with four children to put through college (they have, of course, long since established homes of their own) we have never had enough money to even attempt doing the things we've gone ahead and done. It does seem as if the story of what we've done here might encourage some other retiring people in danger of feeling that life has ended and give them a vision of how beautifully creative and absorbing retirement can be with a little imagination.

Maude's recipe for living: "Lots of interests." She cooks, weaves upholstery materials, sews curtains and slip covers, paints, writes, dances and takes Spanish.

Larks sing, gardenias grow, avocados cost a nickel. Guy and Maude now budget $2400-a-year income from Social Security and pension.

Perhaps it all came about because my husband used to scare me to death by saying that when he could no longer teach, he wanted to die. So when retirement finally came, I determined to have a house for Florida living. And since we were both seventy years old, it had to be a house mighty easy to care for! I wanted spaciousness in a hot country, and got it by a living room—and a real living room, with room for my loom, for dining, hobbies, books, and so on, 24′x26′ with a small kitchen taken out of one corner, making it ⌞ shaped. (And what a darling knotty-pine kitchen!)

We accepted a neighbor's offer of a trailer to live in while we built first a 20′x24′ guesthouse, Chirp Cottage, which we rent to friends during the winter, and have for our own guests the rest of the year. This is a cute little place, too, which our friends clamor to live in! A retired couple from Syria will live in it this fall while building their own house across the lake. We moved into it before it had any doors or screens, any bathroom or cupboards—when our trailer was sold from under us! We finished it and lived in it until we moved into Birdsong House five months later. CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

Daughter Betty's family with 3 children (Sarvises have 6 grandchildren) visits from St. Petersburg. Playground was cleared by Guy.

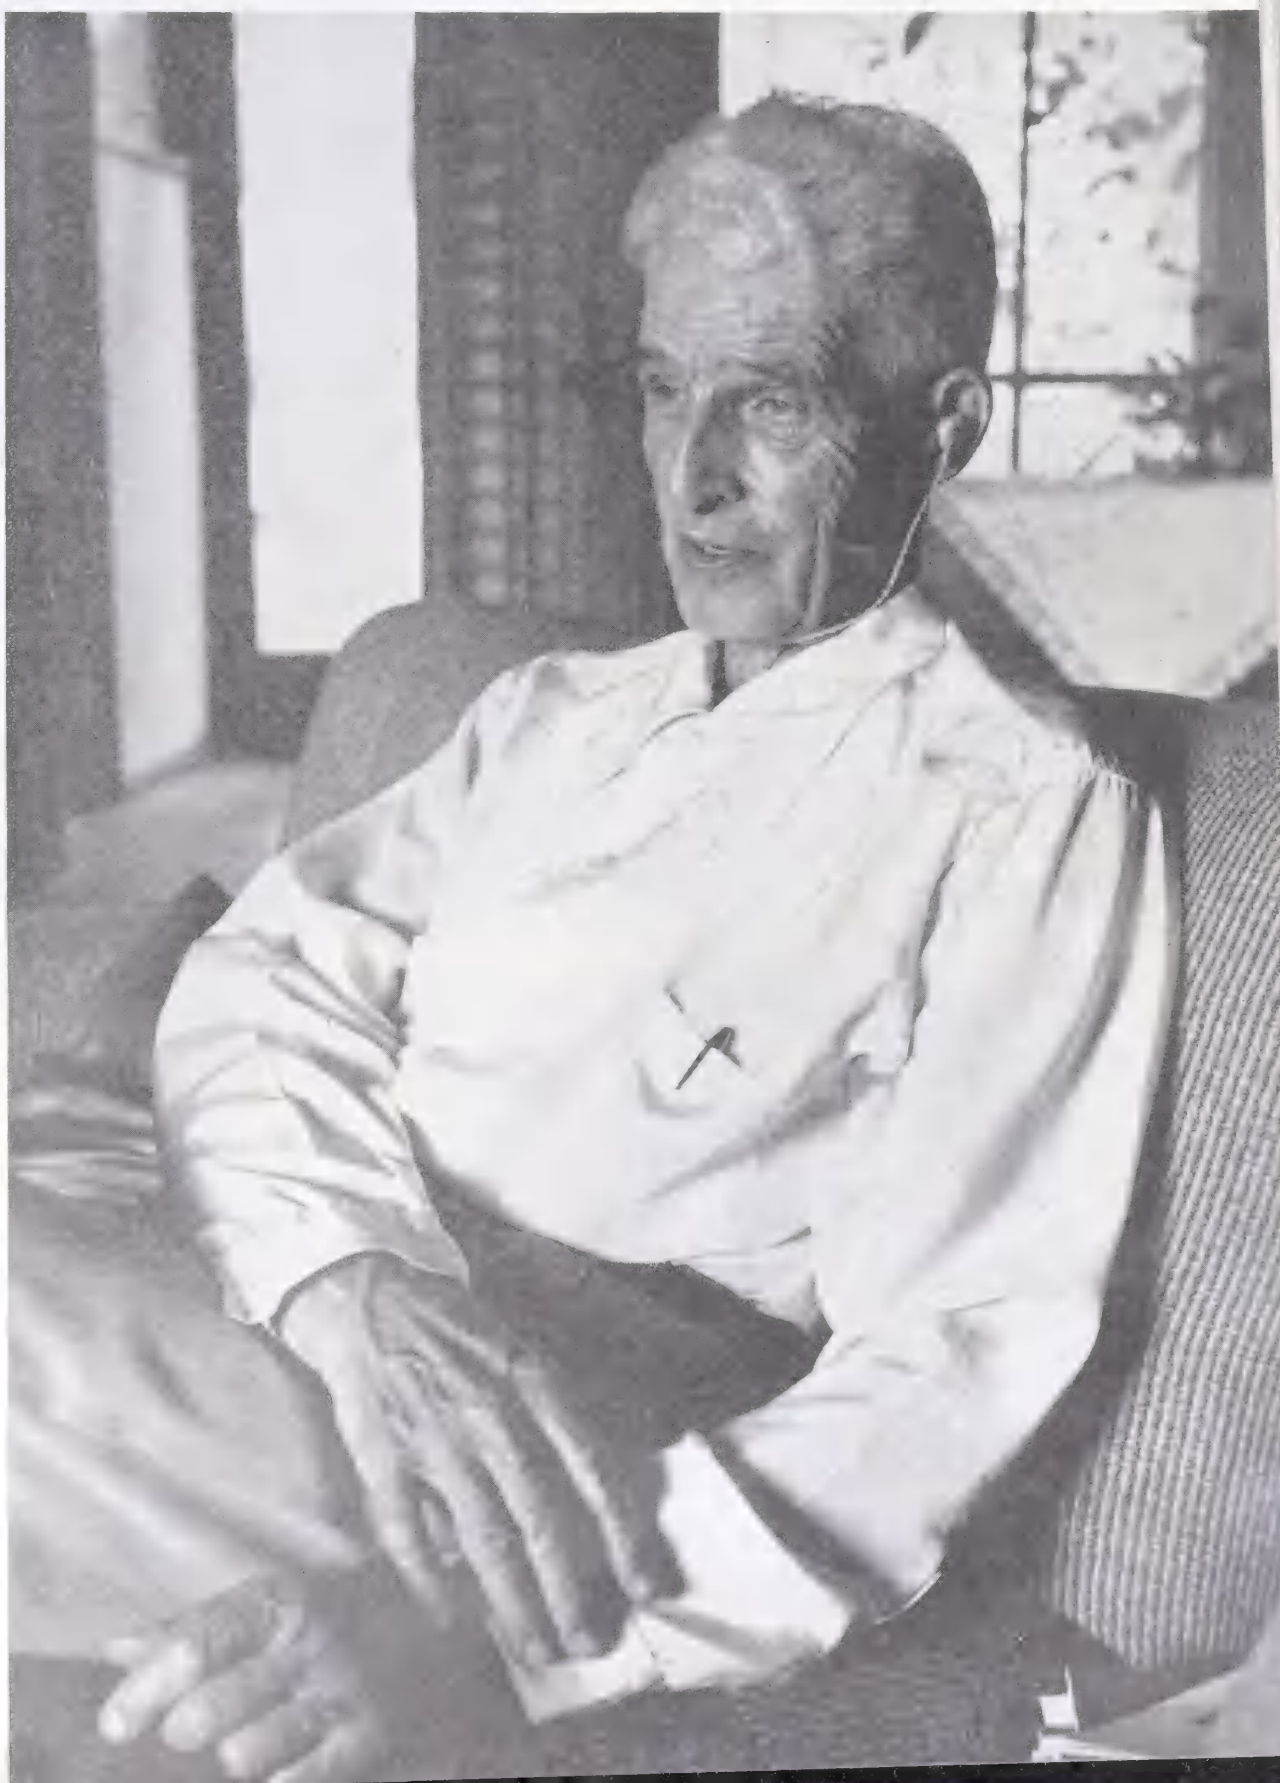
Lake Lucy is framed like a painting by Sarvis picture window—"beauty shouldn't be skimped on!"

Eating is mobile. Guy and Maude wheel cart to lawn, lake or breezeway for lunch tête-à-tête.

"Passionate picnickers," Sarvises describe nselves. On shoestring, they've driven to Mexico, nokies, New England with a yen for outdoor life.

At 75, Guy is a do-it-yourself fan. He hired masons but did his own insulating and he paneled walls, hung doors, made built-ins.

Gardener Maude tends to fiddle-leafed fig, fishtail palm, poinsettia, rose, hibiscus. Guy's bird feeder draws cardinals, jays, mockingbirds.



"Learned square dancing at 50, can't get gh of it! . . ." Maude's feet fly, Guy is courtly in favorite numbers—Lancers, Lady Walpole's Reel.

Chica, the Chihuahua, nestles in Guy's lap. ah Pete, the Siamese, naps under table as Maude nakes pottery. No TV. Conversation preferred.

Sociable twosome, she's company as he saws eplace logs. Once Guy said, "If I retire, I'll die," but now feels—"I've started a new chapter."

onary and professor, Guy taught sociology for 38 years.

No stay-at-homes, Sarvises enjoy exploring. Guy had 75 birthday letters from world-wide friends he wishes he could visit.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 108 How about a story of a couple who, in their seventies, bought a piece of cut-over Florida jungle, replete with chiggers, wood roaches and even snakes (we killed two corals the first year), cleared it, built a driveway passable for the trucks, then found a couple of masons willing to work by the day, and started in and built two nice houses and made a garden, and we think we have built for less than $8 a square foot! Sincerely,

MAUDE TAYLOR SARVIS

WATCHING the Sarvises—Guy is 75, Maude, 73—sketching further ambitious plans for their two-and-a-half-acre lake-front home, you have a feeling that somehow you must have made a mistake: these brisk, handsome people can't possibly be septuagenarians. You're even surer of that after you talk with them. Their interests are tremendously wide, their enthusiasms keen, their future apparently limited only by the modest retirement pension they live on.

They took a trip to Orlando, Florida, the winter before Professor Sarvis retired—after thirty-eight years of teaching sociology, fifteen of them at the University of Nanking in China—and they fell in love with the place. When they bought their property on Lake Lucy—one of three small lakes that make up Woodsmere, an area "just too far from town to be called a suburb"—they accepted a neighbor's offer of a trailer and lived on their land while they were clearing and building. They had intended living in an Orlando cottage bought for the purpose, but the long-time tenants of the place, one an invalid, were greatly upset by the prospect of moving.

"I hate to put them out," Maude worried, and Guy agreed. When CONTINUED ON PAGE 112

She dresses up and puts a bow in her hair when going out with Guy. "He's such a handsome man. I was a tomboy when I met him."

Always a venture ahead—they plan to see South America, read all the great books, take up new skills if they can find time.

Maude, as fond photo keeper—"Here we are engaged, in 1908"—has just begun a Florida album.

Wow! My Mom's gone back to Butter!

Trust your kids, too, to taste the difference. Genuine butter does something wonderful for the flavor of foods—adds a brightness and special satisfaction you get with no other spread.

Why? Only butter has all the flavor and natural goodness of r pints of real cream in every pound. Pretty good reason for you to get back to genuine butter, too. How about tomorrow?

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION
"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"
20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois

their neighbor offered that trailer. Maude said, "I'm willing, if you are." Guy was.

They cleared their land themselves, all but two areas left wooded to screen the road and a neighbor's dump. Then they built a driveway, hired masons by the day and started work on the smaller of two planned buildings. This was to have been a combination carport and shop (for Guy's woodworking tools, Maude's loom and a longed-for pottery kiln), but it evolved into a compact three-room cottage as well. When their borrowed trailer had to be returned to its owner, they moved into the unfinished cottage and went right on building.

The cottage finished, they began the main house. Birdsong—the many birds that woke them every morning gave the place its name long before it was completed.

They did have to economize, but both were determined that for this house "economize" was not to mean "skimp." "It is foolish to live in Florida and not have windows wide enough to let in the sun and the breeze," Guy said. And Maude added, "I'll sacrifice almost anything for spaciousness." Together they outlined a plan. If they could live on Guy's small pension and their Social Security—total, about $2400 a year—and devote all the income from two properties (the small house in Orlando is rented for $52.50 a month, and their former home in Ohio brings in about $187 a month from tenants who are buying it in installments) to retiring the debt on this new home, they could have just the house they wanted.

Masons put up the cement-block walls of Birdsong, built the fireplace, put the roof on—though not the insulation; Guy did that himself. He put in all partitions in the house and did the wood paneling over them. He hung the doors—"a tricky job, since a fraction-of-an-inch error throws the whole thing off." He made all the many built-ins—shelves, cabinets and chests—and painted the outside of the house the pale, soft green chosen as the best background for the luxuriant flowers, vines and shrubs Florida's semitropical climate grows in profusion.

Their 24′ x 26′ living room has a beamed ceiling, a big brick fireplace, wide windows framing "our million-dollar painting"—Lake Lucy and the gently rolling country on the far side. Along one wall Guy built shelves and cupboards for books, a record player, a growing collection of records, favorite bits of pottery—Mexican and Chinese as well as Maude's own work. Most of the furnishings are modern, but a few old family pieces—a desk, a cherry chest and table—fit in comfortably, as do teakwood-and-brass tables from China and brightly painted wooden and tin masks from Mexico. A delicate wrought-iron "bride's lantern" from China hangs at one side of the modern fireplace.

Partitioned off by the fireplace and by an easily movable room divider (built by Guy, it incorporates breakfast bar, shelves and cabinets) is Maude's small, meticulously planned kitchen with its pine-paneled walls, double sink of gleaming stainless steel ("my luxury"), and sunny window overlooking a terrace where there is comfortable outdoor furniture.

There are two bedrooms, both bright and spacious with doors opening onto a tree-shaded lawn. The bath faces a small dressing room across a closet-lined hall. ("The dressing room is for those times when we have so many guests we both give up our bedrooms and sleep on the breezeway.") This screened breezeway connects the main house with the cottage. A narrow ell of it doubles back to the kitchen along one side of the living room, providing a breakfast room for sunny mornings. The wide door between living room and breezeway is the folding type which can be thrown back to make the two already large rooms into one huge one. There are no thresholds in the house.

"We like to eat our meals wherever the spirit moves us—on the terrace, the breezeway, in front of the picture window overlooking the lake." This is easily accomplished with a light, three-tiered aluminum table on wheels which Maude calls "one of my indispensables. I just load everything on this and push it to wherever we want to eat."

She says, "We've had a specific division of labor on this project. Being independent, we both specialize—and respect each other's specialties." Maude was purchasing agent for all the materials that went into the house. She did all the interior painting and finished the woodwork. She also planted the "many more than a hundred" small trees, vines and shrubs, made all the curtains and slip covers. "You can tell that I love clear blues, greens and yellows—sea and sun colors—they are all through the house."

Closets in the house have accordion-folding doors made of basswood slats and designed to waste no space. Circulation of air is essential during the Florida summers when heat and dampness make for a really serious mildew problem.

Accounting on the cost of Birdsong isn't complete yet, but the Sarvises think that they have built their "more than 1500 square feet of house and 260 of breezeway, including well, pump and septic tank, for less than $8 a square foot—not including our own labor." Estimated total cost, including the $2200 price of the land, from $12,000 to $15,000. Estimated value, about $20,000.

There are still things to be done. Only Guy's room is what Maude calls "really decorated." The dark red cement floors must be sanded and waxed with heavy red wax to give them the proper finish. The Sarvises would like to build a second terrace in the L between living room and breezeway.

Both Guy and Maude love the house and are very proud of it. Guy will say smilingly that "It's the hunt, not the hare, and the real enjoyment is in the doing, not the having," but he is pleased with their accomplishment and Maude feels that having this three-year work project has greatly eased the shock of retirement he once dreaded so. For herself, she says, building Birdsong has lightened the "no longer necessary" feeling that comes to a woman when her children are all grown up. Planning ahead for this time, she never let herself give up interests outside her home. "In fact," she says, "I was a selfish mother, and made a point of constantly acquiring new interests. Weaving and ceramics among the newest." Weaving supplies are limited in nearby shops, but Maude's instructor says she has "a natural eye for color" and she is looking forward to visiting a well-stocked mill she has heard of and choosing "whole armloads of materials" for her loom.

"These are my favorite pieces of pottery, so far." She displays a set of small bowls in soft pastels. Each has a simple, stylized design—a leaf, a flower, a whimsical horse a child would delight in. "These were made in molds. Now this"—a larger green-and-terra-cotta bowl—"this was simply pressed." Her hands turn and pat the bowl deftly to show how this was done. "It is unusually large for a bowl made by this method." She puts it back on its shelf. "I'll do more when I get the new kiln."

Maude is also learning Spanish. Two summers in Mexico gave her "enough to manage," but she wants to be really proficient in the language.

"We've always been great 'trippers,'" she smiles. "Our travel generally had to be done on a shoestring (provided by squeezing the budget and sometimes, I'm afraid, even putting off jobs we might have done to finish the house sooner). We travel by car and avoid staying in the big, expensive touristy places. Sometimes we have camped out and picnicked on food bought in crossroads grocery stores. We're lucky, too, in having many friends to exchange visits with. In Mexico City, we took an apartment and I loved bargaining with the stallkeepers in the local markets. In the villages where we went looking for special kinds of pottery, we could always find a woman who would cook a meal for us—and you get to know the people so much better that way." Biggest bargain of all: enough fine changeable silk to make two dresses ("still my Sunday favorites") for $1 a yard. Dressmaker's fee, $5 a dress.

Besides Mexico, Guy and Maude have been to New York, Cape Cod, the Smokies, British Columbia, and California, where two of their four children live—daughter Mary Alice helped finance this trip. Next time, they'd like to go to Mexico again, or maybe Jamaica or the South American countries—"though you can't drive there!"

"Travel gets a little more complicated when you own pets," Maude says. "But somehow any time we stay in one place more than a few weeks, we do own them." Two current pets are greatly loved and enjoyed, a Siamese cat named Sugah Pete and a bouncy six-month-old Chihuahua puppy named Chica. They get along amazingly well. Dignified Pete puts up with Chica's teasing, with having his ears nipped, his tail pounced on and his food bowl robbed until he gets good and tired. Then he retires to the security of a high chest in Guy's room. He scolds the puppy, sometimes slaps her, but never unsheathes his claws. Both pets seem to know that though mice, snakes, even butterflies are fair game for chasing, the birds their people think so much of are to be left severely alone.

The Sarvises don't own a television set ("What happens to conversation?" they ask dubiously), but their radio is a source of information ("We listen to the news with breakfast, our favorite commentators with dinner") as well as pleasure ("Monday night is wonderful for music programs"). Additions to their record library are apt to be symphonies, choral group recordings or square-dance music. They are ardent square-dance fans.

"Guy and I never danced when we were young," Maude says. "Our families didn't believe in it. We discovered square dancing when we were nearly fifty, and we mean to go on with it until we die!"

Any Saturday night during the winter Birdsong's big living room is apt to resound to the strains of music for Lady Walpole's Reel or the lancers, and the voice of Dr. Harry Irwin, a friend and neighbor who calls the dances:

> "—— half right and left, swing your partner and promenade home ——"

Maude, her cheeks pink from the lively dance and her blue eyes sparkling, detaches herself from the group and goes into the kitchen to get out her biggest coffeepot while she explains, "Our square-dance club is made up of people who live in the seventeen houses around the lake—mostly retired teachers like us. Sometimes we meet at members' houses if they have a room large enough, and sometimes

HOW THE SARVISES SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

Day-to-day bills are met from $200-a-month pension and Social Security income. An additional $2874 a year from former property goes directly into paying the $8000 debt on Birdsong. Sarvises pay no income tax. Under Florida's homestead tax-exemption law, property tax is low. Twenty-year life insurance is paid up. Most furniture came from former home. Guy built new items and these and appliances came out of their building fund. A menu of vegetables, local fruit, fish and poultry dishes comes to a moderate total; Maude can buy a watermelon for 35 cents, pick papayas in the back yard. "Now we're settled, we don't keep a strict budget. Just spend. And what's left over we use for entertainment, house, garden, hobbies or postage stamps."

Food	$60.00	Dry cleaning, shoe repair, household needs	5.00
Clothing	12.00	Club dues	2.00
Property tax	9.00	Books, magazines, newspapers	4.00
Fuel, light, water	11.00	Church ($100 a year, and this year an extra $100 for building fund)	17.00
Telephone	4.00	Charities (a large share to friends abroad—food and clothing boxes where needed)	17.00
Hospitalization insurance	7.00	Total	$183.00
Medical and dental (drugs and vitamins are provided by Dr. Mary Alice)	5.00
Car expense	30.00

a nearby village hall. We don't fuss vith refreshments or party trimmings; cing itself is the thing and we all get a eal of fun out of it."
Sarvises are members of the Unitarian in Orlando and they are active in most affairs. Sometimes, after church, they town for Sunday dinner at a favorite ant where the palm-shaded dining ter-erlooks a blue and glistening lake—"A at."
belongs to the University Club and njoy going there for special parties.
gh we don't enjoy driving after dark," says, "and it is fourteen miles. That nits the number of movies we see."
winter they are rejoining a group which every other week to discuss books.
cally our only chance to see young peo-se days," Maude says ruefully. "We're y oldsters in the group."
haps that isn't such a good thing," Guy
th a twinkle. "Because we are older, tend to listen very politely when we is a great temptation to talk too much."
four Sarvis children are adults now, of with homes of their own. All were born the Sarvises' years in Nanking. Idealiz-United States, they were still far more r with the ways of China, and there a good many pangs of readjustment" ney came home to a country they really ttle about.
Chinese love children so," Maude
Any blond, blue-eyed child is apt to be petted and spoiled. I remember when Alice was going through that fussy-clothes period we found she was chang-dress three or four times a day and g the soiled, wrinkled one to one of our e servants to launder. The servant mind—he thought it quite fitting—but I'd have to make Mary Alice see rong it was for a little girl to cause a man—servant or no—all that work just fy her whim of the moment." Maude over the memory of her solution to the n. "I told her that if she wanted to wear se clean dresses she'd have to launder erself. The servant was scandalized, but 't long before Mary Alice was wearing ne clean dress a day and taking reason-re about keeping it clean." All the chiluffered miserably when, after begging o "say something in Chinese," friends erica laughed because words they spoke ch a "singsong" rhythm. And American vas practically a whole new language for o learn.

, the eldest, is 41. ("He was too charma child. Things came too easily to He now lives in San Francisco, where rks as a draftsman for an engineering nd devotes his spare time to a theater in which his wife, Winifred, member of troupe during the war, works with him.
have two children: Deborah, 6, and 3-ld Paul.
39, psychiatrist Dr. Mary Alice is co-or of a clinic she helped to establish in rancisco, has just finished building a of her own there. "Now maybe she'll he time to find just the right man to ." Maude smiles.
y, 37, is married to builder Erwin Luse, Petersburg—"Close enough for frequent
" The Luses have three children: Bob, 15 s Robin until last year, when he rebelled sisted it had to be Bob); Janet, 11; and Danny. "Betty is a born mother," e says admiringly of this youngest ter.
lor, 30, who "always hated being the of the family," is a painter and has just his master's degree. He plans to teach.
and his wife, Constance, have a six-
-old baby girl, Alison."
a keepsake for these children and grand-en, Maude is writing a family history.
touching on just the high points of the career, it is apt to be a fat volume be-he finishes it.

y Sarvis was born July 6, 1879, in Ponllinois, but his earliest memories are of on a farm near Highmore, South Da-
His father raised wheat and dairy cows.
According to Guy, who, with his brother, had to work the land and milk the cows, it was "forty acres of wheat to work in the daytime, and forty acres of cows to milk at night." He went to country schools, "hired out" to tend sheep when he was ten. His mother died when he was very young. "Guy's early life was deprived of affection," Maude says. "His father remarried and his stepmother was one of those unlucky, neurotic people who can never really accept—and perhaps, in the truest sense, inspire—affection. She was always in need of reassurance that no one could find a way to give her." (Maude, who took care of her the last eight years of her life, still speaks regretfully of her own inability to ease "Aunt Isabel's" unhappy conviction that she was unloved and unwanted.)

Guy taught in country schools for a while to pay his tuition at a business college in Sioux Falls. Then he went to New York, where he worked as a secretary for the Y.M.C.A. a year to finance more education. He had two years at Mount Hermon before going back to work—this time for the Y.M.C.A. in India. India was fascinating, but he still wanted college in the United States, so after two years he found a job that would take him home again—that of secretary to the writer of a series of travel books whose titles all began A Yankee in —— The trip home via Africa (A Yankee in Pygmyland) gave Guy enough money to start college. He chose Drake University at Des Moines. There he met a very pretty blond, blue-eyed tomboy named Maude Taylor. They were engaged at the end of his junior year.

Maude, who met him in class, noticed him first because he looked like a neighbor of hers back in Shelby County, Iowa. A second look told her that this handsome six-footer had "a fine, strong face—and the most beautiful hair I had ever seen." It was wavy, black, touched prematurely with silver. Maude was intrigued by his traveled background too. She had always wanted to travel. "When I was a little Cold-weather blows don't tear new Scotties—yet they are softer than ever!

YOU DON'T
POKE A HOLE THROUGH IT

...new Scotties are strong even when wet

A simple test. Hold any tissue without wet strength under the faucet. See how water makes a hole instantly.

Hold a new "wet-strength" Scottie under the faucet. You will see how it holds water without going to pieces.

Scotties wipe sniffly noses and streaming eyes without going to pieces. Scotties have such wonderful wet strength they stand up even to a he-man's sneezes and blows.

Yet their touch is gentle, soothingly soft to tender, wind-roughened skin.

As for make-up, they whisk off "wet" face creams, greasy lipsticks neatly and cleanly. They don't shred or leave annoying lint.

Keep new "wet-strength" Scotties handy for your whole family. Another great Scott value. Scotties are thrifty.

"SCOTTIES," REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

girl," she says, "I used to sit and wait for the daily train to go by, listen to the whistle echoing and wonder whether I'd ever get on that train myself and go off to new and wonderful places."

Maude's people had moved to Shelby County from Eastern Iowa in a covered wagon. Her father paid $10 an acre for eighty acres of untouched prairie land. Her mother, Mary Ellender, "so homesick she almost died for the sight of trees," wept almost constantly until her husband planted trees for her—fourteen acres of them. Either the trees or the fact that a number of her relatives came west and settled nearby salved her misery. As Maude puts it, "She settled down and had children as fast as she could." Maude was the third of six. She remembers her childhood as happy. Her father was "stern, but fair." Her mother, "tired a lot, sometimes tense and nervous," still found time to play with her children and introduce them to books and music. "It was she who brought all the color and imagination into our lives." Her daughters were taught the housekeeping skills, and as soon as they were old enough they all had regular chores to do. Maude's own earliest memory of this, "standing on a chair so I could reach high enough to dry the dishes."

She also remembers as "the greatest compliment my father ever paid to my ability as a housekeeper" the time he trusted her to cook for the threshers when her mother was ill one harvest season. Every farm housewife tried to outdo every other in setting a lavish table for the threshers. There were at least a dozen of them, Maude remembers. "And if you gave them roast beef for dinner, you had to cook chicken for supper. And pies! Hundreds of them, I think. Not to mention the mountains of hot biscuits, fresh bread, vegetables and preserves."

"School was like doors opening—every new idea presented led to something even more fascinating." Like Guy, Maude taught in a country school for two years to earn money for college.

"I never thought Guy would fall in love with me," she says with a smile. "There were so many pretty, dignified girls who liked him, and I was such a tomboy! But he did." They were married September 10, 1908, in the small church Maude and her family attended at Harlan, Iowa. Maude spent hours sewing "a million yards of lace and insertion" into her wedding dress and the bell-shaped petticoat that went under it. ("Very daring, to wear only one.") One sister was her maid of honor and she had four bridesmaids. They didn't wear special bridesmaids' dresses, only regular light summer ones, with wreaths of pink and blue asters in their hair and bouquets to match. Maude and her sister had "store" bouquets. They had decorated the church themselves with greenery from the woods and garden flowers.

"On the morning of my wedding day I suddenly remembered a scene from years back," Maude laughs. "One lovely summer day when my sisters and I, in our early teens, sat under a tree crying our eyes out because someday we'd get married and be separated. And a family of elderly spinster sisters who lived nearby telling us, 'Don't be silly! Do you want to grow up to be like us?'"

One fear haunted Maude. Her father was a "plain" man who made few outward displays of affection and hated anything "fancy." "In those days," Maude says, "a wedding procession always went down the aisle in a sort of hesitation-step march. I just knew my father wouldn't do that, and I was scared to death he wouldn't give me away at all!"

But Lutellas Sylvender Taylor (whose distinctive name represented the romantic side of his mother's nature) did escort his daughter to the altar, hesitation step and all. Not only that, but in a startling gesture of elegance and fatherly pride he rented for his daughter's trip to and from the church a matched team of white horses and a surrey kept for visiting dignitaries (William Jennings Bryan, for one).

After their marriage, Guy and Maude went to the University of Chicago, where Guy did graduate work in sociology and Maude attended classes as well as kept house. Three years later, in 1911, Guy was sent to China to help establish the University of Nanking. Technically, he was a missionary, his church, the Disciples of Christ, one of three churches supporting the work of the university. Guy was one of the first two sociologists in China. It was a challenging job and he was keenly excited at the prospect. Maude was not, at first. They had put off having children until Guy was finished with his graduate work, and she didn't want to go on waiting for the family both were eager to have. "'Still,' I told myself finally, 'if other people can raise families in China, I can too!'"

They went to China by way of Europe and the Middle East—Maude called it their delayed honeymoon. They arrived in Shanghai on a chill, gray November day in 1911. On the boat they had heard disquieting rumors (they learned one of their first Chinese phrases, "ye yen" or "wild talk") of revolution in China, but an "old China hand" aboard reassured them, saying blithely, "There is always a revolution brewing somewhere in China." From their ship they saw the imposing buildings along the Bund—Shanghai's water-front sky line—literally draped in white sheets. Maude thought it strange that the people of such a fine-looking city should be hanging their laundry out the windows. It wasn't quite like that—the white sheets were flags of truce. Shanghai had surrendered to the armies of the revolution.

There was no possibility of going on to Nanking just then—foreigners from that city were refugeeing to Shanghai. The Sarvises spent their first China winter in a crowded mission house, devoting most of their time to learning the language so they could manage a household of their own when it was safe to go on to Nanking. "We never doubted, somehow, that it would be safe." They began their lessons with a Chinese student, studying in a church with an earthen floor and hard wooden benches. They sat bundled in blankets, their feet resting on tiny charcoal stoves that did little to keep out the bitter cold.

Maude was young and eager and what she felt to be the narrow views of some of the older missionaries were hard to understand. "I'm afraid I shocked them sometimes. I used to argue more tolerance, room for other people's faiths," she says. "I remember one fantastic winter when people were dying by the hundreds and I was sick with anger because I couldn't find a way to feed them all. 'Prayer will help them,' one woman missionary said. I had prayed, and I was praying. I wanted to do more. 'You don't change God's mind by uttering a few words to Him!' I cried, and ran out of the room.

"Later, I saw that same woman risk her life calmly to help people of a plague-stricken village. 'Their lives are so much better than their doctrines,' I told Guy. 'Maybe my tolerance needs widening too.'"

REMEMBRANCE FOR ROSEMARY

By CHARLES EUGENE MOUNTS

Her face lights up in thoughts of little boys;
So I prescribe her four. Their fun and noise
I fondly dream how she with grace commands
Where lesser mothers fret or scold. Demands
Of love will ever be upon her; yet Lover, husband, babies will all get Their due return of love, and somewhat more Than mortals may dare hope. How happy he Who takes this bride to bed, posterity
How blest! Long and lovely, smooth and white,
She'll lie beside him all the night,
Work beside him all the day; days on end
And year by year all their lovingness expend.
So with long labor for love's dear sake
They shall an endless matrimony make.

Once established in their own home in Nanking—a thirteen-room, three-story house called Heathcote—the Sarvises settled happily. "I guess I was homesick at first," Maude says. "I used to stare up at the moon and think, 'My mother and sisters are looking at it, too (we had arranged that before I left). 'It's the same moon wherever you are.' But I really think we both felt at home in China from the start." They went on with their study of Chinese.

Guy worked hard helping to establish the university and teaching classes. Maude set her household to organize, a steady stream of guests to take care of. "We looked after all the new families arriving in Nanking until they could learn enough Chinese to manage establishments of their own." Both Guy and Maude recall that their favorite guest was the great admired Jane Addams, of Hull House.

"These were good years. We found so many friends. Guy's work was deeply satisfying to him. My life was soon filled with babies, and from being a specialist in the teaching field became another kind of specialist—a nurse of kind. Guy was working so hard that he never had enough time to spend with the children, but we had hikes and picnics and trips to climb the beautiful Purple Mountain outside the city.

Maude felt that during this period the children's needs came first. She taught English to the children of a wealthy Chinese family, and this paid the tuition of her own children in Nanking's American school. And she tells, laughingly, of the time a domestic crisis left her without servants on a day when she had promised to take the children to a long-awaited picnic. "And just that day, of course, Guy brought home a visiting British dignitary for dinner. I hadn't had time to cook, and there wasn't anything in the house, so our guest had to eat corn-meal mush along with the children. He kept looking up from his plate, smiling and saying, 'Fancy! Maize mush.'"

One terrible winter Guy did famine-relief work in a northern province, working in areas where bandits were constantly looting villages, sometimes kidnaping foreigners and holding them for ransom. Often "accidents" happened and the victims vanished before they could be ransomed. It was this winter that Guy's "pepper and salt" hair, so attractive to Maude, turned completely white. A favorite story among Guy's friends is that this was due to the responsibility of trying to decide which of many starving people could be fed with the limited amount of food there was to dole out. "Truly a life-or-death power," and the strain took its toll.

Of that winter Maude says, "I never worried half so much about danger from warring bandits as I did over the possibility of a single typhus louse coming near Guy!" Typhus was wiping out whole villages, and there was no easily available vaccine to control it then.

"Our China life ended very abruptly." But now there is regret in Maude's voice.

The Sarvis family was in the United States on furlough in 1927 when, in a wave of anti-foreign agitation, the city of Nanking was again looted. Homes of foreigners were marked targets. Six foreigners, including the American head of the university, were killed. "Our Chinese students at the university were wonderful, we heard. One group set up a cordon around the bed of a woman teacher who was ill and announced that they would have to be killed before the invaders could harm her."

Many foreign teachers were replaced by Chinese. Later, when Guy could have a refused. Those who had replaced him own students, and he felt it would not o them.

arvises had planned to spend at least heir retirement years in China, where respect for and deference to the expe- d maturity of the old would have made ant indeed. "But I guess it's good for have had our ego so inflated," Maude erfully. "We're here, and we're addjustment years were not easy. "Guy ost fifty; he had no name in the aca- orld of America." For fifteen years lived on a substandard missionary Most of their prized possessions were y had four children to educate. ("I r a group of religious publications," ays. "And often it was a matter of try- cide which of the children would have college if I didn't sell a story that) Too, in 1929, America was strug- solve a problem called the Great De-five years," Maude says, "we never e year whether Guy would be working " st of 1935 was low point for them. n a month before the college season to open, Guy still had no job. came an offer to teach in the sociology ent of Ohio Wesleyan at Delaware, ast winter was a shakedown ise," say Merle and Bobbie Law- ce in their $13,350 house. Rains e. Water seeped up through the crete slab. Tile flooring squished n they walked on it. Hot-air ducts owed steam. Interior paint peeled The front door warped. Nails pped out of the walls.

NEXT MONTH

E VANISHING BANKBOOK

t that still doesn't explain to a zzled family where all the money s. Even in Ann Arbor, Michi- n, where Merle works and where ng costs are high, it's a mystery be nd for the first time since they had left g they felt they had a home again—a Victorian-style house which Maude at for its gingerbread ugliness and or its many spacious, high-ceilinged Guy stayed at Ohio Wesleyan until his nt—as head of the department—in n he was asked to help build up a department at Wesleyan College in Georgia, he accepted. After his first re, it was suggested that he stay on "as he wanted to teach." His reply indi- Maude that much of his fear of retire- as gone.

BROKE ON $11,200 A YEAR

By G. M. WHITE

OW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES In the February JOURNAL

t's fine," Guy said. "That will be one ear."

51 they retired to Florida and began enture of building Birdsong, for years dream and a set of house plans that had one "probably a hundred changes." rld of their young years comes to them, the form of visiting friends and letters. was pleased and grateful at the tfulness of friends on Guy's 75th birth- summer.

re was a letter for every year—letters hinese, Czechs, German and Hungarian Negroes. It was such a nice cross section Friends and interests. I don't think any- ould have pleased him more."

n China, "our much-loved second coun- Guy and Maude hear very little these days. But they like to feel that this will not always be so.

A round-robin letter started in 1917, when Maude and her friends formed the Young Mothers Club of Nanking, is still going its faithful round, keeping the members in touch with one another—even though, in some cases, it is being carried on by the second generation. On Mother's Day there were phone calls from all four of the Sarvis children, including chats with the grandchildren suggesting it was time for another visit from their grandparents.

There is still work to be done on Birdsong and its garden, and the daily routine of housekeeping, simplified though it is, takes time and planning. Maude makes enthusiastic use of such work savers as frozen foods, but feels that bakery bread is inferior to bread she bakes herself, and ready-ground coffee not half as delicious as coffee freshly ground in a little hand mill before each meal.

She is painstaking in the brewing of the jasmine tea they both learned to love in China too. "Use an earthenware pot and never let the tea stand on the leaves after it is brewed. It spoils the delicate flavor."

Many of their favorite menus are based on dishes from China and India. Maude's chicken chow mein is rich with mushrooms and whole pecan meats, as well as the traditional Chinese vegetables. A simple dish like scrambled eggs becomes very special indeed when beaten with a little cream, seasoned delicately with curry powder and cooked in the top of a double boiler ("That keeps the eggs light and fluffy"). Serve with crisp bacon, home-baked bread, a green salad and fruit for dessert. This year they have their own papayas, grown from a handful of seeds Maude brought home from a lunch in town one day.

There are the pets, Pete and Chica—the trips to places they haven't seen yet.

"And so you see, as I mentioned in the beginning," Maude says, "we're far too busy to have any retirement blues." END

NOW MILLIONS OF AMERICANS who used to toss and turn from excess stomach acid

SLEEP LIKE A BABY

Who'd guess this mother suffered Acid Indigestion only minutes ago

Last Year nearly TWO BILLION TUMS gave instant on-the-spot Relief from excess stomach acid—a common cause of sleepless nights!

One of the common causes of restless, sleepless nights is excess stomach acid.

Millions of sensible Americans have learned this, and now fix acid stomach before they try to sleep. So they just pop a couple of TUMS in their mouths at bedtime. Almost instantly TUMS neutralize the excess stomach acid, sweeten and soothe the tummy. Then comes the natural sleep of a baby. And there's no acid rebound from TUMS to awaken you later! TUMS are the best little friend your tummy ever had. Keep TUMS with you always. And chew them like candy. They are tasty and harmless. Only 10¢ a roll and you couldn't buy safer, quicker, more wonderful relief for a ten dollar bill.

People all over the Nation carry Tums as faithfully as they carry their Keys!

TUMS for the Tummy

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

When can you start toilet training?

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "We know for a fact that the natural loving care that kindly parents give to their children is a hundred times more valuable than their knowing how to pin a diaper on just right."

OF the many letters I've received from JOURNAL mothers, more have asked about toilet training than any other topic. Here's a forthright example: "Maybe I'm different from every other mother in the country, but my children are not inclined to be toilet-trained at ten or fifteen months. Our three-year-old son is now socially acceptable—just a recent development of his own. I tried to influence him in that direction all winter, but I'm sure it wasn't all my efforts that finally did the trick. I started early with him (eighteen months) but had no luck. Was I not watchful enough? It seemed all I did was try to take him to his chair. I feel that maybe my great concern for it may have held him back. At times I'd wonder if he was even intelligent, I'd get so provoked! Our second one will soon be two and he is still in diapers. I'd like to have him in training pants, but it's a constant mess to clean up—I just can't catch him. He doesn't seem to be regular about either his wetting or his bowel movements." At the end of her letter she adds, "It's these other parents who sometimes drive me too far with their attitudes!"

Another mother says, "Linda, past two, very bright, just won't train. I let her alone till about sixteen months, whereupon I couldn't even get her to the toilet seat. I let her alone for many weeks until she was willing to try the seat. But her movements are so irregular I just can't catch her. At the ripe age of two years two months she's never made a BM on the toilet. She again shows resistance to sitting on the seat."

A third mother says, about toilet training, "This subject is the most unpleasant part of child raising and any help would be appreciated."

In the first place, I've always thought and said that between 12 months and 24 months is the most impractical age for a parent to become vigorous about toilet training. This is the age when children become much more aware of themselves, of their bodies, of their wishes, of their rights, of their dignity. They sense—quite naturally, I think—that their bowel movements are really their own private business. They'll take tactful suggestions about the movement, but they won't take too much bossing or irritable interference. They just get balky, which is the normal defense at this age. Then if the parent gets angry about it, and especially if the parent resorts to force—dragging a struggling child to the toilet or using an enema or suppository—then the child acts as frightened as if he thought the parent were going to remove a part of his body, not just a product of it.

If, on the other hand, a parent feels entirely agreeable to waiting, there is a good chance (not a 100 per cent chance) that the child will become interested in using the toilet himself somewhere around 2 years of age—a few will get the idea before 2, some not till 2¼ or 2½, a few later still. I think that letting a child train himself is a natural and handy way to accomplish the job. Most mothers will report that when it happens it happens fast, both for bowel movements and urine. In fact, it's a bit of a nuisance for a few days because the child becomes so enthusiastic that he is taking himself to the toilet, asking for help in getting his pants down and getting up on the seat every few minutes, when he obviously has nothing to do. The greatest advantage is that the child considers it his proud accomplishment, rather than as giving in to his mother, and it therefore doesn't occur to him, at some later time when he's cross at her, to relapse out of spite. In other words, self-training is much more likely to last.

These views are probably old stuff to most of you, but I have to repeat them in order to lead up to the main issue, which has to do with the questions: Why don't all parents want to wait for the child to train himself? Why do parents who think they are being fairly tactful in their training efforts in the 12-to-24-month period run into balking? The answer is that we Americans and Europeans have grown up in a kind of society that for many centuries has considered early toileting darned important—not just as a health matter but as almost a moral matter. Most of us were taught early in childhood to consider bowel movements and urine as more or less dirty and disgusting. A lot of us probably had parents who became cross or angry at us at times in our early years when we had accidents. Those early impressions sink in deeply and don't wear off easily. We may think that as educated adults, who have studied or heard about modern theories on toilet training, we are very sophisticated and don't mind waiting a long time for our children to train themselves, but underneath we may still be old-fashioned—all ready to get cross and disapproving if our child doesn't become trained when we think he should.

I've often seen this sharp contrast between what parents think they believe and what they really feel, in other aspects of child care. A mother of a child with a feeding problem says, "I was a feeding problem myself and I can still remember how, when my own mother urged and forced me to eat, it only took my appetite away further. I know clearly that it's the very worst thing to do and yet I find myself continually urging and forcing my child." Many modern parents imagine ahead of time that they will be much too wise to become tense when their child asks his first sex question or gets into an early-childhood kind of sex play, but most of us instantly become at least slightly anxious or disapproving when that moment comes.

I don't mean by these examples that I think that all parents are so concerned underneath about toilet training that they can't wait to let a child train himself. Many are relaxed enough about it to be able to wait agreeably—they really don't worry. Many others are very concerned about early training and don't mind admitting it. And some who think that they don't care, care a lot underneath.

It seems clear to me that the mothers writing the three letters I quoted from all felt pretty strongly and deeply that their children should be trained fairly early.

I don't believe there is any one right way to train a child. Every parent has to bring up his child according to his own convictions. I think it's helpful for parents to know what students of child development have learned about how children grow and how they feel about life at different ages, so that parents can fit their efforts best to their child's readiness. I'm convinced enough myself about the advantages of self-training to the toilet so that I'd offer this approach for the consideration of any parent asking my advice. But if a mother answered, "I couldn't stand letting a child be dirty that long, and besides, I don't think it would be good for the child," then I'd know that this wouldn't be the right method for her. Even if she tried conscientiously to follow my advice it would go so strongly against her grain that it wouldn't work and she'd end up with a worse conflict on her hands than if she'd gone at it her own way, whatever it was.

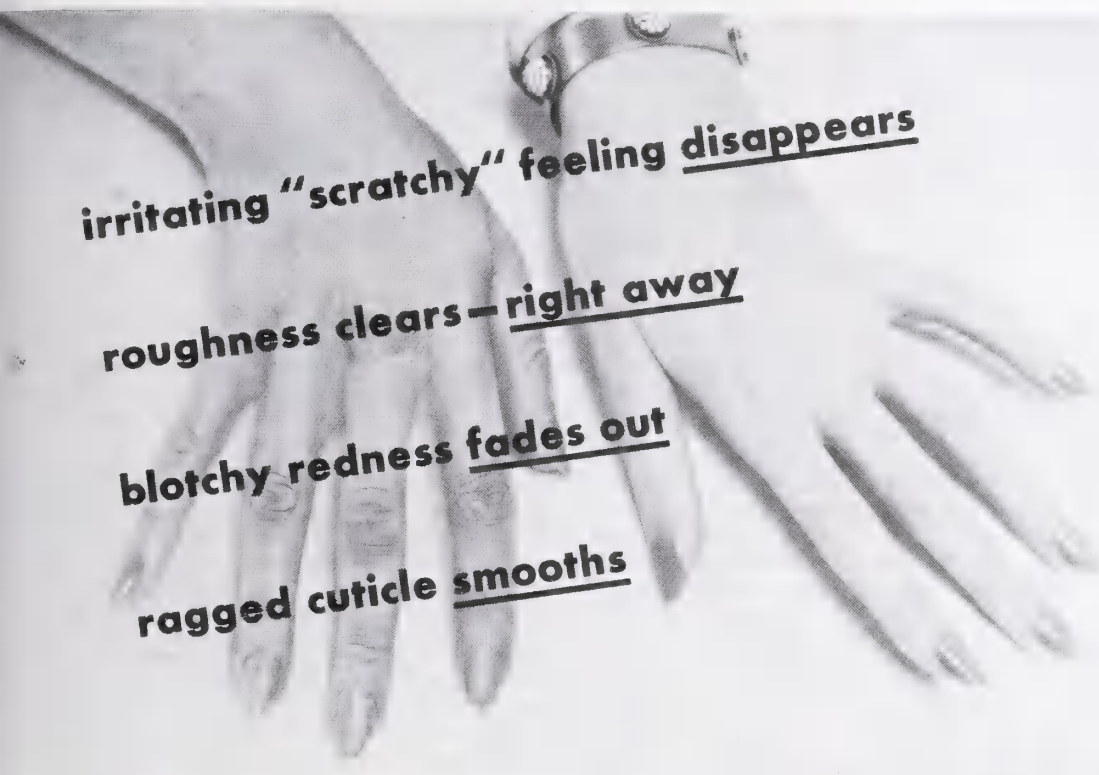
I'd suggest to her that I think it's preferable to wait at least until her baby could sit alone (6 to 8 months) and until his movements were regular enough so that she had a chance of "catching" it on most days. Most babies between 6 and 12 months who are regular will accept regular toileting quite willingly, as long as it is reasonably tactful, and after a while will establish the habit of pushing co-operatively as soon as they are on the seat. I'd still recommend not keeping the baby there longer than ten minutes, for fear of provoking rebellion, and letting him off sooner if he becomes restless. And I'd explain that plenty of babies who are well trained for the bowel movement at 12 months rebel temporarily sometime between 12 and 18 months when they are feeling their independence, and that I'd recommend dropping the toileting temporarily if this happened.

I'd never recommend the starting of active, vigorous training between 12 and 24 months.

I'd wait to try to catch the urine until the baby was holding his urine for two hours at a time, which averages somewhere around 15 months, and then go at it gradually.

I'll discuss bed wetting in a later column.

I've received a few letters from mothers who were frantically upset about such matters as a severe feeding problem, an extremely willful child, and a child who was crying all day. Such problems which are way beyond the average range and which have produced great tension in the parent can't be tackled helpfully in an article. They require long, understanding discussion between parent and someone skilled in counseling. Who is that? Very appropriate would be a child psychiatrist, or general psychiatrist in private practice or in a guidance clinic. Unfortunately, they are too few and mostly located in larger cities. Some pediatricians and general practitioners are interested and skillful; others prefer, because of their training, to stick to physical diseases. Some psychologists, some schoolteachers, school-guidance counselors, school social workers ("home and school visitors"), some ministers can be very helpful, either directly or by referring the parent to another worker. Most likely to be helpful, in a city or town where there are no psychiatrists available, is a family social agency. There are sometimes Protestant, Catholic and Jewish family agencies. If in doubt in a city, see if there is a Council of Social Agencies listed in the phone book. They will direct you to the proper agency. In communities, especially rural, where there is no Council of Social Agencies there may be a county welfare agency or department of public assistance which may have people on its staff skilled in family problems or able to direct you to such. Or write the state Department of Welfare in the state capital, giving them a rough idea of what kind of problem you have.



Many people don't think of turning to a family social agency when there are behavior or emotional problems, in the mistaken belief that such an agency is only for those of low income. The best agencies are eager to help families at any economic level and consider counseling their most vital contribution.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

Not just superficial smoothing—but instant "corrective" softening!

New lotion

Actually heals chapped hands

Red, puffy "detergent hands"—New Angel Skin is the only leading lotion that neutralizes the alkaline action of today's harsh detergents

No stickiness! Unlike old-style lotions, new Angel Skin has no gummy "thickener" that coats your skin. Its healing richness goes in at once!

Skin's "protective cloak" damaged—vital substances of the skin's lubricants destroyed by cold and exposure . . . the harsh alkali action of today's soaps and detergents

Angel Skin's corrective softening—designed to replace instantly vital substances needed in the skin's "protective cloak." This is why Angel Skin heals chapping—quickly!

Scientifically years ahead!

It's a revolutionary lotion—this new Angel Skin by Pond's! Based on new discoveries of how the skin heals and protects itself, Angel Skin's new formula is "medically matched" to the skin's own softening lubricants.

Doctors say the skin is constantly rebuilding its softening protective cloak—to offset the drying, chapping effects of winter cold, of harsh detergents. But often skin can't rebuild fast enough to prevent damage—it may take hours!

New Angel Skin gives instant softening! In developing Angel Skin, scientists have found a way to "match" the vital substances of the skin's protective cloak. Smooth in Angel Skin, and you instantly replace these softeners needed for smooth, white hands.

Angel Skin's rich goodness acts at once to counteract the harsh alkaline action of soaps and detergents—as no old-style lotion can! It heals chapping! It penetrates at once—softens deep down! Never leaves a trace of stickiness!

See its amazing effects on your skin. Get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin today! Only 89¢, 49¢, 25¢, plus tax. (Slightly higher in Canada)

• • • • • •

NEW FACTS ABOUT SKIN—The skin's "protective cloak" contains lubricating sebum—normally has a high concentration of hydrogen ions*. Exposure to harsh detergents lowers the concentration of hydrogen ions. Chapping begins. Exposure to cold, wind further aggravates skin.

Angel Skin's exclusive softening lubricants contain billions of needed hydrogen ions in each drop—enough to replace instantly the skin's normal, high concentration of hydrogen ions.

This is why Angel Skin heals chapping as no old-style lotion can.

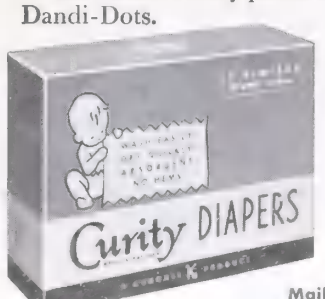
*Concentration of hydrogen ions is measured scientifically in terms of pH. Angel Skin is the only leading hand lotion with a pH rating allied to the pH rating of human skin.

Angel Skin

by POND'S

Curity®
DIAPERS
2 TYPES • DAY & NIGHT



Wash bowl or washing machine . . . Curity Diapers "come clean" with no effort, in hardly any time at all! Stains can't stay in their open, surgical weave. Remember, too, that only Curity has the woven-in, easy-to-follow FOLDLINES that make an expert of anyone. Furthermore, Curity Diapers . . .

Dry Faster — Indoors or out, Curity Diapers are faster drying.

Wash Easier — Their open weave means quick-cleansing ease in Ivory Flakes, Ivory Snow or Dreft.

Absorb Fully — Their thirsty surgical weave soaks up moisture like a sponge.

Longer Wearing — Curity Diapers are made of full weight, full size gauze. And, for dress up and gifts . . . ask to see Curity pastel tints and Dandi-Dots.

SEE THE NEW Curity NIGHT DIAPER •

Mail the Coupon for Regular Diaper

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J-15
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.) Print clearly.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE

Some of the people hereabouts are turning their steps southward. I always think of Florida as a strange land with strange birds singing, full of color and light and incredibly dreamy. I like to read about it, as I like to read about tropical islands, and imagine myself strolling under date palms and picking hibiscus. No, the date palms are California.

Most of us stay right here and keep the walks shoveled and the furnace going. And have wonderful conversation about just how cold it was this morning! And read in the dark evenings or play the word game or listen to good records. And plan next year's gardens!

Winter colors are beautiful, but it takes a discerning eye to appreciate them, since they are more subdued and subtle than the blazing of autumn or the ebullience of summer. In the meadow, cinnamon and puce show against the snow; in the woods, the strong green of the pines makes a deep beauty. The tall deciduous trees on all the winding roadsides lift ebony branches, and their brave trunks are black as a midnight ocean. Silver lace edges the brook, icicles hang their crystal from the old well-house.

Smiley's buttermilk pancakes make a fine Sunday-morning breakfast on a cold dark day. I make the batter the night before and put it in a narrow-topped bottle in the refrigerator. The recipe calls for 2 cups flour, 2 cups buttermilk, 1 teaspoon baking soda, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ teaspoon salt and 1 egg. I use an electric blender and mix the whole at once—it could be done by beating in well. If it seems too thick (buttermilk differs in thickness, I find) I add a little extra buttermilk until the batter is fairly thin. In the morning, I shake it up well, pour on a hot griddle in spoonful amounts—these pancakes are best rather small. Smiley does them cowboy style, in plenty of fat, and lets the edges get dark brown and lacy. I am more moderate; I turn them when they bubble in the middle, and keep them light golden. Either way, delicious. They are perfect with maple sirup, or buttered and dusted with powdered sugar. Good with white-clover honey too.

As the New Year begins, it is good to tal stock of what blessings we have. I think o greatest blessing in America is that we are st free to help people. We can give to hundre of causes, and nobody is going to intimida us. With so much dire need in the world, v can, as far as we are able, send goods ar clothes and packages abroad, can adopt w orphans, can help the underprivileged in o own country. We can, through our churc groups, contribute all the year round to ma in need. I shouldn't wonder but that freedo to serve might be the greatest freedom in t world!

When the church bell rings on the frost winter Sundays and the valley folk gather the little white church as they have gathere down the years, I like to think that even in th atomic age we are preserving some of our heri age. It's a good thought to go ahead on!

The cockers and Irish shake the snow fro their paws and settle down by the applewoo fire and hope their own new year will hav plenty of titbits and balls to chase.

MAGGIE THE DAZZLER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 39

girls and I live smack in the middle of the city. At least it's called Midtown, being rather south on the island of Manhattan. So today I do admit it wasn't culture drove me to the keys.

Tommy, in addition to being a soulful genius, is very beautiful—one of those lithe black Irishmen with the inky hair and the heavy brows and the burning eyes. I think burning eyes are usually black, but Tommy manages very well with blue. I went out with him all through college and I never once stared him down. I always looked away first.

I'm not making excuses, but he's not someone you would forget—especially when there is unfinished business between you. Tommy never bothered to leave me really. He simply took off. You can't even be mad when that happens because you don't know when it happens. After a while you realize there's no point waiting. The thing is I was always such a drip with Tommy I can't even blame him for leaving me and I want to dazzle him good, just to finish the business my way. I could do it now, I know I could. I've grown to be rather dazzling when I set my mind to it.

Daydreams are a little embarrassing to relate, but I am determined to give the fancies as well as the facts. It is a fact that whenever I play the Rustle I fancy that I am alone in the saloon of a great ship or behind the palms in a deserted music room at a ball. I am performing heartbreakingly well. And suddenly Tommy appears behind me and says, "I knew it was you, Maggie," and he pulls me to my feet and I do not skitter. We go into a scene you would recognize from a certain perfume ad, minus the violin.

Thus was I occupied when my husband returned from his hospital rounds this morning at about a quarter to ten. I didn't even hear him. When I finished playing I kept my hands on the keyboard, head bowed humbly, and unloosed a loud sigh.

"That's nice, Maggie," said Jack. I jumped a mile. "I like your spirit," he explained. "You look as if you're going to break the piano."

"Art," I said and guiltily kissed his sweet brow.

He gave me a vague hug, went to the kitchen for coffee, and graciously ignored the plants, pots, laundry and dishes. Some men would be upset at this panorama of neglect, but not my Jack. He just pushed the socks aside and laid out two cups. I brought us some heated-over coffee, which some men would also object to, but he even said it was good.

"I'm going back to the hospital," he said. "I've got to hang around those twins today." He's been knocking himself out over seven pounds' worth of two new babies—trying to find out how and what to get them to eat.

"I've got to take the girls to Best's after nursery school. They both need pajamas," I said. "We'll walk over on Fifth."

I sipped my coffee and stared at the socks without seeing them. I thought, Maybe I'll run into Tommy on the street someday. I have thought of this before, I must admit. Say I'm walking along in my melting pink velvet hat and pale gray coat with the sleeves that push up so you can't move your arms. I'm whistling some beautifully complicated ancient air that only Tommy would know. I'm carrying a copy of Dylan Thomas with the title showing. A dark graceful man hears the air, sees the book, hurries to see the face under the hat. . . . Of course having two little girls along would cramp my style somewhat, but I can fit them in—they're so delicate and lovely, all feathery blond-haired with faces like flowers.

And soon there we were for real, mommy and the two flower-faces, walking down Fifth, somewhat less ethereal than the foregoing. I had Cathy's left hand in my right and in Cathy's right hand was Ann's left. Ann, who is two and a half, had to have a hand free for Snoopy's string. Snoopy is a black-and-white wooden dog about two feet long whose legs whirl around as you pull. He makes a penetrating noise when a taut metal strip inside his belly hits against a moving grooved surface. I was once at a hi-fi party where they played a 33-RPM frog's mating call at 78 speed and the result was a lot like Snoopy's. People on the Avenue stared. Cathy, who is three and a half, made a penetrating noise, too, by repeating mercilessly, "Hey, mommy, hey, Maggie, can I get a bathing suit with ruffles on the seat?" My saying no didn't stop her, and neither did saying yes. They both had lollipops, which get quite messy when you eat them no hands, and their navy-blue coat fronts were wet and shiny.

I wore oxfords with flaps, English but still clumpy, no hat, and a camel-hair coat with big pockets. In the left pocket, sticking out, were two Little Bitty Books, both about rabbits. In the right was a plastic football, Annie's precious screw driver, one mitten with a monkey face cross-stitched on by my mother, two whole and five broken graham crackers. I carried in my left hand two tams and a big old saddle-leather pocketbook. I was singing an ancient folk tune whose entire text is, "All the ducks are swimming in the water, fol de rol de rol de," which I render during baths, my own included—I can't help it.

Well, I guess you know what's coming, because I wouldn't have a story to tell if it hadn't happened, but I wish I could have known in advance. In the middle of a "fol" it happened. Right in front of Best's I stopped abruptly, fouling Snoopy's lines, because a large object stood in our path. It was a lithe black Irishman with a smile like the sun com ing out. It said, "Maggie, Maggie, I knew I' find you again."

I'd have fainted if I'd had the time an knew how to, but both girls were howlin having dropped their lollipops. These wrapped in a handkerchief and added t the right pocket. Then I introduced them "Tommy, this is Catherine—Cathy, Mr. Ca houn."

Tommy said, "How do you do. You loo just like your mother," with an old-tim burning glance at me.

Cathy said, "You a friend of my daddy's c something?"

"And," I continued, "this is Ann Eliza beth."

Ann said, "I hate you," and punched h leg.

Then the girls stood there, sticky-chinne and cold-eyed, and watched us. I said, " don't know what to say," as if I ever did wit him.

"I'll tell you what to say tonight," he said "Aggie Ames told me I'd be seeing you."

"Why is your face all red?" said Cathy.

Tommy bowed to us and walked off. I don know what kind of pajamas I bought and w almost lost Snoopy. Fortunately the bath and-supper rush keeps you so busy you can think, but nothing keeps you so busy yo can't worry in the background. Somewhere in my head was that nagging feeling like th one you get when you're going to have tw impacted wisdom teeth out. Aggie Ames' part was tonight. And I can't say that I was un prepared, not this time.

I've often imagined meeting Tommy at party. I've enjoyed thinking about how would be to surprise him. Actually any sig of life in me would come as a shock. Tomm was forever dragging me to faculty and elite student teas and things where I'd stand froze watching him stare down the better-lookin girl brains and pass from professor to pro fessor dropping pearls of pure intelligence Oh, how I hated parties. Then he'd collect m and we'd go sit somewhere and he'd talk an I'd admire and ask what I hoped were goo questions to show I was listening. I was kind of blotter, I think. I don't know why h stuck with me so long.

You know how it is when you go to a goo party—that sharp change of mood from out side in the dark air to the bright noisy warm place. For a minute it's like coming onstag and you can't see who's there. Jack and love parties and we go to lots of them, an practically every time, in that sharp onstag minute, I've imagined that I see Tomm leaning against an Adam fireplace or sittin alone in a Saarinen chair. When he sees m he clutches his glass and his jaw muscle work. He stares at me in my jonquil silk sli dress that matches my genuine blond that is no longer lank, college style, but t and boyish to make my soft chin and der neck all the more feminine. (As re- ls coiffure and wardrobe, I am being ual though flowery. The next is sheer y, though it could be a blueprint.) I give husband a luminous smile, intimate and nanly. He looks adoring and touched. n I walk across the room to Tommy, my s outstretched shoulder high, palms up, way Katharine Cornell would. We clasp ds, look deeply at each other. He turns eyes first. "Darling," I say, "you look derful." For four years I worshiped this and tried to call him darling. Once I aged a "dearie" in imitation of a glib smate, but it came out chorus-girly and ngruous and rather pathetic, I think.

E of the first ways I knew I loved Jack how I fell into calling him darling so y. When I started seeing him it was after months of nothing from Tommy, then a l-hand report that he was in Rome with llet dancer. I wasn't bursting with confi- e. Jack and I went on a picnic on our l date that was a revelation to me. In the place, while we were sitting around the Jack asked me how my teaching was g and I started telling stories like the one e my most naughty boy said to the class ng a scolding, "I think I hear the voice of . Oh, no, it's not God, it's Miss Mar- t." And here was Miss Margaret, former er, regaling seven people with anecdotes. e second place, driving home I dozed on 's shoulder and he said, "Have a good ?" and I said "Yes, darling" without a ght. And then back home in my kitchen ng coffee with my parents, Jack caught ye and winked and I winked back. When l like I was can wink at a guy, she should y him quick. Which I did in another th.

ook, some housewives listen to soap as. They fill an emotional need. I just e my own. So there I am in my jonquil clasping Tommy's hands. I take his arm y, though the pressure of my fingers t be possessive—he can't tell—and I duce him to my wonderful friends. A astute phrases and they are blindingly led to each other. Then I sink deep in a and Tommy sits on the edge of a foot- looking up at me and tells me about elf. From time to time someone comes A woman says, "Maggie, you've got to me that marvelous recipe for shrimp e for sixty people." A man says, "My I hope you can tell us what to do about Alan. He's at that terrible age." Tommy s dazzled, and pained at what he's lost.

ck was sleeping while I dressed for the ses' party. He hadn't moved for an hour I shoved him on the bed and arranged in a nap position under the afghan. He ed so sweet—his profile pressed into the w. His nose was pushed up and his th was open a little and so vulnerable- ing. His light brown hair looked damp curly and his eyes were shadowed with ue. I wondered what he looked like to the nts of the twins, who were going to live. gazing at this masterpiece of a man I ght, shallow woman that I am, how nice were a little more brooding and dark and ant. So I kissed his eyelid, guiltily for the nd time today, and woke him to dress. ggie Ames is an old college pal of mine, Tommy's, married to a nice man who rited a lot of money and a house in nwich Village with a garden in back and ron gate in front. Every year they give they call a Spring Riot around the time the college boys are raiding girls' dorms moving statues in the parks. It's always ame—about seventy-five people, big buf- nd Fish House punch. I wore the jonquil fake diamond earrings that hang down inches, lots of goo on the eyes and pale der and lipstick like the Italian actresses oing it. Jack didn't say how I looked, but nirror did, and he's so preoccupied I for- him. It's just a good thing he didn't take pulse—not that that's his habit—I was y charged up.

After we got rid of our coats, I plunged into the living room. I saw Tommy right away. Now to wipe out that Fifth Avenue fiasco. Here comes Maggie the dazzler. Tommy was at the punch bowl, ladling a drink for pretty Gretchen Frank, a flirty restless housewife, Aggie's sister-in-law. There was a clear path. I had about ten feet to go, room for the Katharine Cornell gestures and everything. I couldn't move and I felt the expression on my face. That's a bad sign, no matter what the expression. This one was familiar—from five years ago. That old faculty-tea feeling. Tommy saw me. He strode over and took both my hands, somewhat the way I'd planned it, and Gretchen was right behind him. "Aggie said you knew this devil," she said. Tommy kept on holding my hands, Gretchen shrugged and moved on.

"Maggie, you look as delicate and lovely as ever and you still blush. How did you hatch those ruffians?"

Delicate, that won't do. Ruffians, indeed! "Ruffians, indeed," I said.

"How about some punch?" he said and I nodded. A good idea. I'll get drunk. They say you're the real you when you're drunk and the real me is not this frozen face.

I tossed down two cups standing there with Tommy, being very busy looking the party over. Jack was having a fine time. Gretchen came by with another guy. "She's not my type," Tommy told me when she'd passed. He always told me his reactions to girls.

ON AN IRREPARABLE PIANO

By JOAN AUCOURT

Some of the bumbling keys are blanks, and freeze.
Others strike crazy chords. The wires hum
Haphazard as a swarm of baffled bees
Buzzing about in an abandoned drum.

Old melodies, translated in such tones,
Sound slantwise, tricked, and tilted at the ear:
The sunniest reveille dissolves in drones,
Tentative as a tired chanticleer.

Or try a funeral march, and it will sound
Musingly, mildly, maddeningly gay:
Major and minor, sharp and flat, compound
Confusion worse confounded as we play.

And there it stands, lapped in attentive air,
Worrisome as a mute, melodic woman;
Nor can one just pretend it isn't there—
Its very lack of eloquence is human.

And by its haunting inexactitude
Proclaims itself akin to common clay.
There's nothing for it but a running feud:
It strikes too close to home to throw away.

"Who is?" I said, with several ounces of rum and two kinds of brandy to help me.

"You are, Maggie, you still are," he answered. He's a smart one. I just noticed he always uses your name a lot. It's really gripping.

"But I've changed," I said.

"No you haven't," he answered. "Same little shy gazelle."

"You should have seen me on the sound truck in the gubernatorial campaign," I said.

"I don't believe it," he answered and I'm sure he didn't. "Anyway," he went on, "I wouldn't let you do that kind of thing. Not my Madame Butterfly."

He looked around the room restlessly, gave us each another cup of punch and took my hand. "Come on," he said. "I know where there's a piano." We went up to the second-floor library. I felt like a sleepwalker. No one was up there. The room is lined with books and the ceiling is dark and the piano stands in a bay window overlooking the garden. An old brass lamp with an orange globe was lit.

We sat down together in front of the keyboard. I drained my cup. I was terribly dizzy, but still no dazzle. I said, "Oh, Tommy, after all these years." There was quite a mood in that room.

"Maggie," he said. No one else pronounces my name that way—it's like the Gaelic. "Maggie, why didn't you wait? I was only waiting for you to grow up a little."

What a thing to say to a dizzy woman. I had no answer.

"Maggie, play that old boom-boom thing." He got up and stood behind me. Close.

I started to play. Who was dazzling whom? I was all mixed up. I tore into the old Rustle. Tommy put his hands on my shoulders the way he used to. My wrists felt numb the way they used to. Then just as I'd imagined it, he pulled me up and I remembered how good he smelled. And, helpless woman that I am, I kissed him. It was nice and nostalgic and new, but I ruined it. In the middle something exploded in my head and I got sober. Somewhere in that dim room the spirit of Pure Reason struggled with Nostalgia and won. That plus a little middle-class morality. Anyway, I had a question. I pulled away.

He said my name. He didn't know I was sober. "I have a question," I said. "If you were just waiting for me to grow up, why didn't you say so? Why did you wait with that ballet dancer in Rome all summer? Aggie told me all about that. You were bored because I was boring and I was boring because that's what you wanted."

PURE REASON was flapping his wings triumphantly. "With you I'd always be boring," I said and knew what a thing I was saying.

"And what do you want from me now?" I asked, but I didn't give him a chance to answer. "I think you're pretty and I think you're smart," I told him. "And I could give you dinner and an evening every month or so, but even if I weren't married I couldn't give you all that dumb stupid adoration I think you're still looking for."

"You have changed," he said.

"You bet," I said. "See you around. Wipe off the lipstick." I went downstairs and met Gretchen.

"What did you do with the brain?" she asked.

"In the library," I said. "But wait five minutes." She looked at her watch and said O.K. and I understand she wasn't seen again for an hour and a half.

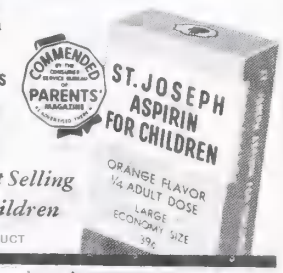
I went over to Jack and got him away from a crowd.

"Jack," I said, "do I have to tell you everything?"

"What a bore that would be," he said. "Where'd you leave your dark friend?"

"To his own devices," I said. "He'll get by." Such a clever man, my Jack. I took his punch cup, walked up to him till our shoes touched and toasted him. I smiled right into his face and moved my head so the earrings clinked. I felt very happy.

"You know what?" he said. "You look dazzling! I meant to tell you."



So I kissed him for the third time today. This one wasn't guilty at all.

I guess I'll have to listen to soap operas on the radio. END

MRS. M. WAKEMAN, Cincinnati, O. —"Practically every mother I know uses St. Joseph Aspirin For Children. I always keep it in the medicine chest for ready relief of headaches or colds' pain. Also, my doctor prefers dosage of 1¼ grains and I used to find cutting or breaking a 5 grain tablet so inaccurate. The orange flavor appeals to my children, they take it willingly. St. Joseph Aspirin For Children makes it easy on my children and me."

- 1¼ Grain Tablets
- Accurate Dosage
- Doctor Approved

World's Largest Selling Aspirin For Children

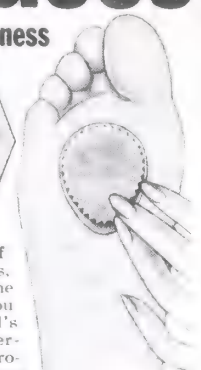
A PLOUGH PRODUCT

For Your Family's Regular Aspirin Needs
Get the BEST for Less... get

200 Tablets 79¢
100 Tablets 49¢
12 Tablets 10¢

Turknit® Baby Goods
Shower Gifts
Bibs
Towels
Wash Cloths
Bath Robes
Bath Blankets
PUTNAM KNITTING CO., BOX G, COHOES, N.Y.

monroe FOLDING BANQUET TABLES



If you are on the Kitchen Committee of some Church, Lodge, Club, School, etc., in your town you will be interested in this modern Folding Banquet Table. Write for Catalog and special discounts to institutions and organizations.

MONROE CO. 115 CHURCH ST. COLFAX, IOWA

Callouses
Pain, Burning, Tenderness

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!

Puts You Right Back On Your Feet!

You'll enjoy super-fast relief from your painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. They're wonderfully soothing, cushioning, protective and remove callouses one of the fastest ways known to medical science. Try them!

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

What's for Dinner?

by Marian Tracy

THESE days when almost none of us has a cook or maid, a one-dish m is much simpler to prepare, cook and serve—more fun too. There is l fussing around and everything gets done at the same time and you have m time for your family.

And the one dish can be almost anything, just so that you have ple of it: a robust soup that is almost a stew; pasta (which is to say one of many shapes of macaroni-type products—pick your favorite); a broiler m which follows the same principle—everything done in one fell swoop; o lamb curry unroutine in its service and so easy to make.

A broiler meal is simple and practical to cook—with almost no preliminary preparations and almost no watching.

Broiled Fish Steaks with Lemon Butter
Broiled Tomatoes
Broiled Cooked-Potato Slices
Frozen Pineapple Crush—Ginger Cookies

BROILED FISH STEAKS WITH LEMON BUTTER

Place 4 fish steaks, fresh, or frozen and thawed—cod, haddock or small swordfish steaks—on the broiler rack. Cream 1 tablespoon grated lemon rind with 4 tablespoons butter or margarine and put a dot of this mixture on each fish steak. Save the rest of the butter for later. In another row on the broiler rack, place 4 tomatoes with blossom end removed, cut in half, with the cut side up. Season well with salt and pepper. Put about ½ teaspoon butter or margarine on e tomato half. Dip thick slices of coo potatoes in melted butter or margar Arrange alongside tomatoes. Season w salt and pepper. Turn the potato sl and fish steaks over after 5 minu broiling time and divide the rest of len butter among the 4 steaks. Season w salt and pepper. The steaks will be d when the fish has become opaque, ab 5 minutes. The potatoes, tomatoes fish steaks should take about the sa time, but will vary slightly according thickness, and so on. Your eye will g you the signal Serve the fish steaks, matoes and potato slices arranged p tily on a large warm platter. Sprinkle tato slices with chopped parsley. Serve

FROZEN PINEAPPLE CRUSH

Add 1 teaspoon grated orange rind t No. 2 can crushed pineapple. Pour i freezing tray. Turn up refrigerator coldest position. Freeze about 1 hou shouldn't be completely frozen, mushy when stirred. Stir once or tw during this time. Serves 4.

Pasta at its prettiest, with crisp bread sticks to give gentle and piquant emphasis.

Green and White Pasta with Red Clam Sauce
Endive Salad with French Dressing Bread Sticks
Fresh-Fruit Bowl

GREEN AND WHITE PASTA WITH RED CLAM SAUCE

Sauté 1 peeled clove garlic, cut in half, and ½ cup chopped onion in 3 tablespoons salad oil until pale yellow but not brown. Remove the garlic and add 1 No. 2 can (1-pound-3-ounce) tomatoes, one 6-ounce can tomato paste, 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. (I always put in ½ teaspoon dried tarragon, which is nice but not obligatory. Or you can us tablespoon of tarragon vinegar, if have that on hand.) Simmer over heat until thick—about ½ hour. T add two 10½-ounce cans minced cl and their juice and let the sauce c about 15 minutes more. Meanwhile, c ½ pound medium noodles and ½ po medium green noodles separately in b ing salted water until just tender but mushy. The time will vary according the size of the noodle. The green noo come in several sizes, but be sure to the same size as the plain. Drain and range the noodles decoratively on a wa platter—I like to wreathe the platter w first the white noodles, then the gr Pour the rich red sauce in the mid When serving, try to give each per some of the green and some of white noodles. Pass around a bowl freshly grated cheese, Parmesan if can get it, to sprinkle over each pl Serves 6.

eal from sunny Italy, dressed in Italy's colors.

tail soup, lusty fare for a winter It is a beloved soup often forgotten.

Oxtail Soup
Green Salad
with Roquefort Dressing
Garlic Bread
Chocolate Pudding with Mocha Cream

OXTAIL SOUP

n 1 oxtail, cut at the joints, in 2 spoons butter or margarine with 2 d cloves garlic, cut in half, and 1 d onion, sliced. When the pieces of are brown all over, transfer to a soup pot and add 8 cups water, 1 eaf, 1 lemon, sliced thin, 2½ tea- ns salt and 6 peppercorns. Cover simmer over low heat for about 3 . Chill, skim off fat and strain l back into pan with pieces of oxtail. k seasoning, adding 1 teaspoon estershire sauce and more salt and er if necessary. Scrape and cut 4 ts into 1″ pieces; peel and quarter 4 onions; remove core and shred ½ small head cabbage. Add all to soup with one 6-ounce can tomato paste. Cover and simmer for ½ hour or until vegetables are tender. Serve in warm soup plates. Enough for refills. Serves 4.

GARLIC BREAD

This New Orleans version of garlic bread is very pretty with its sprinkling of parsley. Heat 1 peeled clove garlic, minced, with ½ cup butter or margarine. Cut ½ loaf French bread in thick slices, but do not cut through the bottom crust. Pour or brush the melted butter or margarine in all the cuts so that the slices are soaked on each side. Sprinkle ¼ cup finely chopped parsley on all the buttered parts. Place on a baking sheet and heat in a moderate oven, 350° F., until the bread is brown and hot. Serves 4.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING WITH MOCHA CREAM

Cook 1 package chocolate pudding according to package directions. Pour into individual dishes. Chill. Garnish with sweetened whipped cream flavored with a little instant coffee and vanilla. Sprinkle with grated chocolate.

curry is not only a rich, smooth and sauce, but a pleasingly dramatic act the tiny bowls of accompaniments, a e from the usual. The lemon gelatin he black Bing cherries makes a fresh elicate finale to the meal.

Lamb Curry with Rice and Accompaniments
Green Salad
French Bread
Lemon Gelatin
with Black Bing Cherries

AMB CURRY WITH RICE AND ACCOMPANIMENTS

1 peeled clove garlic, minced, 1 d and cored apple, diced, and ½ cup ped onion in 2 tablespoons butter or arine. When lightly browned, blend tablespoons flour, adding 1½ cups llon (1 can—10½-ounces—with gh water to make 1½ cups, or 1½ lon cubes and 1½ cups water may be used). Stir in 1 to 2 tablespoons good curry powder, depending on how strong a curry flavor you like, and 2 teaspoons grated lemon rind. Simmer until thick, about 20 minutes. Add 1½ cups diced cooked lamb and 1 cup evaporated milk and heat together for about 5 minutes until thoroughly heated. Put 1 cup rice in a pan with 2 cups bouillon (prepared as above), 1 small peeled onion, minced, and 1 teaspoon salt. Bring to a boil, turn the heat to the lowest point, cover tightly and cook exactly 14 minutes without looking. At that time the rice should be dry and fluffy with bits of half-cooked onion in it to give a nice flavor and texture. Serves 4.

Serve the lamb curry and the rice in separate bowls with a few tiny bowls containing several of these traditional curry accompaniments—crumbled crisp bacon, chopped hard-cooked egg, chutney, chopped peanuts, shredded coconut, grated orange peel, and so on. Small, inexpensive cans of Italian eggplant relish, which are available in many places, make an inexpensive variant for the more costly chutney.

You hear a bigger whoosh
You smell a fresher aroma
You taste an extra richness

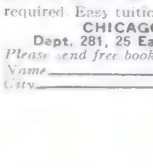
Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

Chase & Sanborn

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

Gebhardt's
CHILI POWDER
the ORIGINAL chili flavor!



• The original blend of Ancho-Chili pods, sun-cured in Old Mexico.
• No salt or filler added! It's all active flavor!
• Grinder-fresh. Sealed in glass!
GOES TWICE AS FAR!
MADE IN Sunny San Antonio
Gebhardt CHILI POWDER CO.
San Antonio, Texas

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
Serve picked at their prime . . . packed right away . . . garden-fresh
KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
"—It's the Quality Pack"
FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

JOLLY TIME
EVERYONE'S FAVORITE POP CORN ALWAYS POPS BEST

TOASTER COVER
QUICK TO EMBROIDER ALREADY STAMPED HOT TOAST MAKES THE 50¢ POSTPAID
EMBROIDERY THREAD INCLUDED!
482—You will want more than one of this novel Toaster Cover that fits standard size toasters. Stamped for embroidery on washfast White Cotton with Red or Yellow binding. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Order Today, one for yourself, one for a gift!
FREE 48 PAGE CATALOG WITH ORDER ORDER BY NUMBER AND COLOR!
FREDERICK HERRSCHNER CO.
72 E. RANDOLPH ST. CHICAGO 1, ILLINOIS

QUICK RELIEF for COLD SUFFERERS
As a gargle STANBACK relieves sore throat due to colds.
Reduces fever, relieves aches and pains and sore, aching muscles that accompany colds.
Test STANBACK Against Any Preparation You've Ever Used
Snap Back with STANBACK
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BE A Nurse
MAKE $50-$60 A WEEK
You can learn at home in spare time. Choice of careers: practical nurse, nursing aide, hospital attendant, infant nurse, nurse-companion, doctor's office, etc. Course endorsed by physicians. 56th year. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 281, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson sheets.
Name
City

CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 45

"I was in a fever of nerves and anxiety. I could hardly wait for Brad's evening visit. The minute he walked in I demanded to know what had happened. At first he tried to evade, but then he broke down and confessed he'd lost nearly all our savings in gambling. His humiliation was a dreadful thing to see. He looked like a little boy I once caught cheating in my classroom. He begged me to forgive him. He promised to reform.

"That was two years ago. Brad has been gambling ever since, gambling uncontrollably. Today he is as financially irresponsible as a child of six. He says he can't help it. His whole attitude is completely baffling to me. In my opinion, Brad doesn't actually enjoy gambling. With him, it seems to be almost a sickness. He no longer admires or likes himself. There are times he suffers such agonies of shame my heart aches for him. There are other times I almost hate him.

"We go from one financial crisis to the next. I owe the milkman $40, I owe my mother $75, I owe two years of back taxes, I'm behind on all our utility bills. Brad owes $600 to his father. I don't know the exact amounts he owes elsewhere; he tries to conceal his borrowing from me just as he tries to hide his gambling losses. In the early days of our marriage I kept a careful budget, paid our bills on the dot, and banked a regular amount each week. No budget is possible with a husband who gambles.

"Our home and guest cottage are our sole remaining possessions of value, and recently Brad began clamoring for an increase in our mortgage. I do not intend to put our real estate at Brad's disposal. We both know what would happen. Last January I learned I was pregnant again. I was desperate. One night Brad came in late and found me crying over a stack of unpaid bills. When he put his arms around me and asked what was wrong, I went to pieces. For the first time I threatened to leave him. I don't make idle threats. He knew I meant it. He was terrified. He was filled with self-reproach. I made him sit down and go through the stack of household bills and add up the figures. There the story was—how much his gambling had cost us.

"We talked until dawn. Brad acknowledged his future, our future, was at stake. We worked out a financial arrangement that seemed foolproof. Since he couldn't resist temptation—and admitted it—the two of us decided I would take charge of all our money. When he went to work next morning, Brad requested his company to mail his salary checks and commission checks straight to me. Every Saturday I divided up his earnings and paid a little to each of our creditors. I kept only enough money to buy food and give Brad a $4 weekly allowance. With an allowance that small, I didn't see how he could possibly get in trouble. Brad was obliged either to cut out cigarettes or skip lunches. I didn't think a few sacrifices would hurt him. I, too, was sacrificing. I took no allowance for myself.

"WITHIN a few weeks," Kyra said, "Brad was right back at gambling. While I was paying old debts he ran up new debts. Brad is persuasive and charming. First, he borrowed from his friends. When he had exhausted that list, he began to borrow from company customers. One of the customers is now pressing him for payment. Inevitably Brad's boss will hear about that and then Brad will be out of a job. Brad knows it too. Strangely enough, this seems only to provide him with a further incentive to gamble. Now he feels he must win.

"In trying to win back what he has lost, Brad gets in deeper and deeper. To his mind, he has had bad luck and his luck is certain to turn. In our endless arguments he often tells me he is bound to hit a winning streak and that then he will quit gambling forever. I don't for a minute believe that good luck at cards and horses—even a long run of good luck—will cure him. He needs to change his thinking, his whole point of view. But apparently he has convinced himself he can't do it. And he has certainly convinced me.

"Brad does almost unbelievable things, sneaky, dishonest things, to finance his gambling sprees. Just last month he took the week's grocery money from my purse—intending, of course, to put it back. Somebody had given him a hot tip. The horse lost. We had a terrible scene. I cried, Brad cried, little Sally woke and she cried. The old tired promises of reform were trotted out. The very next day Brad wrote a $50 check that was no good, and he promptly lost the $50 in a poker game. The bank called me and I had to phone his father—who covered the check.

"I cannot understand how Brad can bear to obligate himself to his father," cried Kyra. "He loathes his father. My father-in-law is openhanded with money when he chooses to be, but he is intolerably patronizing. He is as free with orders and criticism and unwelcome advice as my mother. I am sure he treated Brad badly in his boyhood, and now he insults him at every available opportunity."

Kyra looked down at the shabby purse in her lap.

"If my father-in-law hadn't made me a personal loan—a loan I personally intend to return—I couldn't pay for my confinement. The money I borrowed is now in a safe-deposit box so Brad can't get at it. My father-in-law insisted on the precaution, and I guess he was wise.

"If I could help Brad I would stick by him even now," Kyra said to the counselor. "I can't help Brad so long as he refuses to help himself. My mother and Brad's father both say I should get a divorce and go back to teaching. They say the children and I are entitled to live like normal human beings. Brad swears up and down he loves me and Sally, and wants the new baby. Perhaps, in his strange, selfish way, he does love us. That isn't good enough for me. I cannot live with a man whom I pity a great deal, love at times, but for whom I have no respect."

Brad tells his side:

"When I was in the service I was lucky at poker," said Brad. A handsome man of twenty-eight, he looked at the counselor with an odd mixture of defensiveness and defiance. "I'll tell you something Kyra doesn't know. I left the Army with several thousand dollars in poker winnings. Now I'll tell you something that may sound screwy. In my mind, that money stood for more than money. To me my winnings went to prove I was just as smart as the other fellows, or even smarter.

"I got a boot, a big boot, out of being good at something for once in my life. My father used to say I was the most stupid kid on earth. After my parents were divorced—I elected to live with my mother—he predicted I would wind up in the gutter. At the moment you are probably thinking my old man was quite a crystal-gazer. I don't blame you.

"MY best friends think I'm a heel. Everybody thinks so, up to and including me. I don't need to be told by a psychologist that I'm breaking Kyra's heart. I know I should never touch another card or bet another horse. I know I should reform. How to do it is the question.

"Two years of almost steady losing should be convincing evidence that my luck in the service was a fluke, but I ignore the evidence. My common sense tells me I was born a bad-luck guy. In the mornings when I wake up I think of my losses and the spot I'm in, and I feel sick, physically sick. In the mornings I decide: Never again! By nightfall my fine resolutions are forgotten. Invariably I break my promises to myself. Worse, I break my solemn promises to Kyra.

"What's wrong with a guy like me? I have a little girl I love, and another baby on the way. I have a nice home, thanks to Kyra. Why can't I count my blessings, quit gambling and behave like other family men?

"I have a good job, as sales jobs go. My income is adequate to support any family not in debt. By being careful, and with Kyra's help, I could even whittle down my debts. I particularly want to pay off my father, and get him out of my marriage and out of my life. I'm not doing it.

"It's easy for me," said Brad, who seemed to take a queer, savage pleasure in demeaning himself, "to find ways to squander money. I have the use of a company car to make my calls on customers. My daily route leads me directly past the Santa Anita race track. In fifteen minutes you can drop a hundred dollars there if you've got the dough and are so inclined. Part of the year the track is closed. But Kyra and I live right next to a little town—Gardena, California—where gambling is legal and the gambling houses operate a twelve-month season. Day or night you can drop in and match your poker wits against the next fellow's. My family isn't the only family that has suffered. You can look around the premises any time and see people who are taking a flier with next week's grocery money.

"When I sit down at a poker table," said Brad, "I never expect to lose. When I reach for my cards across the green felt a little inner voice, stronger than my conscience, stronger than my will, seems to whisper to me that this time I'm bound to hit. Life can be boring and frustrating. At least I find it so. When I'm at home Kyra looks at me with wounded eyes, with contemptuous eyes, and I feel like the worm I am. On my calls I'm pushed around by my customers; in the office I'm pushed around by my boss. In a poker game I can be a king—for a little while.

"When I am winning I am flooded with a sense of power and of calm. I feel certain, absolutely certain, that my luck has come to stay. I imagine myself rushing home and into our bedroom and waking Kyra, and pouring thousands of dollars in her lap, and seeing her eyes open wide with surprise and admiration as I tell her our financial troubles are over. Invariably I stick with the game too long and lose my winnings and more too. Now I am so far in the cellar I can't afford to quit. It's hard for me to concede bad luck can pursue a man forever.

"When I married Kyra," Brad said, "I intended to be a good husband, a responsible

THE KATE

By ELIZABETH MCFARLAND

Nobody has deep glimmering eyes
Long in the pointed face—
Not even the dawn's gray pussies
On the trails where the purrpads race.

Nobody's laugh is a laugh that sounds
Like bluebells stroked with heather,
As though all the ice-cream carts in the world
And church bells were singing together!

Nobody's hands are kiss-me small,
Nobody's nose is merry;
Nobody's grin so cutthroat sweet
And sudden and warm and contrary.

Nobody has a kiss that starts
Down where the dewdrops do;
Nobody else owns all these things
Nobody, ever, but you.

en. Kyra is the only person, except my girl, who has ever loved me. My mother oo busy fighting her own battles with my r to show much affection for us kids. s dead now. She was a sweet woman but and lacking in will power—like me. I to try to take my mother's part. One I recall my father jumped up from the er table in a rage and announced he was to death of her and was spending the with another woman. When he started he garage my mother ran after him, g, and he turned around and knocked own. I made a jump for him. He grabbed carving knife and threw it at me. The grazed my cheek and then stuck, quiver- in the kitchen door. I reached for the , shouting I would kill him. But then I . When he hit her again, I broke out in and just stood there. My parents were ced when I was twelve.

he first time Kyra ever smiled at me I ed her to be my wife. When she finally ied me, I knew the meaning of joy. Now ld have a real home. For a long while," Brad, "I did everything in my power to e Kyra happy. In some ways, she isn't ly an easy girl to please. My picture of marriage wasn't quite the same as hers. re I joined the Army, I had two years of ge and it was my ambition to be an tect. I figured Kyra and I could rent a apartment and I could finish college, my GI benefits.

YRA thought one degree per family, her e, represented plenty of education. She thought architecture was a chancy pro- on. I wanted a houseful of kids. Before arted on our family, Kyra said I needed set with a well-paying job and we needed vn a home. She made perfect sense. She ys does.

While I was hunting a job, Kyra and my r put their heads together and fetched vith a better job than I was able to e. I found myself working as a sales- for a frozen-food company. I don't like ood business, maybe because my father ts perpetually about his brilliance as a esale grocer. I'm not the back-slapping man type. I prefer working with my s or at a drawing board.

had a chance to use my hands," he went when Kyra bought a piece of land and led the time had come for us to build a e. She also decided a back-yard cottage d provide us with extra income. I did of the construction work, except for the bing and the wiring. There wasn't much for my drawing board. Kyra drew rough hes of both our places and I followed her tions. When we moved into our home, I ght she would give up teaching right and we would begin on the family. But then decided we needed a $1000 backlog over emergencies, and that she should another year. In order to get the back- we cut our spending to the bone. Kyra up beauty parlors, went bare-legged, ht no clothes. It used to make me feel p to see her run around without stock- When she suggested I cut my cigarette lunch money to $10 a week, I did so. In Army I never carried less than $100 in my et. I felt pinched and embarrassed in the pany of the free-spending salesmen I met. ometimes, even in the early days of our iage, there seemed to be no fun for me e things we got by planning. Quite often t crowded and hemmed in, and caught lf looking back on my Army days as st a period of freedom. No, I didn't ever plain to Kyra," he replied in answer to a tion. "I was ashamed to seem ungrateful, al, quarrelsome. In those days I was y determined Kyra and I weren't ever g to quarrel as my parents had quarreled that I would never raise my voice or w like my father.

After we finally got the $1000, Kyra ed in her teaching contract. When she me pregnant with Sally, I walked on the ds. I thought nothing was too good for At that time my company, a big whole- concern, was offering a $500 prize to the man who peddled the most frozen chicken s retail customers. Kyra was bound and determined I get the $500 prize. So I went out to win it. For three months, with her cheering me on, I worked my head off and blanketed the Los Angeles area with frozen poultry. Eventually I won top place and cinched the prize with a comfortable margin of 500 cases of chickens. Anyway, so I believed from the Friday night the contest closed until Monday morning. It then developed I had only won a moral victory. One of my customers, a big chain-store buyer with ten retail outlets, bought 1000 cases of chickens from me on Friday and weekend sales were held in the ten stores. The retail bargain sales flopped. On Monday morning the buyer returned 700 cases of unsold chickens to my company, a thing he had no right to do. But he claimed I had upped his order without authorization, that no contract existed. I had an order book carrying his signature in black and white. I showed it to my boss. Afraid to risk offending the buyer and losing the chain's future business, my boss ran out on me. He tore up my order blank, took back the 700 cases of chickens with profuse apologies, and then forced me to apologize to the buyer for a 'mistake' which all three of us knew I hadn't made.

"Failing Kyra," Brad said, "was worse than missing out on the $500. Her disappointment was hard to take. She doesn't understand the food business. She didn't say a great deal. But I could tell she blamed me for dropping from first to second place in the contest almost as much as I blamed that cutthroat buyer and my yellow-livered boss. I felt so mean and sore about the whole affair I wanted to duck the convention where the prize—my prize—was to be awarded to somebody else. Kyra thought it wouldn't be sporting or manly for me to stay away. The company was meeting the travel and hotel expenses. She gave me $20 spending money.

"On the train, some of the fellows started a poker game. I hadn't played a hand of poker since my Army days. For a while I watched. Then suddenly I asked to be dealt in the game. Maybe, like a fool, I figured I would win $500 to take home to Kyra. My $20 was gone in nothing flat. I got hot under the collar, excited. Almost before I knew it, I turned to a kibitzer and borrowed $50. The $50 went too.

"I couldn't go home to Kyra," Brad said, "and admit that in addition to losing the contest I'd whooped off $70. I thought I would win back the $70 on the return trip and clear the slate, without her knowing it. On the return trip, I lost $100. Then and there I was hooked. Since I took that convention trip, I have lost nearly $5000 trying to get back $70 and be even with the board. The way I feel is Gardena and the tracks owe me the money I have invested there. If I ever once get even, I can quit.

"Anyway, that's what I think some of the time. Other times I decide I'm kidding myself and that I will never quit, that I can't quit. Often I am convinced I was fated to be a rotten human being and a rotten husband like my old man. His vices are women and whisky. Me—I'm stuck with gambling. To raise a gambling stake I will stoop to anything. The urge is irresistible. The only time I feel really good, really wide awake and alive, is when I'm gambling. How I wish I knew a way to break loose from the spell, the fascination! Unless you can help me," Brad said to the counselor, "my wife and kids will leave me, my job will leave me, and I will be done for."

The Marriage Counselor Says:

"After my first interview with Kyra and Brad, I felt at dead end. How could I assist the couple? How could I put Brad on the right track? Both he and Kyra were agreed that all the faults in the marriage were on Brad's side, that she was entirely blameless. While professing his desire to reform, Brad was eluding the discomfort of reform by pleading lack of will power. This dodge, a favorite with gamblers and drinkers, is hard to get around. You can't sit a man in a chair. serve him a portion of will power, and make him swallow it.

"Excessive gambling, like excessive drinking, is nearly always rooted in a hidden

She shot the ashes off the Kaiser's cigaret

HER name was Phoebe Mozee and she was born in Darke County, Ohio, in 1860. and she could shoot the head off a running quail when she was twelve years old.

Once, at the invitation of Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany, she knocked the ashes off a cigaret while he was holding it in his mouth.

When she out-shot the great exhibition marksman, Frank Butler, he fell in love with her and married her and they were ideally happy together for the rest of their long lives.

She could handle a rifle or a six-gun with an artistry unsurpassed by that of any human being before her time or, probably, since. And when she appeared with Sitting Bull and other notables in Colonel Cody's Wild West Show, she thrilled your father and mother—not as Phoebe Anne Oakley Mozee but as "Little Sure Shot," the immortal Annie Oakley.

Annie Oakley, the poor back-country orphan girl who made her way to world-wide fame, was the very spirit of personal independence. That spirit is just as much alive in our generation as it was in hers. It is among the great assets of our people—and our nation. And it is one very great reason why our country's Savings Bonds are perhaps the finest investment in the world today.

Make that investment work for you! Increase your own personal independence and your family's security, by buying United States Savings Bonds regularly—starting now!

★ ★ ★

It's actually easy to save money—when you buy United States Series E Savings Bonds through the automatic Payroll Savings Plan where you work! You just sign an application at your pay office; after that your saving is done for you. And the Bonds you receive will pay you interest at the rate of 3% per year, compounded semiannually, for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish! Sign up today! Or, if self-employed, join the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank.

For your own security—and your country's, too—
invest in U. S. Savings Bonds!

The U. S. Government does not pay for this advertisement. It is donated by this publication in cooperation with the Advertising Council and the Magazine Publishers of America.

PUBLIC SERVICE ADVERTISING COUNCIL

psychological dilemma. Brad proclaimed his love for Kyra, but it struck me as curious he had begun to gamble during her first pregnancy and had been gambling heavily during her second pregnancy. His failure in the company contest readily explained the first poker game, but did not explain the years of reckless gambling that followed. Some emotionally immature men consider a wife's pregnancy as a rejection of themselves, and some gamblers substitute the thrill of the pari-mutuel machine and the roulette wheel for sexuality. This was not the case with Brad. His sexual relationship with Kyra was good. He desired children.

"Then why, I wondered, would he gamble away the family money at a time Kyra had most need of his emotional and financial support? Some gamblers, guided by obscure and difficult-to-explain motivations, subconsciously want to lose their money, wind up penniless, and thereby punish themselves. Although Brad told me there were occasions he was relieved to lose the last dollar in his pocket so he could leave the gambling house and go home to bed, I didn't think he desired to punish himself.

"It seemed to me that Brad's gambling represented a subconscious attack on Kyra. It seemed to me Brad subconsciously wanted to punish and hurt his wife. The question was: Why?

"I had further interviews with Kyra and Brad. Slowly, a different picture of their marriage emerged. On the surface Kyra wasn't bossy. Nevertheless she was a clever, soft-spoken, modern version of the critical, pushy, domineering mother she very much disliked. In marrying Brad, Kyra got a husband whose self-confidence was already badly shaken by his abusive, domineering father. Brad needed to be built up by his wife. Instead of building him up, Kyra proceeded to nibble away his slender stock of self-esteem. She began by placing him in a sales job he disliked—a type of work, incidentally, to which he was temperamentally unfitted—and furthermore she got his father's assistance in doing so. Before the honeymoon was over, Brad's love (his wife) and his enemy (his father) were, in his mind and feelings, conspiring together against him. Easygoing Brad did not protest and scarcely acknowledged his resentments.

"Next Kyra maneuvered herself into a position where she made the decisions, did all the planning, managed the family budget. It is hardly surprising Brad wasn't interested in household bills. Until his gambling produced a crisis, he was never shown any of the bills. Kyra paid them. Brad was impulsive, generous. Kyra was cautious and . . . adamant. From the first week of his job, she decided the amount of Brad's personal spending money. It was all very well for thrifty Kyra to save on beauty parlors, but she had no right to inquire into the sums Brad spent in the barbershop.

"KYRA treated her husband like one of her adolescent students. Without either of the two realizing it, she created for Brad an emotional atmosphere very similar to the detested atmosphere of his childhood. He felt stifled and thwarted in his work, stifled and thwarted in his home. Guiltily, he suppressed the feelings. By his code, criticisms of Kyra were verboten. Too often he had heard his father shout abuses at his mother. Imprisoned in an emotional trap set and sprung by his wife, Brad rebelled.

"Some type of rebellion was almost inevitable. He was virtually compelled to find a release from the boredom, frustration and tensions of a life where he had little choice of action. In some fashion he had to assert the manhood his wife had subtly stolen away. Liquor and infidelity—his father's vices—had no appeal for him. Gambling provided a perfect escape hatch, a perfect means of punishing Kyra who robbed him of gaiety and fun and freedom and who thwarted him emotionally as he had been thwarted in his childhood. In his days of Army play Brad was unlucky enough to have good luck.

"Before Brad could break the chains that bound him—he was a real slave to gambling—he needed to understand the psychological reasons for his plight. Kyra also needed to acquire an understanding of her husband an herself. Then the conditions of their life to gether needed to be changed.

"Kyra was appalled when she came t recognize her resemblance to her mother. B reflecting each night on her suggestions of th day to Brad, her little hints, her maneuvers t triumph over him and get her own way, sh perceived the truth. Kyra had no wish to b like her mother. Almost immediately, sh dropped her habit of command. She began t seek Brad's opinions, ask his advice, lean o him whenever possible. She also stopped re questing his assistance with the housework Kyra was inclined to take advantage of preg nancy and she had been imposing on he husband.

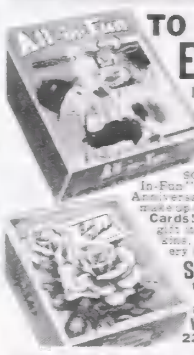
"Among the males of Brad's acquaintanc housework was not customary. Drying dishe and washing diapers made Brad feel servile he was a man who already felt too servile too pushed around and put upon. Onl when he was gambling did he feel a sens of mastery, a confidence that he stood equa with his fellows. He felt a failure in his mar riage, a failure in his business, a failure in hi personality and character, but he felt he could beat the wheel, the pari-mutuel machine, th cards. For always there was a chance. Kyra set out to make Brad feel like a success. She gave him many proofs of her love and trus and awakened his slumbering self-respect.

"KYRA requested no promise, but once again Brad promised to stop gambling. This promise, unlike his promises in the past, was real to him. He now understood his gambling was a symptom of an emotional dissatisfaction and frustration for which he was not wholly responsible. He realized he was entitled to assert his masculinity. He forced himself to become a more dominant partner in the marriage. He didn't bottle up his resentments. If Kyra forgot to ask his advice in a household matter, he pressed his ideas on her. If she showed signs of brushing his wishes aside, he resisted. Boredom, being at loose ends, can be fatal to a person who has the habit of gambling. In order to fortify his promise to himself and steel his resolution, Brad took another concrete step.

"He found an evening job—a physically exhausting job—at a drive-in restaurant. He earned an extra $60 a week. The long hours filled the time when otherwise he might have been tempted to gamble. The hard work helped to alleviate his deep feelings of guilt. Brad was the kind of man who had a definite emotional need to expiate past sins. On the practical side, the extra money he earned assisted materially in reducing the size of his debts. His nighttime income was directly applied to past-due loans and bills. Brad collected his own earnings and made the payments in person. He now was handling the family finances. It took him eighteen months of hard work to climb to solvency. During this period, Brad's taste—his craze—for gambling left him. Assisted by Kyra's encouragement, the change in her and in their emotional environment, he cured himself of gambling fever.

"Brad and Kyra are now the parents of three, two girls and a boy. Seldom have I seen a prouder father and mother. They are buying insurance policies which will put all three children through college, although the payments are stiff for them to meet. Brad is finding the sledding tough in the construction business; he gave up selling frozen food a year ago. Kyra applauded the decision. It seems unlikely Brad will ever be able to complete his architectural studies, but he enjoys his present work.

"The last time I saw Kyra and Brad, he said to me, 'I hope the JOURNAL will print our story. In many cases similar to mine I am sure the trouble is never resolved because many gamblers feel too degraded to seek help. Kyra and I and our children were saved from ruin because of the psychological help we received. Now that Kyra and I understand what was behind my gambling, I have no further need of it. Gambling just bores me. Kyra and I are free and we are happy.'"



Editors' Note: This case history was compiled and condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

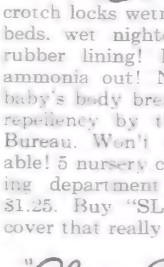
Long-wearing proportioned Cannon nylon stockings are your best buy—from $1 up. Full-fashioned—with a snag-guarding Cannolin finish—at your neighborhood store. CANNON

BETTER THAN EVER
IN COLD RELIEF



New Tabcin®
BRAND
MILES LABORATORIES, INC., Elkhart, Indiana

We'll Send These 2 Boxes of Greeting Cards

TO ALL WHO WANT EXTRA MONEY!
Rush name, address today for these two sensational new fast-selling box Assortments. Show them to friends, neighbors, everyone for easy, big profits. Get the new 1962 "Feature" All-Occasion Assortment—plus laugh-packed "All-In-Fun" Assortment for Birthdays, Get-Well, Anniversaries, etc. Each assortment $1—you make up to 50¢ a box! Extra cash now in Easter Cards! More than 40 other assortments and gift items—Gift Wrappings, Imported Napkins, Stationery, Children's Books, etc. Every item is a top money-maker.
SEND NO MONEY a postcard is all you need. Get these two assortments entirely on approval with complete money-making plans. No experience needed. Act now!
WALLACE BROWN, INC., Dept. A-409, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y.

New Hair-Do Conceals Miniature Hearing Aid

No reason to advertise your hearing loss conspicuously! The new MAICO Transist-Ear is so tiny, so light and compact it fits easily and snugly in even the popular short coiffures. The MAICO Miniature is sensitive and finely engineered, to bring you sounds so close to natural tones you'll hardly tell the difference. Wearing this remarkable instrument in your hair, there's no reason to show that you're hard of hearing. Write for free booklet on this new way of hearing to MAICO, Rm.41E, 21 North Third St., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

EXTRA CASH . . . Can be yours for part-time work. Write for details.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
830 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

LOOKING FOR A SMART BABY GIFT?

It's new! It's different! Mother will love it! It's "SLEEPY-DRYE"* the all-cotton diaper cover that solves baby's wetness problems! Made with durable water-repellent! Worn over diapers. Triple-reinforced crotch locks wetness in diaper! No more wet beds, wet nightclothes! No hot plastic or rubber lining! Lets air in—lets irritating ammonia out! No more diaper rash! Now baby's body breathes! Approved for lasting repellency by the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau. Won't crack, peel, stiffen! Washable! 5 nursery colors. Sizes to 5. At all leading department and infants' wear stores $1.25. Buy "SLEEPY-DRYE," the diaper cover that really works!
"Sleepy-Drye" MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.
*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg Co

"I WAS A HOPELESS FATTY"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 75

t was the worst part of being a fatty?

g left out of things—ignored by boys at when most girls are dressing up for their al dates, going to parties and dances. I ways the horse of the crowd, the target sing. "When Diane walks down the the pavement cracks," is the way one scribed me; or "Hey, Diane, what are rrying in your hip pockets?"

eaded gym class. All the other girls prance out in their suits—those r-type garments that make you look our actual size—and I would waddle nine looking like a baby elephant. I al- nagined the other kids were talking me behind my back (often they were) ed hard to pretend not to care. There e awful time when I went out for cheer- only to discover to my horror and dy else's amusement that I couldn't f the gym floor. I thought I'd die of em- ment. When your feelings are hurt, you awfully bogged down in loneliness and .

t you ever have a date during school?

nt to the Junior Assembly Dancing on Saturday nights (mother made me) oys danced with me (their mothers hem). Later, in my junior year, I dated y exclusively. He went to college in a ring state, and the only time we went s when I invited him to our school or parties. If he couldn't come, I home, and missed all the fun. I realize at I was being "true-blue" to him be- wasn't being asked out by anyone else.

did you let yourself gain so much weight?

always plump as a child. By the time I junior high I was just plain fat be- just plain ate too much. Tons of rich ade cookies every day—three or four ars to nibble on during classes or at an on movie. School lunches consisted of m, a bag of pretzels, soda pop—all the ounter things I could buy quickly. I lazy to stand in line at the cafeteria for r lunch. After school I'd often eat four slices of bread and mayonnaise to tide r until dinner, when I had second and lpings of everything.

made you decide to diet?

y—although he didn't know it. Our lived at the same beach, where Jack feguard. Day after day I used to sit, all n my bathing suit, watching Jack and g about how wonderful it would be to have him notice me and ask me out. But with all the pretty girls buzzing around him like bees, I didn't have a chance unless I did something about the way I looked.

I started my diet the summer between my junior and senior years in high school. By the time I graduated I had reduced from 160 to 125. I lost ten more pounds during my first year at junior college, and when I came back the next summer, weighing 115 pounds, Jack didn't recognize me. "I'm Diane Macom," I told him. "I've been coming to this beach for years!" Jack thought awhile and then, "Oh sure. I remember you as big as life sitting out there. What's happened? You look terrific!" I just smiled up at him all starry-eyed and thought, He's the one for me!

Was it hard for you to diet?

In the beginning, yes. I was starved. But it had been the between-meal foods and the extra helpings that had made me fat. By cutting them out, I was able to lose weight and still have three good meals each day. My doctor gave me a diet outline, told me not to exceed 1200 calories a day, and suggested that I carry a calorie booklet as a means of keeping exact track of what I was eating. That little booklet became my beauty bible. I can tell you the calorie count in anything from an apple to a cup of zucchini!

Did you cut out all sweets?

I had dessert almost every day. Fresh fruit in season, simple custards, gelatin, a small slice of plain cake. On weekends when I couldn't resist some luscious dessert mother might fix, I'd have a small portion. But then the next week I made up for the extra calories by having a few no-dessert days. I cut out completely things like candy, peanuts, sodas, sundaes, doughnuts, and so on. When I was hungry between meals I had two saltines with a tall glass of tomato juice (90 calories) instead of a soda or sundae (350 calories). No extra helpings at mealtime, either. I was determined to lose those 50 pounds. Whenever I was tempted to cheat, I'd ask myself, "Now which is more important—this deep-dish apple pie, or a compliment from Jack?" It stopped me every time!

Did you exercise during your diet?

Yes, I got up at 6:45 in order to work in 20 minutes of exercise before school. Another 20 minutes after school. Waist bends, hip spanks; I even made a conscious effort to stand tall, and to walk more gracefully—with my shoulders down and back, hips tucked under, diaphragm flat. I looked better and felt better too.

"Barpoint"... fascinating spring trend.

TWEEDIE FOOTWEAR CORPORATION • JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI

Amazing Discovery Tightens Plates Like "Living Tissue"

Not a paste! Not a powder! Not a cream or wax pad! But a new, soft plastic that holds plates firm and tight!

Just released – Amazing soft plastic SNUG Denture Cushions! Grip loose fitting plates tight and firm–yet feel and hold like "Living Tissue." Eases sore gums due to loose fitting plates. You eat, talk, laugh without embarrassment. SNUG stays cushion-soft –can't harden and ruin plate. Tasteless, odorless, cleaned in a jiffy–easily removed when replacement is needed. No more daily bother with "stickums." Get SNUG Denture Cushions today and do away with your plate troubles. Money-back if not satisfied. At all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1.50 check or money order to Midland Pharmacal Corp., Dept. 17, 76 Ninth Ave., New York 11, New York.

"Gosh darn it, mommy, I wish you hadn't been deprived of so many things as a child."

BABY COMING?
Smart gift idea!

It's the gift mother wants—"SLEEPY-BYE"*—the original all-purpose oversleeper! Exclusive "Baby-Gro" feature lets garment grow with baby! Keeps baby warm, comfy, without blankets! No more colds from kicked-off covers! No pins! Zips over baby's regular garments. Big side pleats, roomy bottom! Lots of wiggle room! Safe! No tiny legs caught in crib bars. "Best of its kind" says Nurse Louise Zabriskie, Director of the N. Y. Maternity Consultation Service. 5 nursery colors. Washable flannelette.

With Baby-Gro feature (fits baby from 6 mos.-3 yrs.).....$2.98
Layette-Size (0-6 mos.).....$1.98
Regular (individual sizes) in gay print 6-18 mos.; 18-36 mos.....$2.98

At department and infants' wear stores.
MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.
*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg. Co.

WOMEN!
IF YOU NEED MONEY

HERE'S $50 FOR YOU

Make all the extra money you want in a few spare hours. Sell beautiful Fashion Frocks, low as $2.98 each. We furnish over 100 styles, colors, fabrics. You risk nothing. No experience needed. Your own dresses supplied as a bonus. Try it – write for free samples.

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Dept. S-1056
Cincinnati 25, Ohio.

JEAN PETERS, 20th Century-Fox star, starring in the Hecht-Lancaster Production, "APACHE."

"Any squaw would be glad to have Springmaid sheets in her tepee."

SPRINGMAID SHEETS

Isn't it a relief not to have to continue dieting?

I'm still careful about what I eat, because I don't intend to go back to my old weight-building habits. By dieting over a long period of time I gave myself a chance to reduce my desire for rich foods too. At times when I am tempted, I get out my little calorie booklet which I still carry with me, or think about the tiny-waisted dress I'm going to have to zip up with ease for my next modeling job, or remind myself that Jack prefers slim girls.

Did you ever get the date you dreamed about with Jack?

Lots of them. The one last summer was the best of all. It was a beautiful wedding. I was the bride and Jack was the groom!

Diane's Reducing Diet — a Typical Week

MONDAY

Breakfast (same every day)	Calories
Fruit juice (4 oz.) or any fresh fruit in season (medium serving) approximately	50
Poached egg on whole-wheat toast, lightly buttered	175
Skim milk (8 oz.)	88
Coffee (plain)	—
	313
Lunch
Chopped-steak patty on half toasted roll	225
Tomato slices on lettuce	35
Skim milk (8 oz.)	88
	348
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	60
Saltines (2)	30
	90
Dinner
Broiled lamb chops (2)	275
String beans	15
Tossed salad (lettuce, endive, carrot, radishes, onion)	50
Fresh pear	50
Coffee (plain)	—
	390

Total calories for day—1141

TUESDAY

Breakfast	313
Lunch
Sliced-egg-and-lettuce sandwich on whole-wheat toast	225
Skim milk (8 oz.)	88
	313
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	60
Dinner
Broiled calf's liver (4 oz.)	275
Broccoli, lemon juice	15
Cottage-cheese-and-pineapple salad (medium serving)	175
Coffee (plain)	—
	465

Total calories for day—1151

WEDNESDAY

Breakfast	313
Lunch
Fresh fruit salad (orange, grapefruit, banana, apple)	150
Saltines (3)	45
Tea with lemon	—
	195
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	60
Dinner
Sirloin steak (4 oz.)	260
Peas with mushrooms	75
Tossed salad (lettuce, tomato, carrot, onion, radish)	50
Bread, 1 slice, lightly buttered	100
Skim milk (8 oz.)	88
Coffee (plain)	—
	573

Total calories for day—1141

THURSDAY

Breakfast	31
Lunch
Grilled cheese sandwich on rye toast	30
Apple	10
Skim milk (8 oz.)	8
	48
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	6
Saltines (2)	3
	9
Dinner
Broiled chicken breast (6 oz.)	15
Spinach with sliced egg	5
Cucumber and tomato slices on lettuce	4
Fruit-flavored gelatin	7
Coffee (plain)	—
	31

Total calories for day—1206

FRIDAY

Breakfast	31
Lunch
Peach-halves-and-cottage-cheese salad (medium serving)	15
Whole-wheat toast, 1 slice, lightly buttered	10
Skim milk (8 oz.)	8
	33
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	6
Saltines (2)	3
	9
Dinner
Chicken consommé	—
Swordfish (4 oz.)	17
Diced beets	2
Mixed green salad	5
Baked vanilla custard	13
Coffee (plain)	—
	37

Total calories for day—1116

SATURDAY

Breakfast	31
Lunch
Cheese omelet (2 eggs in 1 tsp. butter, 1 oz. cheese)	27
Melba toast (2)	4
Skim milk	8
	40
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	6
Dinner
Meat loaf (4 oz.)	20
Asparagus stalks, large serving	2
Whole-wheat toast, 1 slice, lightly buttered	10
Lemon gelatin salad with cabbage and carrot shreds	12
Coffee (plain)	—
	45

Total calories for day—1226

SUNDAY

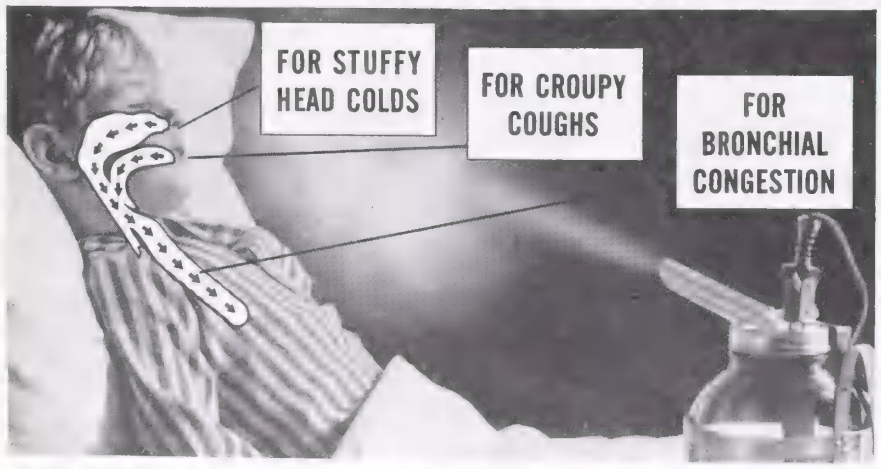
Breakfast	31
Dinner
Roast beef (4 oz.)	26
Peas and carrots	5
Celery stalks
Fresh fruit cup
Coffee (plain)
	39
Afternoon
Tomato juice (8 oz.)	6
Supper
Meat loaf, sliced-tomato-and-lettuce sandwich on whole-wheat toast	30
Skim milk (8 oz.)	8
	45

Total calories for day—1216

EARN CASH—BIG MONEY!

Every friend and neighbor is your good prospect for Nationally Famous SUNSHINE GREETING CARDS . . . beautiful, original creations that are exciting VALUES. (The handsome EVERYDAY BOX ASSORTMENT—16 Cards & Envelopes only $1!) Up to 100% PROFIT for you! Many exclusive Sunshine winners to make BIG MONEY for yourself or group. Write for samples on approval and Free Literature.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, INC., Dept. LH1
Springfield 1, Mass. Pasadena 3, Calif.
(If East of Rockies, write Springfield Office.)



ALWAYS Pops Better JOLLY TIME POP CORN

EXTRA INCOME?

OF COURSE! Write to the address below and we'll send you details about a money-making offer. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 831 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

WHY DOCTORS PRESCRIBE MEDICATED VAPOR FOR RELIEF OF CROUP AND COLD CONGESTION

(Light diagrammed areas indicate cold-congested Nose, Sinus, Throat and Bronchial Tubes. Arrows show how Medicated Vapor penetrates to relieve deep-seated Croup and Cold Congestion.)

Penetrating Power of KAZ Medicated Vapor Provides Swift, Sure, Safe Relief From Deep-Seated Cold-Congestion

No method of vaporization is so efficient, yet so safe as KAZ, America's largest selling ELECTRIC VAPORIZERS, with Automatic Shutoff, Safety Lock and Separate Medical Chamber, $2.00 to $6.95, at drug stores everywhere.

And, to medicate moisture, doctors recommend the formula of KAZ-FOR-COLDS, only INHALANT formulated for use in electric vaporizers. Can't foul or clog vaporizers; is included free of extra cost with KAZ ELECTRIC VAPORIZERS. At all druggists, 35¢, 50¢ and $1.00.

KAZ ELECTRIC VAPORIZERS ARE Approved by Guaranteed by Commended by KAZ MANUFACTURING CO., INC.

NEW YORK 36, N. Y.

UL — Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — COMMENDED PARENTS

RESPECT FOR LAW BEGINS AT HOME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

And hate his father,' said the mother rly.
Not unless you side against his father, and o over Bobby, and pet and comfort him.
ou stand by your husband, your son will lop a healthy respect for his old man. And ants to respect him. All children need to ect their parents.'
The father followed my advice. The ner stood by her husband and stoically resed her feelings, and Bobby's 'complex' cured. It took quite some time, because by had never been told No! in the firm ntion to make the command stick. If he been treated with loving firmness from iny, he probably might never have had to be ked. Nine is a late age to begin disciplin-a child. But better late than never. For if by had gone on as he was doing, society ld eventually have disciplined him, in a y cruel way."

s story was told in a discussion of juve-delinquency. My eminent friend, on the of a famous mental hospital, expressed elf very strongly on the cause of juvenile e, and its link with psychotic disturbances.
rgued as follows:
child's first encounter with "law" is in his home—with the rules and regulations olished by his parents, and especially by ather, who initially appears to the child as owerful. The child knows that his father e support of the family and the source of ell-being—his role in the young mind is r like that of God. A child must know his r to be kind, loving and beneficent. But ust also see him as Justice—as lawgiver law enforcer. The mother is naturally the 's intercessor. But every home needs a r, for it is very difficult for a mother to the dual role of judge and comforter.
e child's attitude toward his mother ld be that of the protected and protecting.
children especially should early learn to hings for mother—to run to fetch her ething she wants, to help her in little ways, ake her smile; to reciprocate, in short, her ectiveness. And this is one of the first laws e home that the father should lay down enforce: that the children treat his wife their mother with gentleness, respect and ideration—that they be obedient to her ing. For by this the child knows that his r loves her, and the love of his parents for other is the very foundation of his emo-al security. Children are all instinct. They v that if their parents love and respect other, they, the children, are also assured
ve.
e father must, however, represent the authority—he must, as the saying is, down the law."
ws for children are, or should be, very
, and represent a hierarchy of lesser and greater thou-shalts and thou-shalt-nots. Children should never be punished for things that merely cause inconvenience to adults—though these can also be reduced by inculcating good manners, for which the most effective instruments are praise, pride and example.

But there must be other laws in the home that actually correspond on a small and childish scale to the laws of civilized states. Lying, stealing, destroying property, indecently exposing oneself, malicious assault—these are forbidden by every legal code, and their infraction in the home should meet a stern and instantaneous reaction. For if no code is enforced in the home, by that beneficent Godlike authority who is papa, the child grows up "lawlessly," unprepared to recognize or obey the laws of society.

Bobby, for instance, was guilty of what, in legal terms is called "vandalism." The laws of society—of the state—did not touch him because his offense was committed in his own home, under the protection, actually, of his parents. But the next step in Bobby's career would be an extension of that vandalism. It goes on all the time—the breaking of windows, slitting of automobile tires, defacing of walls. Then its perpetrators become "delinquents." Similarly, a child who kicks his mother without encountering "the wrath of God" will kick his teacher next, and go on to worse brutalities.

It is ridiculous to expect a child, as he enters teen age, with the violent exaggerations of instincts and urges that so often accompany puberty, to suppress them in obedience to the laws of society when he has never become conscious that there is such a thing as law, enforced by the first authorities he ever encounters—his parents—and by the next authorities—his teachers.

Children learn self-control by initially being controlled. Much of morality or immorality is habit, and all civilization rests on the cultivation of inhibitions. Few children—there are some exceptions—are naturally good or bad. They become one or the other according to how the twig is bent. Even training in manners, superficial as that may appear, influences the inner development of a child. A class, for instance, that stands up when teacher enters the room is making a gesture that implies respect, and the mere gesture helps put the pupils in a frame of mind to accept the teacher's authority. The first and most basic training, without which all further education will fail, is in deportment. My friend repeated, "If a child is permitted to be rude to his father or mother or teachers, he will become a rude youth and a rude man, and crime is only the ultimate expression of a rude mind and soul."

My friend went on to express himself on the relation between crime and insanity, remarking that both were on a serious increase in America.

"In the hospital where I serve," he said, naming a nationally famous one, "we have every variety of mad people—paranoiacs, schizophrenics, manic-depressives, melancholics, and so on. In some few cases their derangements have a physical or congenital cause, but such are in a minority. The majority are just people who have lost control.

"And how do we cure them?—and we do cure very many. We put them under control, like children in a nursery. Every hour of their day is mapped out in strict routine—rising hour, breakfast, occupational therapy, lunch, rest, sports, bath, dressing for dinner, bed—rather like a very strict, old-fashioned boarding school. Usually, during the first few days they rant and rave rebelliously, but they learn very quickly, crazy though they are, that father's word is law—father, in their case, being the doctors and staff—and that the law will be enforced. No good, modern mental hospitals put people into painful strait jackets or abuse them in any way. But we have other nonpainful ways of wrapping up violent cases so they cannot harm themselves or others. And as they come to accept control they begin, gradually, to regain self-awareness and self-control. When they can discipline themselves and recognize and control their illusions, they are cured.

"Many suffer from mental breakdowns for reasons that might induce the same condition in almost anyone. But I am convinced from long experience with thousands of cases that others would never see the inside of a mental hospital if they had ever learned self-control through being properly controlled as children. We have to start them all over again—in a nursery."

Though this conversation occurred several years ago, I have never forgotten it. My friend's remarks on juvenile delinquency ran counter, of course, to the prevailing notions of its cause, which is largely attributed to physical environment—to poverty, slums, inadequate recreational facilities for youth, the evil influence of some popular forms of reading matter (horror comics, for instance), and the violence depicted in some radio and television programs and movies.

I would not write these off as contributing factors. I am no apologist for poverty or slums. But the facts about juvenile delinquency and crime do not jibe with this explanation. Juvenile crime is on the increase in every social class and in every type of community—in country towns where no children need play in the streets, in expensive suburbs, in beautifully laid-out government housing projects—where, in fact, vandalism is very common—and it has been steadily increasing along with a general rise in the standard of living. It is far worse than it was in the depression years.

Although much visual matter available to minors is coarse, violent and evilly suggestive, and requires greater public regulation, there have always been panderers of pornography. But responsible parents saw to it that such literature did not fall into their children's hands, and that tastes were cultivated which would contribute to their rejecting it if it did.

What can clearly be equated with increase in delinquency is the accompanying relaxation of disciplines in home and school, where the child or teen-ager is allowed freedoms incompatible with his immature responsibilities and capacities of judgment. Granted that the moral and intellectual disciplines of forty years ago were often so strict as to be oppressive and creative of rebellion; that the old-fashioned teacher was sometimes tyrannical and despotic, without being benevolent; and that at no time have all, or perhaps most, parents been loving, kind, just, and still, where necessary, stern, the situation is not improved but worsened by standing relationships upside down—by firing a teacher who punishes a child, but doing nothing to a child (or his parents) who kicks a teacher!

Respect for law—for rules of conduct and deportment—begins in home and school, or it does not begin at all. And lawlessness is a self-perpetuating, ever-expanding habit. END

WITH SYMPATHY

By ZOË AKINS

You will awake each day remembering
That she has gone elsewhere, and will not hear
Your voice cry out; or should she, your own ear
Will fail to catch her far-off signaling.

And now night long you will be running, calling,
As though in night's dream spaces you may find Your child again. As well seek in the wind
The touch of hands, the warmth of young hair falling!

Oh, vain as summer rain to change in rivers
Their seaward course is mortal grief or plan
For those, our dearest. . . . Let us hope who can—Even if we know an obdurate fate delivers
The thrust that none can guide—that some far kindness
Lies in its purpose, hidden by our blindness.

"Coffee-break"
with
Mary Margaret McBride

Is the man in your life a fanatic about good coffee? Well, it's no trick at all to make perfect coffee for him every time.

The Coffee Brewing Institute advises: "just use one Standard Coffee Measure, or two level tablespoons, of coffee to each ¾ measuring cup of fresh, cold water. Find the ideal timing for your coffee maker and always time your coffee exactly—never let it boil." If you don't have a Standard Coffee Measure, just send a dime and your name and address directly to the General Manager of the Coffee Brewing Institute at the address given below. They'll be glad to send you one.

And now if you're one of the smart hostesses who's discovered that she can entertain a much bigger crowd at a festive "Coffee-and-Dessert Party" than she could ever cope with for dinner, here's a recipe that will make your next one a talked-of success.

COFFEE CHARLOTTE

2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup ground coffee
1½ cups milk
1 envelope unflavored gelatine
¼ cup cold water
2 egg whites
1 cup heavy cream
3 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
Lady fingers
Maraschino cherries

Beat egg yolks. Add 2 tablespoons sugar gradually, beating constantly; add salt. Add coffee to milk, bring slowly to scalding point, strain through cheesecloth. Add to egg yolk mixture, cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until mixture coats spoon. Sprinkle gelatine on cold water and dissolve in hot custard. Cool slightly. Beat egg whites stiff and fold in. Cool. Whip cream, add remaining sugar and vanilla, fold in. Line sherbet glasses with lady fingers. Fill with custard mixture. Chill until firm. Garnish with additional whipped cream and maraschino cherries. Serves 6.

And remember, party days or plain days—any occasion, in fact—there's nothing like really good coffee well-brewed to bring out the full flavor.

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

551 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

"THIS BOOKLET HELPED ME FACE ONE OF LIFE'S GREATEST CRISES"

Write For Your Free Copy Today

"I, like more than two-thirds of all women, outlived my husband. I can't tell you how grateful I was for his thoughtfulness in insisting that we select a family cemetery plot and a monument of marble or granite while we could do it together.

"I suggest that in fairness to you and your family, you make this decision now. Don't let it fall on your shoulders alone at a time when grief clouds clear thinking."

For assistance, call on any dealer-member of the Monument Institute of America. Or write for our booklet, "Planning NOW for Tomorrow." Use coupon below.

You can rely upon the advice and counsel of the Monument Dealer who displays this Emblem

MONUMENT INSTITUTE OF AMERICA

MONUMENT INSTITUTE OF AMERICA, INC.
282 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo 2, N. Y.

Send me a copy of "Planning NOW for Tomorrow."

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____ L-1

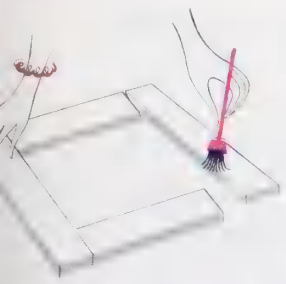
Anyone can frame a picture

When you use inexpensive lath stripping f your frame, there's no need to miter the corners, and the cost is a matter of pennies.

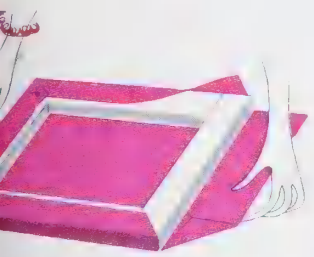
By NANCY CRAWFORD

HERE'S a way to make picture framing wonderfully simple for the amateur. The trick is to use strips of lath, the ends butted squarely together and securely glued, which eliminates the need for mitering the corners as with regular picture molding. The ½" x 1¾" lath was used for the four attractive frames pictured below. Three of these were covered in fabrics—felt, velveteen and burlap; one was painted in blue-and-black stripes and decorated with gold paper. But the possibilities for decorating your frames are endless as your imagination will allow. Odd pieces of tweed or upholste fabric, wallpaper, shiny gilt gift-wrappi foil, bookbinders' paper would be go alternates, but be sure that whatev decoration you choose complements color and feeling the print you want frame.

Choose your lathing in a width that in a good proportion to your pictu The 1¾" lath used for the frames b low was 7 cents per foot. The lumb dealer from whom you purchase t lathing will cut the strips in the exact si that you want. Keep in mind that t



© SIDNEY Z. LUCAS, N.Y.C.



Lovely old French flower pr by Prevost is one of a portfo set of six which sells for $1.0 Emerald-green velveteen w chosen to cover the frame, a four small wooden medallio (about 8 cents apiece at a ca netmaker's) were gilded a glued in the corners.

The frame for Picasso's Lovers was painted in stripes of blue and black casein paint (masking tape was used for a smooth clear line). Whole frame was sprayed with a plastic spray to insure durability. Strips of gold party-favor paper decorate the inside and outside edges, as well as marking off separation between blue and black.

of the frame should be at least ller than the over-all size of the —in other words, there should be of margin in back so that the pic-be tacked to the frame. Choose flat surface to work upon, and gether with any strong resin glue ur pieces of lath as shown in

1. When the glue is dry and olds solidly together, reinforce r joinings by hammering small ted brads into the wood.
ame method is used when cover-frame with either fabric or paper.
e frame on a piece of fabric or rge enough to cover at least half th of the frame when wrapped to the back. Apply glue lightly to of frame with a brush. When the s become slightly "tacky," wrap l around frame on all four sides, securing it in back with small tacks (drawing 2). When frame is completely covered, outside corners neat, and material in center taut, puncture a hole in center of taut material, and cut to each corner of frame. You will have four loose triangles of material attached at inside edge of frame only. Trim the four triangles, allowing enough material to wrap around to the back. Cut four small strips of material (the width of the laths) and glue to inside corners, to cover small spaces exposed when material is wrapped to back. The four loose sections are then wrapped tightly around the frame, and tacked (drawing 3).

Your print should be mounted on either cardboard or thin plywood unless the paper is very firm. Use the same resin glue, diluted so that it is free-running. Smooth the picture from center to outside, forcing out all the air bubbles. The mounted picture should be allowed to dry, weighted by some heavy object which covers entire surface. When dry, coat with a plastic spray, obtained in pressure tins at most paint shops. The mounted (or unmounted) picture is then attached to back of frame with small nails or thumbtacks.

3 or print of Edward s Marshall House

ered in turquoise cording to instruc-ve, then decorated llel strands of heavy itting wool, stretch-across each side of e, and tacked in Cost of the entire as 65 cents.

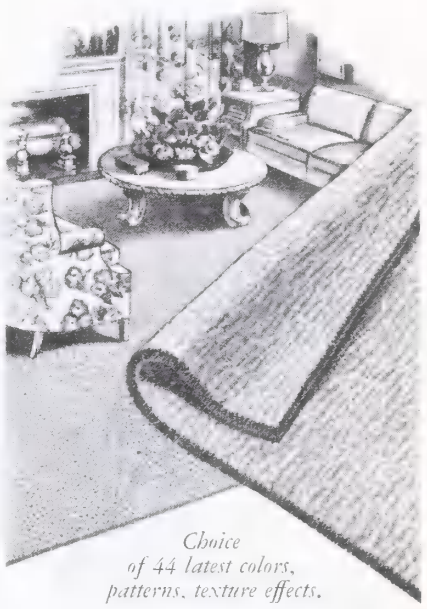
Felt in a rich crimson was chosen to complement the frame for Holbein's portrait of Anne of Cleves. The strip of upholsterers' gold braid decorating the felt was 17 cents per yard, and the gilt rosette upholsterer's tacks which decorate the corners, about 7 cents apiece.

I GUARANTEE TO SEND YOU...



THE FINEST RUGS and CARPETS YOU EVER HAD for So Little Money . .

..IF You Will Send Your Old Rugs, Carpets, Clothing, etc. to the Olson Rug Factory at My Expense

—Walter E. Olson, President

BEFORE you buy rugs or wall to wall carpeting anywhere, at any price, write for the beautiful, new FREE Olson Rug and Decorating Book in full color—and 81st Anniversary Gift Coupon. Learn how easy it is to have luxurious, deep-textured, Olson Reversible Broadloom that has all the beauty and feel of luxury-priced wool rugs—at about Half the price you expected to pay.

Choice of 44 latest colors, patterns, texture effects.

It's Sensible—It's Easy—It's Fun!

The Olson catalog tells how the valuable seasoned wool and other materials in old carpets, rugs, clothing, blankets, etc., are scientifically reclaimed, sterilized, bleached—then carded with choice new wools, redyed, respun and rewoven into lovely new two-sided broadloom rugs, fine enough for every home.

Over 3 Million Customers

Regardless of the colors in your old materials, you may choose any of the 44 up-to-date, new colors and designs shown in the Olson catalog: Solid and Two-Tone colors, practical Tweed Blends, Tone-on-Tone Leaf designs, colorful Florals, Embossed effects, authentic Early American and Oriental patterns, Ovals.

Lovely Floral, Early American and Oriental patterns.

Choose from the world's largest list of rug sizes. The Olson Rug Co. is the only carpet and rug manufacturer that has looms in 18 different widths, where you can order rugs any length up to 18 ft. wide. Seamless, without the waste of cutting all sizes from 9 or 12 ft. rolls. Most orders completed in 3 days.

Money Back Guarantee

I promise to send you the finest rugs you ever had for the price. If you don't agree, you may send the rugs back at my expense, as stated in the Olson Guarantee, and I'll cheerfully refund any money you have paid and pay you for your material. We have been doing this for 81 years. Why postpone the pleasure of new rugs any longer when you can get thick, modern two-sided broadloom rugs at savings so big?

There is an Easy Monthly Payment Plan for those who wish it.

Olson Rugs Have Everything

Don't hesitate to send worn materials. There is far more good material in them than you imagine. It stands to reason that where you furnish so much of the material, you get a far better rug for your money than if you had to pay for all the materials.

Remember, we add an extra liberal amount of CHOICE NEW WOOLS, at no extra charge to you, so that we can guarantee you will get extra deep-textured, full-bodied Olson Rugs of our highest quality.

Mail coupon or a postcard

Olson Rug Co.
Dept. R-62, Chicago 41, Ill.
New York Washington, D.C. San Francisco Minneapolis Detroit Milwaukee

FREE RUG STYLE BOOK and Decorating Guide in Colors and Anniversary GIFT Offer

OLSON RUG CO., R-62, Chicago 41, Ill.

Yes, Mr. Olson, mail your Rug Book Free and without obligation to:

Name .....

Address .....

City State

"It's Daddy! Long Distance!"

A regular call from Dad when he's away is an exciting event at both ends of the line.

The whole family can share in the news, as if you were there together. And you'll find that a telephone visit pays heart-warming dividends in happiness and peace of mind.

The service is quick.

And the cost is small.

LONG DISTANCE RATES ARE LOW

Here are some examples:

Cleveland to Pittsburgh . 45¢

New York to Boston .... 55¢

Chicago to Atlanta $1.05

Philadelphia to Miami...$1.35

Los Angeles to Washington, D.C.....$2.00

These are the Station-to-Station rates for the first three minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include the federal excise tax.

Call by Number.
It's Twice as Fast.

Bell Telephone System

WATCHING THE NEW YEAR IN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

cornstarch or even to ice cream. And don't let baby get it.

MUSTARD SAUCE

For cold meats or frankfurters, or for spreading on sandwiches.

Add ½ cup prepared mustard, 2 tablespoons minced chives and 2 to 3 teaspoons lemon juice to 1 cup mayonnaise. Season with a dash of salt. Chill several hours before serving so the flavor develops. Keeps well.

Potatoes are fun if you get on their right side and give them a poke in the ribs. And what you can't do with them you could put on a punched dime and have room for Milton's Paradise Lost. Here's one way, one only, but it's tops on the hit parade at a party, you'll discover!

FAVORITE POTATO SALAD

The day before you plan to serve the salad, cook 4 pounds potatoes in their jackets in boiling salted water and make the following dressing: Mix together 1½ teaspoons sugar, 1½ teaspoons dry mustard, 1½ teaspoons salt and 2½ tablespoons flour. Scald ½ cup vinegar. Add 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, and add gradually to flour mixture, blending until smooth. Add 1 clove garlic, crushed. In top of double boiler, beat 2 egg yolks slightly. Add vinegar mixture gradually and, stirring constantly, cook over hot (not boiling) water until mixture is thickened. Chill and blend in ½ cup heavy cream, whipped. Now for the salad itself: Peel the potatoes. Cut into ½" cubes. There should be about 2 quarts. Pour 2 tablespoons hot vinegar over the potatoes and let stand while you prepare other ingredients: ¼ cup chopped scallions or green onions, 3 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 cup chopped celery and 1½ cups garlic dill pickles, minced fine. Add to the potatoes and add the dressing. Season with pepper and 1½ to 2 teaspoons salt. Mix thoroughly and taste for seasoning. Pack firmly into a large mold. Chill well. To unmold, loosen thoroughly but gently all around the edge with a spatula and turn out carefully onto serving platter. Garnish with deviled eggs, olives, celery hearts, radishes and scallions.

I don't know why herring should be traditional to New Year's, but it is, and here it is in a salad.

HERRING-AND-CABBAGE SALAD

Mix together 6 cups finely shredded crisp cabbage, 2 cups diced ripe tomatoes, 1 peeled mild onion, thinly sliced, 1 large green pepper, seeded and coarsely shredded, and two 7½-ounce jars herring fillets, drained and cut into 1" pieces. Season well with salt and pepper and toss with 3 tablespoons salad oil and 3 tablespoons vinegar. Serve in lettuce-lined bowl.

Not for the bride. When you see the word "confetti," what does it bring to mind? Well, don't say Nesselrode sauce. Stop and think a minute. Weddings? Why, of course. It calls up visions of rice—less humane than confetti, but still being shaken out of coat collars and the bride's flounces and slippers.

But have you ever thought of confetti connection with stuffed eggs? No? Well, y are about to now. So give eye, lend ear a learn what this is all leading up to. It is

CONFETTI DEVILED EGGS

Peel 6 hard-cooked eggs. Cut in half long wise and remove yolks. Mash yolks th oughly and add 2 tablespoons finely chopp toasted almonds, 2 tablespoons minced gre pepper, 1½ tablespoons minced pimiento tablespoons mayonnaise, 1 teaspoon vine and a dash of Tabasco. Mix well and seas to taste with salt and pepper. Fill egg hal with mixture.

Tray stuff. That little tray that's so a mired wouldn't be so highly thought of if y tried to get all t cheeses suggested he It's quite a list and tell you that it took t will power of Lucifer resist adding a few mo Just to give you a wi choice, that's all! Se on the tray, or close a variety of crackers a forget any sweet on It's cheese you're tending to. So, acco ing to the tray capaci fix it up with your be liked cheeses. (There' red-skinned Gouda a a yellow pineapple supply color and pre up the tray.) So lo over the catalogue, li ited. Here are bl cheese, chive-crea cheese, Camembe process Chedd Gouda.

The staff has seve names. This refers, you know, to the bre basket. Might have r pumpernickel, fran furter rolls, as well white. And inclu plenty of soft butter margarine—not melte for the love of Minerv not that. And y wouldn't go far out pasture if a nice b plate of hot, sugare unsugared and rais doughnuts came to t party. Escorted by firkin or jerkin or Bennington jug of cider. you long to be praised in the gates, this is And to toast the New Year, have on han plenty of soft drinks and a party punch suc as this one.

LEMON-STRAWBERRY PUNCH

Combine one 6-ounce can frozen lemonad concentrate, 1 package frozen sliced straw berries (half thawed—juice and berries) an one 6-ounce can frozen orange-juice concen trate. Just before serving, add 1 qua sparkling water and 1 quart ginger ale. Mi well. Place in a punch bowl with ice. Ga nish with additional strawberries and slice bananas.

Same old day—same old wish. Well, th time has arrived to date our checks and ou letters and all dated things 1955, for '54 is ou on some secret quest, we believe, and neve more will come back. So date them right. I' try too.

And while I'm writing "January first," will come to me—that old old wish that neve grows stale and that is ever new: Happy Ne Year. It has a silver sound like a trumpet on high hill. It echoes through all the days t come.

A happy—the happiest of all—a happy Ne Year is the wish I make. Can you hear it?

Your ANNIE

IF YOU CAME

By VIRGINIA ESTERLY DUNBAR

If you came in the half-light, in the dusk,
My doors would open, and my shutters yield;
If you came in the leafy lavender night
My singing would stir the plumed dark wheat.

But if you came with the high sun at noon
Such brightness would blind my two eyes,
And blindness would bring me my own death—
For sight of you is food, breath, blood.

Oh, come, my darling, as a veiled face,
Come as a shadow falling from the king;
And light will bloom within us like a birth,
Like larks pouring morning from their throats.

Printed in U.S.A

Beautiful Hair

R E C K

Tube 75¢ plus tax
Jar $1.00 plus tax

BRECK CREAM TREATMENT WITH LIPICIL* · A NEW AND EASY WAY TO MAKE HAIR SOFT AND BEAUTIFUL

1 Breck Cream Treatment offers a new and easy way to make dry or damaged hair soft and manageable. Breck Cream Treatment also aids in removing dandruff.

2 In addition to lanolin, Breck Cream Treatment contains Lipicil*, an ingredient which aids in the treatment and prevention of hair dryness, dandruff and hard to manage hair.

3 Breck Cream Treatment is easy to use. After your shampoo, massage onto the hair and scalp. Rinse and set. When dry, your hair will be soft, lustrous and as beautiful as a bride's.

Lipicil is the Breck Registered Trade Mark for a stabilized lipide complex.*

Breck Cream Treatment is available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

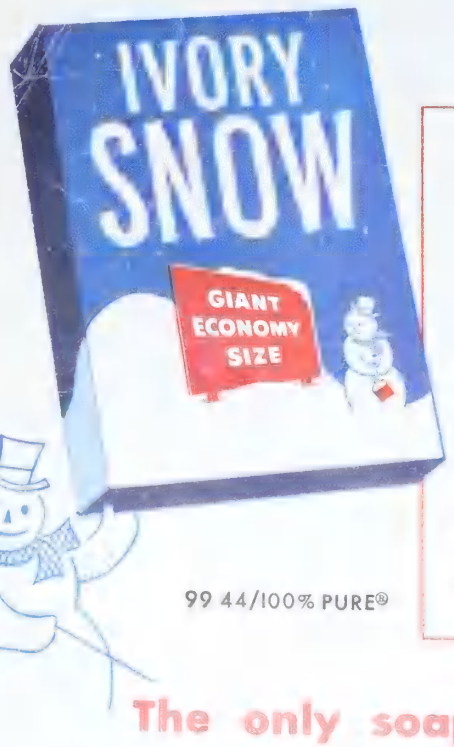
IVORY SNOW



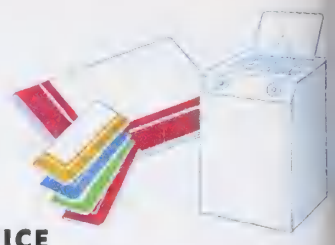
Safest possible soap for baby's things

...for yours, too

. . . for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHINE

99 44/100% PURE®



FOR DIAPERS . . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap you can buy for fine hand washables.

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like luncheon cloths, curtains, and blankets thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficien

ED ROPE AZINE BINDER nufactured by ORD BROS. Inc.
racuse, N. Y. ockton, Calif.

JOURNAL

FEBRUARY 1956 · 35¢

THE MAGAZINE
WOMEN BELIEVE IN

THEL
RYMORE TELLS STORY OF R LIFE

BROKE ON $11,20 YEAR

LOOK OUT FOR TIGERS by NELIA GARI OMPLETE NOVEL

SPRING MAKE-IT-YOURSELF 30

What?...You haven't tasted NEW IPANA?

FIGHTS DECAY the BEST-TASTING way

estroys hidden decay and bad-breath bacteria

Vonder-ingredient WD-9 in ew-formula Ipana Tooth Paste so effective it destroys most outh bacteria with every single rushing. Your family's teeth get he important decay-fighting rotection they need.

Beats all other leading brands in taste tests

New-formula Ipana is the best-tasting way to fight tooth decay . . . stop bad breath all day. That was proved after 3888 "hidden-name" taste tests. So taste Ipana today . . . enjoy it . . . trust your family's precious teeth to it. At all drug counters now in the yellow and red-striped carton.

New-Formula IPANA®

WITH BACTERIA-DESTROYER WD-9

Ipana A/C Tooth Paste (Ammoniated Chlorophyll) also contains bacteria-destroyer WD-9 (Sodium Lauryl Sulfate).

MAKE YOUR OWN TASTE TEST

Send for generous sample tube. Mail coupon today for trial tube (enough for about 25 brushings).

BRISTOL-MYERS CO., DEPT. J-25,
Hillside, New Jersey.

Please send trial tube of new-formula Ipana.
Enclosed is 3¢ stamp to cover part cost of handling.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

(Offer good only in continental U.S.A. Expires May 1, 1956)

Modess . . . because

Only New Design Modess gives you the luxury of a new whisper-soft fabric covering . . . no gauze . . . no chafe.

Journalities

The above sketch by John Singer Sargent of ETHEL BARRYMORE, great lady of the American theater, appeared on the JOURNAL cover in January, 1904. Ethel Barrymore's Memories (beginning page 42), written especially for the JOURNAL, will recall to her millions of admirers some of the magic of her acting and her life.

Scott Young

SCOTT YOUNG'S story of love in Florida (The Beautiful Washerwoman, page 64) is, he says, at least partly the result of a deep split in national allegiance. He explains, "As a Canadian, I am expected to like cold weather. The truth is I like to spend my winters in Florida, but at the request of our two young sons, we spent last winter in Omemee, Ontario. I set out to create an illusion. I wrapped myself in heavy shirts, opened the furnace full blast, trained the electric heater on my feet and finished this story I'd started in New Smyrna Beach the previous February."

"I find it very difficult to make anyone understand that I write from my imagination," NELIA GARDNER WHITE tells us, "that I am not jogged into stories by anything I have experienced. Oh, of course it is experience that feeds the imagination, but I rarely take any particular incident and say I am going to write about that, any person and say I am going to write about him." So perhaps the professor and his young wife in Look Out for Tigers (page 46) are people you know, or will want to know after reading her story.

Nelia Gardner White

Journal

Contents

February, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 2

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

LOOK OUT FOR TIGERS, Nelia Gardner White . 46

Stories

GOD IS LOVE, Kathleen K. Perry . 48
THE VIRUS, Will Stanton . 52
SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (Fourth part of five), John P. Marquand . 60
THE BEAUTIFUL WASHERWOMAN, Scott Young . 64

Special Features

THE LITTLE TOWNS, Dorothy Thompson . 11
Y.W.C.A.-WIVES' DAY OUT . 27
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 39
MEMORIES (First part of four), Ethel Barrymore . 42
POLITICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS: THEY SAY IT WITH ACTION . 62
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 69
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: BROKE BUT HAPPY ON $11,200 A YEAR . 117
G. M. White

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 16
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 30
TO A HAS BEEN (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 32
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 35
FIFTY YEARS AGO • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 41
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 68
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 106
THIS IS A MEDICINE MEDDLER, Munro Leaf . 112

Fashion and Beauty

BEAUTIFUL BUYS FOR SPRING, Wilhela Cushman . 54
THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER, Wilhela Cushman . 56
THE JOURNAL'S GEM OF A WARDROBE, Nora O'Leary . 58
THE YOUNG TOUCH FOR GRAY HAIR, Dawn Crowell Norman . 126
$50 SPRING PATTERN WARDROBE, Nora O'Leary . 128

Food and Homemaking

EVERYBODY LOVES A TEA, Ann Batchelder . 66
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 70
YOUNG HOME-BUILDERS, Margaret Davidson . 122
SIMPLY DELICIOUS, Bobbie Lawrence . 124
CONVERSATION PIECE, Ruth Mills Teague . 136
BATHROOM SPACE MAKERS, Elizabeth Goetsch . 155

Architecture, Gardening and Interior Decoration

NICOLSON HOUSE, Richard Pratt . 50
THE HOUSE THAT WANTED A WILLIAMSBURG FRONT YARD . 97
Richard Pratt
A HOUSE THAT GROWS WITH YOU, Carol L. Mercado . 132
STATE FLOWER QUILT, Henrietta Murdock . 147

Poems

DAUGHTER TO MOTHER, Walter de la Mare . 92
NONE THE WISER, Marcella M. Bannon . 102
THE DREAMERS, Jean Todd Freeman . 130
ADOLESCENCE, Régine Olivier . 135
SOLDIER'S MOTHER, Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman . 142

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

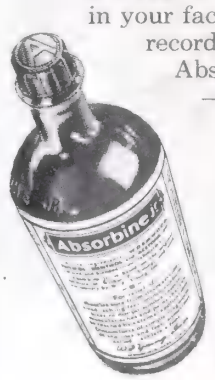
Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Traysor, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday

Tired, aching feet

can cripple sales, too

● When every step's such agony, your face shows it—and sales can suffer.



Perhaps even worse, those tiny, pain-drawn lines in your face can "set" into wrinkles that make a girl look old before her time.

That's why so many smart girls rub on Absorbine Jr. at the first sign of foot-fatigue.

Soothing relief in a hurry!

Soothing, cooling Absorbine Jr. acts fast to bring blessed relief—relaxing those muscles and speeding the pain away.

Result? Feet feel better . . . you feel better . . . and it shows in your face and your sales record. Get a bottle of Absorbine Jr. today—wherever drugs are sold.

W. F. Young, Inc.
Springfield, Mass.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

ABSORBINE JR.

readers write us

There When Needed

Bonner Springs, Kansas

Dear Editors: I have often wanted to write you and say how much I prize the JOURNAL, but now I must.

Last week my husband died of a heart attack and I have been so busy trying to carry on his business and looking after his dear mother, who is in her ninety-second year, that I've had very little time for anything, let alone reading. However, I always read the little quips and poems. This time, when I read the quotation from Winston Churchill, "Only when the dark comes down the stars shine," and also The Lantern, by Mary Kennedy, it seemed they were put there especially for me. Life was never more beautiful and full of love, and I realize that love never dies and the truth of the Bible verse we first teach our children, "God is love."

Sincerely,
MARY L. EYERLY

They Attacked the Problems

Sweet Springs, Missouri

Dear Editors: Even in 1836 there were school problems! I have a contract executed August 29, 1836, in Russell County, Kentucky, in which five citizens agree to hire Joseph M. McMillin, my great-great-grandfather. He is bound to teach five days per week for a term of six months commencing September 15. He must teach "spelling, reading and wrighting as far as his ability and capassity will admit." He is further bound to "give due attendance to said school and to keep order and decoram there in and atone for all lost time by him."

Rates of payment are, "Eight dollars per scholar per year to be discharged in good merchantable corn, porke, beef cattle, beef hides, shoe cloth, salt, iron, wheat, sheep wool, cotton, new gees or duck feathers, beeswax or tallow or parts of each, all of which is to be paid against the first of January at the market price."

In turn the "board" agrees to "build a comfortable school house, seats and writing benches against the 15th of September, 1836." A total of eleven scholars were enrolled.

I wonder if, 118 years hence, our present-day contracts will seem as antiquated as this one.

Sincerely,
CORA E. SMITH

More Parents in Action

Chicago, Illinois

To whom it may concern: Chicago, too, is working very hard through its Illinois Congress Parents and Teachers Association to curb lewd and crime comics.

I am a high-school-council chairman in District 24, which covers ten high schools with a P.T.A. membership of 181,000 parents. I really believe we are progressing splendidly. At present we are renewing our survey on merchants. We also joined forces with other organizations to found the Citizens' Committee for Better Juvenile Reading. We have contacted publishers and distributors. So far three distributors that we have contacted have been very co-operative.

We stress that the parents should also maintain vigilance and impress upon youngsters the importance of reading only the best. Good books mold character—cheap books degrade.

Sincerely,
MRS. PHILIP KLEZEK

Ethics in Business

Sacramento, California

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: The women of the Synodical Society of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. of the Synod of California, Utah and Nevada have noted with approval that your magazine does not feature liquor advertising or mention it favorably. May we congratulate you also for publishing the condensed book, Seduction of the Innocent?

We feel that you are an example of ethics in a business society and wish you every success financially, as well as in moral gratification.

Yours very truly,
MRS. G. C. STODDARD
President
MRS. HAYDON R. O'NEAL
Secretary,
Social Education and Action

Done With Mirrors

Yuma, Arizona

Dear Editors: When a woman on the shady side of thirty-five gets a plea for a "pin-up" of herself, no less—from her husband overseas—she does have a problem! If her hobby is photography, she can take her own picture. I did, and made the startling discovery that an ordinary dressing-table mirror, with ordinary electric lights, is a peerless glamourizer.

The professional glamour shooter's whole battery of equipment couldn't be kinder. Wrinkles, bags under eyes and other unpleasant truths vanish in this soft light, while the camera records your mirrored best expressions—and who knows them better than yourself? Photographing the "woman she loves" is bound to please normal female vanity, and results, though far from technical perfection, are practically guaranteed to delight the man overseas.

Mirrored likeness.

For instance, this shot went night-clubbing in Nagoya! A letter from the most wonderful man in the world tells of dropping in at a night spot, while on a weekend away from his station in Korea, of setting up this picture and one of our little son on the table in front of him, while he and his friends drank a toast. Could a nicer gesture of appreciation be asked by a photographer—or a wife?

Sincerely,
SHERRY COLE

Journal Friends Even Drop From the Skies

St. Johnsbury, Vermont

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: Being a How Young America Lives family has been one of our most enjoyable experiences. Since the story appeared, we have discovered that we have friends all over the world and have had some very heart-warming letters from all sorts of unexpected places. We have had a flock of visitors who found their way over our dirt roads up to our hilltop. We had one young man fly here from California in his own small plane and spend a couple of days with us. (We had never met or heard of him before.) A woman in New

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

FOR 'Radiantly Alive' Hair

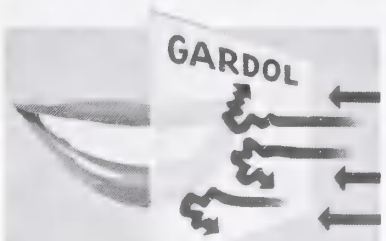
SO SOFT, YET MANAGEABLE . . . SO SWEETLY CLEAN!

Come-hither loveliness—that's what your hair has after a luxurious Prell Shampoo! It's caressably soft, yet so obedient! Yes, angel-soft, smooth as satin, glowing with that 'Radiantly Alive' look he'll love! And Prell leaves your hair really clean . . . fresh and sweet . . . and free of embarrassing dandruff!

Prell is easy to use, too—so convenient. No spill, drip or break. Try Prell tonight—it's wonderful!

star in his eyes—your Prell-washed hair!



Whether You Brush Your Teeth Just Once, Twice, or 3 Times a Day...

Colgate Dental Cream Gives The Surest Protection ALL DAY LONG!

Because Only New Colgate Dental Cream —Of All Leading Toothpastes—Contains GARDOL* To Stop Bad Breath Instantly . . Guard Against Tooth Decay Longer!

Gardol, Colgate's wonderful new decay-fighter, forms an invisible shield around your teeth. You can't feel it, taste it, or see it—but Gardol's protection won't rinse off or wear off all day. That's why Colgate's—the only leading toothpaste to contain Gardol—gives the surest protection ever offered by any toothpaste!

Your dentist will tell you how often you should brush your teeth. But whether that's once, twice, or three times a day, be sure you use New Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol! Colgate's stops bad breath instantly in 7 out of 10 cases that originate in the mouth! Fights tooth decay 12 hours or more! In fact, clinical tests showed the greatest reduction in tooth decay in toothpaste history!

*Colgate's Trade-Mark For Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate. Patent No. 2,689,170

Every Time You Use It...New Colgate Dental Cream

CLEANS YOUR BREATH WHILE IT GUARDS YOUR TEETH!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

York sent us two purebred American saddle horses. Imagine how the children feel!

We have had a lot of fun and we are happy that some people found our story helpful or interesting.

Best wishes from all six of us,

Sincerely,
BETS PARKER

▶ Scudder Parkers, last September's attractive How Young America Lives family, enjoyed typical reception from JOURNAL readers. First time we've heard they now add airplanes and horses, though. ED.

How to Save Money

Downers Grove, Illinois

Dear Editors: I believe you could help a lot of housewives by starting a Readers Write Us devoted to tips on how to save money. Probably each one of us has some ideas that would help. May I offer a few of my own?

A little dust on the furniture can go unnoticed when I realize it is better I do one of the following:

1. Mix up some powdered milk to dilute our regular homogenized milk, as you suggested to Mrs. Canner last August.

2. Keep the refrigerator defrosted so it costs less to run and isn't so hard on the motor.

3. I try to bake everything I can. I take advantage of the ready mixes often as they are economical. If I bake two loaves of banana bread, or two coffeecakes, I put one in the freezer.

4. We buy day-old bread and put it in the freezer. You can make sandwiches of frozen bread and put them back in the freezer so you have a stock for lunches. Also, you can toast the bread frozen.

5. I find that measuring the soap you pour into your washer is a big saving.

May all your JOURNAL years be prosperous! I could use some other tips too!

Yours sincerely,
JEAN L. ANDERSON

Cat-Kin

Elmhurst, New York

Dear Journal: This is my entry for your mother-and-daughter theme, which you have on some of your covers.

Like mother, like daughter.

Sincerely,
FLO KIESLING

Night Stick to Knitting

Newberg, Oregon

Dear Editor: I also took up the cudgel for the kids in Korea. My boy wrote from there it was hard to watch those little kids trying to keep their hands warm by sticking them up their sleeves, so my wife and I have knitted 168 pairs of mittens in all in the last two years. Then this summer I made 40 more pair and took them to city, county and state fairs. I have three seconds and one first prize on my knitting. Forty pairs being shipped tomorrow to Korean Christian Mission, 32–6 Song Wol Dong, Seoul, Korea.

I have also worked out a new pattern for a neat, smooth thumb, either hand. I make them all rainbow since kids over there like plenty of color. I am 69 years old, a retired Cleveland, Ohio, policeman.

Respectfully,
ARNOLD SHERBURNE

▶ Work begun by JOURNAL*'s Operation Kid Knit two years ago this month, and expanded into Operation Can't Knit and Sock Knit, still going on busily all over America, still gratefully received in Korea according to Mrs. Ellis O. Briggs, our ambassador's wife.*

Letter to a Journal Editor:

Dear Mums: Scott is taking one of his big surges ahead in talking, pores over books and magazines and picks out cars, dogs, cats, babies, telephones, and so on. His real passion is dogs, live and in pictures. We went through the JOURNAL page by page and do you know there was only one dog in the whole magazine, and not a very good one at that.

Journal second generation.

Would you please send a memo to the Goulds to correct this oversight, or the JOURNAL will lose a small but powerful customer.

Speaking of that, I hope you are going to give me a JOURNAL year again—I got a bill to renew and I just hoped you would.

Gratefully,
"J——"

Dr. Spock Reaches England

Ruddington
Nottinghamshire, England

Dear Editors: As the twenty-three-year-old mother of three, your articles on child care, and so on, fascinate me.

The differences, however, between the methods of bringing up a baby in our two countries are amazing. Do you, for example, really have a "formula" for a baby's bottle? It sounds terribly complicated.

When not breast fed, our babies usually go onto powdered milk mixed with boiling water and sugar, varying the strength according to the instructions on the tin.

And "pediatricians"—what a lovely word: unless our infants are ill, they see the doctor only once or twice in their first year, to be immunized against smallpox, whooping cough and diphtheria.

And do you really have those lovely machines for sterilizing bottles?

My youngest has his bottle and teat (both singular, please note) boiled up for a second in a saucepan, and is none the worse for it.

Another thing I noticed when reading the JOURNAL was a picture of a very heavy-eyed young mother giving her baby a middle-of-the-night feed. How long does this go on for?

It must be awful! Our babies are put straight on five four-hourly feeds from birth (unless under seven pounds) and my three have all dropped the last at ten weeks, and slept a twelve-hour night, thank heavens!

In conclusion, the differences between our customs was brought home to me with a bang last week.

After laying Mark, the baby, flat on his chest in the pram (à la various illustrations in the JOURNAL) and finding him extremely comfortable like that, I took the children into the village to do some shopping. In six different shops, six different women came dashing in to tell me that "Your baby's turned over onto his face, Mrs. Adams—you'd better come quick!"

Nuff said!

Yours sincerely,
SONIA ADAMS

P. S. Can you really buy colored nappies?

Now buy Delsey in your favorite towel colors

Fine and firm and soft like Kleenex tissues

SPECIAL OFFER!

4 Luxury Guest Towels

Regular $2.00 value only $1.00 with any 2 Delsey wrappers

NEW FINGERTIP TOWELS BY DUNDEE – 11 x 18 INCHES

These fringed guest towels in pastels and white are Dundee's quality terry. Deep looped; highly absorbent. Mercerized borders; reinforced selvages. Guaranteed fast colors. Send today for as many sets as you wish.

Order your sets of luxury guest towels NOW!

Address: Delsey, Box 7739, Chicago 77, Illinois.

Please send me ____ sets of 4 guest towels. I enclose $1.00 and 2 Delsey wrappers for each set ordered.

NOTE: Indicate sets desired: ____ sets of 4 pink towels: ____ sets of 4 yellow towels: ____ sets of 4 blue towels: ____ sets of 4 green towels; ____ sets of 4 white towels: or ____ sets of assorted colors (one towel of each color – pink, yellow, blue and green).

Name _____
(PLEASE PRINT PLAINLY)

Address _____

City _____ Zone ____ State _____

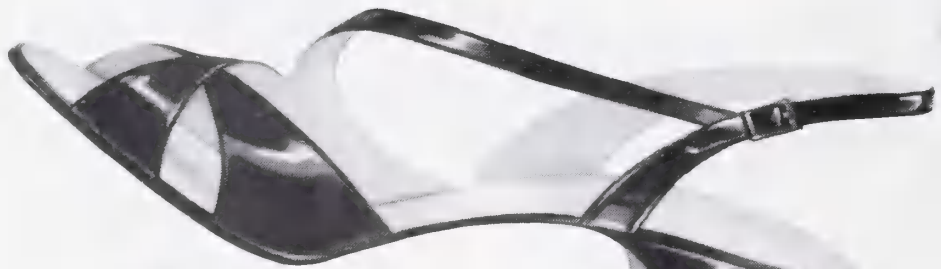
Offer good only in the U. S., and is void wherever prohibited, taxed, regulated or license is required. Offer expires December 31, 1955.



KLEENEX AND DELSEY ARE REGISTERED TRADEMARKS OF INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

SIREN

Now patents, too, go soft from heel to toe
in Naturalizer...
the shoe with the beautiful fi

soft fabulous

PROFILE

looks good from every angle heel hugging toe-free fit no slip. no gap. no pinch complete flexibility

soft toes

LINDEN

patents

the versatile fashion that's right everywhere you go

These fabulous patents have an inside story . . .

a new chamois-soft lining. They also have soft toes . . . complete flexibility . . .

cork-cushioning heel to toe . . . heel-hugging, toe-free fit . . . no slip, no gap, no pinch . . . look good from every angle. Patents never looked so light or felt so soft before.

SHEATH

Shoes illustrated

$10.95 and $11.95

Other styles $8.95 to $12.95 Higher Denver West and Canada

Naturalizer Division, Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis
Also manufactured in Canada by Perth Shoe Company, Ltd., Perth, Ontario

A Product of Brown Shoe Company

Naturalizer®

THE SHOE WITH THE BEAUTIFUL FIT

That Ivory Look

Young America has it...
You can have it in 7 days!

Babies have That Ivory Look . . . shouldn't you?
The milder the beauty soap, the prettier your skin.
And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin
. . . so right for your complexion, too.

You can have That Ivory Look in 7 da
Simply change to regular care and pure, m Ivory Soap. In one week your complex will look fresher, clearer—actually young

You get 4 cakes of Personal Size
Ivory for about the same cost as 3 cakes of other leading toilet soaps.

99 44/100% pure
...it floats

More doctors advise Ivory than any other soap

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

uce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

The Little Towns

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Although of late years, and for time-saving purposes, I have traveled inside and outside America almost entirely by plane, I love trains. The new ones, particularly west of Chicago, are luxurious with lounges, excellent dining cars, comfortable bedrooms, radios, television sets and the latest magazines.

I appreciate these increased comforts, but they are not why I love trains. I love them because one can look out the window and see the country roll past, slowly enough for one's eye to take in many details. From a plane the landscape appears only as an abstract pattern, of geometrically outlined fields and forests, ribbons of roads, clusters of houses, which must be villages, and the lines, lights, squares and towers of great towns and cities.

This fall and winter a speaking tour took me out to the Middle West—Ohio, Kansas, Minnesota—and to places not easily accessible by air, so I went on trains, fuming, as I started, that so much "time would be lost," and then wondering whimsically what becomes of lost time—wondering to what limbo it is consigned and what it does with itself when it gets there—and recalling the words of that delightful poet, William Henry Davies:

A poor life this if, full of care,
We have no time to stand and stare.

So I sat and stared, well rewarded, as the colored counties passed my window, noting with satisfaction the many terraced and contoured fields, brown with the stubble of harvested wheat and corn, or emerald with sproutings of winter rye; noting the reflections of the last leaves and of racing clouds in little ponds, designed to hold precious water; admiring the neat white houses, their doorways usually shaded by twin trees, and around them big barns and silos, painted "Indian" red, or sometimes built of flashing aluminum, within neatly fenced barnyards.

But most of all I loved looking at the little towns as we went through. One doesn't see the best aspects of a town from the railroad yards, but as the train pulled in or out, slowing down even if it did not stop, one always had a vista of streets—of "Main Street" where the shops and stores and largest buildings always are, and of the streets where people live. And, looking down those streets, neatly paved, shaded by great maples or arching elms, their homes set back among raked lawns and clumps of shrubbery, I thought, as I have thought time and again, that nobody knows anything about America who does not know its little towns.

We have few great cities that for beauty, grace, architecture or comely planning compare favorably with Paris, Rome, Florence, Vienna, Madrid, Amsterdam, Stockholm, Brussels, or even Berlin, handsome if not lovely before it came crashing down, or with foggy, imperial London. The European landing on our shores finds New York splendid, breath-taking, monumental, exciting, but, with its apparently insoluble transport problem, noisy and anything but comfortable, and quite incredibly dirty. How could a city be otherwise which is inhabited by eight million people, where (in Manhattan, at least) there are no alleys, and garbage must be collected at front entrances, and streets cleaned between rows of parked cars?

Washington is a handsome city but a cold one, a "company town" devoted only to Government, extraordinarily lacking in metropolitan amenities, even to numbers of first-rate restaurants, and containing in immediate juxtaposition to the finest residential areas many slums.

Chicago, perennially ill-governed, handsome in parts, vital and exciting always, can challenge all contenders with the extent of its constantly encroaching slums.

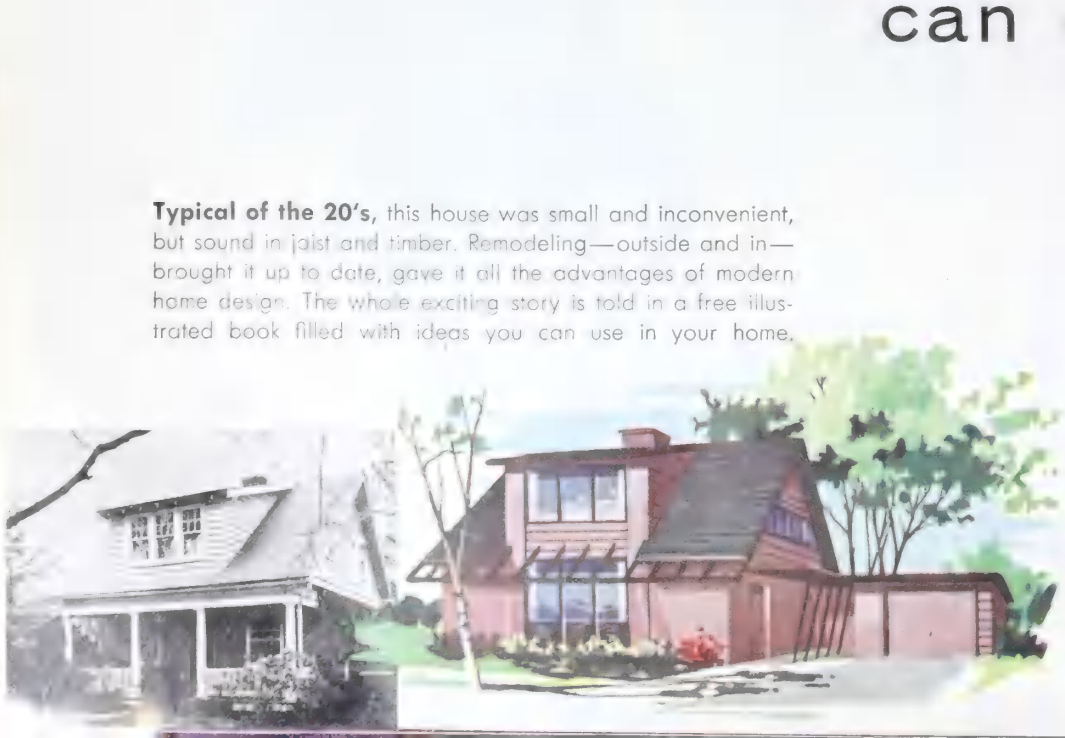
America, I think, is worst represented in its great cities, and these are what the foreigner usually sees—noting the dirt, the noise, the slums jostling the boulevards, and the terribly high rentals for tiny apartments. But for comfort, cleanliness, comeliness, coziness, few, if any, countries can match the American small town—from New England to California, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border—taking them as a whole.

There are exquisite English, French and Italian villages to which the tourist is directed by Baedeker. But there are also thousands that are unspeakably dreary, with streets of dark, uncomfortable homes set wall to wall flush with the sidewalk, without lawns and, except for public parks, hardly a tree. Life, too, in them is provincial and inbred to an extent that it no longer is in the American small town. "Gopher Prairie" is not "the climax of civilization," as it was not when Sinclair Lewis so dubbed it with ironic scorn in his introduction to Main Street. But Carol Kennicott, whose frustrated discontent is the subject of the famous novel, would find much more stimulation and sophistication today in Gopher Prairie than she did less than a generation ago.

In the Middle West, the architecture seldom has the grace and proportion observable in New England, Virginia and the early-settled states, where Georgian influences still predominate. The Middle West grew up when wood fretted gables,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Executive Editor: Mary Bass



Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague
Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe
Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer
Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Antoinette Bacchetta, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey

Floor is Armstrong Embossed Inlaid Linoleum, Style No. 5302.

Look what modern ideas can do for an old house

Typical of the 20's, this house was small and inconvenient, but sound in joist and timber. Remodeling—outside and in—brought it up to date, gave it all the advantages of modern home design. The whole exciting story is told in a free illustrated book filled with ideas you can use in your home.

You can still enjoy all the spaciousness and convenience of America's new way of living, even though you have an older house that's cramped and out of date. Look at the magical transformation made in this typical house of the early 20's—and take courage! The floor plan was opened up to give it the roominess that marks the modern home. From there on, Armstrong decorators took over, creating dozens of exciting ideas to make the house both attractive and easy to care for.

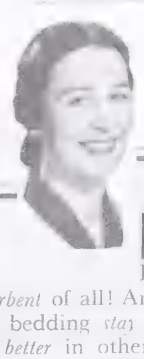
Choosing the right materials can make all the difference in adding modern beauty and easy care to an old home. That's why Armstrong Linoleum was such an ideal choice. It's modern because it offers such a wide selection of designs, colors, and textures to help you bring decorative harmony to the living areas of your home.

(continued on next page)

l partition walls are gone and a modern-od-grain styling in Armstrong Linoleum unites of the modern open-planned living area.

Strikingly handsome for the living area, Armstrong Linoleum is also practical for the kitchen. It's greaseproof, easy to clean, comfortable underfoot—and surprisingly moderate in cost. Made in dozens of striking designs and color combinations to enhance any decorating scheme.

Upstairs, an awkward closet is removed. Two bedrooms and a den-guestroom are color-related with Armstrong Spatter® Linoleum—Style No. 5017. It's handsome with rugs or without.



Armstrong LINOLEUM

THE MODERN FASHION IN FLOORS

Armstrong Linoleum goes down right over the old floor, doing away with costly refinishing and dirt-catching cracks. And it's in tune with today's needs because it's so easy to clean. The smooth, virtually seamless surface of Armstrong Linoleum offers the busy homemaker new freedom from unnecessary housework . . . one of the greatest joys of a truly modern home.

Free book of remodeling ideas. If you're planning to remodel your present home, or thinking of buying an older one and modernizing it, you'll want the exciting, illustrated book about this house. It's filled with helpful remodeling suggestions. Write Armstrong Cork Co., 5502 King Street, Lancaster, Pa.

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

I KNOW SOME MOTHERS who think all diapers are alike . . . but in my opinion there's only one brand to buy! It's CHIX Diapers . . . for recent tests prove they're the most absorbent of all! And you know what this means . . . that clothing and bedding stay dryer and baby is more protected! CHIX Diapers are better in other ways, too . . . for instance, they always dry wrinkle-free and are as easy to wash as can be. Furthermore, they're made of top quality surgical type gauze in birdseye weave . . . and this unique weave makes them more caressably soft and gentle to a baby's tender skin. CHIX Diapers also fold to fit any size baby . . . and never seem to wear out. They're made by a Johnson & Johnson Company, you know . . . makers of famous Chux* Disposable Diapers, Redi-Fol* Diapers, Chix* Crib Sheets and Chix* Diaper Liners. But send for this:

SPECIAL SAMPLE of a CHIX Diaper . . . to try before you buy! It's only 25c . . . see OFFER #1 in box below.

*T.M.Reg.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME these snowy, blowy days . . . especially when you have a selection of PARKER GAMES that your family can play together! We play them all the time . . . and all of them are grand. But I think you'll be particularly delighted with "Monopoly," the most fascinating real estate trading game in the world . . . because everyone likes to invest in properties to get "rich" and win. "Keyword," the best of all crossword board games, is equally wonderful . . . as is "Clue," the exciting who-done-it game . . . "Sorry," the pursuit game where even the tail-ender can win . . . and "Hollywood Go," the newest PARKER GAME! They all make marvelous gifts and perfect party prizes, too . . . but above all have lots of PARKER GAMES to keep your family happy at home.

PRICELESS BOOKLET . . . "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games." I call it the "hostess handbook" . . . for it contains so many entertaining tips with special party themes and unusual refreshments. It's yours for only 10c . . . see OFFER #2 in box.

FEBRUARY IS THE PARTY MONTH . . . with three gala holidays that "invite" you to entertain. And I hope you'll "accept" . . . then call on O-CEDAR DRI-GLO to dress your furniture in its company-best! It's the new miracle furniture polish that gives a beautiful "Bone Dry" shine . . . without hard rubbing! All you do is smooth DRI-GLO on, let it dry and wipe off . . . its modern, non-oily silicone ingredient leaves such a glowing sparkle that both old and new pieces glisten mirror-bright! O-CEDAR DRI-GLO is more protective than anything else you could use, too . . . even spilled liquids won't mar its rich beauty and there's no oily film to attract dust. I don't ask you to take my word for it, either . . . DRI-GLO is guaranteed to outshine and outlast any furniture polish you ever used! But only seeing is believing . . . so I'd like to send you this:

GENEROUS SAMPLE OF O-CEDAR DRI-GLO . . . and let the facts speak for themselves! Costs only 10c to cover postage and handling . . . see OFFER #3 in box.

JUST WHEN YOU LEAST EXPECT IT, someone comes to call . . . so keep the air in your home fresh and sweet to welcome them. You can do it easily . . . by using GOOD-AIRE regularly! That's what I use . . . for nothing I've ever tried beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear! And it takes no time nor trouble . . . you simply push the lever on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . odors from cooking, bathrooms, pets and the nursery, along with tell-tale odors from stale air and tobacco smoke, fade away. Imagine . . . with a mere touch of the finger you can get rid of unpleasant odors and give your home a fresh-as-Springtime air. In other words, GOOD-AIRE is good etiquette . . . a courtesy you owe your family as well as your guests. You can afford to use it every day, too . . . for GOOD-AIRE costs only 89c for the regular size and $1.98 for the large economy size. At Drug, Grocery, Hardware and Department Stores. Remember . . . it's made by the makers of Bridgeport® Aer★A★Sol Bug Bomb and other Aer★A★Sol products.

THE ABC'S OF BEAUTY begin, surprisingly enough, with "Q" . . . Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs, those dainty, cotton-tipped applicators designed especially for cosmetics! And if you use cosmetics, I think you need Q-TIPS . . . for they're far more talented than your fingertips and put an end to make-up slip-ups. That's because they have cotton at both ends like baby's Q-TIPS . . . but are longer and slimmer . . . so easy to use and so expert that I consider them my boudoir "beauty operator" and once you try them you will, too. And in each pretty dressing table box are lessons in loveliness by that master of make-up Ern Westmore . . . which teach you the beauty secrets of the glamorous movie stars. For instance, you'll learn such "Q's" as:

Allure for the Lips . . . Magic for your Eyes . . . Rouging the Right way . . . Perfume Pointers . . . Hiding Flaws . . . Hair Helps . . . Removing Smears.

So don't let "dabbed-on" make-up give your face hard, harsh lines . . . use Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs and look naturally lovely!

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-9, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

- ☐ OFFER #1 . . . SPECIAL SAMPLE of a CHIX Diaper. Please enclose 25c.
- ☐ OFFER #2 . . . PARKER BOOKLET . . . "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games." Please enclose 10c.
- ☐ OFFER #3 . . . SAMPLE of O-Cedar DRI-GLO. Please enclose 10c to cover postage.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

towers and porte-cocheres made a "mansion," when verandas were thrown out in all directions, and the ne plus ultra was a window of quite hideously gaudy red-blue-and-green glass on the stairs: the age of golden oak, black walnut, Brussels carpets, lace curtains, whatnots, center tables and bead curtains. Many of these houses are left, as I saw from the train, passing through Ohio and Kansas, and one of the finest collections of them I have ever seen is in Van Wert, Ohio, population 14,000, where I stopped to speak. There, too, the old Marsh mansion, now hostess house for a school for maladjusted children, is probably the best extant museum of the period.

I confess that these houses delight me. I remember them from my childhood in upstate New York, as the homes of my father's wealthier parishioners or friends. Whatever they lacked of grace, they did not lack space and stability. They were built for big families, in which every member had a room of his own which was not a cubicle. They had parlors for the grownups and guests, sitting rooms where the children played in blizzardy weather, big dining rooms which were often the family sitting rooms—and how many problems in compound fractions, or "essays" on geography, have I not done under the hanging lamp over the dining-room table! They had attics full of trunks, storing two or three generations of old clothes to dress up in. If it rained, one could ride a tricycle on the wide verandas. And they also had "hired girls," and even, occasionally, uniformed maids. And perhaps I like them now as an amusing break in too-standardized "good taste."

If we wish to make a new world we have the material ready. The first one was made out of chaos.

—ROBERT QUILLEN

But looking down the streets of the little towns, I saw that the newer homes are small and "laborsaving"—for the hired girl has vanished—but still with much more space, outside and in, than any but the rich can afford in big cities. Some are the ranch type, low, wide and wide-windowed, but most are two-storied, or a story and a half with dormers and usually with front porches, on which often stand bicycles or tricycles. One could trace the growth of the family by looking at the houses, the ell that had obviously been added, the dormer that plainly had not originated with the house. Some of the owners, I saw in passing, had in an outbreak of rugged individualism defied the prevailing white or white and green, and painted their little houses—whatever the architecture—pink, or robin's-egg blue, or gray with blue shutters, and they sang to me. And always the lawns, with never a high hedge or fence against a neighbor, and always the noble American trees.

I WISHED I could be taking some important Russian—incognito, in a false mustache—along with me, to show him what community, as contrasted with communism, can be; to show him the wonderful friendliness of small-town America where nobody is an anonymous cipher.

And also to show him what "progress" or "advance" manifests itself in the little towns that metropolitan Americans still call "the sticks." Despite the continued growth of our great cities, and apart from the millions of Americans living on farms, nearly 42,000,000 of our people live in "the sticks," in towns or cities of under 50,000.

How does today's Main Street differ from the one described in Sinclair Lewis' famous novel of 1920?

Like Sinclair Lewis, I was born and brought up in little towns of the period he described, and I never could quite agree with the picture he presented. But even that ironic satirist would change it, were he to write today. As a speaker, I have, of late years, visited every state in the Union but one, and spoken in hundreds of small towns—invited by a Chamber of Commerce, a women's club, a local college, a public forum or some other civic group, and not to entertain an audience but to speak v seriously about American problems, fore and domestic. This, in itself, indicates change—a shift to a far-wider range interest. I have spoken in towns of 5000 a upward, always rejoicing when my sched gave me a free day in which to meet peo and look around. And if there are any sm towns without proportionately as many c ilized, informed, public-spirited and wi awake people as there are in the great citi I haven't been in them. Their local ci consciousness, I think, is higher than that the big-city populations. In the great cit people vote for reforms. In the little tow they undertake the reforms. And the provincial tightness is disappearing.

ALMOST all Americans, whatever their s called "social station," travel today to su rounding big cities, and often from one e of the country to another. Hundreds thousands have been abroad. A physici in a village of 2000 whom I had to consu about my throat wished to discuss Chin He was born in China, when his father w a missionary there; had lived there to t age of fourteen, speaks several Chinese di lects, and returned eventually as a memb of U. S. Intelligence. While he swabbed o my throat he told me more about China very precisely, chapter and verse—than could learn from much reading.

"Why did you decide to settle here?"

"I like it—several of us are starting a litt clinic—it's needed—nic place to live—nice pe ple."

A garage owner tol me about spending las summer in Italy. And s it goes.

People in the sma towns read. "What d you think of Dewhurst' article on the Russians i the October twenty-ninth issue of U. S. News and World Report?" a Kansas rancher asked. I had missed the articl in my travels. He outlined the contents and promised to look it up when I got back recommending in turn the book by the Eng lishman Edward Crankshaw, Cracks in the Kremlin Wall. He made a note of it, after which we talked about soil conservation, o which he is a master and an enthusiast.

I ran into friends of friends. Miss Mary Bowman, who has a quite fabulous china and gift shop in Salem, Ohio, and knows all about Austrian and Swiss toys, Bohemian glass, and the merits and demerits of English, German, American, French and Italian porcelain and ceramics, inquired about her friends Ann Batchelder and Lisa Sergio, who are my neighbors in Vermont.

The spontaneous kindness of small-town people to the visitor, the warm way they take one into their homes and hearts, their interest in and curiosity about places they have not seen, or topics they confess they "haven't given much thought to," are surely unique to this country. I am ever reminded of Walt Whitman's tribute to America:

"Here is the hospitality which forever indicates heroes."

The interest of small-town folks in the national and international scene is, of course, much more Platonic than their interest in their own state and community. How, or why, should it be otherwise? The world is too big for many of us to love. Even America is too big really to love except as an abstraction. American patriotism, I have come to think, is the accumulation of thousands of little patriotisms. The Vermonter, the Kansan, the Virginian, the Ohioan—I choose at random—still seems to believe as he did in Lewis' time that all America revolves around his state, the state around his town, and that his is the best state and the best town in the nation. But the new value of this attitude is that he tries his best to make it so! It is not just vainglory.

"Main Street," the commercial part of the small towns, is, indeed, greatly standardized throughout the country. One sees the same supermarkets, dime-to-dollar and drug stores

CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

How long since you've tasted real cheese?

You know the kind of cheese we mean: a naturally aged cheddar with a texture that welcomes a cheese knife and a flavor guests just plain love. Miss Wisconsin is this kind of cheddar and eating it is an exciting treat. Because even Mild Miss Wisconsin has rich flavor, while the Sharp Aged is a gourmet's delight. So if you're bored with process cheese, treat yourself to this natural cheddar.

ARMOUR STAR

Miss Wisconsin Cheddar comes in generous wedges—Sharp Aged, Medium or Mild. There are lots of ways to use it. For free recipes write: Marie Gifford, Dept. 211, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Miss Wisconsin NATURAL AGED Cheddar Cheese

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BRICK AND BLUE

wet feet today may mean a COLD

tomorrow!

at the first sign of a cold—take 2 Bayer Aspirin tablets and feel better—

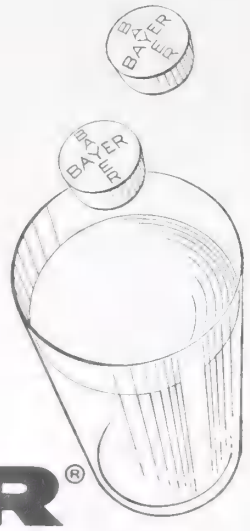
FAST



Amazing—how quickly Bayer Aspirin makes you feel better! That headachy, feverish feeling, those muscular aches and pains—are relieved quickly!

One reason—a Bayer Aspirin tablet starts disintegrating fast—stopwatch fast—and is ready to go to work almost instantly.

So keep Bayer Aspirin handy. And for soothing relief of sore throat due to a cold, gargle three times daily with 3 Bayer Aspirin tablets dissolved in one-third of a glass of water.

Now! At Your Neighborhood Store
FAMILY MEDICINE CHEST TIME
A 6 star feature display offering your favorite drug products at lowest prices.

Get the best—get BAYER® ASPIRIN

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

COPR. 1952 THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.
IN HOMEBODIES (SIMON & SCHUSTER)

WITH a fire crackling in the fireplace and the wind howling down the chimney, the children in bed . . . the examination papers read . . . the cooky jar filled with fresh gingersnaps . . . this is the time to curl up with a book that will carry you far away.

●

When I read a book alone in a room and laugh out loud, then I like the book. This was the case with ODDLY ENOUGH, by Paul Jennings, English columnist on The Observer. It is a collection of little essays that came out in the column: telephoning in a pay station that is dark; trying to buy a ball of string at a stationery store with people in line waiting for their newspapers. . . . I know, they don't sound funny. But there's no accounting for tastes. I found them uproarious.

And oddly enough, the next book is in much the same category: MY ZOO FAMILY, by Helen Martini, that intrepid lady who takes care of the infant animals at the Bronx Zoo—little lions, tigers, jaguars, gorillas, chimps. It is a nursery story with claws—a tender, lovely, laughing book. (Remember her Mother Was Human in the JOURNAL?)

●

A book with which to surprise the stolid, the heavy-handed, the self-confident, the obvious of your acquaintance: HOMEBODIES, *by Charles Addams—a book of cartoons not to be viewed in the full light of noon.

●

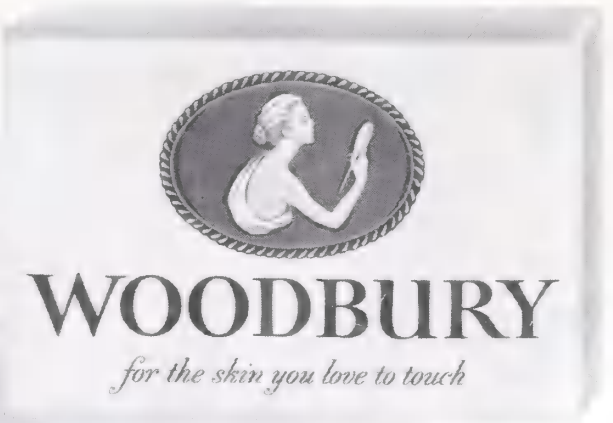
"In the time of the April lilacs in the year 1865, a man in the city of Washington, D.C., trusted a guard to watch at a door, and the man was shot, lingered a night, passed away, was laid in a box, and carried north and west a thousand miles; bells sobbed; cities wore crape; people stood with hats off as the railroad burial car came past at midnight, dawn or noon."

These words open THE LINCOLN PREFACE, by Carl Sandburg. He wrote it thirty years ago as an introduction to THE PRAIRIE YEARS, but when he planned THE WAR YEARS decided against using it. Sandburg's splendid one-volume LINCOLN, out last fall, is a "must" for every American's library.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 19

COURTESY TRUE, THE MAN'S MAGAZINE

"I took a thorn out of his paw a few years back."



Have you tried the soap with

7 FACE CREAM OILS?

It's New WOODBURY SOAP, and it is made by skin scientists. They know that these 7 oils and emollients help replace softening, natural oils . . . oils you need for soft, radiant skin . . . oils you ordinarily wash away. This is why Woodbury's luxurious, fragrant lather actually smooths your complexion as it cleanses.

Try it, facial and bath size.

Why shouldn't you have "the skin you love to touch"?

Just as AUNT JEMIMA did—for real Buttermilk Pancakes pour it in fresh!

Aunt Jemima Lege

The day after churn butter, Aunt Jemima ways made a spec pancake treat. She u the fresh, golden fleck buttermilk (kept cool i big crock in the w house) in her famous p cake recipe. Aunt Jemi Buttermilk Pancakes! E ing them was sheer bl

...so easy today with Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix and FRESH buttermi

BUTTERMILK PANCAKES AUNT JEMIMA STYLE

There's only one way to get the real old-fashioned fresh-churned buttermilk taste and tenderness of buttermilk pancakes . . . add fresh buttermilk yourself. Add it to Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix in this quick and easy recipe. Result—blissful eating enjoyment hard to equal.

½ tsp. soda — 1 egg
2¼ cups buttermilk — 2 tbsp. melted shortening
2 cups Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix

Dissolve soda in buttermilk; add with unbeaten egg and shortening to Aunt Jemima Pancake Mix, stirring lightly. (Do not stir out small lumps.) Bake the regular way. For thinner pancakes, add about one-fourth cup more buttermilk.

the matchless 4-flour flavor of Aunt Jemima Pancakes takes on special eating charm when you make 'em with FRESH buttermilk

RELIEF IN COLDS

Help ourself

peedy" Alka-Seltzer®

KA-SELTZER res the headache, fever-feeling, aches and s of a cold. It helps FEEL better while re GETTING better!

T ALL DRUG COUNTERS

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., ELKHART, IND.

eyes tired?

resh them regularly, daily
h a 2-drop bath of Murine red eyes feel delightfully reeshed in seconds—when you put st two drops of Murine in each

e. Compounded of seven tested gredients, Murine is gentle as ear. When used regularly and ily, Murine helps promote a ean, healthful condition. Murine akes your eyes feel good!

MURINE or your eyes

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

A remarkable book about the last fatal scene of Lincoln's life is just out: THE DAY LINCOLN WAS SHOT, by Jim Bishop—a re-creation of the time, the place, the act.

We assume that we've known the details of that terrible night all our lives, but this narrative brings us right onto the scene ourselves—much as Cinerama brings in the audience. It is a new technique—this careful, painstaking research into the minutest details surrounding a great event; in this case the city of Washington before and after the assassination, the weather that night, the scents and sounds of that April, the clothes that the people in Ford's Theater wore, the gleam on furniture, the hotel clerks, the policemen, General Grant, Tad Lincoln and Mrs. Lincoln, the tone of Booth's voice as he cried out when he shot. All authentic; and it's all happening before our eyes.

It is amazing that a story we know so well should come as new and fresh and appallingly dramatic.

●

This year, February will have only three phases of the moon—a rare occurrence, say the two almanacs that are running neck and neck: Agricultural Almanac (Lancaster, Pa., 20c) and The Old Farmer's Almanac (Dublin, N.H., 25c). Both make

COLLIER'S

"Now isn't this a lot nicer and smoother than those other trails?"

excellent reading. The N.H. outfit predicts a fine big blizzard in the first ten days, which should be good business for White Mountain ski lodges.

●

This, as it happens, is the season for thrillers.

Try FELLOW PASSENGER, by Geoffrey Household, author of ROGUE MALE, THE THIRD HOUR and other off-the-beat mysteries. Here is a gay, impudent story about an English-Ecuadorian who is the answer to a maiden's prayer, a handsome young man who plays the guitar ravishingly, and finds himself by error in a nest of nuclear physicists, one of whom is a woman. I don't want to tell too much. You'll have to take my word for it.

Then there's PRAY FOR A BRAVE HEART, by Helen MacInnes, whose spy stories are classics: ABOVE SUSPICION, ASSIGNMENT IN BRITTANY, FRIENDS AND LOVERS. This time she thrusts an American into a Central European plot involving French, Swiss and Germans, a jewel robbery on a national scale, and the rescue of escapees from behind the Curtain by brave and reckless amateurs. A grave waiter watches stealthily while beer flows and stein songs echo.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 22

FOR VARICOSE VEINS
FROM BAUER & BLACK

AN ELASTIC
STOCKING THAT DOESN'T LOOK LIKE ONE

Now – nylon elastic stockings so sheer and dressy-looking you can wear them without overhose!

Here at last is an elastic stocking without that "wooden leg" look. One that keeps your varicose veins a secret, gives welcome relief, too.

New Bauer & Black nylons are so sheer that you can even wear them without overhose. Still, veins won't show through. They're fashioned to the shape of your leg so they fit smoothly, without wrinkles. And because they're fashioned, these stockings assure you of correct support from ankle to thigh—the kind most doctors recommend. They are open-toed for foot comfort. Won't discolor. Easy to wash. Quick drying. Light and cool.

Wouldn't you feel better in these elastic stockings?

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET!
"Comfort, Relief and New Leg Beauty"

BAUER & BLACK
Nylon or Cotton Elastic Stockings

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. LH-2
309 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone___ State_____

New method fo
wit

CHOCOLATE CAKE

1½ cups sifted cake flour
1¼ teaspoons soda
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup cocoa
⅔ cup Kraft Oil
1 cup buttermilk
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 eggs
1¼ cups sugar

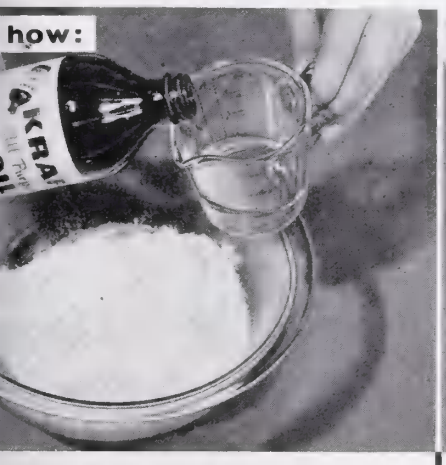
Sift together the flour, soda, salt, and cocoa. Add the oil, buttermilk, and vanilla; beat until it forms a very smooth batter. In a separate bowl, beat the eggs until thick and foamy. Gradually add the sugar, and continue beating until very well blended. Fold this egg and sugar mixture thoroughly into the batter. Pour into 2 waxed-paper lined 8-inch layer pans. Bake in a moderate oven, 350°, for 35 to 40 minutes.

Frost with:

CHOCOLATE "PHILLY" FROSTING

1 8-oz. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese
1 tablespoon milk
4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
3 1-oz. squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
1 teaspoon vanilla
Dash of salt

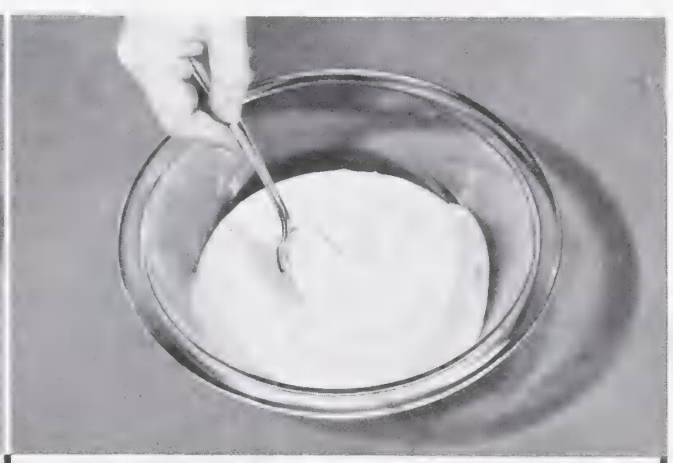
Blend the cream cheese and milk. Add sugar gradually, blending it in well. Add melted chocolate, vanilla, salt. Mix again.



haking all cakes (REQUIRING SHORTENING)
Kraft All Purpose Oil

Spice cakes, jam cakes, chocolate cakes . . . all your favorites can now be made with Kraft All Purpose Oil as the shortening.

Kraft Oil is delightfully easy to measure accurately. And you know how important accurate measurements are in baking.



Kraft All Purpose Oil blends right through the batter to make cakes unbelievably delicate in texture, moist and rich right down to the last delicious crumb. Why not send for your free recipe book right away?

gether all the dry ingredients except Measure Kraft All Purpose Oil.

2 Add Kraft All Purpose Oil, liquid, and flavoring to the sifted dry ingredients.

3 Beat this mixture until it forms a very smooth batter.

e bowl, beat eggs until thick and foamy.
gradually, beating until well blended.

5 Fold this egg and sugar mixture thoroughly into the batter.

6 Pour into waxed-paper lined layer pans and bake, according to the directions on recipe.

All Purpose Oil . . .
st wonderful oil ever created ep-frying, pan-frying, nade salad dressings,
w . . . baking cakes!

Free!

Recipe book full of wonderful cakes to make with Kraft All Purpose Oil!

Twenty kinds of delicious cakes from spice to chocolate to jam cake . . . the recipes are all in here just waiting to be made! Recipes for delicious frostings, too.

Just fill out coupon and mail.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Mail to Kraft Oil Cake Recipes, Box 730, Chicago 77, Ill.

For the softest, smoothest skin in the world

Soothe and protect baby's sensitive skin with a LINIT bath

Yes, it's true... for 3 generations doctors have recommended starch from corn to soothe and protect baby's sensitive skin. So it is only natural that Linit, pure starch from corn, is ideal for the bath. It does wonders for the skin, cools surface irritations... makes baby happy, comfortable.

Linit is ready to use. Pour about ½ cup of Linit Starch into the bathinette... use more in a regular tub. Swish Linit around, it dissolves quickly, smoothly into milky liquid. Bathe baby as usual ...then pat dry with towel.

Make this easy test—convince yourself! Swish a handful of Linit Starch in warm water. Place your hands in the water for half a minute. Pat hands dry... feel the sheer film that coats and guards the skin, giving it gentle soothing comfort.

COMMENDED BY THE CONSULTANT SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

I always get an EXTRA box of LINIT ... it's my favorite laundry starch

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19

THE MISSING MACLEANS, by Geoffrey Hoare, is a true story, but on every count as exciting as fiction. This is a reconstruction of actual events as fascinating in detail and psychology as the Hiss case. It is the step-by-step report on the young British career diplomat who disappeared in 1951—presumably behind the Iron Curtain—leaving his wife, two children and a third on the way; and of his wife who disappeared two years later with her children in the same direction. All the facts are assembled, the characters knowingly described. What remains is the question, the problem, the guess.

Another true tale, packed with adventure, is ACROSS THE ROOF OF THE WORLD, by Wilfred Skrede. Skrede is a young Norwegian who in 1941 went from Occupied Norway to Canada to join the RCAF. The catch is that he went east! Through Russia, Russian Turkestan, Chinese Turkestan, Sinkiang (where he broke his back and was bedridden for three months!), across the Asian desert on top of a pile of oilcans on a truck (back not yet healed!), on foot alone down through a Himalayan pass into India, out of Singapore by ship on the day the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor, and into Toronto one year and eight days after leaving Oslo!

Because he broke his back he probably knows more of Moslem China than any other Westerner, and it's the days in the so-called hospital that you'll never forget: a single doctor for a region that sounds like Texas for size, but with no trained nurse, almost no water, only flies, filth and unbelievable food. You'll also remember the instant reaction of the Chinese to the word that meant "Russian."

●

PRELUDE TO DUNKIRK, by Gen. Sir Edward L. Spears, is probably the best diplomatic history of the war, along with the Churchill, from the British point of view. Spears was Churchill's representative to the French government, and his day-by-day account of the relationship between France and England is drama in world terms. Things were pretty touchy for a time and the strain on Sir Edward must have been terrific. This is the first of two volumes, ASSIGNMENT TO CATASTROPHE.

WIDE WORLD

The Dunkirk evacuation.

●

U.S.A. at a Glance is a chart which every school should have. On a single sheet of firm paper, 21″ x 26″, you can find 30,000 facts about the history of the United States: the terms of each President, great events, trends, population, income, admission of states—everything! One chart is 60c, quantity discounts. (Publications Services, Inc., Dupont Circle Bldg., Washington 6, D.C.)

CONTINUED ON PAGE 25

SOS Smoke Odor Sufferers!

air-wick kills stale smoke odors fast!

air-wick works like nothing else possibly can...to kill disagreeable odors from smoking, cooking, bathroom and other sources...and to make the air in your home seem fresh and clean-smelling in a jiffy. It's the only household deodorizer with chlorophyll. And, test after test by scientific laboratories prove air-wick three times as effective as imitations. Don't waste money on imitations! Insist on genuine air-wick!

SATISFACTORY OR A REFUND OF MONEY
★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

©1955, SEEMAN BROTHERS, INC., NEW YORK, NEW YORK

PRICED WITH THE LOWEST GIVES YOU THE MOST!

NEW FRIGIDAIRE THRIFTY PAIR Fully Automatic Washer and Electric Dryer

Fully Automatic Washer! Exclusive Live-Action multiplies cleansing power of modern and detergents. Float-over Rinsing carries p and away and down the drain. Uses 2 to 8 s less hot water per load. Saves suds for re-use red. Lifetime Porcelain top and tub.

New Electric Dryer—it's automatic! Dries clothes without fading or snagging. Basket-high, full opening door for easy loading. Lifetime Porcelain drum. Adaptable for 120 or 230 volts.

Built and Backed by General Motors

CKED WITH GH-PRICED EATURES

See! Compare! You'll choose Frigidaire . . . ask for demonstration at your dealer's now!

IT'S MADE BY SWIFT

so you can feed your dog as well as you feed your family

Swift
1855 CENTENNIAL 1955
TO SERVE YOUR FAMILY BETTER

PARD HAS THE
Good Beef Taste
DOGS LOVE!

If your dog is a finicky eater, remember . . . he's only human. He wants his food tasty and flavorful just as you do. Hence the great appeal of new Pard. Its aroma (take a sniff) is clean and fresh and meaty . . . and its wonderful good beef taste comes from the juicy beef variety meats, ground beef bone, and beef fat Swift puts into Pard. Your dog knows what's good for him. That's why he'll pass up even red, raw meat for Pard's complete diet of essential foods. Get a good supply. Nobody makes dog food like Swift makes Pard.

FACTS ABOUT PARD YOU SHOULD KNOW:

*PARD is a complete dinner. 11 generations of happy, healthy dogs have been raised on just PARD alone!

*When you feed one can of PARD, you're giving your dog as much nourishment as you get from a hearty roast beef dinner.

*PARD can be fed to puppies as early as 6 weeks. It's extra rich in protein which is essential to a growing dog's health.

F YOU SUFFER PAIN of EADACHE
IEURITIS EURALGIA
t
FAST ELIEF WITH way sands of sicians and dentists recommend e's Why... Anacin is like a doctor's cription. That is, Anacin contains not one but a combination of medically ed active ingredients. No other prodives faster, longer-lasting relief from of headache, neuralgia, neuritis Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
ew drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from nenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO tough-the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to cut and thus prevents further pain and discom-
. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

Beware of combs
That scratch and tear.
Replace with Ace
For years of wear!

Be as careful of your comb
as you are of your combing.
Use a hard rubber Ace: it gentles your hair into place, glides safely across your scalp because there are no sharp "burrs" between teeth and each tooth-end is smoothly rounded. Moderately priced, individually packaged. For everyone at home or away.
American Hard Rubber Co., N.Y. 13.

ACE® HARD RUBBER
COMBS
OTHER ▪ STRONGER ▪ LAST MUCH LONGER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22

Elizabeth Bowen's readers will be happy to know about her new novel, A WORLD OF LOVE, a sensitive, fugitive story comparable to DEATH OF THE HEART and A HOTEL IN PARIS.

I saw Elizabeth Bowen in Ireland last year. She lives halfway between Cork and Limerick in Bowen Court, the home of her ancestors—a big austere house made up of enormous square rooms with ceilings 15' to 18' high, heated by tiny coal-burning fireplaces. After steam-heated interviews in pretentious hotel lobbies, as happens in New York, the memory of sitting beside Elizabeth Bowen in front of that small glow of firelight is like an earlier incarnation—a very lovely one.

●

PLAIN WORDS, THEIR ABC, by Sir Ernest Gowers, is destined to make the world run faster and more smoothly. Every writer of books, editorials, sermons, class compositions, office memos can use it. Originally devised as a guide to concise writing for British civil servants, it will start you crossing out every "as regards," "in respect of," "with reference to," "in case of," and substituting "of," "in," "to" as fits the case.

And speaking of writing, here is a Chinese rejection slip received by the author of a novel: "We have read your manuscript with boundless delight. If we were to publish the book, it would be impossible in future to publish any book of a lower standard. As it is unthinkable that within the next ten thousand years we shall find the equal of your book, we are, to our great regret, compelled to return this divine work."

●

Lord Byron and Sir Walter Scott were good friends. Each had a game leg and was lame. Otherwise they had nothing in common. Politically they were at opposite poles. If you've never read a life of Scott and want to, try SIR WALTER SCOTT, by Hesketh Pearson.

●

"If you believe in New York, support the public library." That amazing reference library at 42nd Street and Fifth Avenue, free to all, open every day and evening in the year, probably the busiest library in the world, is not city-supported! It depends upon private donation! Eighty miles of shelves holding some 3,500,000 books, any one of which you can get in nine minutes, a main catalogue of 7,000,000 cards, someone to help you with every question . . . and it asks so quietly and with such dignity for help!

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"This morning he received a rejection slip that not only rejected the story he sent them, but anything else he might write."

GENTLE EX-LAX HELPS YOU TOWARD YOUR NORMAL REGULARITY

TONIGHT—If you need a laxative, take chocolated EX-LAX, America's best-tasting laxative. Take it at bedtime—it won't disturb your sleep.

IN THE MORNING—You'll enjoy the closest thing to natural action. No discomfort or upset. You'll soon feel like yourself again!

NEXT DAY—EX-LAX continues to help you toward your normal regularity. You hardly ever have to take EX-LAX again the next night!

When you have a COLD and need a Laxative—take gentle EX-LAX. It is one laxative that "gets along" with any cold remedy you may be taking. Unlike "hurry-up" laxatives, EX-LAX does not carry off fluid and food with their vitamins and minerals—does not upset you.

Buy The New 65¢ Size—
Save As Much As 37¢
Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX
THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

MORE PEOPLE USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATIVE

The Clothes You Wear

THE WORLD OVER women are washing more and pressing less. Two reasons back of this are the increasing lack of servants and the twentieth century emphasis on cleanliness and the strong promotion of soaps and detergents. Another major reason is that the world over you'll find rayons, linens, cottons and mixtures that are marked Tebilized for tested crease-resistance. Tebilized (rhymes with surprised) is your assurance of superfine and tested crease-resistance that lasts the fabric's lifetime. These fabrics resist rumpling. Any slight creases hang out overnight. They're a cinch to iron after laundering, too.

Linen Fashions . . . Have you ever considered the special advantages of wearing linen? Linen always looks well. It wears beautifully and actually improves with laundering. Linen suits and dresses have a special elegance. So do linen blouses. A good fashion scheme is to have well-tailored linen blouses and shirts to wear with your suits and slacks. Have one in white—nothing could be more becoming. And have one in a sharp stinging color; for example, a violent yellow or an intense violet. (There is no better interpreter of color than linen.) Nowadays you don't have to worry about the crushing of linen. For linens marked Tebilized are wonderfully crease-resistant. Look for Tebilized on the tag or label and you're safe.

How to press a rumpled linen dress. Simply hang it up as you do fine wools or silks over a steaming bathtub. You'll find it will leave the steaming amazingly fresh-looking. But you must first make sure that it is a linen marked Tebilized. That's what gives it its remarkable resistance to creases.

Look for the new year 'round cottons marked Tebilized for tested crease-resistance. You'll find them in smooth solid color broadcloths, in striking prints and in interesting weaves. Also wonderful to wear: Tebilized-marked spun rayons, rayon crepes and, of course, linens. Tebilized-marked fabrics are available in clothes for your husband and children, too. Tebilized-marked fabrics are also sold in Canada.

FREE . . . for samples of fabrics marked Tebilized, snippets of the latest colors and prints in these fabrics, and stores near you that carry them, write to:

T. B. Lee Company, Inc., Testing
Dept. LH-1, 101 W. 31st St., N. Y. C. 1

NAME . . . . . .
ADDRESS . . . . . .
CITY . . . . . ZONE . . . .
STATE . . . . . .

The Tebilized mark is applied only by permission of the owners of the mark to those fabrics which conform to specified standards of crease-resistance and quality established by them.

fabrics marked
TEBILIZED®
for tested crease-resistance

Now...discover how good really fresh tea can be!

You'll be amazed—as tea experts were— at the difference Tender Leaf's New Seal-Tight Foil Wrap makes in freshness, fragrance and flavor!

It's a fact—only really fresh tea is full-flavored tea! We proved this in tests all over the country—compared tea in ordinary packages with Tender Leaf protected by this new seal-tight aluminum foil wrap. Frankly, even we were amazed at the difference! You can actually see Tender Leaf's brighter color, smell its finer fragrance, taste its richer, deeper flavor. Discover for yourself how good fresh tea can be . . . try Tender Leaf Brand today!

TENDER LEAF—FIRST AND ONLY TEA PACKED THIS FLAVOR-SAVING WAY!

Y.W.C.A.—Wives' day out

. . . Youngstown, Ohio

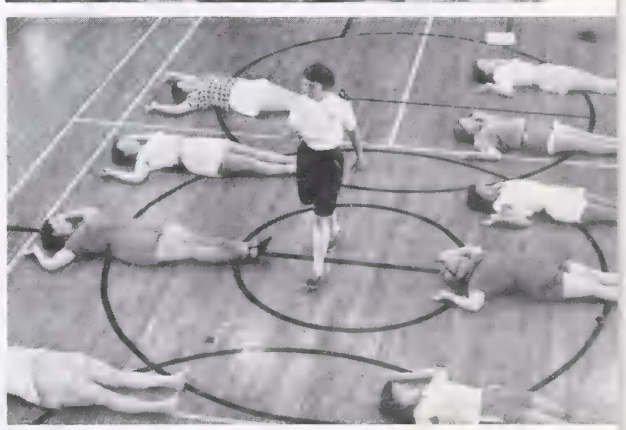
First arrivals for Y.W.-Wives' Holiday head for third-floor nursery rooms where children will spend the day.

THE six-story brick building at 25 West Rayen Avenue in Youngstown, Ohio, has a wide, friendly-looking entrance fronting on the street, but if you go in that way most of the women gathered in the sunny, colorful lobby will recognize you immediately as a visitor. Eventually someone will explain: "The back door just happens to be more convenient, so practically all of us use it—just as we might at home." That "home" informality pretty well sums up the feeling most of its members (more than 9000) have about their Youngstown Y.W.C.A.

If the time happens to be just before ten o'clock on a Tuesday morning, you'll meet some 90 to 100 young women arriving at the Y to enjoy what they call variously "a day out," "my own day," "fun, friends—plus a little painless education!" and "a real wifesaver." Officially, the Y calls it a Y.W.-Wives' Holiday, one of three each week. Its purpose, to give homemakers a chance to keep up with what's going on in their community, to learn new skills, make new friends.

Five years ago they scheduled one Holiday a week with three ten-week terms a year. "The response told us that this new program was filling a long-felt need," says sandy-haired Olive Riddell, executive director. A year later a second Holiday was added; in 1953, a third. "If they had Holidays every day in the week I think every class would be crowded!" says one enthusiastic young wife. "My husband says that my Y Holiday fees [$7.50 for each ten-week term] are the best money we spend."

The young homemakers come from all over the city and its suburbs, from small towns as much as twenty miles away. They walk, come by bus, get up early enough to drive their husbands to work so they can have the family car for the day. They wear casual clothes—skirts with sweaters or blouses, low-heeled shoes, sometimes white cotton socks. A good many of them still look like schoolgirls.



First to arrive are the mothers with three-to-five-year-old children, like pretty Jane Thompson and her bright-eyed Betsy. They head for the nursery rooms on the third floor and if Jane stops to chat with friends or check to see who today's lunchtime speaker will be, Betsy tugs her impatiently toward the elevator. "It's *school*time, mommy!" reproves the pert four-year-old whose brown bangs peek out from under a beribboned sailor hat. Her mother hands a small brown-paper bag to a friend (who carries one just like it). "Save me a place at one of the tables, will you, please? We can lunch together."

All the women carry "sack" lunches and boxes or bags containing gym clothes, swim caps, materials for whatever class they've chosen for the afternoon—perhaps sewing, knitting or ceramics. In two big ground-floor rooms (both have cream-colored walls, bright curtains, one has a piano) long tables have been set up. Already the paper-bag lunches—or maybe a sweater draped CONTINUED ON PAGE 29

JOE MUNROE

Learning the crawl is easy if you relax, as the instructor suggests. Nearly 50 Y.W.-Wives are enrolled in swimming class.

While the leader calls the turns, exercisers stretch flat on the gym floor for posture and figure improvement.

At lunchtime everyone gets together over friendly "sack lunches." Today's guest speaker is an air-defense officer from a nearby base.

This new dress would be a welcome addition to any wardrobe—and it's so easy to make in class when someone helps with fitting.

Knitters enjoy making new friends while they work on socks, afghans or sweaters under not one, but two instructors.

It's their day out too. While mother exercises or sews, youngsters act out songs. Later they will have lunch, take naps.

One of today's great beauties

The Duchess of Rutland chooses "the one perfect make-up!"

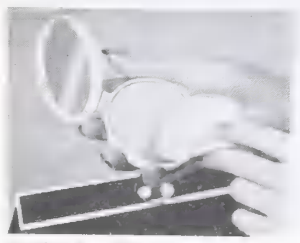
The charming young Duchess of Rutland is one of the real beauties in England today. She says, "For sheer 'becomingness,' no other make-up even approaches Pond's Angel Face. And the Mirror Case is a delight . . . fits into my slimmest handbag . . . goes happily with every costume. Angel Face is, without doubt, the one perfect make-up!"



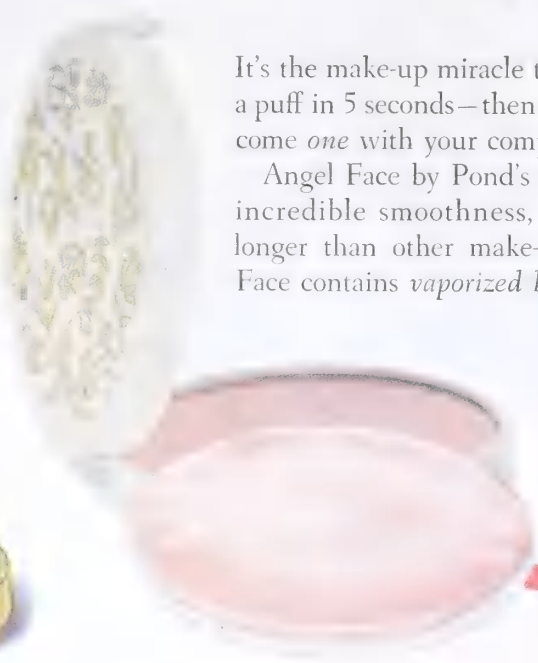
Tall, slender—with an exquisite rose and cream complexion—the Duchess of Rutland is the very ideal of English beauty

No greasy fingers or wet sponge!

No spilly powder!

In the lovely Mirror Case—Angel Face is perfect to use everywhere. With puff, mirror, choice of 8 skin tones—just $1*

The secret of its "magnetic" attraction for your skin



Vaporized Beauty Oils

It's the make-up miracle that smooths on with a puff in 5 seconds—then actually seems to become one with your complexion!

Angel Face by Pond's goes on with almost incredible smoothness, looks lovely hours longer than other make-ups. Because Angel Face contains vaporized beauty oils that have a "magnetic" attraction—a real affinity for your own natural skin softeners.

Creamy-smooth, never "shiny"—Angel Face hides little skin flaws, yet never looks made-up. And Angel Face won't dry your skin.

No wonder surveys show that more women use this "one perfect make-up" than any other!

For your dressing table—the blue-and-gold box, with velour puff: 89¢ and 59¢* *plus tax

Angel Face

by POND'S

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27

a chair back—mark lunchtime places rved." In a small kitchen off the larger
, two gleaming coffee urns, a fat brown t and a tableload of cups are ready for t noon.

t before lunch, the Tuesday Holiday will have an hour's "refiguring" exerplus another hour of swimming.

the big, two-story gym a piano is play-brisk, rhythmic tune while forty-odd en in shorts and jerseys bend, stretch roan good-naturedly over the commands eir instructor. (A very recent grander, she has a figure a teen-ager might ) "We tried volleyball and organized s, but the girls liked the exercises better."

wnstairs, the large tiled swimming pool its twin sets of locker rooms, showers, lryers, heat lamps and temperature cons the Y's great pride. If you look over annual report for 1953 you'll find—high e list headed Accomplishments—"Suclly launched new swimming pool!" a ear, $350,000 project.

omen in bright-colored suits of cotton fill the big pool. Instructors are easy to fy in suits of lighter blue. Slim, darkd Connie Goldberg is telling her class, s work on the crawl." Benches overlook ool but the room is heated to a temperacomfortable for the swimmers and it is ot to stay long if you are fully dressed.
s have a look at what the children are in the nursery," suggests tiny (5′) na Becker, who heads the Y's Adult ities Department.

one room of the blue-and-white nursery, en give rapt attention to a storyteller;
other, two small boys tiny girl with yellow argue whether a ring-book rabbit
d be brown or pink.
s are putting to-a gay, crazy-quilt
n of bright plastic
s. There is a slide, a nce bridge," a rec-layer with records
g and dance to—thing scaled to the
to-five age group.
ha says, "Their will be chicken
peanut-butter sandwiches, carrot sticks nilk. They like that menu best. Then —miniature cots have fresh white
. "There are apples and cookies for ernoon snack." This is as much their out" as it is their mothers'. It was mall, appreciative boy who gave the y part of the Holidays program its —he called it the "Wee W." The "Wee a very necessary part of the program.
brown-eyed Jane Thompson says:
very woman should get away from keeping worries once in a while. But if ay a baby sitter for a whole day out, on't have money left for anything when t out! And you worry about your child while you're gone—the things a four-ld can get into! Here at the Y nursery a dollar a day and that includes Betsy's I'm right here in the building. I know all right. And Betsy loves it. All the en in our neighborhood are older and ool this year. Betsy thinks she's in l, too, when we come here."

rtha glances at her watch—11:40.
e to go downstairs and make the coffee nch."

w minutes before twelve, girls come in pool and gym. Some have done up damp hair in pin curls and covered it bright scarf. By twelve o'clock you see noccupied places at the long tables. The s grow noisy with talk and laughter as rls unpack lunches, line up to serve elves from the big coffee urns. One n sits down at the piano and everybody n singing old favorite songs (they were d with their impromptu harmony on Been Working on the Railroad). But oom quiets quickly when Martha uces their "noonday speaker." Today oung Mr. Israel Stollman, director of the City Planning Commission. His subject—slum clearance.

That he has an attentive audience is clear when he asks, "Are there any questions?" There are. "Why is the clearance project centered on one particular area?" (It is a substandard location for housing, but a perfect one for new industries Youngstown is hoping to attract.) "Where will the people now living there go?" ("Safer and more sanitary" housing will be found for all of them—some will qualify for public housing.) "What will it cost us?" (If Youngstown taxpayers pay one third of the clearance cost, the Federal Government will pay the other two thirds.)

"Members themselves suggest lunchtime speakers," Martha explains.

WIDELY different subjects are covered—child guidance, travel, beauty, fashion, cancer detection (sponsored by the American Cancer Society). Soon after his election, Youngstown Mayor Frank Kryzan came to the Y to speak on his future plans for the city. Probate Court Judge Clifford M. Woodside spoke on the work of a receiving hospital which bears his name. The police chief talked about juvenile delinquency; civil-defense problems were covered. There are speakers whose return visits are eagerly requested. One is Carl Gangloff, of the Greater Youngstown Area Foundation, an organization formed to bring new industries to Youngstown. Mr. Gangloff ("A real dynamo!") is credited with having brought in "more than a hundred smaller new businesses." Another favorite is seventy-year-old Herman Kling, whose Market Street bakery has been supplying Youngstown families with birthday and wedding cakes for more than fifty years. "Everybody loves Mr. Kling," Martha smiles. "He brings along some of his cakes and frosts them while he talks—even lets the girls try their hand at copying his fabulous frosting decorations themselves."

If I have learned anything it is that pity is more intelligent than hatred, that mercy is better even than justice, that if one walks around the world with friendly eyes one makes good friends.

—PHILIP GIBBS: Pageant of the Year (Heinemann, Ltd.).

When lunch is over ("Holidayers" take turns washing the coffee cups) the long tables become working areas for the 30 members of the sewing class. There are seven sewing machines, a steam iron and board, cupboards filled with other sewing and tailoring aids. The Tuesday teacher is soft-voiced Mrs. Ethel O'Hara, who "came here to fill in for six weeks as a favor to a friend" and is now a veteran of six years' standing. "At first I was scared to death at the thought of teaching a class, but doing it helped me overcome my lifelong shyness. I see the same thing happening to girls in my classes and it makes me feel the work is really worth while." Her students say Mrs. O'Hara's classes are among the program's most popular, but she says firmly, "I know I get more out of this than I put into it."

Down the corridor the knitting class is meeting in one corner of Bentley Hall (the auditorium). More than 30 women are gathered at two round tables, chatting and comparing progress on sweaters, socks or mufflers since last week. ("What a lot you've got done!") A busy instructor pauses long enough to say that they're all doing well—"considering that at the beginning of the term two thirds of them had never held needles in their hands."

A small ceramics class makes flat dishes of clay, patterned on large green leaves. Teacher Mrs. Harley Littler displays their next project—small flower pins.

In a room with a gay color scheme of deep blue, gold and coral, a Red Cross member is teaching a class in home nursing. How to change bed linen with the minimum disturbance for an invalid is today's demonstration. "Always explain to the patient just what you are going to do before you do it," the instructor tells them.

The bridge class is meeting in the residence lounge, and five tables of learners are keeping instructor Mrs. Calvin Weston busy with questions. "This is always one of our most popular

CONTINUED ON PAGE 140

There's room to relax in uncrowded

Canada

VACATIONS UNLIMITED...

It's easy to find the kind of holiday setting that exactly suits you in uncrowded Canada. Here's a vivid and varied playground of mountains, seacoasts, lakelands, National Parks, colourful cities—each offering an endless choice of exciting things to do and see, each a wonderful place to be. No passport needed. See your travel or transportation agent soon; send the coupon now.

Canada's congenial resorts furnish grand facilities for summer sports.

Canada's smart shops offer opportunities to pick up bargains in handicrafts, imported goods.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL BUREAU,
OTTAWA, CANADA

Send me your 48-page, full-colour book on vacation attractions in all parts of Canada . . . . ☐

Tell me where 16 mm sound films on Canadian travel subjects are available in the U.S.A. . . ☐

Check √ as required

01-1-16-55-01

*Name*_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

*Address*_____

*Town*_____ *State*_____

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D.
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

Silence is golden only where understanding exists—it can be the rust that destroys.

The Sulking Husband

"AFTER five years of marriage, I've almost lost hope. It's like a wall shutting me off from my husband. When something goes wrong, or I displease him, he lapses into mournful silence. At first his spells lasted two or three hours; now he goes as long as a week without speaking to me once. I can't sleep or eat when he's like this; I'm so nervous I drop things and make foolish mistakes, which would irritate anybody. He never criticizes, and we never quarrel, but I wish we did. I'd do anything to correct my faults if only he'd tell me what's wrong," a wife writes me.

It's hard to find excuses for this man's sulks and silences and the selfishness behind them. By cutting communication with his wife, he has ended their chance to develop the understanding and feeling of oneness essential to happy marriage.

The difficulty is unusually severe, but not uncommon in nature. In many marriages, understanding is limited and less satisfactory than it could be because husband and wife don't communicate freely.

If your husband is often sulky or won't talk, these suggestions may help you see why, and so find ways of improving the situation.

Some husbands are inarticulate. He may be uncommunicative because he hasn't learned to put thoughts and feelings into words. If he was brought up to be "seen but not heard," he needs practice and encouragement. Perhaps you can help by asking simple, tactful questions or by making remarks which invite his comment. But what he needs most is assurance that you think him worth listening to. Bring up subjects interesting to him, listen and reply attentively, and show by your attitude that you want to hear more.

Some husbands don't get a chance. An inarticulate man or any other quits trying to talk to a wife too busy to listen. The talkative wife isn't the only one whose husband can't get a word in edgewise. When your husband is in a mood to confide, let other tasks wait.

Some husbands overvalue self-control, and take pride in concealing their worries and bottling up grievances. But a wife worth having expects to share her husband's problems. If she has hurt him or made a mistake, she wants to know it. Tell him how you feel, and that honest criticism and occasional temper are easier to bear than tight-lipped silence.

Some husbands feel inferior. The well-balanced man is proud of his wife's accomplishments. But the man lacking self-confidence may fear that his wife's advantages in education, social position or talent show up his weaknesses. Withdrawal and silence may be a defense against feeling outclassed. Try to build up his confidence by avoiding situations better suited to your abilities than his, and by planning your social life around people with whom he feels at home.

Some husbands are confirmed sulkers. If he is cheerful and talkative when he gets his way, but sullen and silent when something doesn't suit him, he hasn't outgrown the "spoiled child" stage. Whether his motive is to force you to give in, to "punish" you, or to make you miserable, too, he isn't easy to live with.

Before you decide that he belongs in this category (few men do) try any reasonable method you can think of to bring about improvement. Tell him frankly how much you suffer. Even if his behavior is deliberate, he may not realize how seriously it hurts you and handicaps your marriage. Though we seldom recommend tears, in this case they may be justified—and effective.

But if he persistently refuses to co-operate or respond, seek professional guidance about the future. Your counselor may feel that separation is the only solution for you, but let him warn your husband before you take this step. The fear of losing you may get results when all else has failed.

What People Want in Marriage

WHAT do today's young people want in marriage? The question is vital, because satisfaction in life depends less on getting what we want than on wanting the right things. The person who marries for money or social advancement may achieve that particular ambition, but happiness in marriage is not based on material values. The goals a husband and wife set and together seek to satisfy determine the quality of the relationship between them.

In a recent survey of several hundred college students, we asked what one quality or satisfaction they most wanted in marriage. More than three in four said love or companionship! For a marriage lacking these elements is little more meaningful than any other legal transaction. But the husband and wife whose relationship is based on love and companionship are united by bonds more enduring than any contract.

Still, there is more to marriage than love and companionship, essential though they are. To fill in details of the picture, we asked students to compare the importance of various possible goals. Here are their replies:

Men	Most Wanted from Marriage	Women
22	Companionship	20
21	Love	28
15	Home life	11
12	Children	12
12	Sexual satisfaction (harmony)	8
8	Security	14
5	Wealth and comfort	1
3	Religious values	5
2	Prestige and (social) position	1

Note how closely the replies of men and women correspond. In general, these young men and women want substantially the same things from marriage (though there may be wider disagreement in individual instances). This, too, is vital. For motives worthy in themselves do not insure harmony unless husband and wife agree on their importance.

In contrast, a study eight years ago revealed sharp differences in the marriage aims of college men and women. For example, men ranked sexual satisfaction second only to love as a reason for marrying; women rated it next to the last. Disagreements in motives like this can bring heartache.

The current study indicates a far healthier attitude. To value the sex relationship as part of marriage is natural and right, but to value marriage primarily as an opportunity for sex distorts the meaning of both.

Thinking about what you really want may renew your appreciation of the things you have. Would you willingly exchange your husband's peace of mind, or good credit rating, for an imposing house beyond his means?

The important goals may be closer than you realize. Don't let trivial or unworthy motives erect a barrier on the way.

ASK YOURSELF:
"Have I a Responsible Husband?"

A wife's security depends on her husband's acceptance of responsibility and his concern for her welfare. In answering these questions "Yes" or "No," base your answers on what is generally true rather than the occasional exception.

Does your husband:

1. Drink sparingly or not at all?
2. Get up in the morning without prodding?
3. Get to work on time?
4. Handle his personal spending sensibly?
5. Often praise you even for little things?
6. Try hard to win job promotion?
7. Lend a hand when you are pushed?
8. Keep appointments with you promptly?
9. Confide in you fully?
10. Take an interest in home problems?
11. Value his reputation?
12. Avoid taking chances in doubtful ventures?
13. Consider your wishes in making decisions?
14. Tell the truth? (Bragging doesn't count!)

Total the "Yes" answers you have credited to him. If his score is nine or ten, he is about average. With a score of twelve or more, both you and he deserve commendation. If his score is seven or less, why not talk over frankly and constructively the points that distress you? Your recognition of any improvement, however slight, may encourage him to do better.

Do You Agree?

Do most men today expect their wives to hold jobs?

Among college men, almost two thirds expect their wives to work at least for two or three years.

lew Rinso Blue washes whiter because it blues as it washes

Guess which girl washed her shirt with RINSO BLUE? (The one on the right.) narkable sky-blue detergent gets your wash whiter – because it blues as it washes! Unless your present detergent does that – it's doing only half the job.

SO BLUE is the very latest scientific de-elopment to emerge from the laboratory. It ents a tremendous step forward.

oes so many different jobs, and does them brilliantly, that it honestly makes other ents seem obsolete. Listen to this:

INSO BLUE actually blues as it washes. As lt, your sheets and shirts and pillowcases out cleaner and whiter, your colored clothes er. And you don't need to add any bluing!

Ve developed this completely new RINSO a to give you the cleaning power you need clothes really clean and white in your g machine.

INSO BLUE dissolves instantly, even in the hardest water. And it makes rich, white suds that float out the dirtiest, grimiest dirt—even from heavily soiled work clothes. Yet it's safe for your finest lingerie.

4. It's delightfully mild. That's why so many gals also use RINSO BLUE for washing dishes. It does up to twice as many dishes as last year's leading detergent—and cuts grease like crazy!

Lever Brothers will gladly refund your money if you don't agree that RINSO BLUE is a vast improvement on the detergent you are now using.

▶ Above all, remember this: RINSO BLUE gets your clothes extra white because it blues as it washes. Unless your present detergent does that—it's doing only half the job!

The SUB-DEB to a HAS BEEN

Edited by Ruth Imler

THIS is our valentine for all the sad and puzzled girls who are having trouble sleeping, can't concentrate on their homework any more, who can't even get interested in dating, who because of a certain boy are thinking:

—"We made an agreement that if one of us stopped liking the other we'd let the other person know so that we wouldn't be left sitting there wondering. If he has stopped liking me, why hasn't he kept his promise of telling me so?"

—"What could have come over him in less than three days?"

—"Is there anything I can do besides wait, hope, pray for his return?"

—"The last thing that he said that night was that he would see me sometime that next week, but that time never came. Why?"

—"Should I try to be friendly now, confess liking him, try competition, or is it hopeless?"

Maybe he's just trying to make me jealous, you decide hopefully, or maybe he's just playing hard to get or maybe it's true that his parents object to his dating or maybe he doesn't want to get tied down now because of college or maybe he's worried because we were getting too serious . . . maybe, maybe, maybe. There are as many reasons for the mysterious ways boys behave as there are boys. Maybe you can stumble on the real reason for his behavior, but more likely all you can be certain of is that if you can't win him back, you definitely want to get over him.

If he never asked for a second date . . . You had the time of your life on that first date—and so did he, you just know. Now it's three weeks later and you haven't heard Word One from him. What happened? Maybe his report card turned up a D in Spanish and he's boning up; maybe he's broke. Maybe he's afraid of being typed as your steady—in some schools, it happens after two or three dates. And if he isn't dating any other girl, maybe he just isn't girl-crazy!

Instead of going up to talk to him when he's with a crowd of his male friends or making heavy-handed jokes—"Hey, lose my telephone number?"—you can:

Give him an especially big "Hello" when you see him around school. Shy girls are especially prone to look the other way when the man of their dreams comes near and this is often mistaken for unfriendliness.

Instead of inviting and inviting him to girl-ask-boy parties and dances, you can:

Invite him to one party or dance and then leave the next move up to him.

Instead of scaring him off by telling your friends to tell him that you like him, you can:

Make a point of remembering something that interests him and calling it to his attention. Ask him if he's heard the latest George Shearing record. ("You haven't? Gee, I've just bought it—want to come over after school and hear it?") See?

Instead of taking a sour-grapes attitude—"I never really liked him anyway"—or persuading yourself that "He just thinks I'm too young" or "He's afraid of being hurt" or "He just enjoys keeping me dangling" you can:

Grin and try to bear the fact that sometimes a girl just likes a boy more than he likes her.

If several boys suddenly drop you . . . Last month you were the belle of the ball and you really had one. You had three dates in one week—with Henry, Ralph and John. Now you haven't had even one single solitary telephone call for two weeks and you're wondering, Is anybody ever going to ask me for a date again?

Of course somebody is. This happens to everybody—but everybody. Maybe John and Ralph are friends and don't want to date you at the same time. Maybe they're all broke.

Instead of going into a panic and slinking off to the movies Saturday in jeans and curlers "because nobody will notice me anyway," you can: Work at getting second dates. (Approved methods listed above!) Take advantage of this extra time to do something you really want to—take a course in oil painting, work as a nurse's aide. An interested, alive girl just naturally attracts all kinds of people—even boy people.

There are as many reasons for the mysterious ways boys behave as there are boys.

ANGELO PINTO

If he was your steady . . . You're as sure as you can be sure of anything that you'll never, never get over it, that life will never be the same. And you're right. First love you always remember, and your life will change—falling in love is a big step in growing up.

Instead of tears, telephone calls and letters demanding an explanation, or hours of gloomy wondering Now if I had done this, maybe he wouldn't have, you can:

Try to understand why the breakup came. It might help you another time if you have a real personality defect like excessive jealousy. You can even admit to yourself—if it's true—that you didn't really like him so much until he stopped liking you and that it may be your pride that's smarting, not your heart. And you can always honestly console yourself with the fact that the only reason for the breakup may be that he is a boy, not a man, and simply unable to make a lifelong choice now.

Instead of figuring that all you have left are your memories, and haunting the places you used to go together hoping you'll see him, you can:

Give yourself one, just one, old-times evening. Play the record of your song, read his letters, then put everything away—not in your desk drawer to be wept over from time to time, but away. Throw them out!

Instead of comparing every new date with him—if he was smooth enough for you to steady-date in the first place, naturally you're not going to like others as much at first—you can:

Start dating other boys soon. Enlist your girl friends' aid in fixing up blind dates; give a party; join a church, school or Y youth group.

Instead of refusing new things to do "because I just don't feel like it," you can:

Keep busy. Make a movie date with kid sister, for instance; develop new interests—the school paper, making your own clothes.

Instead of freezing up in the halls and pretending that you don't know him (what could be more childish?) or talking about him nastily at school (it just points up the fact that you were the one who was left) you can:

Treat the ex with all the cheeriness that you can bring yourself to muster. One of the real marks of a popular girl is the often-heard comment that "all her ex-boy friends like her."

If he gave you a brief whirl . . . The boy you met at your grandmother's last summer or the roommate your brother brought home from college for Christmas vacation—or just any wonderful boy who doesn't live where you do—can be a real heartache when circumstances take over and you don't know what to do about them. Instead of calling him long distance to ask why he hasn't written or loading your letter a day with plans for the next time you meet, you can:

Write him a friendly, lighthearted note about what you've been doing since you saw him last and ask about him. Period.

Instead of deciding that this is the real thing and forsaking all others to wait for him forever, you can: Give the local lads a break, even though he has first place—at this time—in your heart. Even you may change your mind!

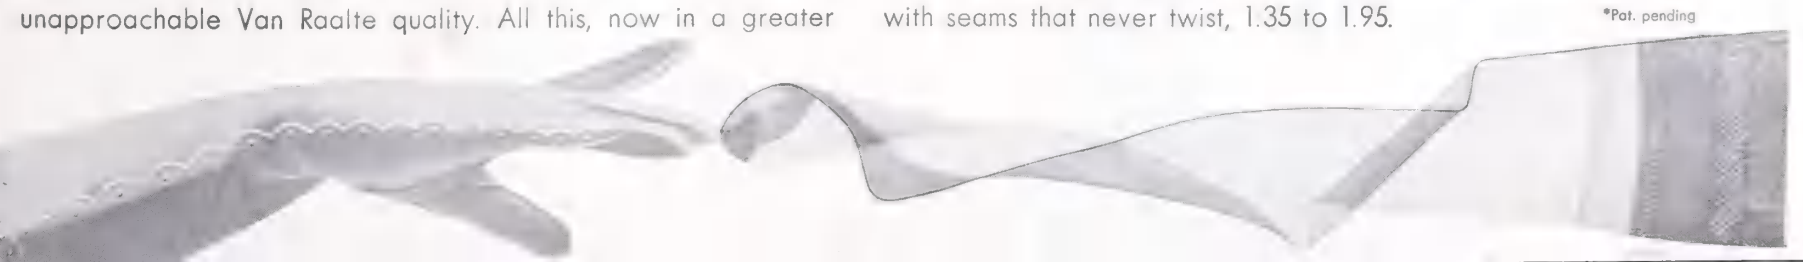
If you've never even been a "has". . . You can: Begin to be an interested, alive girl simply because . . .

Scandalously popular

Van Raalte's

"Frivolace"

#7908. Shown front and back.



Cloud White, Petal Pink, Lemon, Lime, Harvest Beige, Blue Horizon, Navy, Singing Red, Violetta, Black.

A Van Raalte slip with a price tag you can't believe—$5.95

Because you love nice things . . . A lace bodice that's lined—an extravagant touch that makes you feel custom-lingeried, makes you feel you've misread the price-tag. And the lace goes all around; edged everywhere (hem, too) with fine double net. That heavenly Opaquelon® nylon tricot and nylon Alencon lace and net are made by us, of course—and that means unapproachable Van Raalte quality. All this, now in a greater range of colors and sized for the petite, average and tall. 32 to 42. (Sizes 44-46, 6.95.) At fine stores everywhere.

And Van Raalte makes the nicest . . . gloves and hosiery, too. We show Princess, mid-arm handsewn slipon of nylon Reindoe® at 3.50, and Van Raalte's famous Flex-Fit* stockings with seams that never twist, 1.35 to 1.95.

*Pat. pending

For easy days...

Perfect Rice Without Cooking!

1. It's prepared instantly. Just add Minute Rice to boiling water!
2. It's trouble-free. No washing! No boiling! No draining! No sticky pans!
3. It's foolproof. White, fluffy delicious rice—perfect every time!
4. It's just plain good eating—the easiest way to round out a well-balanced meal!

Product of General Foods

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

JILL

Even as the wind blows hardest, there is a secret softening in the heart of winter. We country dwellers muffle up and fare forth with light hearts.

As winter wears away, the woodpile iminishes. No doubt about it—the iggest and sturdiest logs are scarce. he freezer is also recording the flow of me's inevitable stream—we can find most anything in it when we fish round! Those barbecued spareribs merge, and are just right for a cold ight. And a lost package of Jill's vorite edible podded peas comes to ght, glory be! They smell of spring as ey cook, the fire crackles on the earth, and who cares about the dark, old, damp, snowy weather outside?

I would never recommend that a isitor from Tahiti, let's say, try out lew England in February. However, e do very well, for even as the wind lows hardest there is a secret softening the heart of winter. We country wellers know it, we muffle up and fare orth to do the chores with a very light eart. We have a lucky feeling about fe. For the chances of the electric's oing out are slight, the February thaw coming, the light has changed, days row longer.

Life, like a coin, has always two sides. I turn the February coin over, I see ith pleasure that I have had time to o a good many pleasant things while he garden fever is out of the way and he summer guests are pent in city. I ven had time this week to reread Vuthering Heights and feel the same onder at the classic beauty of Emily rontë. It is really a luxury to reread a ook one has read so often since age leven! And to savor every bit of the ild dark pages. It is hard to believe his shy, lonely woman could interpret he devastating relationship of Kathy nd Heathcliff—and know, incidenally, this would be a tale better told by n observer than by the main characters nvolved. But then, who has ever explained genius?

All we know of Emily is that she ved in the bleak, chilly parsonage at he edge of the Haworth moors, that he died young of tuberculosis, that ven her sisters found a wonder in her, nd that she wrote Wuthering Heights. n her time, ladies did not write novels; ers was signed E. Bell. I like to think, snugged down by the hearth, that she must have known her book was going to go down time. Once when I was in the city I overheard one woman say, "What's this Wuthering Heights? Oh, I know; it's Laurence Olivier's last movie." I felt Emily would have smiled.

A wonderful thing about the shut-in days is that one can think. "Where are you?" calls Jill and I answer, "I am sitting thinking!" Thinking of all sorts of things, unrelated and wonderful. Like the pale yellow rose that bloomed after the killing frost. Or the first flying wedge of wild geese going over. Or the sweet musty smell of fallen leaves on a sunny autumn day. Or the sound of my friend Glenn's voice singing one of my favorites, The Ash Grove.

It is wonderful to be a collector, and such collections are to be had just at the price of gathering them! They cannot be stolen and they do not break.

Sunday, in church, I added another collector's item. A young couple came in with two children, a lanky teen-age boy and a younger girl with pale fair hair falling limply from under her odd little hat. As they sat quietly in the hard wooden pew (no softer than it was in 1732, I swear) a sudden shaft of sun came through the arched window and fell on the little family. I had no idea who they were, but I had an immediate perception they were America, the father obviously a hard-working small farmer with his weathered face and slight stoop, the mother with an old winter coat and tired little hat. Just an ordinary little family, but a family coming to church together to reaffirm its faith in God. And as we all stood up and sang "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow," I felt the moment was a special treasure for my collection!

On cold winter days, we like pot roast for dinner and Jill has several versions. One of my favorites is based on a heavenly marinade. You mix together 2 tablespoons prepared mustard, ½ tablespoon salt, ½ teaspoon black pepper, ½ teaspoon chili powder, 1 clove garlic, crushed, and 5 tablespoons salad oil. Marinate the pot roast (or will keep it so fresh . . .

CONTINUED ON PAGE 140

SARAN WRAP

so long . . . so easily!

it clings by itself . . . it's moisture-proof . . . it's crystal-clear!

just press this miracle plastic in place, it stays!

foods can't dry out . . . keeps odors in their place too!

now you can see at a glance everything you wrap!

See MEDIC

Critics call it the most dramatic television of the year! Monday evenings 9, EST . . . NBC-TV.

A product of The Dow Chemical Company, Midland, Michigan. Also available in Canada.

Again!...thrilling new recip

Use genuine PHILADELPHIA Brand Cream Cheese

the brand that tastes richer, fresher, better than all the or you from the Kraft kitchen...

"Philly" pies!

The most wonderful eating fillings you've ever made . . . with a fresh creaminess that's new. It comes from the world's finest cream cheese

When you want to bowl 'em over—make one of these "Philly" pies.

Elegant as they look, there's nothing tricky or hard about the recipes.

And are they terrific! Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese gives each filling a lavish creaminess. An unexpected light, fresh flavor, too. Hard to describe . . . but wonderful!

Just be mighty sure the cream cheese you use is marked Philadelphia Brand . . . America's largest selling brand for a very simple reason: it tastes richer and fresher than all the rest.

BLACK BOTTOM "PHILLY" PIE

Combine ⅔ cup evaporated milk, ½ cup sugar and 1 half-pound package of Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese, and heat in the top of a double boiler, stirring until smooth and well blended. Divide into two equal parts. To one part add 1 1-oz. square unsweetened chocolate, melted, a dash of salt and ¼ cup milk; pour into a 9-inch baked pastry shell.

To the remaining cream cheese mixture add 2 teaspoons of gelatin softened in ½ cup cold water and dissolved over hot water. Chill until slightly thickened. Fold in 1 cup heavy cream, whipped, and 1 teaspoon rum flavoring. Pour over the chocolate filling. Sprinkle the top with 2 tablespoons grated unsweetened chocolate. Chill until firm.

PINEAPPLE "PHILLY" PIE

STRAWBERRY "PHILLY" PIE

BLACK BOTTOM "PHILLY" PIE

CUSTARD "PHILLY" PIE

APRICOT "PHILLY" PIE

LEMON "PHILLY" PIE

New FREE RECIPES

AT YOUR GROCER'S NOW

or write for recipe booklet

Right now most grocers have the recipes for these wonderful "Philly" pies printed on tear-off pads. Or you can fill in the coupon and get the recipes in booklet form. Free, of course.

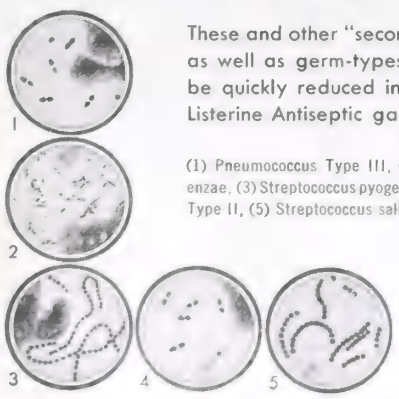
Kraft "Philly" Pies
Box 748, Dept. J2, Chicago 77, Illinois

Name _____

Address _____

Throat raw and scratchy?

LISTERINE
for Quick relief!



Listerine Does What Non-Antiseptic "Cold Tablets", Can't Do— Kills Germs Instantly—By Millions

At the very first sign of a cold get after the germs that can cause you so much misery. Gargle with Listerine Antiseptic—quick! Because Listerine Antiseptic kills germs instantly—by millions.

Remember—non-antiseptic cough drops, aspirin, nose drops or sprays may give you relief, but they can't kill germs the way Listerine does . . . germs that cause so much of the wretched misery of a cold.

Tests over a 12-year period clearly showed that those who regularly reduced germs on mouth and throat surfaces with Listerine Antiseptic twice a day, had fewer colds and sore throats than those who did not. No matter what else you may do for a cold—you need an antiseptic to kill germs. The minute you feel a cold coming on—reach for the Listerine Antiseptic—quick and often!

NO MATTER WHAT ELSE YOU DO FOR A COLD YOU NEED AN ANTISEPTIC to kill germs like these!

These and other "secondary invaders," as well as germ-types not shown, can be quickly reduced in number by the Listerine Antiseptic gargle.

(1) Pneumococcus Type III, (2) Hemophilus influenzae, (3) Streptococcus pyogenes, (4) Pneumococcus Type II, (5) Streptococcus salivarius.

A Product of
The Lambert Company

At the first sign of a Cold or Sore Throat—

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC—Quick!

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers.

The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M. D.

y mother, who is seventy-seven, dropping of the pelvic organs and octor says that unless she has an tion she will become a chronic in- Is such an operation safe at her patient was a woman with white hair, asly elderly, but when she arose to fol- he nurse to the examining room she with such a straight back and unfal- steps that the doctor, watching, eyed ith approval. He turned to the two er women who had come with her to ice.

ur mother appears to be what once lled 'remarkably well preserved.' How she?"

e was seventy-seven on her last birth- one of the women said, "and until she's been able to do a bigger day's han either of us can."

uzzer sounded and the doctor stood he nurse has her ready for the exam- n now," he said. "I'll want to talk to ter that. I don't expect this will take en he returned, the women's faces d anxiety. "I'm keeping your mother examining room," the doctor told "on the pretext of some further tests se I wanted to speak with you privately. re her closest relatives, I presume?"

s, Doctor. Father died a few years ago nother divides her time now between o families. She is a great help with the children and in many other ways too."

an well imagine that."

turally we've been worried about her ion. Is it serious?"

ot serious, but very uncomfortable. is troubling her is a dropping of the organs, a condition not at all uncom- n women of her age, particularly those have borne children. The technical is procidentia."

it like falling of the womb, Doctor?"

s really an advanced case of falling of omb, but includes all the other pelvic ures."

nought that happened only to women ad had very large families. My sister re the only children mother ever had."

s not entirely a question of numbers. I he the situation has been present for a er of years, becoming progressively worse until the time has arrived when something must be done about it—unless your mother is to end her days as a chronic invalid. I am surprised that she can walk at all—much less step out as spryly as she does. She is really quite a remarkable woman."

"Yes, she is. And she wouldn't want to live at all if she had to be bedridden. What should be done, Doctor?"

"What in my judgment should have been done a long time ago—operative treatment."

"Is it as bad as that? Have we been neglecting our mother?"

"At the risk of making myself unpopular, I am going to speak very plainly. I am certain that you never intended any neglect; and if it will ease your consciences, I can tell you that in my opinion such occurrences are far from uncommon."

"But we had no idea—she seemed to complain a little more, as time went on, and seemed to find it more of an effort to get around. We thought that it was just that she was getting older and a little more fussy."

"That's the usual story. It is only one of the many problems which have been imposed by the remarkable increase in life expectancy in this country. Time was when three score and ten constituted a ripe old age. It isn't that way any more, and the elderly must be cared for and kept reasonably comfortable. They certainly shouldn't be allowed to sit around in misery, waiting to die."

"Of course not. But isn't surgery performed on elderly people very dangerous?"

"I'll answer that question in a minute. In the first place, many elderly people are less able to pay for private medical care than those in the more active years of life. Frequently older people do not get the periodic checkups which every medical man knows are essential. By the time they seek medical advice a condition may have developed which demands surgery of a formidable type."

"Then you consider that, if taken at the proper time, surgery is just as safe for elderly people as for those of middle age?"

"No, of course I would not maintain that. Any mechanism that has been running for seventy years must have undergone a large measure of wear and tear, and the human body is no exception. But don't forget that men and women of seventy or over have to be tough constitutionally or they would not have lived so long.

"When surgery is performed on people over seventy years of age, probably the commonest complications are those affecting the respiratory and the circulatory systems—the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 114

Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of , containing several chapters which have not d in the Journal, has been published by Haw- ooks, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Never powder over a "bare" skin—

First—this satinizing base for its special flattery!

Sheer, greaseless it refines, conceals, protects!

It's maddening to see powder or make-up magnifying the very imperfections you want to hide! Powder "clumping up" on dry flaky areas . . . heavier make-up "puddling" in pores, etching in tiny lines.

The trouble is—the tiny flaws of your just-cleansed, "bare" skin catch and hold tinted make-up. And instead of a young look, your skin appears coarser, older.

Always—before using powder or make-up—veil your face with an invisible base of greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream . . .

Instantly it protects a freshly-cleansed skin.

Keeps powder clinging evenly—for hours.

Makes heavy make-up behave—so it doesn't "fill up" pores or emphasize expression lines.

Discourages make-up from streaking or discoloring at the first blush of skin heat—because Pond's Vanishing Cream gives your skin a greaseless base.

See the difference a filmy foundation of Pond's Vanishing Cream makes! Immediately your skin takes on a finer-textured look . . . a satiny smoothness. Now it has the lovely freshness, the young freshness you want for it!

Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, Jr.

Young Mrs. Carhart is known for her exquisite beauty. Always before fluffing on her powder, Mrs. Carhart films on a protective base of Pond's Vanishing Cream. "I love the soft, un-made-up look Pond's Vanishing Cream gives my skin. It's a heavenly powder base—holds powder for hours!"

For a fresh-as-spring look now—this quick 1-Minute Mask!

This very night—in your own home—clear away that look of flaky, winter drabness. Cover your face with a snowy-cool coat of Pond's Vanishing Cream. The Cream's "keratolytic" action dissolves away dead, flaking, winter skin . . . gives a "lift" to your complexion. After one refreshing minute, tissue off the Cream. Now—see the fresh, clear glow . . . the finer-textured, firmer look of your skin!

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things...

for yours, too

. . . for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHINE!

FOR DIAPERS . . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow's gentle care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap for fine hand washables.

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like curtains, bedspreads, blankets thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

99 44/100% PURE®

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

"DO you believe in fairies?" Peter Pan asked a sophisticated Broadway audience in February, 1905. Captivated by Maude Adams' performance, the grownups rose and shouted, "Yes!" Paul Dresser wrote his immortal My Gal Sal; Jack London produced The Sea Wolf; and all ladies' hats, including the stiff sailors, were worn at a flirty tilt.

In the February, 1905, JOURNAL, Editor Bok speaks out against the latest evil imported from abroad, the habit of tipping. "Already the nuisance has entered the homes of the wealthy," says he, "and a weekend visitor pays as much in tips to his host's help as he would for a good hotel room."

"Has there ever been an income tax in the U.S.A.?" inquires a* JOURNAL *reader. Answer: "Yes, between 1863 and 1874. The United States Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional."

"To use a knife in cutting pie upon one's plate betrays provincial manners," admonished the Lady from Philadelphia. "Bananas should be cut in two, peeled, and eaten with a fork."

"It may encourage you to know," writes the head of the JOURNAL's new Pattern Department, "that all the women royalty of Europe know how to make their own clothes."

"Little Chats with Business Girls: Keep in a feminine line of work, something that men can't do, such as dressmaking, millinery, and pattern designing."

Fashion note: "Fancy tortoiseshell combs, studded with brilliants and turquoises, are much in favor at evening affairs."

Etiquette: "A too obvious enjoyment of anything to eat is not in good taste, especially on the part of the host."

"In eating, take such small mouthfuls that you will be under no embarrassment, if addressed suddenly, to reply promptly and with perfectly clear enunciation."

Beauty Editor Norman (left) learns a "beauty" secret of the roaring twenties from Boy Friend's star Julie Andrews; boy friend, John Hewer.

ONE of the season's most delightful hits here is the English musical called The Boy Friend, that makes wonderful but affectionate fun of the musicals, dress and mannerisms of the 1920's; a lot of its delightfulness being due to nineteen-year-old Julie Andrews, who's a hit of the season herself, and who came in costume to the Workshop to let Dawn Norman see more closely how different 1925 was from 1955—even brought the boy friend himself along, John Hewer. Julie's hairdo, make-up, clothes, postures have all been reproduced with period perfection to portray the flapper era, fascinating to Dawn, who obviously doesn't really remember what that era was like. One thing Dawn asked was how Julie achieved the flat, boy-build effect. "Well, I'll tell you," Julie explained, "I don't know how they did it in the twenties, but I just wear my girdle upside down."

In that Cabinet meeting television broadcast when Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey, acting out a traditional watchdog role, asked Secretary of State Dulles how much the German agreement was going to cost this country, he naturally thought he was doing the right thing. But it didn't please the little granddaughter of Secretary Humphrey, Bruce Gould learned later, at a Washington luncheon, from Mrs. George Garrett. It horrified the little girl. "Pop-pops," she informed Mrs. Garrett, "embarrassed us. Granny has always taught us it was bad manners to ask the cost of anything."

More American girls between 15 and 19 are married today than at any time since 1890. In 1940, 12 per cent of girls in this age group were married: ten years later, the proportion was 17 per cent. And surveys show that the proportion of separations in teen-aged marriages is higher than in any other age group. . . . Experts find that handwriting techniques are firmly fixed by the age of 16, usually remain the same throughout life. Legibility decreases as pace increases; the best speed is 100 letters per minute.

When Tina Fredericks phoned to Edward Steichen at the Museum of Modern Art in December to ask how his huge 25th Anniversary Show, The Family of Man, was coming along, the great man of American photography, whose JOURNAL covers and color pages have given millions of our readers pleasure, told Tina he was tearing his hair trying to choose 400 final photographs for the big exhibition from a total of 2,000,000. Tina went over to see the young seventy-six-year-old. He was tearing his hair, but he'd already reduced the 2,000,000 to 2000. He showed her the cot where he slept when he didn't have time to go home; the oatmeal cookies he had with coffee, instead of regular meals. The show will be making a country-wide tour. Keep your eyes open.

Edward Steichen.

HOMER PAGE

The number of men teachers in elementary and secondary schools is increasing: in 1911 the percentage was 15.2; nearly 19 per cent taught in 1948; in 1951, 22.8 per cent taught—and the number is rising. . . . Last year, 3,000,000 people took adult-education courses in 6000 schools throughout the country. The most common reason given for enrollment in adult classes was a desire to improve professional skills; second, for cultural advancement; third, to make friends and improve social graces. . . . Sociologists report that women have fewer (and less intense) prejudices than do men.

When Ruth Matthews called Mary Bass the other day from Hollywood, Mary asked of course what was new out there. Among other things, Ruth told her she'd just been having lunch with Betty Garrett on the set of My Sister Eileen, in which Betty is starring. "What's new," said Ruth, "is that Betty wears paper doilies for hats. Cuts a hole in the middle. Pulls her braid through. Ties on a ribbon. And there's her hat." And here it is.

LIPPMAN

Betty (Sister Eileen) Garrett and her paper-doily hat.

One of the last pictures Wilhela Cushman took in Paris on her most recent trip was the one of Ivy Nicholson on this month's cover: took it at the airport, in fact, just as Ivy was rushing back to Italy, where in addition to being Europe's most famous American model she is now very much in the movies. Wilhela had been taking Ivy in the same clothes in several Paris locations those final hours. This was her last-chance shot, and her best. By the way, the ermine-collared black wool theater suit and ermine beret were among the most admired fashions designed by the late Jacques Fath for his last winter collection.

Enough electric lamps are produced in this country annually to furnish everyone on earth with one light bulb; each year Americans use over 2 trillion *lumen-hours—enough to furnish a person with reading light for 160,000 years. . . . Studies of misbehavior in children show that nine times out of ten the fault lies in the child himself—*not in the parents.

"She had that utterly irr sistible attraction. . . . Sh has it today; she will alway have it." Thus Herbert Bay ard Swope describes Eth Barrymore as he first saw he Swope, whom she remembe as "a red-haired report from St. Louis," roome with brother Jack, who wa then a cartoonist on the Ne York Journal. Picture wa made in London, 190

CULVER SERVICE

Ethel Barrymore

MEMORIES

"What a magic flame was lighted that Sunday in a small house in Philadelphia!"
America's most bewitching star tells the story of life on both sides of the footlights on Broadway, in London and Hollywood.

"Ethel Barrymore is the ideal American girl in looks," said the JOURNAL in 1908. "She is the kind of girl nearly every other girl would dearly love to be."

THE hardest thing is where to begin—or, perhaps, why? Well, I've read books and stories about us all, and none of them sounds quite right. So I am hoping this will at least give a flavor of this family that has lived for generations in a series of goldfish bowls, completely obscured by myths and legends.

I'll begin with my grandmother, the mother of my mother. She was born in a village in Kent amidst the rogues and vagabonds that she loved and honored by her genius and grandeur through seventy-five years on the stage. Her name was Louisa Lane, and she was brought to America as a little girl by her mother, my great-grandmother, and her name was Mrs. Eliza Kinloch. Don't ask me why they had different names—I never dared to ask. So many things were considered impertinences in our family. I was made aware of this at an early age. Nothing was ever said; you simply knew.

"How papa disliked my bangs. He used to push my hair back and say it should be like 'Alice's,' with a round comb, but I cried for bangs."

CULVER SERVICE

"Laurence Irving and I agreed to marry and spend a long, lovely, gloomy, tragic life together . . . of course it was all very, very young."

Grandma Kinloch found New York a noisy and vulgar place. So they took coach to Philadelphia, which they found charming, and there they stayed.

There is a program announcing "MRS. ELIZA KINLOCH, A SWEET SINGER OF BALLADS." And endless programs of Miss Lane as Richard the Third! And a play called "Twelve Precisely" in which Miss Lane played five characters, two young gentlemen and three young ladies. There are many more . . . and then she was Mrs. Hunt, playing Shakespeare and all the classics. Then she was Mrs. Mossop, I think rather briefly . . . still playing everything. Then suddenly the important marriage to my grandfather, John Drew, an Irish actor who, I've been told, was brilliant and of an enormous fascination. She proceeded to have four children: my Copyright, 1955, by Ethel Barrymore; all rights reserved under the International and Pan American Conventions.

Ethel Barrymore

"My grandmother's house in Philadelphia was our home as little children when our parents were on the road. It was the only home we ever knew together."

Aunt Louisa, my Uncle John, my mother, and Sidney. Uncle Sidney may not have been the son of John Drew, but he was indubitably the son of Mrs. John Drew.

My grandfather died when he was less than thirty-five years old. The only thing of interest I can remember being told—and that by an ancient family retainer—was that after the birth of my mother, he was "allowed" to go on an Australian tour; and with him, as his leading lady, was a young sister of my grandmother (where she was born or why I've never learnt). Her name was Georgiana and 'tis said grandfather had fallen in love with her and had wished to marry her. But my more forceful grandmother had said, "Nonsense!" and married him herself. When they came back to Philadelphia from Australia, there was a tiny girl with them whom my grandmother adopted and called Adine Stevens. We called her Aunt Tibby and loved her dearly. She was a sweet, gentle creature with a lovely voice, who went about quietly helping everyone, and died in her early twenties.

My Aunt Louisa I never knew. She married Charles Mendum, who managed the Arch Street Theatre for the lessee and manageress, Mrs. John Drew—and was promptly fired for presuming. At any rate, they went to live in Boston where Mr. Mendum senior was a banker—kindly, and had a house, I detect, with a roof.

My two cousins, Edmund and Georgie Mendum, I didn't see until we were fifteen or sixteen years old. And by then my Aunt Louisa had died. She had never been on the stage.

There is so much to be written about my cousins Georgie and Ed—two brilliant creatures. Ed dismissed the stage as a livelihood with hauteur, worked his way to Europe, wandered all over it on foot; then did the same thing over a good part of Asia; came home and wrote a sardonic book called "The Barbarian," and became a newspaperman.

Georgie must be brought in and kept in—later.

But to return to Philadelphia: Mrs. John Drew had established at the Arch Street Theatre an exceptionally fine stock company—and at home an exceptionally rigid and appallingly respectable household.

I remember hearing my mother say that, if she were allowed to have a young man in to tea, "Mummum sat at the other end of the drawing room snowing on us."

Mrs. Drew was a pillar of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church and her son, John, went to the Episcopal Academy; and my mother, Georgie, had a Sunday-school class. But they were people of infinite gaiety and humor, and were forever untouched by the severity of their upbringing. I have always suspected that my grandmother had a twinkle in her eye, even in her most awesome moments.

Then John wanted to go on the stage. So off to the Arch Street Theatre where, to serve his apprenticeship, he appeared first in a one-act play, "Cool as a Cucumber"—not in the general repertoire but, I suppose, as a test; then was trusted with various small parts; and then—I dare say with the idea of getting out from under—he went to New York and joined Augustin Daly's very important company.

CULVER SERVICE

"Sometimes papa and mamma were with us—not often. They were off on tour. Times when mamma could spend Sundays with us were a thrill. . . . She was a great and gallant lady, my beloved mother whom I hardly knew." Georgie Drew Barrymore with her children, Ethel, Lionel and John.

MY mother, Georgie, by this time had begun playing her small parts at the Arch Street Theatre. And one Sunday John came to spend the day in Philadelphia, bringing with him a spectacular young Englishman who was also starting an acting career with the Daly company. His name was Maurice Barrymore—and that was indeed that! He had been born in the dungeons of the Fort of Agra in India during the mutiny, where my paternal grandfather was in the British civil service, a judge. He was the youngest child. My Aunt Beatrix, the eldest, married General Angelo of the Anglo-Indian Army; and Aunt Eva married one Wace who was in the civil service and whose brother was the Dean of Canterbury. Their name was Blyth.

Young Herbert Maurice Blyth was sent home to England at the usuâl age—about eight—and went to a preparatory school at Blackheath, then to Harrow, and then to Cambridge, where he became amateur champion boxer of England. Then he began to read for the Bar, ate his dinners, etc. Then came upon the scene two villains—or angels—who told him it would be years before he would get a brief, and—"Look at him! And listen to that voice!—the stage!" He was flattered and delighted, and broke it to his family who recoiled in horror as only Victorian Anglo-Indians could. So he gaily promised to find another name and do his damnedest in America. And if he failed, he would come home, resume his role of barrister and become a Q.C. So off he went, with his beauty, his rm, and his wit, to conquer the new world and ke his fortune.

CULVER SERVICE

Vhat a magic flame was lighted that Sunday in a ll house in Philadelphia!—that lovely, fair-gallant and that overwhelming and unpredictable Briton, mother and father to be. I don't know how many day visits before they were engaged . . . I should k not many. And then they were married.
here is much written today about command pernances. Well, my mother made three—all in my ndmother's house in Philadelphia, and their names e Lionel, Ethel and John.
must be understood that there was never any ney anywhere that wasn't earned week by week by whole family by the profession of acting; except ny grandmother's Arch Street Theatre which she ed and managed for many years—sometimes act-but always managing. So it was in Philadelphia that she had her theater and her house, and it was unthinkable that her daughter's children should be born anywhere else. It was a command tempered by sense and a quiet, unspoken feeling. That house was our home as little children. In fact, it was the only home we ever knew together. We were to be separated very early in our lives by various circumstances. Consequently, when we met later in life we were rather formal with each other and very, very polite. It appears that rather terrified observers. I remember Lionel telling me that a friend of his who was present when I dined with him once said to him, "My God! Don't you know each other?"

One may write about the child one was with the same freedom that a novelist creates a character. There is no fear of egotism, for the portrait is one of faint colors, and the CONTINUED ON PAGE 198

"Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines"

As Madame Tretoni in "Captain Jinks," Ethel Barrymore saw her name go up in lights on Broadway. When the play tried out in Philadelphia, one critic wrote, "If the young lady who plays Madame Tretoni had possessed beauty, charm or talent, this play might have been a success"—the only criticism Miss Barrymore says she has ever been able to remember. During the long run a bit player became ill and brother Jack took over the part—his first stage role.

There are times when the Other Man can tell a husband

Paul C. Burns

Look out for Tigers

— about his own wife.

By Nelia Gardner White

HE pulled the boat in quietly, one eye on the cattail where the butterfly was poised. Even as he turned, net in hand, the butterfly floated, across the shadow into sunlight, with that designless flight that yet reaches some goal. The goal this time was the screen door of a small cabin in the clearing. Jerome Denks was never intrusive except when his passion for butterflies took over. He went straight for the cabin, but just before he reached it the door opened and a young woman in jodhpurs and a yellow-and-brown-checked shirt came out on the step. The butterfly rose, lazily circled above the cabin, was gone.

"You've made me lose him!" he said; then: "It was a red admiral and I did want him!"

She had the lazy grace of a butterfly herself, making the post against which she leaned a very temporary station.

"Why?" she said.

"Why? I collect them," he said.

"Why?" she said again, laughing at him a little.

"Oh. One of those things. I like to. And why not?"

She sat down on the step and he found himself leaning his net against the cabin wall, sitting beside her.

"They are so beautiful," she said. "I don't like pins stuck in things. I'm glad it got away. . . . Does that bottle say 'cyanide'?"

He put the bottle down by his feet, and the skull and crossbones he had drawn on it looked up at him menacingly.

"Yes, it's cyanide," he admitted. "But the life expectancy of a butterfly is very short, you know. And it's a painless death."

"Still, I wouldn't want to be put into a bottle with cyanide," she said. "Would you?"

"I doubt very much whether they ponder on it," he said. "Do you think yourself that their emotional processes go very deep?"

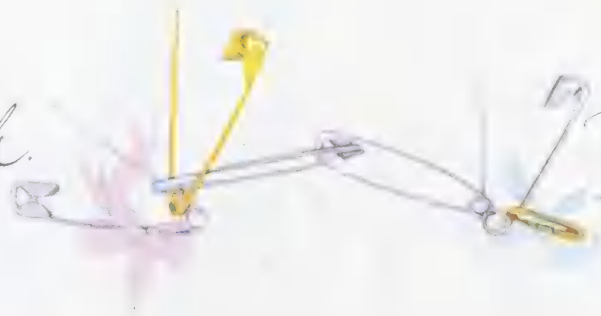
"You sound just like a professor," she said.

"Well, that's possible. I am a professor."

They both laughed. The lake pricked blue between the trees. Some unknown bird made harsh small grating sounds in the pines.

"How did you ever find this place?" he asked. "I didn't know anyone lived down here. It startled me when I saw the cabin."

"It's Mr. Nygaard's cabin. I saw an ad and wrote—that's all. It's working too."



CONTINUED ON PAGE 98

Lucilla sensed a secret she could n

"You know," she whispered to the cheek so soft against her own, "I'm beginning to love you rather terribly."

derstand, a joy just out of reach.

By Kathleen K. Perry

LUCILLA sat up in her bed. Standing in the doorway was a nurse looking at the room number, against her breast a blue blanket; Lucilla caught a glimpse of black hair, black as Lucilla's own.

She took the baby to her, and stared. Up close Peter Hagan the First was a shock. The hair, so sweet at a distance, was an odd little fringe. He was bald on top with a ring of black hair growing from one ear to the other. His skin was the color of salmon and there was a deep crease between his tightly closed eyes.

"He looks squashed! Like those cakes mamma was always sending to college."

"He's a beautiful baby," the aide said. "Look at how his ears lie close to his head. And his tiny fingers. He's a beautifully made baby."

Lucilla looked. In her mind flashed a picture of her sister Maud's Jakie in his play pen, rosy cheeks, tumbled gold curls. . . . Oh, but this one's mine, cried her heart.

I feel sad, Lucilla thought. There's something, just out of reach. Of course. God. It was about God ——

It started, she remembered now, quite early in her pregnancy, that night the Harrisons came to dinner. They were all sitting around afterward talking and she, as was usual then, let her thoughts turn inward, listening. She and Phillip were equally thrilled about the baby but she, feeling she ought to be busier at it, knew an unconscious tension, a constant minor alertness. Suddenly the thought had come, so obvious, and so stupendous: I'm not doing the baby. God is!

The sense of God as a reality stole into her heart. She went through the long months, the ups and downs and discomforts of her pregnancy, as steady as a peasant. She fell into a private pattern that set her days. Phillip taught engineering at the university and he left the apartment every morning at 7:45 to meet his 8-o'clock class. At 7:55 the chimes rang from the college tower and she settled into her armchair with a second cup of coffee, closed her eyes, and checked with God on the progress of the baby. The Lord is with thee: how beautiful and how true.

"I can't get over you," Phillip had remarked one night, drawing her close. "Here you are having your first baby, and your mother and Maud not even able to come, and you act as if it's nothing at all. You've grown up, Cilly; I like it." CONTINUED ON PAGE 142

God IS Love

THE JOURNAL PRESENTS
KATHLEEN K. PERRY.
FIRST APPEARANCE IN ANY MAGAZINE

Practically all the furnishings in this beautifully corniced living room are eighteenth-century English, as was this country, in a colonial way, to be sure, when the house was built; most of the pieces English Chippendale. The rug is Oriental, which is right, and the yellow curtains raw silk.

Nicolson HOUSE

By RICHARD PRATT, Architectural Editor of the Journal

This little wonder of a house in Williamsburg, though larger than it looks, is a house that visitors there might easily miss, bewitched as they are apt to be by the many wonders of the Restoration area. For this house is not a part of that stunning colonial exhibition town, but stands a few steps out York Street from where the Restoration starts, on what looks a lot like many another small-town street in Virginia today. Furthermore, visitors to Williamsburg might easily miss seeing inside it, for it is very much a private home, the home, as you can see, of a man who knows furniture to perfection, and who also knows to perfection how to bring out all that is finest in a fine old house. We know it was the home in 1766 of Robert Nicolson, a prominent townsman and tailor, for that was the year he advertised "genteel lodgings" with breakfast and good stabling for "gentlemen who attend the General Courts and Assembly." As good as saying that almost anyone who was anyone in colonial times could have stopped here, especially when the Raleigh Tavern was full. It is a pleasure to picture it for the first time as it is today.

With its gracefully dormered gambrel roof, the house is characteristically Williamsburgian, standing there smack on the sidewalk, which is typical too.

PRATT

WESLEY BALZ

The apple-wood sideboard in the dining room is from South Carolina, the apple-wood table from North Carolina, the fruit-wood chairs eighteenth-century English, the pine corner cupboard from New Jersey. The portrait is of the present owner's great-grandmother.

You are now in the library, looking through into the living room. Both the mahogany wing chair and the mahogany armchair are English Chippendale. The urns on the mantel are eighteenth-century delft, and the wonderful clock between them is, of course, from Connecticut.

THE VIRUS

No one doubted that a "bug" had got hold of Marvin. He had all the symptoms—and one of them was named Dolores.

By WILL STANTON

"WANT a lift, Marvin?" The car pulled over to the side of the road.

"What?" The boy looked startled.

"Oh, sure, Doctor Trench, thanks." He climbed into the front seat.

"Another month and school will be over, I suppose?"

"It will?" Marvin was staring at the dashboard. "She walks in beauty," he murmured, "like the night."

"She does, eh?"

Marvin looked up. "Speaking to me, Doctor Trench?"

"Nothing special, no." He drove along for a way. "Where are you headed for, Marvin?"

"I don't know; home, I guess."

"I see." He slowed the car to a stop. "I was going to Forestville. We seem to be headed in opposite directions."

"I'm in no hurry," Marvin said. "You can let me out here."

"No, no." Doctor Trench turned the car around quickly. "I've an errand that will take me right by your place."

Marvin nodded. He didn't speak until they'd gone a couple of miles. "She knocked a ruler off my desk today," he said, "sixth period. Plenty of room to walk by, but she knocked it off."

"Yes, those things will happen."

"When I reached down to pick it up she stepped on my hand. You could hear the knuckles crack."

"Well"—Doctor Trench pulled up to the curb—"that's your house, isn't it, across the street?"

"The one with the green trim?"

"Yes. That's your mother on the porch." He waved his hand. "Afternoon, Mrs. Burney."

"Good afternoon." She watched her son cross the lawn and climb the steps. "How did you happen to be riding with Doctor Trench?"

"With who?"

"With whom," she corrected him.

"Yes, with whom." He walked into the living room and stood looking out the window. "With whom," he said.

Mrs. Burney picked up his cap from the floor. "The front lawn needs cutting."

"Do you think so?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 141

Hans Anderson

"He'll never finish high school the condition he's in," his father said.

BEAUTIFUL BUYS

PAUL RADKAI

Wool-flannel suit for any time of year, beginning now, $39.95. Give it color with a belting beret, by Lilly Dache, $10.95, chamois-yellow cotton gloves, fresh coral-red geraniums. Misses' and junior sizes, 7 to 15. This suit also comes in gray and blue.

Pale violet tweed—the kind of tweed that dresses up easily and is hardy enough to last for years, $49.95, by Alvin Handmacher, in misses' and petite sizes. Wear it with a matching felt hat, $12.95, by Madame Klari, and a pigskin-color leather bag. Other colors in this suit—steel gray, red, blue and tawny beige.

Looking ahead to spring, the JOURNAL has chosen four suits out of hundreds that give you the most fashion for the least money. Among them you'll find the colors you like best from new wood-violet and blue shades to constant grays and beiges, fabrics you know and depend upon, and styles that lend themselves beautifully

TOR SPRING

Short-jacket suit in French-blue acetate-and-rayon with linen collar and cuffs, $29.95. Also in navy, brown, gray, sizes 10 to 20. Accent with fresh peppermint-striped carnations, the shortest white cotton gloves, a bright red leather bag by Josef, a beret in white banded with blue, $6.95, by Elizabeth Marks.

Collarless suit in a blend of wool, rayon, nylon and acetate, proportioned for regular and half sizes, $39.95, by S. Augstein. A fold of organza at the neckline, an Italian leather bag, coral crepe hat by Lily Dache, $12.95. Suit comes also in red, blue, pink, oyster, black, navy.

to the bright imaginative touch. (Try the fresh-flower technique as photographed—there's no prettier way to add a color accent.) These suits cover a wide range of sizes and have great wearability. • By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

WRITE TO US AND WE'LL TELL YOU WHERE TO FIND THESE FASHIONS IN YOUR LOCALITY

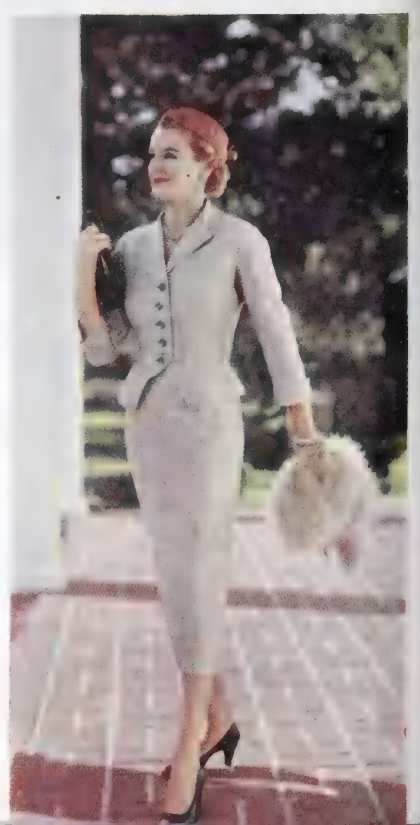
Children Jan and Jimmy, walking with Mrs. Snowden at Squaw Creek Farm.

There's something about her

MRS. James Hastings Snowden, of Fort Worth, Texas, thinks of fashion in terms of color. The light-toned tweeds and wools which she loves so well and which are so right for Texas also make perfect links with her summers in the East. She always has a silk suit, adores silk shirts, pretty tea gowns, starts to wear cottons the first of April. In cosmopolitan Fort Worth, where she is on the board of directors for the Art Center and active in the day nursery, Mrs. Snowden needs the versatile jacket dress and black dinner dress native to any city. Week-ends at the farm she wears shorts, slacks, a skirt and shirt, according to the season.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Mrs. Snowden goes to town in a pale gray wool dress, double-breasted jacket, worn with a small white hat.



Tweed topcoat with velvet collar, October-to-April fashion, is also for summer travel.

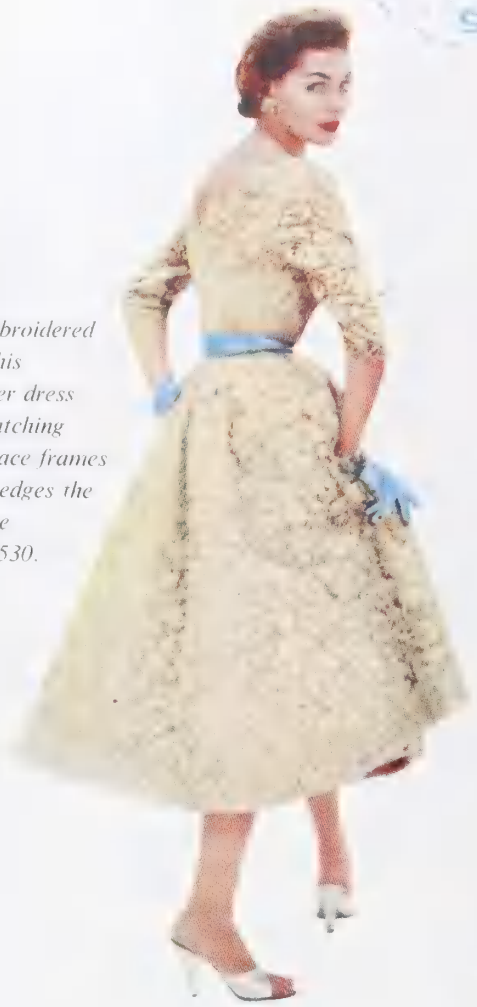
Tweed-weave silk jacket dress has a year-round place in her wardrobe. She carries a beige fox scarf.

Two-toned gray wool knitted dress for mild days in Texas, fall, winter or spring.

Writing notes at her desk in the living room, Mrs. Snowden wears a printed taffeta dressing gown in her favorite shades of pink.

Mrs. Snowden, dressed for one of the famous Fort Worth balls in slim azure blue peau de soie with a bow train, says good night to daughter, Jan.

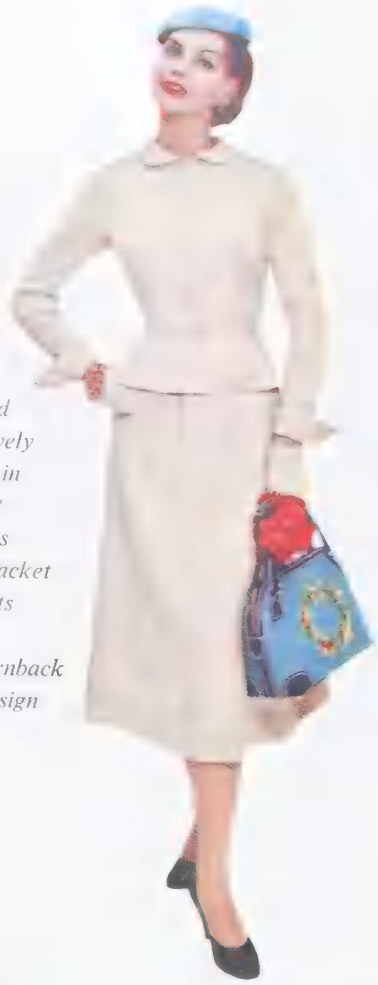
JOHN ENGSTEAD



Native Texan Mrs. Snowden loves outdoor clothes—tweed skirt, cashmere sweaters, short all-season coat, photographed with poodle Nicky.

Entertaining at the farm, she often wears velvet slacks, silk shirt.

A black bare-neck silk dinner dress is every woman's essential. Mrs. Snowden often adds color with an exciting pink fringed satin stole.



Lovely re-embroidered lace makes this timeless dinner dress worn over matching taffeta. The lace frames the neckline, edges the sleeves. Vogue Design No. 8530.

The Journal's Ger

Black rayon mat jersey (unpacks with nary a wrinkle) is a design classic. It dresses up for dinner, down for travel. You might wear a jewel with a satin bow on the bodice, or colorful beads. "Easy to Make" Vogue Design No. 8512.

RICHARD AVEDON

Silk-and-worsted blends into a lovely fabric . . . light in weight, resistant to wrinkles. Slits over hipline in jacket open into pockets in the skirt. Small collar, turnback cuffs. Vogue Design No. S-4580.

anium red is h a gay color to r. Ours, in silk n, tailored a spectator sports ume. Skirt has ched tucks, over- se may be worn n with sweater erneath. Vogue ign No. 8524.

A colorful coat travels well, looks pretty over neutral shades and black, also resists dirt. Our design has a collar that rolls back easily, sleeves that may be worn pushed up. Vogue Design No. 8527.

f a Wardrobe

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

This wardrobe will take you around the clock, around the world . . . for it would be as "at home" in Cairo or San Francisco at any time of day or night. Our theory for a travel wardrobe is to take a minimum of pieces with a maximum of possibilities. Our gentle, easy coat is as pretty over the beige lace dinner dress in the evening as it is in the morning over the suit. Note only two pairs of shoes, two hats, one important bag (a tiny satin envelope for evening fits inside) and three pairs of gloves. Best of all, these clothes will unpack as prettily as they packed.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 83

© VOGUE

Sincerely Willis Wayde

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

IV

WHEN everything was over and the final agreements for the merger of Rahway Belting with the Harcourt Mill were signed, Willis attended a small dinner that the new company, now called Harcourt Associates, tendered to the officers, directors and some of the key personnel. The various negotiating lawyers were also present. Among the latter was Mr. F. Augustus Tremaine, who had always handled Mrs. Jacoby's affairs. Then there had been Mr. Tom Bolsen, Sr., and his son T. Bolsen, Jr., of the Boston firm that represented the Harcourts. Mr. Earl Decker had also been present as general counsel for the Harcourt Mill.

Willis, as first vice-president of Harcourt Associates, had made one of the main speeches, speaking not only as an officer but as a stockholder, since he owned personally 15 per cent of the common shares of the new company. It was highly gratifying that the speech made an even better impression than he had hoped.

"What is an idea?" he asked in the beginning, adding facetiously, "I ought to know, after the last three months when Mr. Tremaine and Mr. Bolsen and Mr. Decker have tossed around so many good ones." It was a relief to feel that his dinner audience knew what he meant by tossing ideas around. "I may as well face the fact," he continued, "that I may have been responsible in the beginning for the idea of merging Rahway Belting with Harcourt into our new strong company. But seriously, gentlemen, let us never forget that no idea can stand by itself. It must be activated to have value. A team must be behind it, and I think tonight we all know we have a real team.

"Yes, gentlemen, an idea must be activated, and to achieve this end patience is necessary, and an ability to understand what the other fellow is trying to think, but above all else, good fellowship and team play are the true ingredients of success.

"May I raise my glass in conclusion—and I wish it were a loving cup—the unlimited future of Harcourt Associates."

The setting and the mood were exactly right for everything Willis said.

Copyright, 1955, by John P. Marquand

"Willis," Mr. Bryson Harcourt said, "that was a magnificent speech."

"Why, thank you very much, sir," Willis said. "I'm very glad indeed if you think it went all right."

He could be deferential to Mr. Bryson Harcourt still, but they were both aware of a new relationship. Even if Mr. Bryson or Mr. Roger wanted, neither of them could push him out of Harcourt Associates. Some such thoughts had been in Willis' mind when he returned from Boston after that dinner. The Harcourts could not put him out of the new company, but still he would like to have a larger control of it. There was a chance of buying Mrs. Jacoby's stock, if he only had the money.

During the Harcourt negotiations Willis had begun to learn the banking facts of life. Among other things, he learned that bankers could be more generous than otherwise with money, given the proper stimulus. You had, of course, to develop a warm relationship with a banker first, so that he had a real belief in you and a keen personal interest.

One of the best contacts along these lines that Willis had made was with a Yale graduate some ten years his senior named Gilbert Bakeliss. Gil, as Willis learned to call him, had sat in as one of the underwriters' representatives on a lot of the Harcourt conferences, and several times he had asked Willis to lunch at the Yale Club. It had been a pleasure to be in a position that enabled him to return the compliment. At Mr. Jacoby's suggestion, Willis had joined the New York Harvard Club.

When he reached New York after the Harcourt dinner he determined to see Gilbert Bakeliss. He knew better than to show undue eagerness by calling Gil at the stroke of ten, and ten-fifteen would look like a self-conscious delay. Willis actually did not call until ten-twenty-three.

"Well, well," Gil Bakeliss said, "so the Pilgrim has returned."

Willis laughed with real appreciation. "That's right," Willis said. "I missed you at that dinner, Gil."

"You know I'd have come," Gil said, "if Geraldine and I hadn't been in one of those duplicate-bridge tournaments. It must have been quite a love feast."

"Well, it frankly wasn't so bad, Gil," Willis said. "I mustn't take up all your time, but if you've nothing to do for lunch I'll be right here at the Harvard Club."

"Let's see. You mean lunch today?"

Willis laughed again. "I know there's not much chance with anyone as popular as you, Gil."

"There isn't anything I can't put off," Gil said. "Will twelve-thirty be all right?"

If Willis had not known many bankers, it had been his privilege to meet and chat on friendly terms with many top executives in other lines of business. He was beginning at last to achieve naturalness, because there were not so many

CONTINUED ON PAGE 75

"Do I look all right?" Sylvia asked.
"Honey," Willis said, "you look just wonderful and I'm mighty proud of you."

WIDE WORLD

"GIVE THEM THE FACTS"
Melanie Kreuzer: "Who said God gave men all the brains?"

GEORGE W. SOMMER

"SERVANT" OF THE PEOPLE
Myrna Harms—a doer, not an observer

THEY

WIDE WORLD

"FIRST" LADY OF VERMONT
Consuelo Bailey sets another precedent

SAY

AMERICA'S YOUNGEST LAWMAKER
Roz Wiener—law school's loss, city council's gain

WOMAN-TO-WOMAN TALK
Gertrude Lynch knew a political asset when she saw it

THE MAYOR HAS "CLASS"
Katharine White runs a home, a town and a superhighway

GLOGAN

HER PARTY'S "DREAM LEGISLATOR"
Handsome Kathryn Stone had to "put up or shut up"

POLITICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

SULLIVAN FOR CONGRESS
Lee Sullivan insisted it's "honorable to be Mrs."

re than 2000 women are serving in U. S. city, state and national government positions to which they were elected.
Here are stories of nine of them.
hey believe good government is simply a matter of housekeeping—and work to prove it.

T

VITH

ACTION

FRIENDS PITCHED IN
Rep. Florence Beckers works for educational opportunities

WHEN Katie Louchheim, director of women's activities of the Democratic National Committee, spoke before the Women's National Press Club some time ago, she shared the rostrum with Bertha Adkins, her counterpart in the Republican Party. She said it was a genuine pleasure to appear with her political antagonist because they had so much in common. "We both want women to understand politics, to like politics and to be active in politics," she explained. "We both sit up nights trying to figure out how to keep those grass roots flourishing. And, occasionally, we both find ourselves called upon to dig up that crab grass that threatens even the most carefully tended yard.

"We both think our party is the best party. We both think our candidates are the best candidates. And we both want our side to win. So you see, Bertha and I are in complete agreement up to a point—the point of the pencil in the voting booth and where it makes an X!"

It is this spirit that makes women so vitally important in American politics today. Regardless of devotion to party, in the long run good government for all the people is their goal. And how are they saying it—in terms of political action as well as by pleasant but purposeful words?

Actually holding political office is one way. In November's election, a total of 52 women were candidates for seats in the U. S. Senate and House of Representatives. Of these, sixteen, an all-time high, were elected or reelected. A woman serves in the House as delegate from Hawaii. Seventeen women won statewide elective offices. Altogether, more than 2000 women now serve in city, state and national government positions to which they were elected. These figures give some indication of the participation of women in practical politics. The push—or if not a "push," a gentle, surging force—is on.

Nonpartisan educational groups (the League of Women Voters, the American Heritage Foundation) work constantly to increase participation in public affairs and to get more and better women of both parties to become candidates for office. The General Federation of Women's Clubs recently issued a report showing the large number of women holding responsible posts in government. The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs pointed out in a study made about the same time that "one out of five women engages in political activity . . . those most active in the field are married or formerly married women past forty-five years of age who have dependents." Both reports make provocative reading. Both are based on the hope that information about women in politics will inspire more women to action.

This month, the Public Affairs Department presents brief stories of nine women who have been successful in politics. By party preference four are Republicans, four are Democrats, one is independent. Eight are married, one widowed; five are mothers.

Though these women may differ about party platforms, they are in unanimous agreement that the woman candidate must sincerely desire to serve; she also should have some background of experience in the civic life of her community. Above all she must be as willing as men to participate in politics—all the way.

MRS. MELANIE KREUZER
President, Common Council, Syracuse, New York

"Who said God gave men all the brains?"

The question has become something of a classic around the all-Republican common council of Syracuse, New York, where the male membership is frankly stumped for an answer. Council president happens to be Mrs. Melanie Kreuzer, homemaker, mother, civic worker of twenty-five years' standing. It was she who, having already served successfully as councilwoman at large, posed the question shortly before her election as president in 1953. Since then, she has proved once again her favorite theory—that men and women make a good team in government.

Long before 1949, Republican leaders had their eye on the chic and feminine Melanie Kreuzer, and no wonder—it was hard to beat her record of civic service that included almost everything from cochairman of Women's Division, Community Chest, to president of the Volunteer Center. They asked her to run for city council "with no strings attached." She requested time to think it over, then replied with an enthusiastic "Yes." Just as enthusiastically, Syracuse voters on election day chose her their first councilwoman at large.

Thinking of politics in terms of the community, her community, when she took her seat in January, 1950, she lost no time in tackling problems of finance, sewage, water supply, traffic and neighborhood rehabilitation, arterial routes and school construction. Her intelligent and able service so impressed party bigwigs that in 1953 they gave her the nod for council chief executive.

The council doesn't always vote with Melanie Kreuzer. But she can always rely on two stanch supporters at home—her manufacturer husband, Frederick, and her 18-year-old son, Tony. It was Tony who supplied doorbell ringers for the first Kreuzer campaign: five fellow Boy Scouts, all of whom remembered Melanie as a "darn good den mother."

Council President Kreuzer continues to be concerned with Community Chest, Red Cross and the Girl Scouts. She refuses to distinguish between politics and community chores because she feels that both have the same goals. Through countless speeches before civic organizations, she keeps the citizens of Syracuse informed about what's going on in their government. As she expresses it:

"People sometimes tend to take the city's services for granted. But I have found that they are much more grateful and understanding—actually better citizens—when they get the facts."

MRS. KATHRYN STONE
Virginia House of Delegates

The family station wagon had to go. It was the high campaign price Mrs. Kathryn Stone paid for her seat in the Virginia House of Delegates. Was the sacrifice worth it? Ask her.

"Contributions to a political party ought to be included in the family budget along with contributions to philanthropic or religious organizations. After all, what is more important to this country than the willingness of people to run it?"

Husband Harold Stone, a Department of the Army management specialist who, with his legislator wife, has coauthored two books on city management, feels the same way. (He was out of town on election night, 1953—confident he wouldn't be needed to cheer up a defeated Kathryn.) Nor are there any complaints from the three Stone children—Paul, 15; Suzanne, 12; and Jo Anna, 10—who find that a politicking mother still has time to read Huckleberry Finn aloud in the evenings.

Her primary campaign cost more than twice the amount of her salary for a two-year term in the House of Delegates. Yet Kathryn Stone is happy in the knowledge that she can go solidly to work on her aims for increased educational and public-health services. As an undergraduate Young Democrat at the University of Iowa, as organizer of the Arlington (Virginia) League of Women Voters, the delegate has always fought political apathy—no matter what the price.

"I did so much preaching," she laughs, "that when the Democrats asked me to run it was a case of put up or shut up."

As for the Democrats, they considered Mrs. Stone a "dream candidate." Handsome, intel-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 148

The Beautiful Washerwoman

"Hey!" she s
"Those diapers don't need oiling!"

He had promised himself two years of glorious freedom. And he'd have them, too—as soon as he managed to tell her good-by.

By SCOTT YOUNG

FOR five months after Stewart Trevett inherited five thousand dollars from his Aunt Dolly, quit his job selling insurance in Buffalo, New York, and rented a cheap apartment above a garage at the back of an ocean lot in Coral Sands, Florida, he followed a rigid routine. Each morning he got up as soon as he woke up, unless he felt like staying in bed a while longer. He always had fish for breakfast except on those mornings when he preferred ham and eggs. He shaved regularly every day or two, always either before or after walking the beach, surf fishing, or just sitting in an old canvas-bottomed rocker in the sun scanning the horizon for good-looking women. In fact, he was a veritable slave to this regimen until one night his habitually deep sleep was interrupted by a loud slam.

Stewart's first half-awake thought was that it had just been a dream prompted by the normal hiss and smash of surf a hundred yards beyond his front balcony. Then his other cylinders began firing. It had been closer than that. By his bed was a window which faced on the crushed-shell lane serving the ocean-front houses. Taking care not to upset his last night's beer cans or the full ash tray on the sill, he ran up the blind a foot or two and leaned on one elbow in bed to see what was going on.

Across the lane was a square white cottage which had been empty since mid-October, as had been many along the beach. He had been told by a lady beachcomber that all would remain empty until early in February, when the first wave of refugees from the North would sweep into Florida. It was now only the third week in January. In front of the cottage, illuminated by a corner street light and a bright moon, were an orange-colored pickup truck festooned with ladders, a sedan towing a boat-bearing trailer, and several people, including . . . women! He couldn't even see these women clearly because they were behind the sedan, but they were there, and they were moving in! Something in his senses set up a deep hum, like a TV aerial on a windy night.

The truth was that the lack of women was the only flaw in his CONTINUED ON PAGE 150

Everybody loves a tea

Menu

Assorted Sandwiches
Oatmeal Lace Cookies
Cherry Meringues
Coconut Teacakes
Tea with Lemon or Cream
Candied Ginger Grapefruit Peel
Mints

(Planned for twelve)

THERE is this about a tea that can be said about only a five-o'clock affair. Like a circus, it has any number of guests; they come and go as they please and they eat and drink as the spirit moves them.

The magnet that draws all guests surely to the focal point at a tea party is the tea table. Catch a bird's-eye view of a plate of little cakes, with wraps and bonnets and of several alluring colors, and what gives? Of course there's no elbow work allowed—ladies, aren't you? But you get them among the vanguard and it's as you planned it. "Strong, please, no lemon, one sugar." On and on and on we go, like a snowbird in the snow. It's fun.

Those delectable little lace cookies! Perfectly delicious! And you know Prue is famous, literally famous, for those cookies, and they're that easy you won't believe till you get the receipt. Good luck, my lamb. Did you get it? Well, good baking. You'll love making them. So easy, so easy.

Oatmeal Lace Cookies

Sift together into a bowl ½ cup flour, ¼ teaspoon baking powder and ½ cup sugar. Add ½ cup quick-cooking oats, 2 tablespoons heavy cream, 2 tablespoons light corn sirup, ⅓ cup melted butter or margarine and 1 tablespoon vanilla. Mix together until well blended. Drop onto an ungreased baking sheet, 4″ apart, using a ¼-teaspoon measuring spoon as a measure. Bake in a moderately hot oven, 375° F., 6–8 minutes, until lightly browned. Let stand a few seconds before removing from pan. Makes about 6 dozen 2″ cookies.

And here are a couple of sweets you'll remember.

Cherry Meringues

Beat 2 egg whites with a pinch of salt until stiff but not dry. Add ⅔ cup fine granulated sugar, a tablespoon at a time, beating well after each addition, so the sugar is well dissolved. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla and ¼ teaspoon almond flavoring; beat until blended. Put into a pastry bag and using the rosette tube end make swirls 2″ in diameter on a greased baking sheet. With the end of a spoon make a little depression in the center of each swirl for the cherry filling. Bake in a very slow oven, 225° F., ½ hour until the meringues are crisp. Remove the meringues from the baking sheet. Cool and fill the centers with cherry preserves. Makes about 3 dozen meringues.

Coconut Teacakes

Use a white-cake mix. Bake in tiny cupcake pans. Frost with 7-minute icing—also a mix—tinted pink and sprinkle with coconut.

Another choice piece. Try this and say, "What doth our loved one feed on, thus to turn into a honeyed comb?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 130

By Ann Batchelder

STUART-FOWLER

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

Our town's most eligible bachelor has a tricky way of judging a girl at Valentine's Day: Would she prefer a dozen red roses to just one yellow rose with an Edna Millay sonnet pinned on?

"I'm haunted by the suspicion," reveals Betty Comfort, removing her shoes at the front door after a party, "that people who love to discuss sex publicly in mixed company are the same ones whose private sex life is a problem."

Our town has become a gastronomical melting pot: When you dine out you're apt to encounter 1—pizza (Italian), 2—curry (Indian), 3—blintzes (mid-European) or 4—chow mein (American). Each appears in such infinite variety as to crowd hash or stew toward oblivion.

As I gather it, the college set is inclined to question the existence of such a thing as "romance," even when they've just parked 3½ hours in a wind-swept driveway with the temperature around zero.

Both the ladies at the bridge table the other evening denied vehemently that there's such a thing as intermittent warfare between the sexes. I've noticed that women who deny such strife are the very ones who're content with the way the battle's going.

I'm horrified that our town's school children no longer memorize Lincoln's Gettysburg speech. For most of us this and The Chambered Nautilus and To a Waterfowl are the brightest mementos of our school days.

To most of us men an early-morning shave or a quickie with an electric shaver seems primping enough—unless we happen to encounter by candlelight an especially lovely woman.

Some of our town's soundest men with haberdashery have remained leery of the vogue for masculine pink and black, yielding to it only for bed or underwear, or when at least 1000 miles away from home.

We read heart-rending post cards daily from friends wintering in Florida and California, complaining that the weather isn't quite like August at home. This breaks our hearts; what can we do but shiver or bleed in sympathy?

I smile secretly at the shocked newlyweds in our block. They behave as if they're the first ever to encounter the surprise cost of play pen, high chair and baby bed as unbudgeted expenditures.

A brand-new baby has established a dictatorship in our family, and I notice that anyone who charms a smile from him seems more elated than a spellbinder with a roar of applause at Madison Square Garden.

One of my sedate neighbors was shocked to discover at Mount Vernon a large chest in which George Washington carried twelve gallons of rum when he traveled. He should remember that this was before the invention of modern mouthwash; and travel was slower then.

"After years of marriage," confides Peter Comfort, dusting snow off his mailbox, "my wife is surer than ever that artichokes, hollandaise sauce and oyster stew are my favorite foods. By a queer coincidence they do happen to be hers."

"Read the 'Marriage Counselor' column today. You're in it."

My partner at the bridge table bawled me out because, instead of getting set by playing my hand the orthodox way, I made game with a lucky crossruff. She's good-looking enough to get away unscathed with such guff.

Suddenly the great world has overflowed our quiet town's social life. Out in the suburbs somebody had visitors from Denmark, and a neighbor served thick coffee and nougat in honor of a guest from the Turkish embassy. Our curved little fingers stuck out a mile.

At our club's round table I got $15 worth of free medical advice: Don't open your bedroom window more than a quarter of an inch. "Cold air plugs up your chest," said our modern young doc. "Even the looseness of a closed window gives you enough ventilation all night."

Our kids' grandparents reminisce that in their youth the stereoscope, dominoes and checkers interfered with pupils' homework too. But these weren't quite so hard on the eyes as TV, and fewer children wore glasses.

I'm wearing my new hand-knit tennis sweater with the red-white-and-blue V neck, proudly as a peacock. . . . But my lady warns me I mustn't wear it to bed even on the coldest nights.

Our worldlier townspeople smiled a little at a series of ultra-"well-bred" divorces which seemed almost too, too sporting. But only until a few rude, ill-mannered divorces exploded in court; then the well-bred ones looked positively chivalrous.

We were startled one evening when a legal eagle at a party told us how big inheritance taxes are likely to be—if we don't take steps. Our only consolation is that we don't have much to leave our heirs anyhow.

Three youngish matrons in our little circle have agreed to live together in the old rambling childhood home of one of 'em, when their husbands die. . . . But what happens if even one of the three husbands turns out pestiferously long-lived?

I'm no expert in the new science of "geriatrics," but from what I've seen of our senior citizens they're happier in each other's company at 70 and 80 than if they rely too much on the uncertain solace of children and grandchildren.

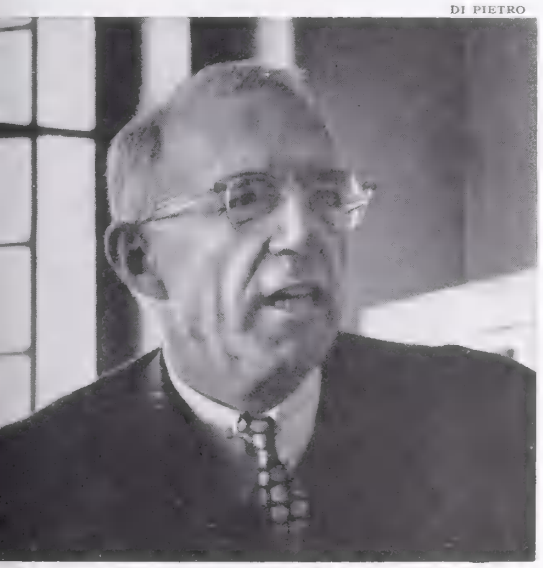
"If our scientists could only rest from their atomic bombs long enough," sighs our club's fat slim-souled man, "to invent something that tastes like roast-beef hash, but nonfattening even in large quantities!"

That couple in the glass house around the corner have played over 1100 games of chess in three years, at 10 cents a game. (They bank one third of his salary; and she's exactly 30 cents ahead. You can see 'em through their picture window, between the two lamps.) He claims he can beat her at checkers!

. . . When our youngest catches me scratching my head at my desk and asks if he can brew me a cup of tea,

. . . Or Junior invites his young brother to weekend at the university to see the sights,

. . . And our daughter reveals an overdue gratitude for inheriting my red hair,



. . . Or my wife unexpectedly offers, to my confusion, to scrub my back in the tub,

Then I'm left with little to act soulful about and confess I'm as happy as man can get.

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

Bed-wetting is frequently caused by tension or insecurity—or even by the child's fear that he may wet the bed.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "When mothers after them too much, children don't fight back in a grown-up way—they are more likely to be just pesky and ornery."

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

THIS month I want to try to tackle in a brief way the difficult topic of bed-wetting. (The medical term is enuresis.)

Most children become dry at night between 2 and 3 years of age. A few should probably be given the benefit of the doubt till 3½ or 4. A small number become dry before 2. Rarely a baby, usually a girl, will become dry by 1 year of age, before the mother has made any effort at all to train the child in the daytime. This is the clearest proof that night dryness comes naturally, as a part of growing up, and not primarily because of the parents' efforts.

There are a number of different reasons for bed-wetting. Some cases are caused by a physical abnormality or disease. Usually in these cases the child has difficulty controlling his urine in the daytime, too (for instance, there may be dribbling every few minutes, which the child can't control, or difficulty starting urination or inability to empty the bladder completely), or there may be burning on urination, frequency, and pus in the urine. Certainly any child who has any urinary symptoms in the daytime or who isn't becoming dry at night by 3 years should be checked by the doctor.

But in a majority of cases of bed-wetting no physical trouble is found and the child has normal control in the daytime (though he may wet his trousers a bit because he puts off going to the bathroom too long).

Of these cases of psychological enuresis there is still a variety of causes. One of the commoner, though not the commonest, types is the three- or four-year-old who has been dry for a number of months and then begins wetting again when a new baby arrives. He is feeling insecure for a while and, as we all do in such a mood, he retreats to a more babyish state of mind and behavior. He may not only wet his bed but he may suck his thumb more or cling to his mother's apron strings. Unconsciously he may long to have his mother change his wet night clothes the way she changes the baby's diapers. Perhaps he may also wet—unconsciously in his sleep—because he's mad at her for bringing this baby into his Garden of Eden. When London children were moved to the country, in large numbers, at the beginning of World War II, away from family, friends and familiar surroundings, many of them, even adolescents, reverted to bed-wetting. The main cause here, too, was probably retreat to babyhood in sleep, because of insecurity. The treatment in such cases is to try to make the child feel confident again about his place in the family and in the parents' affection.

But the commonest type of enuresis is different still. Four out of five cases occur in boys, and it is the boys that I will discuss first. Most of them have never become really dry at night. They go on wetting fairly steadily till 6 or 8 or 10 or 12 years of age. Often there was more than average difficulty getting the child trained in the daytime, at 1 and 2 years, with the mother becoming pretty cross at times and the boy resisting her efforts.

Child psychiatrists who have studied these cases (the late Dr. Margaret Gerard, of Chicago, did pioneer work on the problem) believe that in a majority of them—not all—there is tension between the mother and the son. She is devoted to him but she tends to be impatient with him, especially in regard to roughness, noisiness, messiness, slowness—aspects of boyishness which other mothers can take more philosophically. (This is why she may have got into arguments with him back at the time she was trying to train him in the daytime.) And the boy on his part is apt to be of a sensitive make-up: too easily convinced that he is inadequate. I don't want to give the impression that these enuretic boys are entirely docile. Though their mothers may keep after them too much, the boys usually give them plenty of provocation. They don't fight back in a grown-up way. They are more likely to be just pesky and irritating.

The bed-wetting is not a wholesome way for the boy to assert himself. It's as if he were saying to his mother in his sleep, "I'm mad at you for bossing me so much, but I don't feel courageous enough to stand up to you in the daytime. You've got me convinced that I'm just a naughty little baby so I'll have to protest in a babyish way by wetting my bed."

I want to make it absolutely clear at this point that the enuretic boy does not realize consciously that he is resisting his mother or reverting to babyishness in his sleep. Consciously he is very ashamed of his bed-wetting and is usually making strenuous efforts to control it. It would be entirely mistaken and work in the wrong direction if the parent were to assume or act as if he could stay dry if he wanted to. He can't change his dreams any more than you or I can.

If the basic problem with this type of bed-wetting boy is that he feels incompetent and defeated (he's apt to have trouble holding his own with other boys too), you can see why some of the control methods that conscientious parents use don't work better. Getting him up at night and leading him, stumbling, to the toilet? This is another proof that he can't take care of himself and that the parents have no confidence in him in this respect. Making him wash his own sheets and hang them out in public? Even more humiliating. He is terrified that outsiders, especially the other boys, will find out about his shame. Restricting fluids in the evening? It sounds logical enough, but actually the warning only gives him an immediate thirst—as it would you or me. Then he keeps begging for a drink and the mother has to keep impatiently denying him. This is bad for him and bad for her. Camp? Only if a boy has found that he can usually stay dry away from home and wants to try it, himself, and then only if the camp counselors are mature and experienced enough to be able to understand the boy's problem and be ready to protect him. A mediocre camp can be torture for an enuretic.

I don't know any magic to tell parents of a bed-wetting boy. (Of course I'd suggest that they try to get the help of a child psychiatrist or child-guidance clinic, especially if he has other troubles too.) I can only try to explain what has probably gone wrong with his feelings—about himself and his relations with his parents. If I had an enuretic boy I'd be inclined to have a friendly talk with him, somewhat as follows: "I think I've been barking up the wrong tree in keeping after you about the bed-wetting. It must have irritated you a lot. I understand now that quite a lot of boys have this problem, but that they practically all manage to gain control of their urine sooner or later. I imagine you'll get there sooner working by yourself. Good luck." Then I'd try hard not to badger him or belittle him about the dozens of other small issues that come up every day (knowing that this will be difficult to carry out because he's often irritating), but I'd hold him in line about important matters, and I wouldn't take any rudeness. I'd also look for other chances to build him up, at school or in the neighborhood—seeing to it that he has a bicycle or a football if that's what all the other boys have and if I can afford it, making his friends welcome, fixing up excursions and treats for them occasionally.

Often in the family of an enuretic boy the father is a quiet type who, on the one hand, prefers not to take much part in discipline but, on the other hand, is irritated by his son's immaturity and insufficient manliness. Both attitudes make it harder for the boy to gain confidence in himself. Every boy is helped to become manly by patterning himself after a father who is pally with him at times and yet who doesn't hesitate to assert himself to a reasonable degree in the family, including the disciplining of the children. I want to discuss more fully the father's part in discipline in another column.

What about the commonest kind of psychological enuresis in a girl? In the most typical cases (and of course there are other kinds) she is not timid or lacking in self-confidence. Quite the contrary. She is apt to be spunky, assertive, perhaps tomboyish. She may be inclined to be quite rivalrous with brothers if she has them, and with other boys. Far from being too distant from her father, she may be unusually close to him, appearing to be the closest to him of any member of the family. She may want to share all his interests and perhaps even dream of doing his kind of work when she grows up. If we can say that the problem of the typical enuretic boy is that he feels he is a baby, the problem of the most typical enuretic girl is that she is unconsciously trying too hard to be treated as a boy. If this is her trouble, she will be helped most if both her parents show that they particularly enjoy and love her just because she is a girl. She needs her father's continuing friendliness, but it will actually help her to be happy as his daughter if she sees clearly from his manner that he gives his companionship and tenderness primarily to his wife. His wife plays her part by being receptive to him in these respects.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed

Cover noted circulation half a century ago. The JOURNAL was the first magazine ever to reach one million—today it would read "The Magazine With Five Million."

Line a Day

By Ann Batchelder

1 Has it ever occurred to you that the devil and the angels both have a cake, two of the best and best-liked, named for them? Lightning strikes where it will.

2 Strike one: Serve wedges of warm-from-the-oven devil's-food cake with just as warm vanilla-pudding sauce flavored with rum extract.

3 Strike two: Speak of an angel cake and there it is, now that it starts from a packaged mix. Have your way with it. This is mine: sprinkle with shredded coconut before baking.

4 Stand-in for hollandaise—if it's a stand-in you're looking for. Mix together ½ cup thick commercial sour cream with ½ cup mayonnaise, 1 teaspoon curry powder and a little salt. Serve on cooked broccoli now and asparagus later.

5 Risotto, my dears, is a way with rice—a delectable way. Sauté 1 cup chopped onion and 1 cup raw rice in 2 or 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon saffron and 3 cups chicken stock. Cover and cook until liquid is absorbed. Add ½ cup grated Parmesan cheese, the same of chopped cooked ham and a little more butter and salt to taste.

6 Adventure file: Going through the fat file captioned "Adventures in the Kitchen," I picked out the card labeled Clam Chowder. It suggested the grated rind of half a lemon in the chowder. Also read, "Did this, result first rate. Do it again." I did and shall.

7 Another tried and approved item from the same source is this: on occasion when you feel like adding a grace note to the consommé or the cream soup, just insinuate a little curry powder—and be sure it's only a grace note and not a whole chorus.

8 I always think of dill as "cool and clean" and tarragon and basil and thyme as the herbs "meant to bewitch a salad." Could you think of better words to describe them?

9 If you don't know what to do with the chicken livers, here's a hint: Cook and chop them. Mix with half as much chopped ripe olives and enough commercial sour cream to bind them together. Season with minced onion, salt and fresh or dried dill, and serve as a spread for crackers.

10 Have I told you the old old story about putting soft, not melted, butter or margarine on the loaf before cutting the slices for sandwiches or canapés? Gets thinner slices more easily and saves time and temper.

11 Fritto misto means a mixture of things fried—be they vegetables or fish or what not. It is out of the Italian and back again. When you bite into a tantalizing titbit, on the fritto platter, how can you know it by its name? You can't. You might say fritto misto means frivolous mystery.

12 Newburg sauce one meets at banquet, supper, luncheon—it's a masquerade and if you think it always means lobster you're off the beam. It's a sauce that nowadays shows up on almost anything.

13 Consider oysters when you are in the mood for a fine fish dish. There are dozens of ways to use oysters. Here is one of my pet receipts: Wrap the oysters in ribbons of fillet of sole or flounder. Fasten with toothpicks. And now for the cooking:

14 Season with salt, pepper and a whisper of mace or nutmeg. Brush with melted butter or margarine. Broil. Cover with a cheese sauce and broil a little longer, until the sauce is lightly flecked with brown.

15 First-course department: Dip large shrimp in a snappy Russian dressing. Arrange them in small individual pastry shells. Let the tails come together in the center and the bodies fan out. A pretense of a bed of water cress is herewith suggested. Serve more dressing.

16 Here's another receipt with winning ways. It starts with canned or frozen pineapple chunks which you must marinate for a short spell in a well-seasoned French dressing. Then drain them, and wrap each chunk in a sliver of Smithfield or prosciutto ham. Fasten with toothpicks. (And what would we do without those handy little tricks?) Serve on a bed of water cress.

17 Use only a very little vegetable coloring when you tint frosting or decorations. You want to go pastelly. Nothing to do with the house-painters' union.

18 Clam-and-tomato broth, half and half, mixed, made hot or cold, is an uplifter to start off with. You may pass with it tiny little orange baking-powder biscuits, hot-buttered, and heated in the bun warmer.

19 A complaint must be set right. Never grease an angel-cake pan. It leaves the batter like Spanish moss with nothing to cling to as it climbs.

20 As delicate as the laciest valentine—that's a strawberry soufflé. Purée enough thawed frozen strawberries to make 1 cup. Add ½ cup sugar gradually to 4 stiffly beaten egg whites—a meringue, you know. Fold in the purée gently. Pour into casserole and bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 30 minutes. Serve pronto!

21 I like to go to parties as well as give them. At a recent dinner party I filched this bright idea from my hostess. Marry a can of condensed chicken soup to a can of green-turtle soup. Treat the mixture to a soupçon of curry and serve it piping hot with a float of minced parsley. Take my word for it, this is positively elegant!

22 Did you know that Washington's Birthday falls on pancake day this year? George, I'll bet, would approve of a stack of wheats layered with hot maple sirup and melted butter or margarine—half and half—for breakfast.

23 If you haven't tried it, take a can of mushroom soup and one of tomato soup, mixed. Now add ½ cup cream and the same amount of rich milk. Heat, season, serve in cups garnished with salted popcorn.

24 When oysters are fulfilling their accustomed annual role, one of the most anticipated of delicacies, fried oysters, is on the agenda—mine, anyway. Instead of frying, get a load of this: Dip them in beaten egg and noodles rolled very fine, brush over with melted butter or margarine, season and broil, turning once, till brown all over. Serve with cut lemon and water cress.

25 Little squab chickens, the size of a squab, are delicious stuffed with several spoonfuls of chopped canned stuffed orange, baked with butter or margarine and a few tablespoons of the orange sirup in small casseroles, until tender. Baste often. Serve on fried hominy with a sauce made of melted black-currant jelly and orange juice, slightly thickened with cornstarch and heated.

26 Desserts are as the sands of the seashore or as those found in a bunch of grocery spinach. Shut your eyes and pick. This one carries no tax on time or temper. Look! Take balls of vanilla or peach ice cream, put them in a coupe glass, surround with melon balls, strawberries and small pieces of orange, all previously marinated in honey. Over the whole works pour some honey and orange juice. Serve it cold.

27 For a salad that is different and very nice to look at, too, take cauliflower. Boiled in salt water, drained thoroughly and as thoroughly chilled. Then divide it into flowerets, neatly, dress with salad oil, vinegar, salt and pepper and a touch of Worcestershire sauce. Set on a bed of water cress or lettuce. Strips of pimiento add to the gaiety of things.

28 Special to you all: Start to Finish, my newest and best book, with some 800 Line a Day items collected from the JOURNAL, has been ready quite a while. There are scores of brand-new items, all bound, illustrated by a well-known artist, the whole works a Vermont product by Vermonters, from start to finish. And one lone dollar, sent to Start to Finish, Box 53, Woodstock, Vermont, will cause it to come flying to you, all postpaid. Your ANNIE.

Country-garden VEGETABLE SOUP... 15 different vegetables simmered in a hearty beef stock... for a bowl of delicious nourishment.

Old-fashioned VEGETABLE BEEF SOUP... lean beef, carrots, tomatoes, peas and barley in a fine beef stock. A mainstay soup for big appetites.

Savory CHICKEN GUMBO... a famous chicken and vegetable soup, with celery, tomatoes, okra and pieces of plump chicken in chicken broth.

Flavorful VEGETARIAN VEGETABLE SOUP... here's the energy-giving goodness of 15 fine vegetables in an all-vegetable broth, carefully seasoned.

Quick—nutritious—and simply delicious!

Campbell's 4 great Vegetable Soups

In these 3-hour danger periods your skin "dies" a little

There are 1- to 3-hour periods each day, doctors say, when your skin is in danger—open to such serious troubles as stretched pores . . . coarsened texture . . . cracking and "shriveling." These periods of skin "un-balance" occur right after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Nature takes 1 to 3 hours to restore these vital protectors. Meanwhile, your defenseless skin "dies" a little . . .

Read how great beauties of the social world prevent the damaging effects of skin "un-balance"

After each washing—"re-balance" your skin

Whether you consider your complexion dry, oily or so-called "normal" . . . whether you are in your teens or your forties—your skin is susceptible to this problem of "un-balance" after washing—

That dry, taut, "burning" sensation
Rough flakiness . . . a blotchy look

These are the first danger signals of skin "un-balance" . . . a warning of more serious problems ahead.

Does this mean you should stop washing your face? Not at all. Skin specialists advise: "Wash your face, of course. But after each washing 're-balance' your skin instantly . . . "

You cannot afford to close your mind to those urgent demands of your skin with the excuse: "Nothing I do now will make any difference" or "I haven't time for those elaborate beauty routines any more."

A "re-balancing" application of Pond's Cold Cream will take you about 7 seconds—far less time than washing your face. And you will see results . . . you will actually feel the "re-balancing"—right away!

60 times faster than Nature

Light, swift-acting—Pond's Cold Cream "re-balances" your skin after washing—at least 60 times faster than Nature does. It combats "shriveling," dryness and flaking. Restores elasticity, keeps pore-openings clear. Keeps skin texture fine and smooth.

And always at bedtime—a thorough clearing

In addition to quick daytime "re-balancings" after each washing, your complexion needs a thorough clearing with cream each night. Deep cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream dislodges water-resistant dirt from the pores. Keeps your skin looking fresh, clean—younger than it's seemed in ages!

Start now to give your skin these special privileges with Pond's Cold Cream. After every washing—a quick "re-balancing." At bedtime—a deep Pond's clearing. No beauty care could be easier. And you'll find none more quickly rewarding. Soon friends will be saying, "What have you done to yourself—you're looking radiant!"

Among the beautiful social leaders who use Pond's

MRS. FRANCIS IRÉNÉE DU PONT II

LA MARQUISE DE LÈVIS MIREPOIX

S.A.R. LA PRINCESSE MURAT

MRS. WILLIAM RHINELANDER STEWART

THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND

The world's most-famous beauty formula—never duplicated, never equaled. Get a large jar—begin giving your skin this simple, complete beauty care soon. More women use and love Pond's Cold Cream than any other face cream ever made.

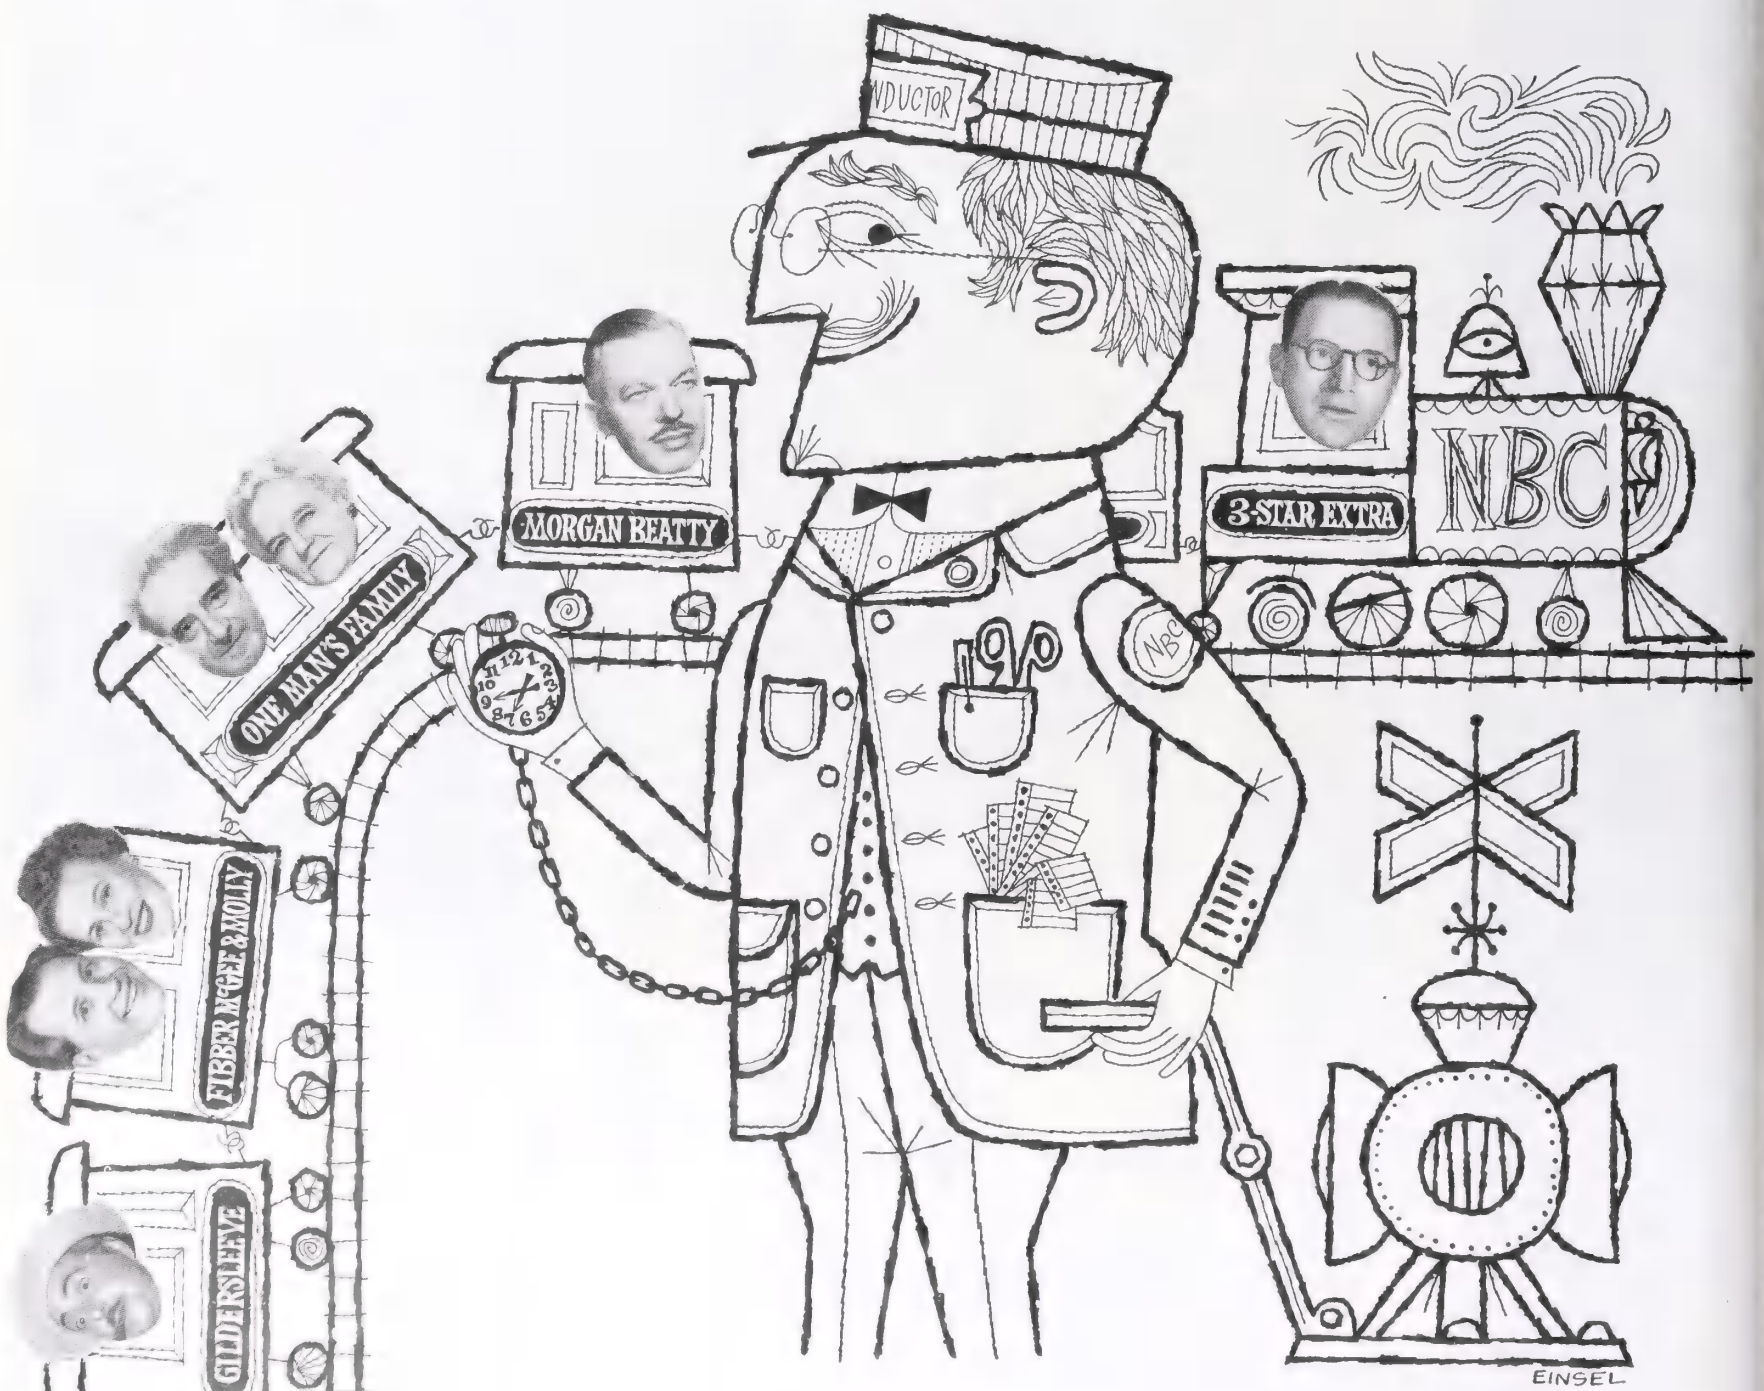
La Comtesse Alain de la Falaise

An emerald-eyed brunette with a lightning-quick wit, the Comtesse is the daughter of the late Sir Oswald Birley, England's court painter; and by marriage, member of a famous French family dating back to the days of the Crusades. She has unerring fashion sense, is keenly aware of the rewards of effective skin care. "The most important part of my complexion care comes immediately after I wash my face," she says. "I never leave my skin unprotected an instant . . . but bring it back to normal at once with a light touch of Pond's Cold Cream. And at bedtime, I always give my skin a deep Pond's cleansing."

now hitting your town 5 nights a week

A trainload of outstanding radio personalities arriving five nights a week, instead of one—that's an easy-to-remember timetable that means enjoyment multiplied by five.

Used to be you had to catch Fibber, and Gildy, and Mr. Barbour, on a particular night, or you missed the train for a whole week.



That's all changed now. Day after day, you can't miss. The amusing antics of Fibber McGee and Molly arrive by radio right on schedule every evening from Sunday through Thursday. So does The Great Gildersleeve, who's always just managing to get out of trouble.

The absorbing story of One Man's Family is your clear track to dramatic entertainment all through the week, Monday through Friday. And on those same five evenings, the NBC train carries a full passenger-list of newsmen, too. There's Ray Henle and 3-Star Extra—with a comprehensive round-up of news on the home front. There's Morgan Beatty with News of the World—radio's top-rated news service of up-to-the-minute reports from around the globe.

Makes it mighty pleasant and convenient to have a trainful of entertainment and information hitting town so often. With five opportunities to enjoy the finest comedy, drama and news, you're bound to make good connections, when you travel the NBC Radio line.

NBC RADIO
a service of RCA

consult your newspaper for local program-times and station

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 60

s about himself which now demanded his tion.

nen Gilbert Bakeliss entered the Harvard Willis was able to meet him with this new ralness. Gil Bakeliss was in his middle s; his business suit—a dark gray flannel—gh correct in every detail, hung in a ed careless manner. He could afford, like s, to be natural, and the bridge of years een them was not disturbing.

illis said, "Would you care to visit the bar e we go to the dining room?" Willis d this question in a most tentative manner, use he never dreamed that Gil would touch op of anything in the middle of the day. et's see," Gil said. "The meeting I was to d this afternoon was called off. I might do a sherry, just in the nature of a celebra- after what you and I have been through her."

is was a compliment and Willis knew it. an like Gil Bakeliss would never have n a drink of sherry on a business day out a very good reason.

illis smiled at the barkeeper. "Two sher- please, very dry," he said.

either of them spoke as they watched the nan with the glasses.

Here's to Harcourt Associates," Gil said.

Thank you, Gil," is answered.

at is something n drink to with uine enthusi-

"

How was Mr. er Harcourt last ing?" Gil Bake- sked.

He was very mel- last night, for Roger," Willis

l Bakeliss took nall sip of his y. "I suppose ese majesty to k disparagingly he of your sub- tial stock- ers," Gil said, I have very sel- seen anyone e personality so terribly ying."

ey were obviously on a very pleas- nd friendly basis. "It isn't every day I en- n a banker," Willis said, and he laughed. the beginning of lunch talk turned to the n Europe. It was surprising to Willis that e like Gil Bakeliss should worry about ar, not for business but for purely per- reasons. One explanation for this, Willis sed, was that many men in the Bakeliss roup had participated in the last war, and ories and old reactions clouded their ective.

said, "Well, let's talk about something cheerful." He glanced at Willis. "It to me you ought to be pretty well d about this Harcourt Associates thing." vas a time to display restraint, because he who was too pleased about anything ed opposition.

ell, it was my baby in the beginning," said, "so maybe I'm prejudiced. I hope just a start, that's all."

en Gil Bakeliss glanced at him again, was sure he had said the right thing.

ell," Gil said, "maybe they don't know it ut you're running the whole show."

n, come now, Gil," Willis said, "I n't say that exactly."

rhaps not exactly," Gil Bakeliss said. you made a nice deal in the common It's funny, those old New England fam- ometimes don't think of common stock. e's any more lying around loose, I should you'd want to buy it. I wouldn't mind g a bit myself."

as clever of Gil to put his finger on the because it was the heart of the situation. Gil Bakeliss must have been wondering why Willis had asked him to lunch, obviously wasting a morning in New York for the privilege.

"I'm glad you brought that point up," Willis said.

Gil Bakeliss did not laugh, but his expression was amused. "Do you know if there is any common stock floating around for sale?" he asked.

"WELL, frankly," Willis said, "I think I know where there is quite a little. You remember Mrs. Jacoby's interest, don't you, Gil? Mrs. Jacoby's not interested in things in Rahway any longer since the death of her husband. I think she would rather like me to have those shares. There's only one difficulty."

He paused, and Gil Bakeliss smiled again. "How much money do you think it would take, Willis?" he asked.

Willis's instinct told him it was not the time to set a figure. He smiled and shook his head again. "That isn't the point, Gil," he said. "I was wishing that Harcourt Associates' common stock would be decent collateral for a bank loan, but of course it isn't."

The cards were on the table now and there was one of those indecisive moments when everything was in balance, but in a second it was over.

"Now, Willis," Gil Bakeliss said, "I know quite a little about collateral. It happens that we're interested—in a small academic way, of course—in Harcourt Associates. Why else do you think I came over here for lunch?"

Sylvia, as she sometimes told Willis, had graduated with honors from Radcliffe, and Willis was the first to admit the agility of Sylvia's mind. Yet sometimes he was not sure whether Sylvia had ever understood fully what had happened to them both when Harcourt Associates was formed. The truth was that Sylvia, like everybody else, had certain intellectual blind spots. Willis had to admit that he felt a twinge of disappointment in Sylvia's reaction when he returned to Orange after his luncheon with Gil Bakeliss.

It was half past five before Willis reached the house. "Yoo hoo," he called. "Yoo hoo, honey."

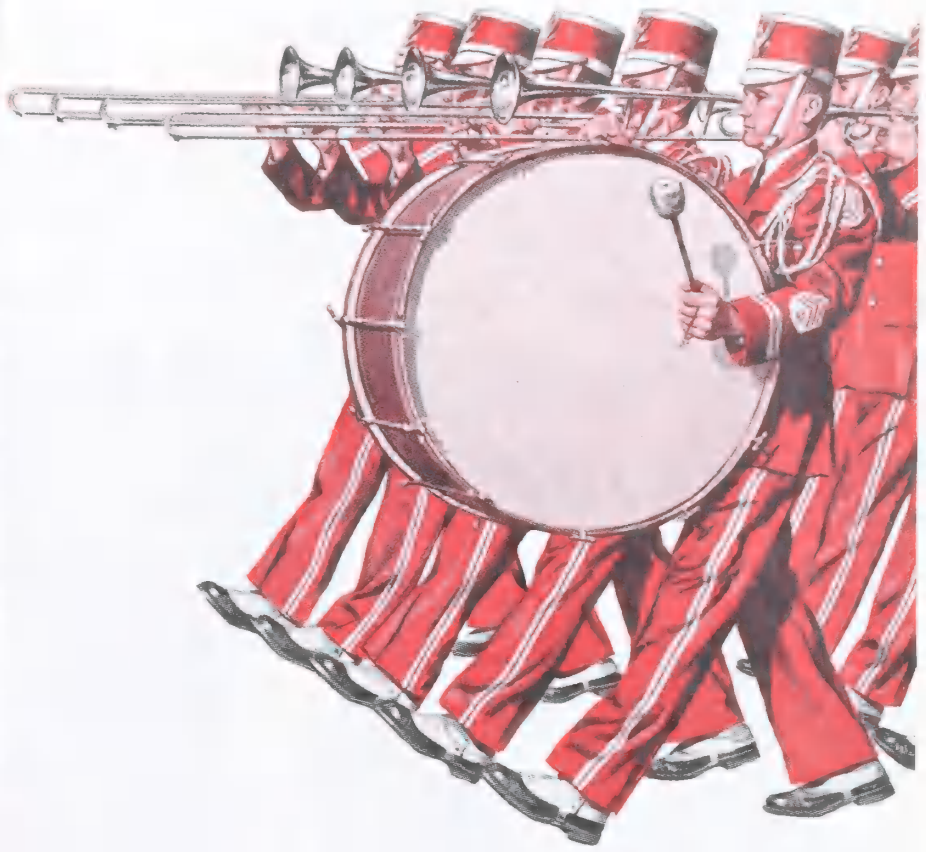
He shouted his greeting up the stairs, where Sylvia would be bathing Paul, and Al would be playing in what was called the nursery. He was surprised when Sylvia answered him from the kitchen.

"Oh," she called, "is that you, Willis?"

Willis had to laugh at her question. "No, honey," he called, "it's the president of the Aluminum Company of America." He even made his voice sound like the imaginary voice of the president of the Aluminum Company of America, but Sylvia did not catch the spirit of it.

"Well, now you're home," she called, "come here and help me, or we won't get any supper."

Sylvia was in the kitchen looking hot and tired. Her sleeves were rolled up and she was wearing one of Margaret's aprons. The table was covered with mixing bowls and pans.



"Why, honey," he said, and he kissed her, "where under the sun is Margaret?"

It was a natural question and he was sorry that it made Sylvia impatient.

"She left at three o'clock for good. She was cross about cutting up Al's chop. She said it was Miss Farquahr's work or my work, but not her work."

"But we haven't got Miss Farquahr now, honey," Willis said.

Which beats faster... a drummer or YOUR HEART?

WHEN a march . . . such as "The Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . is played in standard marching time, the bass drummer beats his drum around 70 times a minute.

Your heart, however, beats even faster . . . about 72 times a minute or more than 4,000 times an hour. Moreover, your heart, unlike the drummer, never gets a chance to rest, save for a fraction of a second between beats. On and on it beats to pump about 240 gallons of blood throughout the body every hour, year in and year out.

Multiply the heart's hourly output of work by the days, months and years that it functions during an average lifetime, and you will realize how wonderfully sturdy and efficient the healthy heart is.

The heart also has remarkable reserves of strength and recuperative powers. Even after it has been seriously impaired, the heart is often capable of continuing its work for years . . . if care and discretion are taken not to overburden it.

Yet, despite the strength of the heart, diseases of this organ lead all other causes of death.

There are many reasons why fatalities from heart disease have mounted. For example, more and more people are living to older ages when hearts naturally lose their ability to carry on. New methods of diagnosis have also brought to light certain heart disorders that were once erroneously regarded as "acute indigestion" or some other vague condition.

If you would keep your heart working efficiently throughout life, never wait for symptoms to jolt you into giving it the consideration it deserves. Indeed, if you are approaching middle age, now is the time to help your heart by following such safeguards as these:

1. Have regular, thorough health examinations. These are important not only for detecting heart trouble early, but also for detecting other diseases that could affect the heart.
2. Slow down after 40. Make a determined effort to eliminate hurry, bustle and over-exertion from your daily life. If you want to continue sports, don't overdo them.
3. Don't overeat. Mortality from heart disease occurs one and one half times more often among overweight people than among those of normal weight. This is reason enough for keeping your weight down.
4. Get the rest you need. Plenty of sleep and relaxation contribute much to both your physical and mental health. When you relax, so does your heart.

Should heart disease occur, it should not necessarily mean the end of useful, rewarding activity. In fact, even a damaged heart may outlast a much stauncher heart that is abused, providing a person really takes care of his or her heart and protects it against undue strain.

COPYRIGHT 1955 — METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

A MUTUAL COMPANY

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please send me the free booklet, 255-J, "Your Heart."

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____

"I called her, and we've got her for a day or two," Sylvia answered. "She's going to stay and help out until we get someone new in the kitchen."

"I'll tell you what we'll do, honey," Willis said. "We'll just leave everything, and you and I hop in the car and go somewhere for a bite to eat. Frankly, I'm just bursting with a lot of things I want to tell you."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "you know we can't go anywhere. I have to get supper for Miss Farquahr and Al."

"Now, wait a minute," Willis said. "Why can't Miss Farquahr throw something together for herself and Al?"

"Of course she can't, Willis," Sylvia said. "She's a trained, not a practical, nurse; she has to bathe Paul and Al. And besides, you know very well I have to give Paul his supper at seven o'clock."

"Now, honey," Willis said, "I'm going to help you with the dishes and everything. It was silly of me to think that we should go anywhere in the car, but I do have one suggestion."

"All right," Sylvia said. "I don't mind suggestions, if they're sensible, darling."

After all, it was nice to be home, even if everything was in disorder. Willis said, "Before we do anything more about supper you take off that apron, go and get the cocktail things and I'll get some ice and we'll have a quiet Martini just to celebrate."

"To celebrate what?" Sylvia asked.

"Why, my being vice-president of Harcourt Associates, darling," Willis said, "and several other things. Just you take off that apron."

"I don't know whether it would be very good for Paul," Sylvia said.

"Just exactly what has Paul got to do with it?" Willis asked.

"I wish I didn't have to underline everything," Sylvia said. "I told you I was giving Paul his supper at seven o'clock. I suppose I'm silly, but it doesn't seem decent to take a Martini and then go up to little Paul with liquo my breath."

"Now, honey," Willis said, and he took firmly by the shoulders and pushed her fully out of the kitchen. "Let's compromis half a Martini. I've really got something portant to tell you. You get the shaker the glasses and powder your nose while the rest."

"What's the matter with my nose?" Sy asked.

"Your nose is very cute, honey," Willis her. "I just said that as a joke."

Making a Martini that afternoon was a stone to his day. It was a pleasure to get ev thing in order, the shaker and the glass sti the bowl of ice. Actually he had made Martini very quickly, and it was excelle blended.

"Now just relax a minute, please, Sylv Willis said. "I haven't told you anything ab what happened up in Boston."

"I know you haven't," Sylvia said, " I'm dying to hear."

"Well, as of yesterday noon, you bec the wife of Mr. Willis Wayde, executive v president of a very streamlined and aggres concern known as Harcourt Associates, v now has a salary of twenty-five thousan year."

"Darling," Sylvia said. Her voice rose, he felt that there was something restrai about her enthusiasm. "I'm glad—but t you've been talking about twenty-five th sand a year for weeks."

"Well, it's in the bag now, honey," W said. "And that isn't all, honey. As a spe inducement to retain my services they let have fifteen per cent of the stock. I was w ing to settle for ten, but there it is, fifteen."

"Why, Willis," Sylvia said, "I think tha perfectly wonderful."

He did not know why he should have b annoyed, because it was exactly what Syl should have said.

"It's going to be a lot more wonderfu Willis said, "when that common stock beg paying dividends."

Now that Willis had finished his Martini knew it was not going to be long at all bef they began retiring some loans and pari down on the preferred.

"You remember that speech I was worki on, honey?" Willis said.

"Oh, yes," Sylvia said, "I'm sure it we wonderfully."

There was no reason, under the circu stances, why he should not have another Ma tini. Willis smiled at her and lifted up the g bottle.

"I wish you'd been there," Willis sa "That speech really got them, honey. I nev knew that I could be so good."

"I knew you'd be," Sylvia said, "becau you're good at everything."

"I DON'T know whether you remember th part where I defined an idea, honey," Wil said. "It went this way, just in case you've fo gotten: 'There is one thing of which I am sur and that is that no idea is original per se. It nothing but a minted coin with an impri similar to that of a million other coins, but it never a counterfeit.'"

"Willis," Sylvia said, "don't you think yo could tell me the rest of it in the kitchen whi I start supper? Would you like an omelet?"

"Why, certainly," Willis said, "I should e joy an omelet very much, and pardon me fo inflicting my speech on you. I only had th thought you'd be interested."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "please don't b huffy. I just can't seem to keep my mind o your speech. Right now it's a quarter past six."

Willis felt a touch of honest indignatio "And suppose it is six-fifteen?" he asked.

"Willis, dear," Sylvia said, "there is suppe for Miss Farquahr, and then there's Pau Can't the rest of it wait till later, when we hav more time?"

Willis paused before he answered, becaus he wanted to be absolutely fair. "All righ honey," he said, "let's skip the whole thing. guess you're right—the rest of it can wait."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "you're no angry? I didn't mean to hurt your feelings."

The last thing he wanted was to have Sylvi think that she had hurt his feelings, and conse

Natural color—every bit of it . . .

those rosy cheeks and that golden glow of new enriched Nucoa!

Nucoa gets its color right from nature—from vitamin A of garden-fresh carrots.*

And what mother isn't interested in clear skin, keen eyes, strong teeth and bones? That's why Nucoa is generously enriched with vitamins A and D, so essential to all of them.

In fact, every two ounces of Nucoa provides 62% of your own child's daily needs of these very vital vitamins. What a build-up on your family's daily bread!

* Nucoa is the only leading margarine that gets all its golden color from nature.

New enriched NUCOA® is so good it's digestible even for babies y he laughed in what he hoped was a friendly manner.

course I'm not mad," he said.

ien don't try to look like Ronald Col- Sylvia said.

oney," he said, and he tried to measure oughts and words, "there's no use talk- you when you take this attitude. I'd pre- delay our conversation until you are in a er mood."

here isn't anything wrong with my ," Sylvia said, "except I don't care to you address me as if you were speaking Rotary Club."

lis drew a deep breath. Strangely, a num- small things had become large. He said, ow I'm clumsy, because I did not come a professor's family in Cambridge. I'm a fellow who tries to get a little culture by g Doctor Eliot's Five Foot Shelf of . Wait, don't interrupt me, honey."

ien don't call me honey," Sylvia said, in ned voice. "I can't stand it."

l right," Willis said, "I won't, Sylvia. let me make my point. I've called you because I've loved you. I didn't know uldn't stand it. Maybe it hasn't occurred that there are some things I can't stand I can't stand"—he had to raise his voice own out Sylvia's—"I can't stand being ed at because I quote Keats and y. Maybe you marry me for I know why you ed me—and interrupt me, ."

narried you be- I thought you little common " Sylvia said.

h, no," Willis that wasn't why married me. e not as dumb t, Sylvia. You d me because wanted dresses a comfortable and because ke new cars and untry club and l Five and Paris clothes, and don't you tell me any dif- g, Sylvia, and I haven't demanded much personally, except for a little and quiet in the home, which I have got. There is, however, just one thing think I have a right to ask."

paused. He was amazed and appalled e should have said so much, because he ever before dreamed of having such a with Sylvia.

on't interrupt me, Sylvia," he said, e. I want to make my point. I think I right to ask, when I come home tired, vorking my fingers to the bone for you ur two children, that you might at least to me politely when I am trying to ex- to you how I am trying to make the that you married me for. Does that or not seem reasonable?"

llis," Sylvia said, "please don't shout at m not used to it."

is found himself answering with elabo- ntleness. "My dear Sylvia," he said, "I ot the slightest intention of raising my but now that I have made my point I ot bother you any longer. I will go to the y club and have a quiet dinner. I pre- ou have no use for the car this evening."

llis," Sylvia said, "do you think you're condition to drive a car?"

as a question which did not require an . Willis turned on his heel and walked e front hall.

llis," he heard Sylvia call.

is picked up his hat and topcoat and ed the front door behind him. He had said so much before to anyone in anger. uestion of Sylvia's about his being able ve a car was ridiculous. After his ap- ceship at entertaining Beakney-Graham ners, he could drink six Martinis, if ary, without showing it

Yet there was always a reaction to everything, and reaction came as soon as he reached the country club. There was no one in the bar except Joseph, the steward.

"Everyone's off tonight, Mr. Wayde, sir," Joseph said, "but I can fix you a lamb chop and some French fries."

"I'm sorry I came so suddenly, Joseph," Willis told him. "A lamb chop and some French fries would be excellent, and I wonder if I might have a dry Martini cocktail? If you're too busy, I should be glad to mix it personally."

HE was certain he had been right in everything he had said to Sylvia, but, in spite of his conviction of having been absolutely right, Willis had a sense of remorse as he absently stirred his third Martini cocktail. Perhaps he had been too hard on Sylvia. He should have had a more sympathetic understanding.

"Your chop is ready, sir," Joseph said. "I can serve it right here, if you'd prefer it, sir."

"Thank you, Joseph," Willis said. "If it is not too much trouble, I should appreciate it very much."

Willis did not want to stay at the club too long, because that might give Sylvia the impression that he was seriously angry, but he was sure that Sylvia would be in bed and asleep by the time he did return. Instead, to his surprise, she was sitting in the living room knitting on a sweater.

"Did you have a good dinner at the club, dear?" Sylvia asked.

"Oh, a fine dinner, honey"—Willis said, "er—sweetness."

"Call me honey, if you like," she said, "I'm used to it by now."

She looked at him shyly, and all at once he felt absolutely happy.

"Listen, honey," he said, "I know I'm crude in spots, but I want to do the best I can for you and the babies."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "I believe in you all the time. I wish you'd kiss me, dear."

"Why, certainly," Willis said. "It will be a pleasure, honey."

All that scene seemed relatively unimportant, but something had changed between him and Sylvia ever afterward. Back there in Orange, before Pearl Harbor, before Louise was born, he and Sylvia had struck a balance, and you had to strike one somewhere in a marriage. On the whole it had been a very good balance.

The war years, conferences with Government bureaus, interminable trips to Washington, labor disputes and the renegotiation of contracts, were already approaching rapidly. It had not occurred to Willis yet that his country might be in danger, but he had realized that business was on the threshold of great industrial expansion.

The stockholders' meeting of Harcourt Associates was called in late June that year, and Mrs. Henry Harcourt, in keeping with the old tradition, had invited the stockholders to luncheon. It touched Willis especially that Mrs. Harcourt wrote asking him and Sylvia to stop at the big house before the meeting.

"Honey," he said to Sylvia the evening he had received the note, "I have a very gracious letter from Mrs. Henry Harcourt, asking us to be her guests. I hadn't thought of bringing you up there, honey, but I do think it would be a very nice idea, both personally and businesswise."

"I think it would be lovely," Sylvia said. "Let's see, Mrs. Henry Harcourt is the old Mrs. Harcourt, isn't she?"

"Good for you, honey," Willis said. "Yes, Mrs. Henry Harcourt lives in the big house. She used to be mighty kind to me when I was a kid."

"The more I think of it, the better I like the idea of going," Sylvia said. "Oh, by the way, a man called you up just before you got home. He said his name was Mr. Lever."

"He did, did he?" Willis said. "Well, that's another story we'll have to go into later, sweetness."

"He wanted to talk to you about a house, I think," Sylvia said.

The whole thing was meant to be a surprise, and it was annoying of Ted Lever almost to have spoiled it.

"Oh, I've only had a vague idea," Willis said, "but let's schedule our visit to the Harcourt place. I'm going to be pretty proud of you up there, and I want everybody to see how beautiful you are. So I'm going to write you out a check and send you into town tomorrow to Bergdorf Goodman's."

"But I've plenty of clothes, Willis."

Willis smiled at her. "I always think you look lovely, honey," he said, "in whatever you wear, but this is a sort of special occasion. "How about getting a lot of new things—a suit, an afternoon-and-evening frock, and a light coat, and shoes and accessories?"

"But, darling," Sylvia said, "I don't believe you have any idea what all those things will cost."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 80

THE COMPASS CAUSED IT

To show their readers that their coverage was complete, that the published items were received from the four quarters of the globe, early newspapers showed the four points of the compass, N, E, W and S. And the four letters, run together at the top of the first sheet of these printed items of current happenings, eventually caused them to receive official recognition of the slang term by which they were known—newspapers.

—MARY ALKUS

I AM PROOF YOU CAN REDUCE AND STAY REDUCED WITH THE KNOX EAT-AND-REDUCE PLAN

says Mrs. Aileene George of Sunnyside, N. Y.

"Here's how I looked when I started the Knox Reducing Plan over 2 years ago. I wore a size 20 dress!

Three months later, my hips were down a whopping 6¾ inches . . . my waist down 4¼ inches!

And this is the way I am today! I wear a youthful size 14 dress, look better and feel wonderful."

Introduced by KNOX over 3 years ago . . .

Tested and proven time after time . . . KNOX GELATINE Eat-and-Reduce Plan is a successful, safe way to lose up to 5 pounds a week!

The key to this whole plan is KNOX UNFLAVORED GELATINE—the finest quality gelatine that can be made—recommended by doctors all over America!

In the past three years more than a million people have sent for the original Knox Gelatine Eat-and-Reduce Plan.

Proof aplenty of the need for a safe, pleasant way to get rid of unwanted pounds without pills, wafers, drugs or synthetic substances of any kind. The Key to the Knox Plan is a famous food product you and your doctor have had confidence in for many years.

Now, here is a new, improved, easier-to-follow Knox Reducing Plan that lets you live and work as usual while getting rid of 2 to 5 pounds a week. Enjoy most of your favorite foods in 3 delicious meals a day plus "between-meal" snacks. The Knox Plan's 36 valuable pages including the entirely new Knox-exclusive Choice-of-Foods Diet List Chart (that actually counts calories for you) gives over 25 low-calorie recipes, and complete detailed advice on safe, practical reducing.

Mail this coupon and get ready to see the pounds melt away!

WHY DOCTORS RECOMMEND KNOX

Knox Unflavored Gelatine is pure, finest quality gelatine made with exacting pharmaceutical care. It has long been known to be an important source of supplementary protein and very high in nutritive value. Knox is all protein . . . unlike factory-flavored jell desserts, which are about ⅞ sugar and ⅛ gelatine.

KNOX

the REAL gelatine—
ALL PROTEIN—NO SUGAR

at your grocers in 4-envelope family size
32-envelope economy diet size

The name KNOX on every package is your protection. Our product is never sold under any other name!

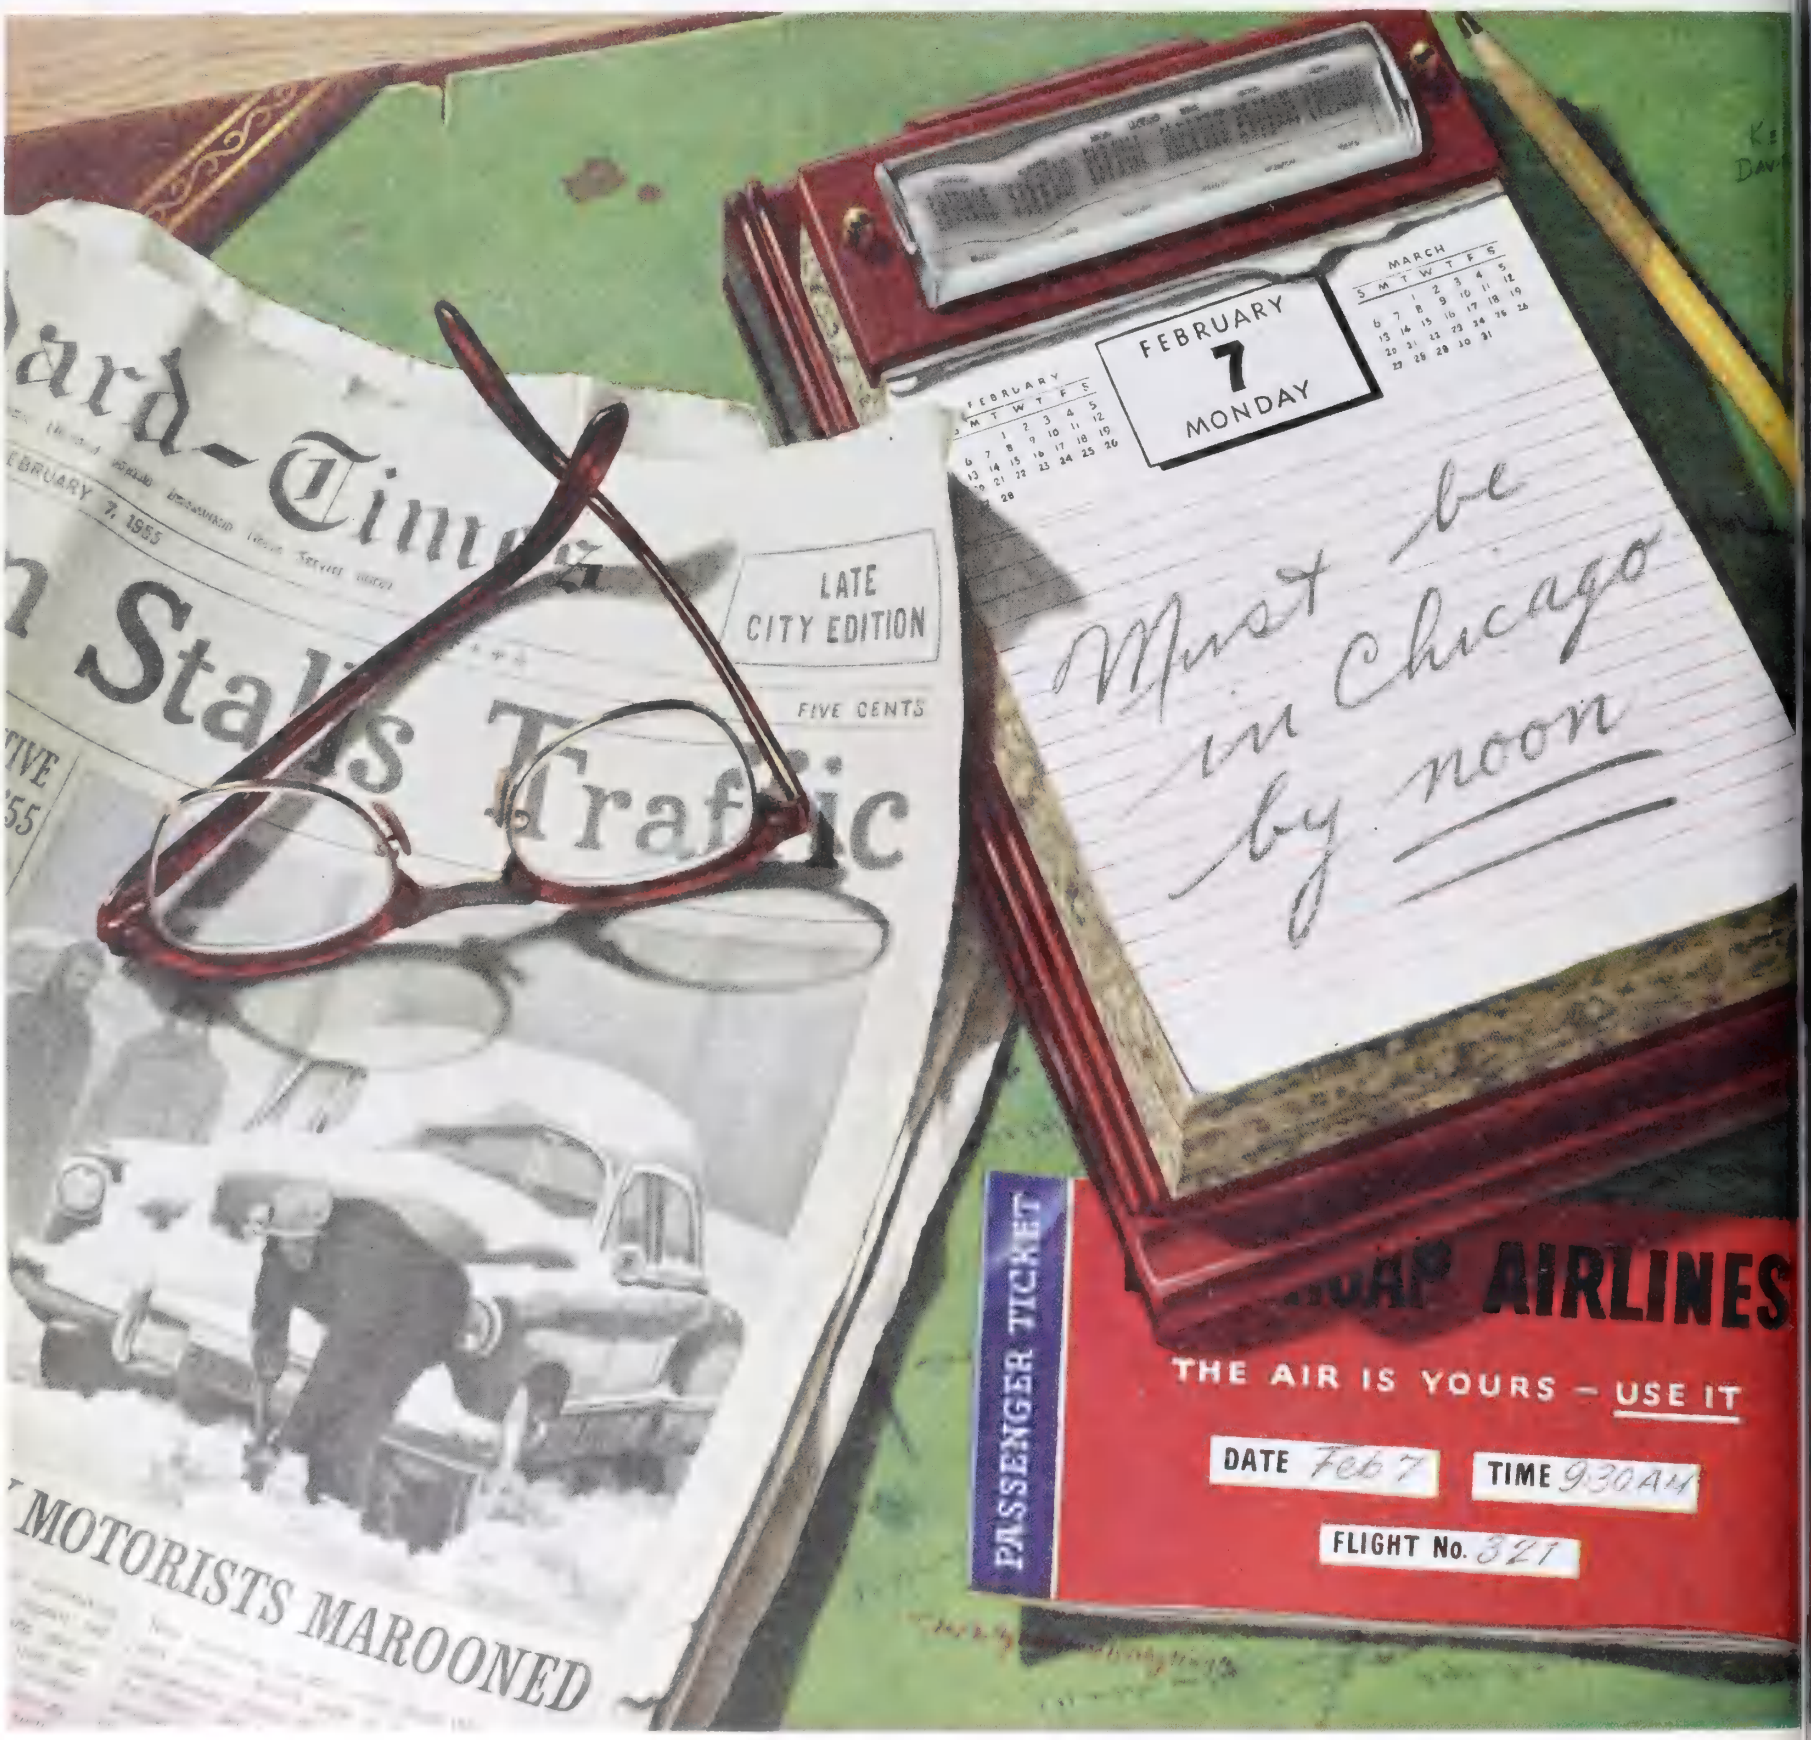
FREE! The big new 36-page improved Knox Eat-and-Reduce Plan plus the easy-to-follow Choice-of-Foods Diet List Chart.

SEND TODAY!

KNOX GELATINE, Box LH-7,
Johnstown, N. Y.

Mail me my free copy of the new Knox Gelatine Eat-and-Reduce Plan.

NAME .....



ADDRESS .....

Winter's a wonderfu

YOU'LL ENJOY THESE MAJ

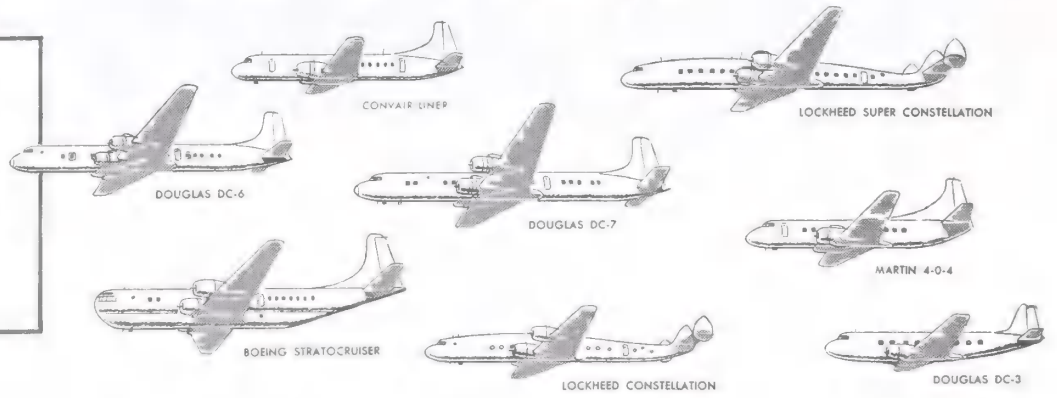
Every year—in winter and every season—millions of new travelers go by air. Last year alone nearly 28 million travel-wise men and women flew on scheduled U. S. airlines, and this year's total will be higher by millions. Why the growth in air travel? Because more and more Americans have found that air travel any time of year in t dependable airliners gives them all the advantages of speed, safet fort and economy. Ask any airline representative or travel agent you full details about the many conveniences of winter airline

...time to fly...

...R TRAVEL ADVANTAGES EVEN MORE IN WINTER

...BY CLOCK—NOT BY CALENDAR—Whether your trip covers hundreds ...s or thousands, air travel is far faster than the swiftest surface transpor- ...For instance, new airliners fly from California to New York in less than ..., or across the Atlantic in 12, saving you days of precious time. Air travel ...oo, with flights serving 580 major cities in the United States.

2. FIVE TIMES SAFER—Why risk icy roads when you're five times safer traveling by airliner than when you go by automobile. Safe, dependable American-built air transports have set all-time safety records. At the same time, air travel has increased by billions of passenger miles, with scheduled airliner landings and takeoffs averaging one every 5½ seconds.



...CONDITIONED COMFORT—Today's luxurious air giants are designed ... comfort, as well as for speed and safety. Spacious cabins have stretch- ...m with modern reclining seats. On larger planes you'll find handsome ... and even private rooms. And on all airlines, personal services and ...n make flying truly enjoyable.

4. THRIFTY, TOO—Go by air for your biggest travel value. All the advantages of speed, comfort, safety and economy are yours to enjoy often for less than the total trip cost of surface transportation, when you consider other en route expenses. Savings can be even greater on family travel plans and air coach or tourist services offered by nearly every airline.

America's leading airliners are Douglas DC-3s, DC-6s and DC-7s, Convair-Liners, Martin 4-0-4s, Boeing Stratocruisers and Lockheed Constellations. Every type depends on Pratt & Whitney Aircraft engines or Hamilton Standard propellers, or both—products which help make them the finest and most dependable passenger aircraft in all the world.

...ITED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION East Hartford, Connecticut

In Canada: CANADIAN PRATT ■ WHITNEY AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.

...PRATT & WHITNEY AIRCRAFT engines, HAMILTON STANDARD propellers and aircraft equipment, and SIKORSKY helicopters for our armed forces and the finest airlines in the world.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 77

"Listen, honey," Willis said, "you go get them. Here's a blank check and you fill it in. I'll feel hurt if that check is filled in for anything less than six hundred dollars."

There were a great many things he could not say, but he liked to think that he had implied most of them when he mentioned the minimum figure.

"You're awfully sweet, dear," she said, "and you don't have to explain. I'm not so dumb."

"O.K., as long as you know I love you."

"I love you too," she told him. "I used to think it was bad being a woman, but perhaps being a man is worse."

"Let's put it this way," Willis said. "Everyone has a tough time occasionally, regardless of sex."

It was not a tough time then; it was a rare moment when two people understood each other so well that they could talk without worrying what the other might be thinking.

"Honey," he said, "there's something else I maybe ought to tell you but I won't right now except to say I think it's something that you're going to like."

He could see now that he should have discarded his romantic idea of giving her a big surprise. He should have realized that a home, even though located in a top-flight development like Northfield Park in West Orange, was not like a diamond-and-sapphire clip. No one, he knew now, should ever flash a new home as a surprise on any wife, but Willis was still only thirty-three. After all, he could not know everything.

As long as they were going to make the trip, Sylvia had suggested very sensibly that they might add a day or two more to it, so that she could have a chance to see her family in Cambridge, and Willis had concurred cheerfully. There was only one thing upon which he insisted, and he hoped that Sylvia understood his point. He had insisted that before going up to Clyde they should occupy a small suite at the Ritz instead of staying with the Hodge at Craigie Street.

The stockholders' meeting had been cal for a Friday, and they arrived in Boston M day evening. Consequently Willis wrote Mrs. Harcourt that they would motor fr Boston, arriving at the Harcourt place in t for dinner on Thursday, staying through Friday stockholders' lunch and returning Boston directly afterward.

Willis had not anticipated how busy would be in Boston. The telephone began ri ing almost the moment they got to the su and by breakfast time next morning his sch ule was almost entirely filled for the two en ing days, and would have been for the nig too, if he had not insisted on some leisure. in the midst of those crowded hours, Wi frequently found himself worrying about trip to Clyde. Instead of its being someth that he could look forward to with pleasu it began to loom up like an ordeal.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "isn't everything goi all right?"

He was startled by the question, because erything up in Boston had been going very w indeed. The sales organization was in fi shape. Production was being stepped both at the Harcourt Mill and at Rahway; explained this carefully to Sylvia.

"So you're asking a very silly questi honey," he told her. "What made you ask everything wasn't going all right?"

"You just seem tense," Sylvia said, "t then I suppose you're worried about t meeting."

"Oh, no," Willis said. "The meeting's goi to be a real love feast to which I'm fran looking forward, honey, and I have a sort selfish feeling that I want to show you off to those people. That reminds me, I've forgott to call up a Cadillac renting service. I m make a memo to do it in the morning."

"What kind of a renting service?" Syl asked.

"It's one of those services that supply Cadillac and a liveried chauffeur," Willis to her. "Now, I know what you're going to sa sweetness. Sure we could go up on the trai but this is going to give me a chance to relax

"But what are people going to say," Syl said, "when we drive up that way? It looks ostentatious, Willis."

He understood what Sylvia meant by oste tation, but he could not see why Sylvia shou always be afraid of it.

"There's a whale of a lot of difference b tween ostentation and intelligence," Wil told her. "It's just being plain intelligent to up there with a car and a driver. Also, swee ness, I'd rather have people up there think can afford it than have them think I can't

He was sure this was what old P. L. Nag would have said. He could remember old P. driving up there in a Cadillac, but of cour this had no influence on his judgment.

Willis had been absolutely right about t Cadillac, and he was glad to be motorin through a green June country, instead catching the train for Clyde. His mind we back to that first day he had gone to Cly with his mother on that blistering-hot Augu afternoon. The country had seemed strange him, and in spite of all the time he had lived New England he still could not feel a part of as Sylvia did, although Sylvia was seeing Cly for the first time. It was strange that Sylvia sa a great many things that he had never n ticed—gardens, and peculiarities of archite ture.

"I don't see why you never told me it was beautiful," she said.

"If you like this," he said, "just wait unt you see the Harcourt place."

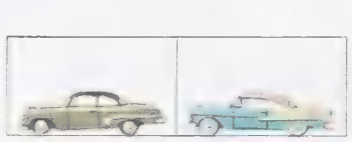
He could not exclaim, as Sylvia did, at t farmhouses along the river or at the views the river, because he had seen too much them when he was younger. He had to dire the driver through the village.

"You'll see the stone walls and the gat house," he said, "and when you see a pond o the right-hand side of the drive, bear to th right. It's a large granite house."

The rhododendrons and the laurel were ou making, as always, a fine show, and the ros gardens were at their best in June.

I think about women all the time

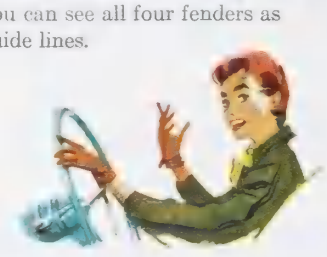
Not that I'm romantic—I'm a Chevrolet engineer. But the most demanding part of my job is seeing that the cars we design come as close as possible to a woman's ideal.



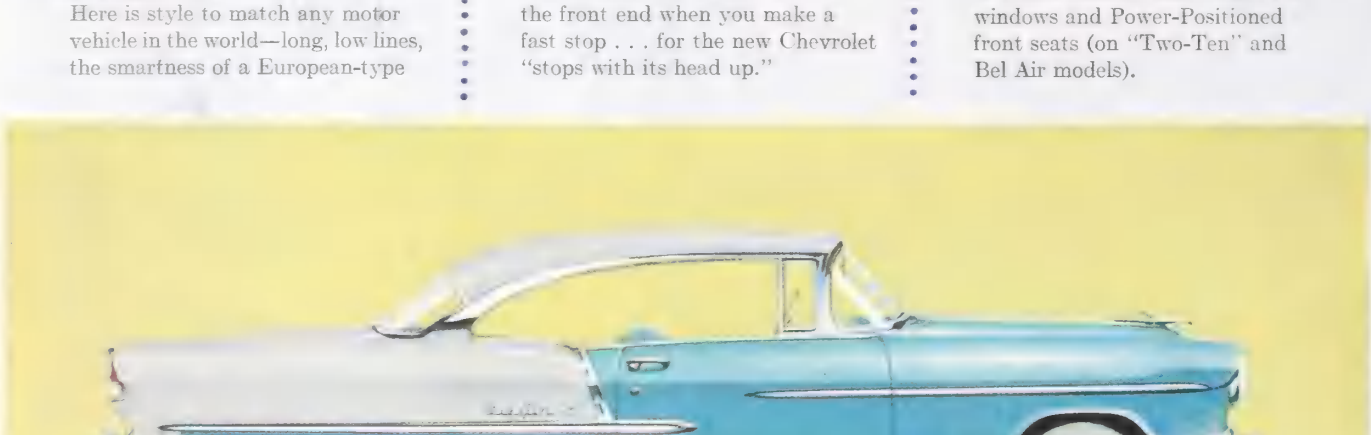
That's not easy. For a woman is both a realist and a dreamer. Her common sense demands gasoline economy and durability. But her heart longs for things which have been unattainable in a low-cost car —a serene luxuriousness in ride and handling, an elegance of styling, all the power aids that make driving an effortless exercise of command.

Our new car, I believe, comes closer than any other to answering what lies in both a woman's mind and heart. And for these reasons:

New Appearance
Here is style to match any motor vehicle in the world—long, low lines, the smartness of a European-type grille, a whole spectrum of exciting new colors . . . all within a new body-and-frame structure that has more hiproom and more hatroom.



New Ride
It takes an engineer to understand why the new Glide-Ride front suspension smothers bumps like a down pillow. But any woman can instantly feel the supple serenity with which the new Chevrolet moves . . . and the friction-free ease of ball-race steering.



Anti-Dive Control
A detail? . . . Maybe, but it sharply reduces that annoying "dive" of the front end when you make a fast stop . . . for the new Chevrolet "stops with its head up."

New Visibility
The deep futuristic curve of the new Sweep-Sight windshield means almost open-air visibility for the woman at the wheel—and there is more glass all around. In parking, you can see all four fenders as guide lines.

Power for Every Need
Chevrolet's extra-cost power options are designed to heed the flick of one slim finger, the touch of a toe-tip. A smoother Powerglide. Power Steering, to take the pull out of parking. The velvety grip of Power Brakes. And Power-Lift windows and Power-Positioned front seats (on "Two-Ten" and Bel Air models).

Behind it all is the tradition that every woman respects—Chevrolet's reputation for long, trouble-free life and utmost economy in operation. Call your Chevrolet dealer for a demonstration of the car that gives a woman far more of everything she wants. . . . Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Mich.

The motoramic

CHEVROLET

MORE THAN A NEW CAR . . .
A NEW CONCEPT OF LOW-COST MOTORING

u never told me it would look so Engylvia said.
grounds looked as well as they ever had.
ere passing the pond, and Willis saw ere were still swans.
car stopped at the flagstone veranda s Gothic columns. The driver opened or of the Cadillac, and Willis saw that , who looked old and frail, was stepping om the veranda, followed by a younger ho must have been a gardener.
lo, Selwyn," Willis called, and he to the driver. "Please be sure to come t three-thirty tomorrow afternoon. I ou can come personally?"
, indeed, sir," the driver said.
as relieved that there was no need to furtive bill into the driver's hand in f the Harcourt house and Selwyn. He le to give his full attention to Sylvia, her elbow solicitously for a moment he had stepped from the car. Her ne suit looked just as well as it had at z.
as sure that Selwyn was glad to see illis had always had a warm spot in his or Selwyn.
l, Selwyn," he said, "it's wonderful to on you, and it's been much too long a Willis shook hands at once with Sel-
And this is my wife," he went on. "Selear, was my guide, philosopher and or many years."
ever so glad to meet you," Sylvia said.
k you did very well with him on the s could not help being proud of a great pleasure to meet you, Mrs.
" Selwyn said.
Harcourt stood, as they entered the the exact spot where she and Mr. Harad greeted the guests at that stock-luncheon years ago. She looked als Willis had remembered her, white-plump-faced, in a handsome purple e dress.
dear, I'm so glad to see you," she said a, and she kissed her. "And I'm going Willis too." She laughed and turned ek to him. "Now let me have a good you," she said. "I do wish Henry were e would be so pleased."
nakes me very proud to have you say Willis answered. His glance traveled the staircase to the shadowy corridor under the upper landing; he was sure thing in the house had been changed.

must be exhausted, dear," Mrs. Har-id to Sylvia. "The tea things are in the but perhaps you'd rather go right up-nd have a bath and get ready for dina looked at Willis questioningly, and at y moment the hall clock struck six.

afraid time rather speaks for itself," said, "if you still have dinner at a before seven."
whole house was cool and smelled of as it always had in June.
, dinner's still at a quarter of seven," arcourt said, "and only the family are —Bryson wants to have an hour with the library afterward to go over all the eeting details."
ppose we should have a talk," Willis ut I'd much rather have a talk with Irs. Harcourt." He looked at Sylvia iled. "We'd better start to get ready, er's a quarter before seven."
u'll be in the east room," Mrs. Harcourt
It has a sitting room so that you can our breakfast quietly. Selwyn will take
."
s said, "Lead the way and we'll follow,
."
s curious, Willis thought, that he had pent a night in the big house, in spite aving been in it so often. Thus the east oom was only vaguely familiar to him—ith its green glazed chintz, heavy ma-furniture and a massive four-post bed.
coughed discreetly and opened a door,
ing that there was also a bed in Mr.
's dressing room. s and Sylvia were both silent for a fter Selwyn left them. Sylvia looked at her bathroom, at Willis' dressing room and bath, and then at the sitting room with its open fireplace.

"I don't know why you've never told me anything about all this," she said. "It's beautiful, but there's one queer thing about it. I keep thinking there are lots of invisible people around."

Willis was startled, because from the very beginning he had always thought this same thing about the Harcourt house.

"It's what happens if one family lives in one place," he said, "but don't let it get you down."

"It doesn't," Sylvia told him. "I'm dreadfully glad I'm here."

The windows were open and the birds were still singing. It was the end of a cool June day. Willis turned on his bath and hung his coat on a chair. He never knew what had prompted him to put on a dinner coat and a soft shirt, except that he had a feeling that Mr. Henry Harcourt would have approved.

"Willis," Sylvia called, "would you mind coming in and doing me up my back?"

Sylvia wore the flowered silk that she had bought at Bergdorf's, and he approved of the flare of the skirt. The back, he was glad to see, was secured by a series of hooks and snaps and not by a zipper.

"It's rather tight, isn't it?" Willis asked.

"I'm planning to lose five pounds," Sylvia said, "and then it will be all right, but don't pull so hard. Willis?"

"Yes, honey?" Willis said.

"I want to see all the place before I leave."

"You certainly must," Willis said. "Someone will take you around while we're having the meeting at the mill."

"I wish you could," Sylvia said. "The grounds are so beautiful. It's queer that you've always spoken of the Harcourts so casually, because it must have meant an enormous lot to you to have lived here. It would have to anyone."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 83

You'll like the special gentleness of Soft-Weve

If you like nice things—you'll love this new kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. Your family and guests are sure to notice when you provide this new kind of tissue. Soft-Weve is especially soft and gentle because it's made like fine facial tissue.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong . . . that's the secret of Soft-Weve's wonderful softness, its practical strength. Next time you shop be sure to get this new kind of bathroom tissue . . . Soft-Weve is another great Scott value, a luxury everyone can enjoy.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

This is an actual photograph of a woman's hands while taking the detergent test. The right hand was given Jergens Lotion care—the left wasn't. Even scientists were amazed at the difference. This photograph is unretouched.

Proof: You can stop "Detergent Hands"

A national research laboratory* proves Jergens Lotion more effective than any other lotion tested for stopping detergent damage.

Do you wish your hands were as pretty as your neighbor's? Don't put up with "detergent hands" any more! Read this story of a dramatic experiment.

447 women volunteers soaked both hands in household detergents three times a day. Right after each soaking, Jergens Lotion was applied to the right hand. The left hand was untreated.

In just three or four days, these women saw an amazing change! Untreated hands became roughened and reddened. Hands that received Jergens care remained soft, smooth, without a trace of detergent damage!

Many lotions were tested this way. Not one proved as effective as Jergens Lotion. The women agreed that no other lotion had ever done so much for their hands. They were delighted with their discovery.

Jergens Lotion has been steadily improved for 50 years. Use it daily and your hands will never be rough or chapped. They'll be pretty in all weather, no matter how hard you scrub or scour. Never sticky or greasy, Jergens is a pleasure to use.

Get a bottle today, and notice how much richer and creamier the Jergens formula is now. It has a lovely new fragrance, too, yet the world's favorite hand care costs only 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

*Notice to doctors and dermatologists. For a summary of this report write to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 81

"I suppose it did at one time," Willis said. had finished the back of her dress. "But u get accustomed to anything you see a lot —I lived with ma and pa in the garden house. must have told you that."

Sylvia frowned in a puzzled way. "You've ver told me much of anything," she said. ou hardly even told me about Mrs. Henry rcourt."

"Honey," Willis said, "please don't keep ing I haven't told you."

"But she loves you," Sylvia said. "She ores you, and so does that old butler."

"Selwyn," Willis said, and lowered his voice othingly. "Just calm down, honey. This isn't ckingham Palace or anyng. It just happened that d Man Harcourt emoyed my father as an gineer at the mill; and nfidentially, if my father dn't induced Mr. Harurt to buy the Klaus ting patents, maybe this ate might have turned o an insane asylum or mething."

"I wish I could have seen r. Harcourt," Sylvia said. Ie must have been a remarkable man."

"I wouldn't say he was remarkable," Willis d, "but he was a nice old gentleman. I've rtainly told you I have a warm spot in my art for him. And now come on."

"I should think you would have a warm ot in your heart for him, seeing he put u through the Harvard Business School."

"Now listen, honey, let's get this straight," llis said. "Mr. Harcourt did pay my way rough the Harvard Business School, but ery cent he gave me was paid back at six cent interest. I definitely don't owe the rcourts anything."

"Why, Willis," Sylvia said, "I don't know y you should get excited."

"I'm not excited, sweetness," Willis said. only want you to get things in their proper perspective. Now I'll tell you who's going to be there, so you won't get mixed up. First there's Mr. and Mrs. Bryson Harcourt—Bryson is Mr. Henry Harcourt's only son and president of Harcourt Associates—and then there's their son, Bill Harcourt, and his wife, Anne. You can't help liking Bill ——"

Willis was still describing the Harcourts to Sylvia when he heard the dinner chimes in the hall. He had forgotten the dinner chimes.

"Do I look all right?" Sylvia asked.

"Honey," Willis said, "you look just wonderful and I'm mighty proud of you."

When they reached the door of the drawing room, Willis knew the Harcourts thought so too. The Harcourts could not help but have been wondering what Sylvia would be like, and now at the sight of her all of them looked relieved. As Willis had thought, none of the men had dressed, but he passed off the situation by simply saying that he had to change anyway, and he had smiled at Mrs. Henry Harcourt, implying, of course, that he had put on his dinner coat out of respect.

No man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden today, that the weight is more than a man can bear.

—GEORGE MACDONALD

"I'm not sure whether you have met all the family or not, my dear," Mrs. Harcourt said to Sylvia.

"Well, well," Bryson Harcourt said to Willis. "it's a sight for sore eyes seeing you here. The report is splendid, my boy."

Bill Harcourt was even gladder to see Willis. He slapped Willis on the back. "I was just telling Anne that I won't have the mill on my conscience any more," Bill said. "And look at Sylvia. Don't you forget who introduced you to her."

Momentarily Willis had forgotten, and now it seemed inappropriate to remember.

"And here's Anne " Bill said. "I don't think you've ever met Anne, have you, Willis?"

"Why, no," Willis said. "I've never had the pleasure. Good evening, Mrs. Harcourt."

"Call her Anne," Bill said. "We're all of us family here."

Bill's wife was a dark, acidulous-looking girl with beady black eyes and too much lipstick.

"It would be a great pleasure to call you Anne," Willis said to her. Then he shook hands with Bess and Edward Ewing.

"It's always like pulling teeth to get Edward down to the meeting," Bess said, "and it was particularly awful this year, because all Edward wants to do is sit and try to hear the war news. Do you worry about it, Willis?"

Willis laughed. "I've got more pressing worries right now," he said; "the ordeal tomorrow, for example—the war's only a sort of general worry like the weather."

"But you think we're going to get into it, don't you?" Edward asked. "You see it's historically impossible to let England be defeated, don't you?"

"Please," Bess said, "let's not talk about a cross-Channel invasion. Ask Selwyn to come over here with the cocktails, Edward."

"The place is more beautiful than ever, Bess," Willis said.

Then he saw her greenish eyes watching him. "You look more handsome than ever yourself," she said, "with no exaggeration."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 85

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 58 & 59

Vogue Design No. 8512. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress and cummerbund; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

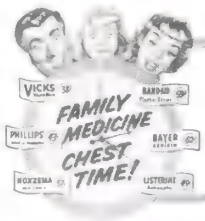
Vogue Design No. 8530. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. 8524. Two-piece dress; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4580. Suit and blouse: sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.50.

Vogue Design No. 8527. Coat; sizes 12 to 44, 30 to 44. 75c.

8512 8530 8524



S-4580 8527

They all use this ALKALIZING LAXATIVE that gives MORE COMPLETE RELIEF!

Whenever anyone in your family suffers from irregularity, remember—acid indigestion is usually present, too. And, because it's an alkalizing laxative, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia relieves both conditions! It gives wonderfully gentle and effective relief from irregularity—and it also eases away the acidity. Thus, Phillips' gives you better, much more complete relief than any single-purpose preparation.

What's more, two to four tablespoonfuls taken at bedtime work leisurely—without embarrassing urgency. So, when morning comes, you start the day feeling fine. Get Phillips' Milk of Magnesia today. It's the best laxative money can buy.

Now! At your neighborhood store

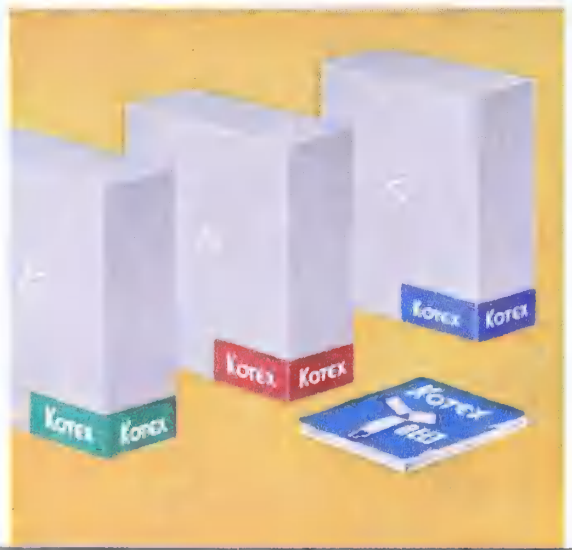
FAMILY MEDICINE CHEST TIME

A 6 star feature display. Offering your favorite drug products at lowest prices.

PHILLIPS' MILK OF MAGNESIA

Liquid or Tablets

The convenient 4-ounce size.....28¢
The economical 12-ounce size.....55¢
The money-saving 26-ounce size.....85¢
Also available in tablet form, 30 tablets 28¢



Kotex now comes in this soft grey package

Selected by thousands of women as first choice of many designs—this new Kotex package reflects the quality you've learned to trust. For Kotex* gives you the complete absorbency you need . . . the softness you're sure of. Kotex holds its shape, keeps its comfortable fit: so there is no roping, twisting or chafing.

Moreover, this is the only leading napkin with flat pressed ends to prevent revealing outlines. When you shop, look for the new Kotex package—soft grey, with a graceful K. symbol of highest quality.

MORE WOMEN CHOOSE KOTEX THAN ALL OTHER SANITARY NAPKINS

Your choice of three size
Regular—blue panel; Junior green panel; Super—ro panel. And with Kotex you want a new Kotex belt. Th go together for perfect comfo

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 83

"It's nice of you to say so, Bess," Willis
d.

Bess said, "I'm awfully glad you're here, ause I can't begin to tell you how much we need you, and we're all going to be good nds, aren't we, all of us, always?"

You could never tell when Bess would do nething unexpected. She held out her hand him impulsively.

"Why, Bess," he said, "of course we always l be."

"Sometimes I don't know where I am with i," Bess said, "and I'm not sure what you're ng to do. I don't blame you, altogether, it makes me nervous."

"Why, Bess," he said, "you mustn't feel t way."

"Why didn't you tell me," Bess said, "that via was so perfectly lovely?"

Willis laughed, and he was very glad indeed
t they were on another subject. "And you e surprised, were you?" Willis asked.

"Now, don't be disagreeable, Willis," Bess
d. "I only meant I didn't know she'd be so standing, and I hope we're going to like h other. I'm going to try my best with her nt after dinner when the boys are listening he war news and you're talking to father."

"Come on, you two," Bill called. "We're ng in."

According to Willis' recollection, there was y one change in the dining room. One of mirrors had been removed, and Mr.
nry Harcourt's portrait hung in its place.
e mouth looked as though it were about to le, and the slightly protuberant lower lip ost trembled. Once when Willis looked up had the idea that Mr. Harcourt actually s smiling at him, mockingly or approvingly.
ere was no way of telling which.

Most of the evening Willis was giving ught to the personalities of the various ckholders he would meet the next day.
went over the list first with Mr. Bryson l later with Bess. He also asked Mr.
yson if they could not meet at the mill at f past eight next morning, an early hour, he and Mr. Bryson should certainly make our of the plant together and meet the pro-ction heads. The keynote of the meeting s to be one of triumph, and at all times good
l. For this reason Willis asked Bill and Bess stand near him when the guests came to the cheon after the meeting in order to remind him of names he might have forgotten. This was a practical step. It would be a help to have branches of the Harcourt family see that he and Bill and Bess, not to mention Mr. Bryson, all formed a solid front.

In the library after dinner, Willis took up another, more difficult subject. It was advisable to tell Mr. Bryson about the common stock he had acquired from Mrs. Jacoby before Mr. Bryson found out from some other source.

"By Jove, Willis," Mr. Bryson said, "I can't tell you how I admire the way you can take hold of everything and smooth it out. I feel that I can let everything go, just the way I could when father was alive."

"It naturally makes me happy to hear you say so, sir," Willis told him, "but I'm going to be on your doorstep, I'm afraid, asking advice about all sorts of things. There's just one more detail I've been meaning to take up with you privately. I hope this won't offend you."

An opaque look came over Mr. Bryson, which always indicated that he was completely confused. "I can't imagine what you're talking about," he said.

Another moment had arrived for directness, and Willis had learned never to shirk on such occasions. "You may remember that Mrs. Jacoby was allotted a block of common stock in the reorganization," Willis said. "She was kind enough to offer this to me for sale, and the transaction was completed the day before yesterday. This may make me a larger stockholder than you had planned, but I hope you'll accept me as such." He raised his voice when he saw that Mr. Bryson was about to interrupt. "And remember that my desire to make a success of everything will be proportionately greater."

Mr. Bryson looked blankly at the end of his cigar while his mind worked with painful slowness. "You say you bought it?" he said. "I don't exactly see ——"

"I was able to raise a loan," Willis said. "You see, I have great faith in Harcourt Associates."

"Well," Mr. Bryson said, "I think that's splendid, and thank heaven Roger didn't know there was any loose stock for sale. I don't know anyone I'd rather have own it. Congratulations, Willis."

"Thank you very much, sir," Willis said. "And now there's one final matter. We were talking the other day about enlarging the base of the board of directors of Harcourt Associates, and you were kind enough to ask me for a name. I think I have a very good one. It's Mr. Gilbert Bakeliss, the bank representative, you remember, who did so much toward adjusting shares and refinancing. It occurred to me that we might offer his name at the meeting tomorrow, if you have no objections. I can prepare a proper motion in the morning and have it fitted in on the agenda."

He did not add that the motion nominating Mr. Gilbert Bakeliss was typed already and in his confidential briefcase.

The whole evening was over at half past ten, and the last half hour of it had been consumed in chatting with Mrs. Henry Harcourt. Everything was finished early so that everyone might have a good night's sleep in preparation for the rigors of the meeting.

The moment Sylvia and he reached the east guest room, Willis was surprised to have her throw her arms around his neck. "Oh, darling," Sylvia said, "I'm so glad I came."

"I'm glad you did, too, sweetness," he said.

"They're such fine people, all of them," she said. "It makes me very proud of you, darling. And why didn't you tell me that Bess was so sweet?"

"Why, Sylvia," he said, "I think she's got a lot of personality, but I wouldn't call her sweet."

"Well, congenial then," Sylvia said. "We got along right from the start, and we've made a date for tomorrow morning. She's going to show me the town and everything."

"You mean Bess isn't going to attend the meeting?" Willis asked.

"She says she's been to enough of them," Sylvia said, "and she'd much rather show me around. You don't mind, do you, Willis?"

"Why no, honey, I don't mind at all," he told her. "But just see you both get back in time to help with lunch."

"She has a lot of character, hasn't she?" Sylvia said. "All Bill's charm plus character."

"Yes," Willis said, "I guess that's so. It's funny, I never pictured you getting on well with Bess. She must have made a real effort over you, honey."

"Oh, no, she didn't," Sylvia said. "We just happened to get along. Aren't you pleased about it, Willis?"

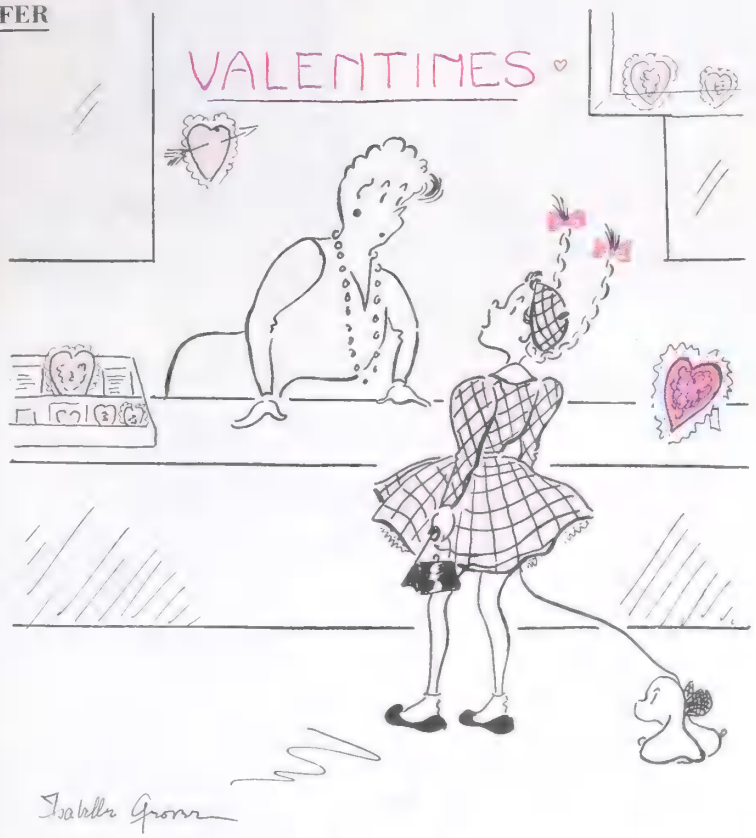
"Why, yes," Willis said, "I think it's swell."

"Well, you don't look pleased."

"Never mind how I look, honey," Willis told her. "I've got a lot on my mind. This meeting's pretty serious tomorrow and I'd better get some sleep."

It took Willis an unusually long time to fall asleep. He wished that his thoughts would not move uneasily. It was logical and fitting in every way that a man of the caliber of Gilbert Bakeliss should be a Harcourt Associates director, and yet he wished that Mr. Bryson Harcourt had not accepted the suggestion so readily. When Willis had mentioned Mrs. Jacoby's common stock, anyone except Mr. Bryson would have recognized that the placing of Gil Bakeliss on the board represented a return for a favor. There was nothing wrong about this fact, and Willis would have gladly admitted and defended it, but Mr. Bryson had seen nothing. Willis could not understand why Mr. Bryson's blindness should bother him when there had been nothing wrong about the whole transaction.

There were days when everything went wrong, in spite of the most careful planning, and others when everything ran smoothly. The stockholders' meeting was one of those. Mr. Bryson read the report very well indeed, and what was more, it held the attention of the audience. After the meeting Willis was able to have a few moments alone with Mr. Bryson while guides were showing stockholders through the plant.



"That was a very successful meeting," Mr. Bryson said, "but thank God it's over."

"I want to congratulate you on the way you conducted the whole thing, sir," Willis said, "and I think the report has got us squared away to a fine start."

"I agree with you about the report, Willis," Mr. Bryson said. "I do hope you think I read it well."

Willis smiled and then he shook his head reprovingly to Mr. Harcourt. "I hate to seem to contradict you, sir," he said, "but there's

NNIFER

"I'd like one 'Mother's' valentine for about twenty-five cents and one 'Father's' for about five cents."

NEW! DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

SAFELY STOPS ODOR 24 HOURS A DAY!

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

NEW MUM®

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

one thing I think we ought to get absolutely straight before we adjourn to the house for lunch. That report was much more yours than mine." Willis paused and looked at Mr. Bryson earnestly. "I know what you're thinking, Mr. Harcourt," he said. "I admit that I wrote that report, or at least a good part of it." Willis paused and laughed. "Between you and me young Sol Bradley—that new promotion man, you know—helped to polish up quite a lot of it. I don't mind that either, because I can't impress on you too strongly, sir, that the physical writing of a thing is not important. It's the spirit and the inspiration behind words that count, and you have given me the spirit and inspiration. In fact, Mr. Harcourt, I drew every basic idea embodied in that report from our conversations. I only put your own thoughts into words."

Willis smiled again at Mr. Bryson, and he was glad to see that Mr. Bryson had followed him.

"It's awfully nice of you to say that, Willis," he said, "and I understand what you mean. An older man can't help but have a few ideas, and it's very pleasant to have a bright fellow like you respect them."

A generous kindliness suffused Willis. He had never felt so warmly disposed toward Mr. Bryson Harcourt.

"Of course I respect them," Willis said. "I'm not forgetting for one minute, Mr. Harcourt, that you're boss of the works. When we get up to the house to lunch, I want everyone to know that I'm right behind you and not in front of you."

Mr. Harcourt was obviously moved, and Willis was moved himself. "Willis," Mr. Harcourt said—and he had to stop to steady his voice—"you've always been true blue, but you mustn't be too modest, Willis."

Willis laughed. "Don't worry about that," he said. "I'll handle the modesty department, Mr. Harcourt."

"I suppose I'll have to say a few words at lunch," Mr. Harcourt said. "I wish I could speak like father. He could always handle everything at those luncheons."

"I know before I hear them that you're going to say some very graceful things," Willis said, "and I know you'll agree with me that after the report, you won't have to say too many, because you've really told them everything already."

"By Jove," Mr. Bryson said, "that's an idea, Willis. I suppose I could say just that to them at lunch."

"I think you've hit on exactly the right note, sir," Willis said, "and then you might say a little something about loyalty."

"That's right," Mr. Bryson said. "By Jove, Willis, if you wouldn't mind I'd like to repeat what you just said about being here to help me and backing me up in every way. You see, I'll have to introduce you, Willis."

"Do you really think that's necessary, sir?" Willis asked.

"Of course you'll have to say something, Willis," Mr. Harcourt said. "After all, who had the idea of combining the Planeroid and Hartex lines? It was entirely yours, Willis."

Willis sighed and squared his shoulders. "If you think it's necessary, sir, of course I'll do it," he said. "But do you mind if I ask you a little favor? Don't tell them that the Harcourt Associates was my idea. If you have to say anything, say what I told you about backing you up in every way, and let it go at that."

At the age of thirty-three Willis was so young that faces lost from the ranks and new faces filling old formations did not move him as they did later. Still, at the Harcourt house, it was hard to place some of the people he had previously known. Heads were grayer, bodies were more corpulent. It was a tribute to Willis' memory that he hardly mistook anyone.

MRS. HENRY HARCOURT and Mrs. Bryson Harcourt were already in the hall receiving guests when he and Mr. Bryson arrived.

"Thank heaven you've got here finally, Bryson," Mrs. Henry Harcourt said. "Don't you think Willis and Sylvia should stand here with us?"

Unexpected as the question was, Willis was able to answer very promptly. "That's a most generous and lovely suggestion, Mrs. Harcourt," he said, "but I honestly think this is the president's luncheon, and the emphasis should be entirely on the president." He laughed because he wished his refusal to be as friendly as it was honest. "I'll go into the living room and help Bill pass appetizers."

Just before he reached the living room, Selwyn stopped him. "There's a telegram for you, sir," Selwyn said. "I took the liberty of taking it myself over the telephone. I hope you don't object."

"Why, Selwyn," Willis said, "I'm proud to have you take any telegram."

Still smiling, he opened the paper that Selwyn handed him.

"Browning place yours at your price," he read. "Congratulations, boy. Lever."

It was one of those days when everything broke all at once. Willis never had dreamed that anyone would take his low offer. It would be a surprise for Sylvia.

The moment Willis entered the living room he saw that Sylvia looked very well in the second suit, of natural linen, that she had bought at Bergdorf's, and very happy as she stood talking to Bill and Mr. Roger Harcourt.

"Oh, there you are, Willis," she called. "I wish you'd been with us, darling. We were looking at some wonderful old houses by the river. We've been having a lovely time."

Hospital-proven!
actually prevents diaper rash!

A new beauty is born! Mennen satinized baby powder in new Baby-in-the-Rose package. 25¢, 49¢. No tax.

No wonder it's America's favorite baby lotion!

This new wonder lotion actually prevents diaper rash, when used after each bath and diaper change. Baby Magic, used properly, heals and prevents the return of present cases! Even most severe rashes cleared fast, in hospital tests.

America's favorite baby lotion checks diaper odor, smooths skin, clears chapping, chafing, cradle cap, prickles. In refillable squeeze bottle, 59¢. Giant economy size, 98¢. No tax. Slightly higher in Canada.

Mennen... Baby Specialist since 1880

BABY COMING?
Smart gift idea!

It's the gift mot wants—"SLEEP BYE"*—the origi all-purpose ov sleeper! Exclus "Baby-Gro" feat lets garment gr with baby! Kee baby warm, com without blankets! No more colds from kick off covers! No pins! Zips over baby's regu garments. Big side pleats, roomy botto Lots of wiggle room! Safe! No tiny legs cau in crib bars. "Best of its kind" says Nu Louise Zabriskie, Director of the N. Y. M ternity Consultation Service. 5 nursery c ors. Washable flannelette.

With Baby-Gro feature (fits baby from mos.-3 yrs.).....$2.
Layette-Size (0-6 mos.).....$1.
Regular (individual sizes) in gay pri 6-18 mos.; 18-36 mos.....$2.

At department and infants' wear stor
MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.
*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg. Co.

Wanted: You!

IF YOU want extra money and have spare time to put to use, this is for you! You can spend your spare time taking orders for magazine subscriptions—and earning generous commissions.

Just send us your name and address on a postal. In return, we will send you our offer with starting supplies. From then on, YOU are the boss. Subscription work of this type can be carried on right from your own home. As an independent representative, you may work whenever it is most convenient for you. Write that postal today. Information and supplies are sent at no obligation to you.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
870 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

RELIEF in ALL these COLD miseries
New Tabcin BRAND

SNEEZES • WATERY EYES • FEVERISH FEELING • HEADACHE • RUNNING NOSE • GENERAL ACHES • THROAT IRRITATIONS • COUGHING •

BETTER THAN EVER

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., Elkhart, Indiana

CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢ and 60¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.

Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

LEARN AT HOME
- to be a Nurse's Aide
- Practical Nurse
- or Infant Nurse

Prepare in spare time for a fascinating, high-pay career. Thousands of men and women, 18-60, are graduates of this physician-endorsed course. High school not required. Easy payments; earn as you learn. Trial plan. 56th year.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 282, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send me free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name_____
City_____ State_____ Age____

'I'm delighted to hear it, sweetness," Willis d, and immediately included Mr. Roger rcourt in the conversation. "I gather you n't visit the plant, Mr. Harcourt?"
"I'm too fat to be wandering around," Mr.
ger said. "And in that connection, do you member what the Chinese ambassador once d at a Washington party when he was ked if he did not want to dance?"
"Why no," Willis answered. "What did he y, Mr. Harcourt?"
"He said," Mr. Roger answered, "why ould he dance himself if he could pay some-e to do it for him?"
Willis laughed with genuine amusement.
That's a lovely story," Willis said. "Seriously, at's an anecdote I'm going to treasure, Mr.
arcourt."
"Listen, Willis," Mr. Roger said, "I wish u'd get off this mister business and call me ger, now that it looks as though we're go-g to see a lot of each other."
Willis had never seen Mr. Roger in such a mpletely genial mood, and as soon as Mr.
arcourt looked at Sylvia, Willis knew the ason for it. Anyone who said a wife wasn't a lp in business was wrong, dead wrong.
"Why, I'd be greatly honored, Roger," illis said.
"Now get along and mingle with everyone,"
r. Roger said, "and allow me to entertain ur wife. Why should I mingle with everyone hen I can pay you to do it for me?"
Nearly all the luncheon guests were stand-g in watchful groups drinking cocktails or mpling the claret punch. Willis crossed the om to say a word to Mr. Decker, of whom illis had always had a high opinion, which d increased during the negotiations.
"Well, Willis," Mr. Decker said, "so you d I have joined forces again to look out for e family." He paused. "You remember eve, don't you? I've been divesting myself of little property, and Steve is a stockholder
w."
Willis had not observed Steve Decker, anding a step or two behind his father.
"Hello, Steve," Willis said. "What have you en doing all these years?"
"Nothing to write home about," Steve said, ut then I've been home so I don't have to rite—just in my father's law office."
"Not married or anything?" Willis asked.
either he nor Steve Decker had the slightest terest in each other, but still they had to lk.
"The girls seem to shy away from me," eve said.
"Sylvia's up here with me," Willis said. "I pe you've had a chance to say a few words her."
"Oh, yes," Steve Decker said. "She's look-g very well. Congratulations on that and on tting the world on fire and everything, illis."
It was a relief when Mr. Bryson interrupted em. Luncheon was ready, and Willis was to between Mrs. Bryson and Mrs. Henry arcourt, which meant that no great convertional effort was required. It was only nec-sary to say that the dining room had never oked more beautiful, which was true. He as able to enjoy the clear soup and the fresh paragus and the dry champagne. When Mr.
yson rose to speak, Willis listened with eat attention.

It has been the custom," Mr. Bryson said, or the president of this company, after wel-ming our guests, as I do now, to say a few ords. On this occasion they need be very few, cause I have said what there was to say in y report to you this morning.
"I only have one additional remark before ffer you a toast. After the meeting I had the casion to talk for a few moments to one of ur employees. All he wants, he told me, is have our enterprise succeed, and then he lded that he would always stand loyally bend me. Knowing him, I have learned to cept his loyalty and integrity as axiomatic.
is with more reluctance that I accept his odesty. I ask you for a rising toast to our w vice-president, Mr. Willis Wayde."
It was difficult to sit alone when everyone at e long table had risen, and equally hard to se gracefully when everyone around the ble settled back into his seat. As Willis stood for a moment waiting, he was conscious of his comparative immaturity, and although he had rehearsed his words, they all completely left him. The table blurred in front of him, but a second later everything returned in sharp focus. He looked up at the portraits in the dining room, a gesture which he had not intended, but one which was a happy accident.

"Mr. Harcourt," he said, "old friends and new ones, I am deeply moved by your courtesy, but believe me, please, I realize better than any of you that the toast you have just been so kind to drink is not intended for me alone, but for all representatives of your new company, the Harcourt Associates. I am, as Mr. Harcourt said, your employee. I have no other purpose for being here than to be heart and soul an integrated part of your new company. The gracious and lovely past of the Harcourt family is with us, and with it are the lessons of Harcourt ability and integrity. The future still lies ahead of us. May I raise my glass and drink to the man who will lead us there, to Mr. Bryson Harcourt?"

A speech was only a vehicle of one's character and personality. As Willis heard his voice, he was pleased by its earnestness and the almost passionate desire to convince that underlined every word. The truth was, of course, that he had been in deadly earnest. When he had finished, he took care not to sit down too rapidly, because he had seen too many dinner talks lose their effect when speakers slumped too hastily into their seats. Even before the applause started he knew that he had accomplished what he desired. The applause was loud and cordial, and before it was over Mr. Bryson rose and clasped his hand. Then just before he smilingly acknowledged Mrs. Henry Harcourt's congratulations, his eyes met Bess Ewing's across the table. She smiled back, but her eyes were inscrutable.

Luncheon was over. The chairs were being pushed back, Mr. Harcourt called, as Mr. Henry Harcourt always had, that there would Take a peek at the new look in Gibson cards!

It's the fresh, gay, young-at-heart look you'll love! Exciting new colors! Sparkling new designs! Wonderful new ways to say just what you want to say! That's the new look in Gibson Cards now at your favorite store. Choose from the complete selection for birthdays, illness, anniversaries, and every occasion right away. Everyone knows there's nothing nicer than a Gibson Card.

GIBSON Greetings
THE GIBSON ART COMPANY
CINCINNATI, OHIO
PUBLISHERS SINCE 1850

coffee and cigars for the men in the library, when a thing happened which Willis did not wish but half expected. He could never say that he was surprised to find Bess standing beside him.

"Let's go outside and smoke a cigarette," Bess said. "I don't believe you've seen the garden or anything."

She should have known that it was no time for them to be walking in the garden or anywhere else, and he wanted to refuse, but at the same time he did not want to be curt.

"That's correct, Bess," he said. "I've had little or no time to do any of the things I should have liked to do most, but I hope, when I'm here next, as I must be before long, that I'll have more time on my hands."

"You don't have to talk as though you were addressing a meeting, Willis," Bess said. "It's only me. Come on outside. We'll stand on the lawn if you like, within sight of everybody. I won't compromise you, Willis."

"Why, with pleasure, Bess," he said, because the only polite thing he could do was go out on the lawn with her.

"Willis," she said, "that was quite a little speech."

"I'm glad if you liked it," he said. "Anyway, I meant every word of it."

"Did you?" she asked.

"Yes," he answered, and he looked at her steadily. "I did, and what's more, I'm in the habit of meaning what I say."

"Don't get angry," Bess said. "I loved what you said, Willis, I really did. But I got you out here to tell you something else. Sylvia and I have been talking, and we don't see why you don't move up here from New Jersey."

"What's that again, Bess?" Willis asked her.

"That plant of yours in New Jersey is just a subsidiary, isn't it?" Bess said. "This is the main plant and the main office is in Boston. Well then, why isn't it sensible for you to move up here?"

Willis put his thoughts carefully together before he answered. He wanted to give a reply, which could, if necessary, be quoted.

"You know, I've already given that idea careful thought, Bess," he said, "but Rahway Belting happens to be an important subsidiary, and I am more familiar with the processes there than anyone else and I also hope we'll need more and more to cover the New York field. Besides, your father will be in the Boston office."

"Sylvia would love it here," Bess said. "We were looking at some of the old houses by the river this morning, and you could live in the garden house until you got settled."

Willis said, "That's awfully kind of you to take such an interest, Bess, but I really don't think the step would be sensible."

They looked at each other for a moment and Willis often wondered whether Bess Harcourt had an idea of what he was thinking. The old loyalties were all around him; the Harcourts were trying to draw him back because they needed him, and he was never coming back. It was time to make a speech that was even more sincere than the one he had delivered in the dining room.

"I'm afraid I must speak a little as though I were addressing a meeting, even if you don't like it, Bess," Willis said. "If there is any problem or confusion here, I shall always come up immediately, but I don't think it would be advisable, not for any of us, for me to be here permanently."

He spoke genially, as he had learned to do whenever he made a decision; he was glad to see that Bess Harcourt was impressed.

"But, Willis," she began, "I don't see why you're being so illogical."

Willis paused and he was always glad that he looked straight into her eyes. "I'm being very logical, Bess," he said.

He had always thought of that conversation as a clear-cut victory, and he always liked the final thing he said to Bess as they walked across the lawn.

"Not that we won't always be friends, Bess," he said. "We're bound to be, because there are a great many things that neither of us can forget."

WILLIS was glad to know that Sylvia and Bess had been looking at houses, because his knowledge enabled him to handle intelligently what might have been a difficult scene if he had faced it unprepared. The scene began five minutes after he and Sylvia were in the Cadillac on their return to Boston.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "Bess and I saw the dearest old house this morning. Its date is sometime around the Revolution and it has all its old woodwork. Of course it needs repairs, but it will be fun fixing it."

"That sounds very interesting, sweetness," Willis said. "By the way, did you see Steve Decker?"

"Yes," Sylvia said. "He was frightfully unattractive. I don't know what I ever saw in him. If we have to come here to live, you don't have to worry about Steve Decker."

"And now we're on this subject," Willis said, and he took her hand and kissed it, "you needn't worry about Bess either. I had a few words with Bess after lunch."

"I've never been worried about Bess," Sylvia said. "What did you say to her?"

Willis spoke gravely but firmly. "Bess seemed to think it would be more efficient if we all came up here to live," he said. "I told her it was impossible."

"But, Willis," Sylvia asked, "why is it impossible?"

"It's impossible for several reasons, sweetness," he said, "one of which is because I like New Jersey. Another is that I don't want you or me or our children to be bossed by the Harcourts. I want to be completely independent."

"Willis," Sylvia said, "no one is ever independent."

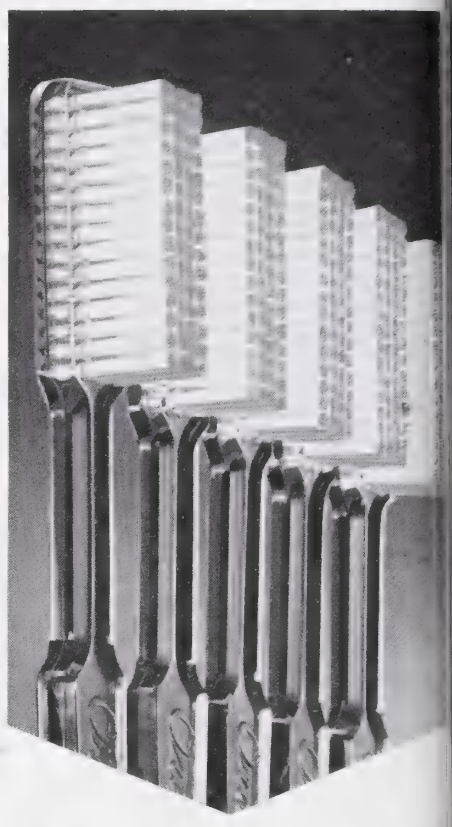
"And besides, I have another reason, sweetness," Willis said, "something which I hope will be a happy surprise for you. What do you think, Mrs. Wayde? As of today you and I are the owners of an estate near Orange. This home is Georgian and brick, sweetness, with a swimming pool and a three-car garage, and five acres. They were in a hurry to settle the estate and you'll laugh when I tell you what I offered. You may want to pick out a few wall-

You love

...lipstick that really lasts!

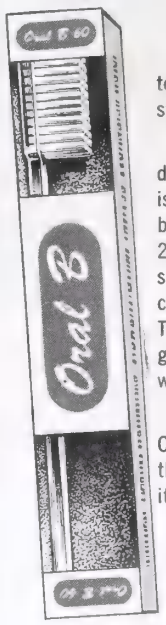
That keeps lips bright as a red rose, hour after hour—never leaves a trail on cups, napkins, OR the object of your affections.

Creamy-smoothness! You want your lipstick to be extra rich in pure, SUPER-LANOLIN . . . to keep lips silky-soft, moist, young-looking!



Newest, prettiest fashion colors . . . in a wide range of clear reds, blue reds, pinks, roses!

That's why Cutex Lipstick is made to order for you! And as for price, Cutex "shines" again! You'd expect to pay a dollar or more . . . but Cutex Lipstick is miracle-priced at just 59¢.



for matching fingertips . . .
CHIP-PRUF CUTEX
Proven America's best-wearing nail polish. In the safe Spillpruf bottle, 25¢. Prices plus tax.

why pay more?
CUTEX

Keep this softer brush
ON GUARD against gum injury!

Most people brush their teeth too hard—usually with stiff chisel-point bristles.

This can result in serious damage to gums. But the Oral B is a soft brush, safe for use on both teeth and gums. Over 2500 very thin, smooth-top, synthetic bristles thoroughly clean out-of-the-way places. The same brush gives your gums a healthful massage without injury, too!

Ask your dentist about an Oral B. Then try it and enjoy the pleasantly different feeling it gives your mouth.

COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE

In 3 sizes...for all the family

Oral B® TOOTHBRUSH

ORAL B COMPANY
448 South Market St., San Jose, California

ers, but we can move in any time. Are you prised? I thought you would be, sweet-s."

Willis could never have acquired the Brown- place at the figure he offered except for a in of favorable circumstances. The affairs Mr. Hubert H. Browning were found to be highly tangled condition after his decease. o, large pieces of real estate were growing d to move. Later, a number of good friends Willis Wayde confidentially that he had ainly had a nerve to buy the Browning ce.

They said this in a laughing way, of course, unch at the outdoor grill or around the mming pool. They would never have ted Willis treasurer of the country club if had known he was up to his ears in debt n he bought the Browning place. He had ve to do what he did, the kind of nerve you only when you were just a kid and knew rything was going your way.

Nerve was a mighty useful asset if you could k it up by faith. They were getting into a er's market and Willis had faith that it was ng to last for years. When Harcourt began ing dividends on the common, Willis was n able to talk to Sylvia facetiously about Browning place and to remind her how cked she was when she had first seen it. act, at one point she had begun to weep. Willis would have thought that anyone ld have fallen in love, as he had, at first t with the bronze of the casement windows the forced hot-air heating and the laundry its electric clothes drier, but he was soon earn that women as a whole never cared for c beauties of construction. It took Sylvia ng while before she realized that they had ly got in on the ground floor when they ght the Browning place.

Willis had arranged that Sylvia and he uld see it just by themselves. It discon-ed Willis to have her laugh when he stopped car in front of the Georgian doorway, with swarming up the warm brick façade.

"What's so funny, honey?" Willis asked.

"Now, Willis," Sylvia said, and she still ghed, "let's get out of here and go where e going before someone sees us and asks what we want."

"But, sweetness," Willis said, "believe it or as Mr. Ripley says, this really is the house, all of it is yours, Mrs. Wayde."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "it's awfully ome to go too far with a practical joke."

"But, honey," Willis said, and he opened the r of the car, "it isn't a practical joke. It all ngs to you and the children, honey. Now get out of the car and I'll tell you what I'll -I'll carry you over the threshold."

Sylvia said, "Have you really bought it?"

"It's hard to believe, isn't it?" Willis said. t it's really and truly ours, sweetness."

Every guest who ever came to "Wayde-n"—a name which they finally adopted at is' suggestion in order to have something ut on the social note paper—always com-ted favorably on the beauty of the hall, ch ran spaciously through the house, and he fine broad staircase. It was disappoint-that Sylvia had different ideas when they entered Waydeholm.

"You have really bought this," Sylvia said, n't you sell it over again?"

"Well, for goodness gracious sakes alive," is said. "That's the queerest question I've rd in a dog's age, sweetness."

"Either I'm going mad or you are," Sylvia , "and I don't think it's me," and then she an to cry.

It was hard to follow Sylvia, but the fact she had made a grammatical error showed upset she was.

"Now, honey," Willis said, "tell me what's matter and see if I can't fix it."

"I always thought you had common sense," ia said. "I never thought you could be so astic. Have you thought that it will take e servants to run this place, let alone a se, and those lawns, Willis? You'll need a all the time."

Willis was glad that they were getting down rass tacks. In the last analysis, taking over use like Waydeholm was a simple question aith and courage.

"Actually I've given the service angle some real serious thought," Willis told her, "and I've noticed, sweetness, that it is an occasional habit of yours to exaggerate difficulties. If we temporarily close off some of the rooms in the third story, I believe that two maids will be able to look out for things for a while, considering that this kitchen's all electric. That only means one more maid than we have already."

"But, Willis," Sylvia said, "what about furniture?"

That was what convinced Sylvia eventually. He had entirely forgotten to tell her about the furniture.

"Sweetness," he said, and he put his arm around her, "you wait and see. All the essential furniture comes with the house. There are rugs and drapes and beds and sofas. We will now visit the living room." He stopped and kissed her gently on the cheek. "Honey, I will have your co-operation, won't I?"

"I'll do the best I can," Sylvia said, and she sighed, "but it's all so ostentatious, Willis."

Right from the very beginning Sylvia always worried about ostentation, and yet in certain ways Willis knew she loved it, as soon as she became accustomed to an ostentatious phase.

"Sylvia, dear," he said, "if there's any ostentation, we'll outgrow it mighty quickly. Someday, maybe before too long, this house is going to look small to you and me."

"I don't see how you can say that, Willis."

It showed she did not have his vision, but it was rather a cute remark, and he kissed her cheek again.

"Let's consider this home as a symbol, dear," Willis said. "Maybe it's fantastic, as you say, sweetness, but let's look upon this whole home venture as a dream we want to make come true."

Maybe he had said it in a corny way, but he was expressing in his own personal terms the thoughts and wishes of any man who tries to build a home, and Sylvia understood him.

new! deep magic facial cleansing lotion by Toni cleans your skin up to 3 times cleaner than soaps or creams now you can have a clearer skin

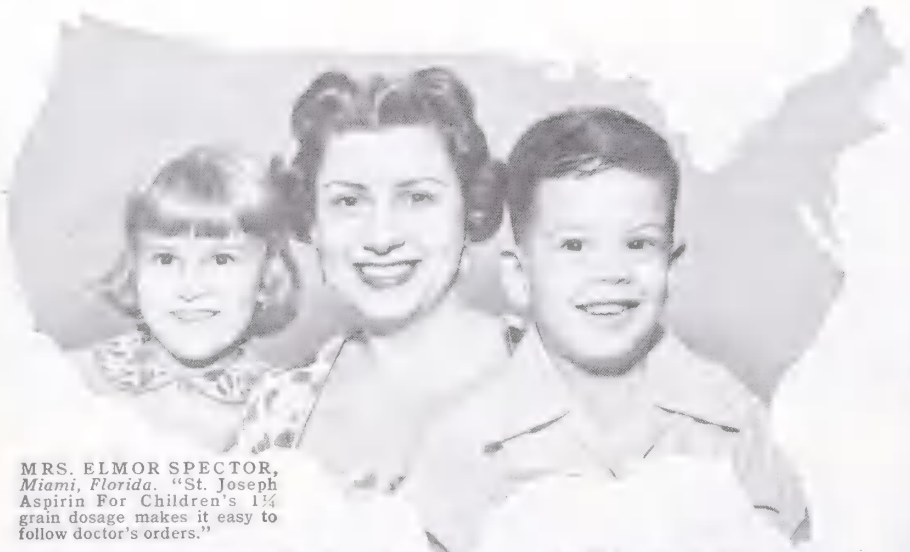
because you can have a cleaner skin. New Deep Magic actually deep-cleans your skin as much as three times cleaner than soaps or creams—without soap drying, without cream greasiness!

It leaves your skin far cleaner, radiantly clear the very first time you use it. Lanolin-gentle Deep Magic actually replaces natural oils, leaving behind an invisible powder base.

Try Deep Magic today. See the wonderful magic it works on your complexion!

(60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, wherever cosmetics are sold.)

non-drying—contains no soaps, no detergents, no alcohol



No other cleansing method leaves your skin

So clear, So soft, So radiant

Tissue-Test proves it!

After you think your usual cleansing method has cleaned your skin, use a few drops of Deep Magic. Then look at your tissue. See all the clogging make-up that only Deep Magic can remove . . . Proof that Deep Magic cleans deep, deep down—where beauty begins!

MRS. ELMOR SPECTOR, Miami, Florida. "St. Joseph Aspirin For Children's 1¼ grain dosage makes it easy to follow doctor's orders."

America's Mother-and-Child Favorite

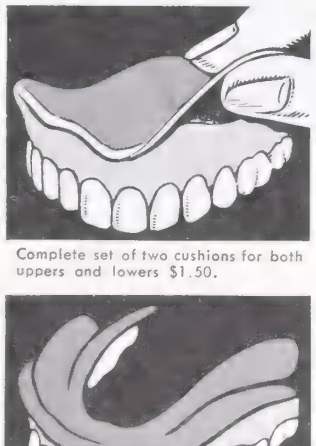
MRS. GEO. HARTMAN, Washington, D.C. "St. Joseph Aspirin For Children's pure orange flavor really appeals to my child."

MRS. JACK CHARNEY, Los Angeles, Calif. "My doctor always prescribes St. Joseph Aspirin For Children. It has my complete trust."

Approved By More Doctors Than Any Other Brand

Your own doctor will tell you St. Joseph Aspirin For Children is made to best fit your child's needs, in dosage, accuracy and flavor. You never have to cut or break tablets to give dosage "just as the doctor orders." Each is 1¼ grains, the preferred standard of accurate dosage measure. Children like its pure orange flavor and take it readily. That's why it usually acts so fast to relieve little ills. Refuse substitutes. Buy it today.

World's Largest Selling Aspirin For Children



A PLOUGH PRODUCT

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

For Your Family's Regular Aspirin Needs... DEMAND St. Joseph ASPIRIN

200 tablets 79¢
100 tablets 49¢
12 tablets 10¢

New Soft Plastic Holds Plates Tighter

Complete set of two cushions for both uppers and lowers $1.50.

Accept no substitutes for new Snug—the only lasting soft plastic denture cushion.

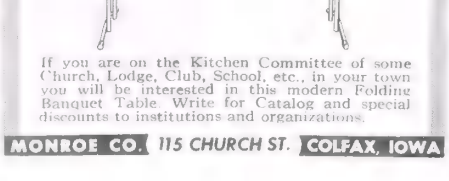
Eases Sore Gums!

Cushions the mouth yet grips plates like "Living Tissue"

Now, quickly stop pain and trouble due to loose fitting plates with new SNUG Denture Cushions. Amazing soft plastic grips plate firm and tight yet feels soft and comfortable, like "Living Tissue". Gums feel wonderful. You eat, talk, laugh in comfort. SNUG stays cushion-soft. Can't harden and ruin plate. Peels right out when ready to replace. Tasteless, odorless, cleaned in a jiffy. No more daily bother with "stickums." Get Denture Cushions called SNUG and do away with your plate troubles. Money-back if not satisfied. At all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1.50 check or money order to Midland Pharmacal Corp., Dept. 26, 45 West 45th St., New York 36, N. Y.

FREE NEEDLECRAFT CATALOG!



OVER 1000 ITEMS AND IDEAS! 40 PAGES THE WORLD'S LARGEST ASSORTMENT

SEND TO DEPT: 308

FREDERICK HERRSCHNER CO.
72 E. RANDOLPH ST. CHICAGO 1, ILLINOIS

Monroe FOLDING BANQUET TABLES

If you are on the Kitchen Committee of some Church, Lodge, Club, School, etc., in your town you will be interested in this modern Folding Banquet Table. Write for Catalog and special discounts to institutions and organizations.

MONROE CO. 115 CHURCH ST. COLFAX, IOWA

"Darling," she said, "I wish I didn't keep forgetting how generous and sweet you are. I see what you mean, dear. Of course I'll help you make it all come true."

Essentially Waydeholm did turn into a dream come true. Willis was not there much during the war and he was pretty busy afterward, but it was always a place of happy memories. As P. L. Nagel said when they walked around the grounds once, it was a sound, efficient home and a good place for showing off antiques, but it was a whole lot more than that. It was where the children learned to walk and talk and play. It was where Sylvia and he cemented many friendships and it was where he bought Sylvia her first mink coat, if you wanted to think of anniversaries. It was sad to pack up and go away, but as he told Sylvia at the time, that was America. Life and progress always meant moving into something new—and better. In life and in business you couldn't stand still in America.

Willis found himself telling that story about the Chinese ambassador again—of all places—in the spacious glassed-in terrace of the Hotel Carolina in Pinehurst in May of 1948. He had just come in from a very happy afternoon of golf, and he was enjoying some good talk before going up to change before the cocktail hour and the banquet.

They were serving tea, as was the custom at the Carolina, but not many were having any. Willis had been sitting with Jerry Bascomb, who had been his foursome partner, and whom Willis had asked down with him for the Pinehurst convention, because it was a help to have Jerry at his elbow in case something came up of a technical or engineering nature. If anybody in the Associates deserved a good time at company expense, it was Jerry, and Willis was just telling Jerry that Pinehurst was an ideal place for business meetings when Alec Bingkrampf came up. He was of course the Bingkrampf who was president of Swanee Power, and chairman in general charge of all arrangements for the Production Liners Convocation at Pinehurst.

"Well, well, Willis," Bing said, "I've been looking for you ever since I saw your name down on the list."

"Well, well, Bing," Willis said. "It's been a long time no see, hasn't it? By the way, I don't know whether you remember my associate, Jerry Bascomb. He was down at Swanee on a little problem a year or two ago."

Evidently Bing did not remember Jerry Bascomb, but then, as Willis was beginning to learn himself, no one could ever remember everything.

"So you were down at Swanee, were you, Mr. Bascomb?" Bing said. "I certainly hope the bunch treated you all right. Well, I've got to be thinking up some remarks for my speech tonight. So long, fellows." Just as he was leaving he stopped, and his voice became mellow and vibrant. "Well, well, look who's here. If it isn't the old horse thief himself, if it isn't old P. L." Alec Bingkrampf was referring, of course, to P. L. Nagel. "Is everything all right, P. L.?" Alec Bingkrampf asked. "Did you get the suite you wanted?"

"Yes, thanks, young fellow," P. L. said. "I hope to welcome you to the suite and thank you with a small libation."

"That will be swell, P. L.," Alec Bingkrampf said. "And you got your locker at the club and everything?"

"Never mind my locker," P. L. said. "I don't think I'll enter in the Tombstone tomorrow. I'm just going to sit and bend my elbow and let the young fellows do the work."

That was the moment when Willis was reminded of the story of the Chinese ambassador in Washington.

"You know that reminds me of a story," Willis said. "Stop me if you've heard it. It's the one about the Chinese ambassador in Washington."

It was gratifying that the story made a re hit, because P. L. and Alec Bingkrampf we by way of being connoisseurs on stories. The laughter, Willis was sure, was genuine, and he listened to it Willis remembered the fir time he had heard the story. Roger Harcou had told it to him eight years ago before th stockholders' luncheon at the Harcourt plac It did not seem possible that it was eight yea ago, but it was.

"Well," Willis said, "I suppose we've all g to prepare to forgather for cocktails."

"As long as we forgather," P. L. said, "let go easy on the preparing. Will you come to th suite, Willis?"

"Come on over to my place, P. L.," Will said, "and try some of my stuff. It all com from Alcoholic Beverage Control store."

Eight years ago when Willis had first hea the ambassador story, he might have bee hesitant about asking someone of P. L. Nagel stature around to the room to have a drin but things were different now. Willis knew th people like P. L. Nagel liked to be treate by younger men in a spirit of equality. Aft all, Willis was forty-one, although he didn look it.

"All right," P. L. said, "but don't ask in crowd."

It was a little sad to hear him, Willis though because once there was nothing P. L. had like as much as a crowd. It never occurred to Willi that afternoon at the Carolina, that P. L could want a quiet conversation with him. H never realized unt later that P. L. migh very well have come t the Production Liner Convocation at Pine hurst exclusively fo that purpose.

There is not an American town of consequence that does not contain a handful of persons, who in their culture and fineness of spirit, are the equals of anyone living.

—VAN WYCK BROOKS:
Opinions of Oliver Allston,
Copyright 1941, Van Wyck Brooks
(E. P. Dutton Co., Inc.)

They weren't build ing hotels like the ol Carolina any more and Willis was sorry The bedroom and sit ting room that he an Jerry shared wer smaller than he pre ferred, but then yo couldn't expect everything at a Productio Liners Convocation.

"Personally, I showered at the country club Jerry," Willis said, "so the bathroom is yours."

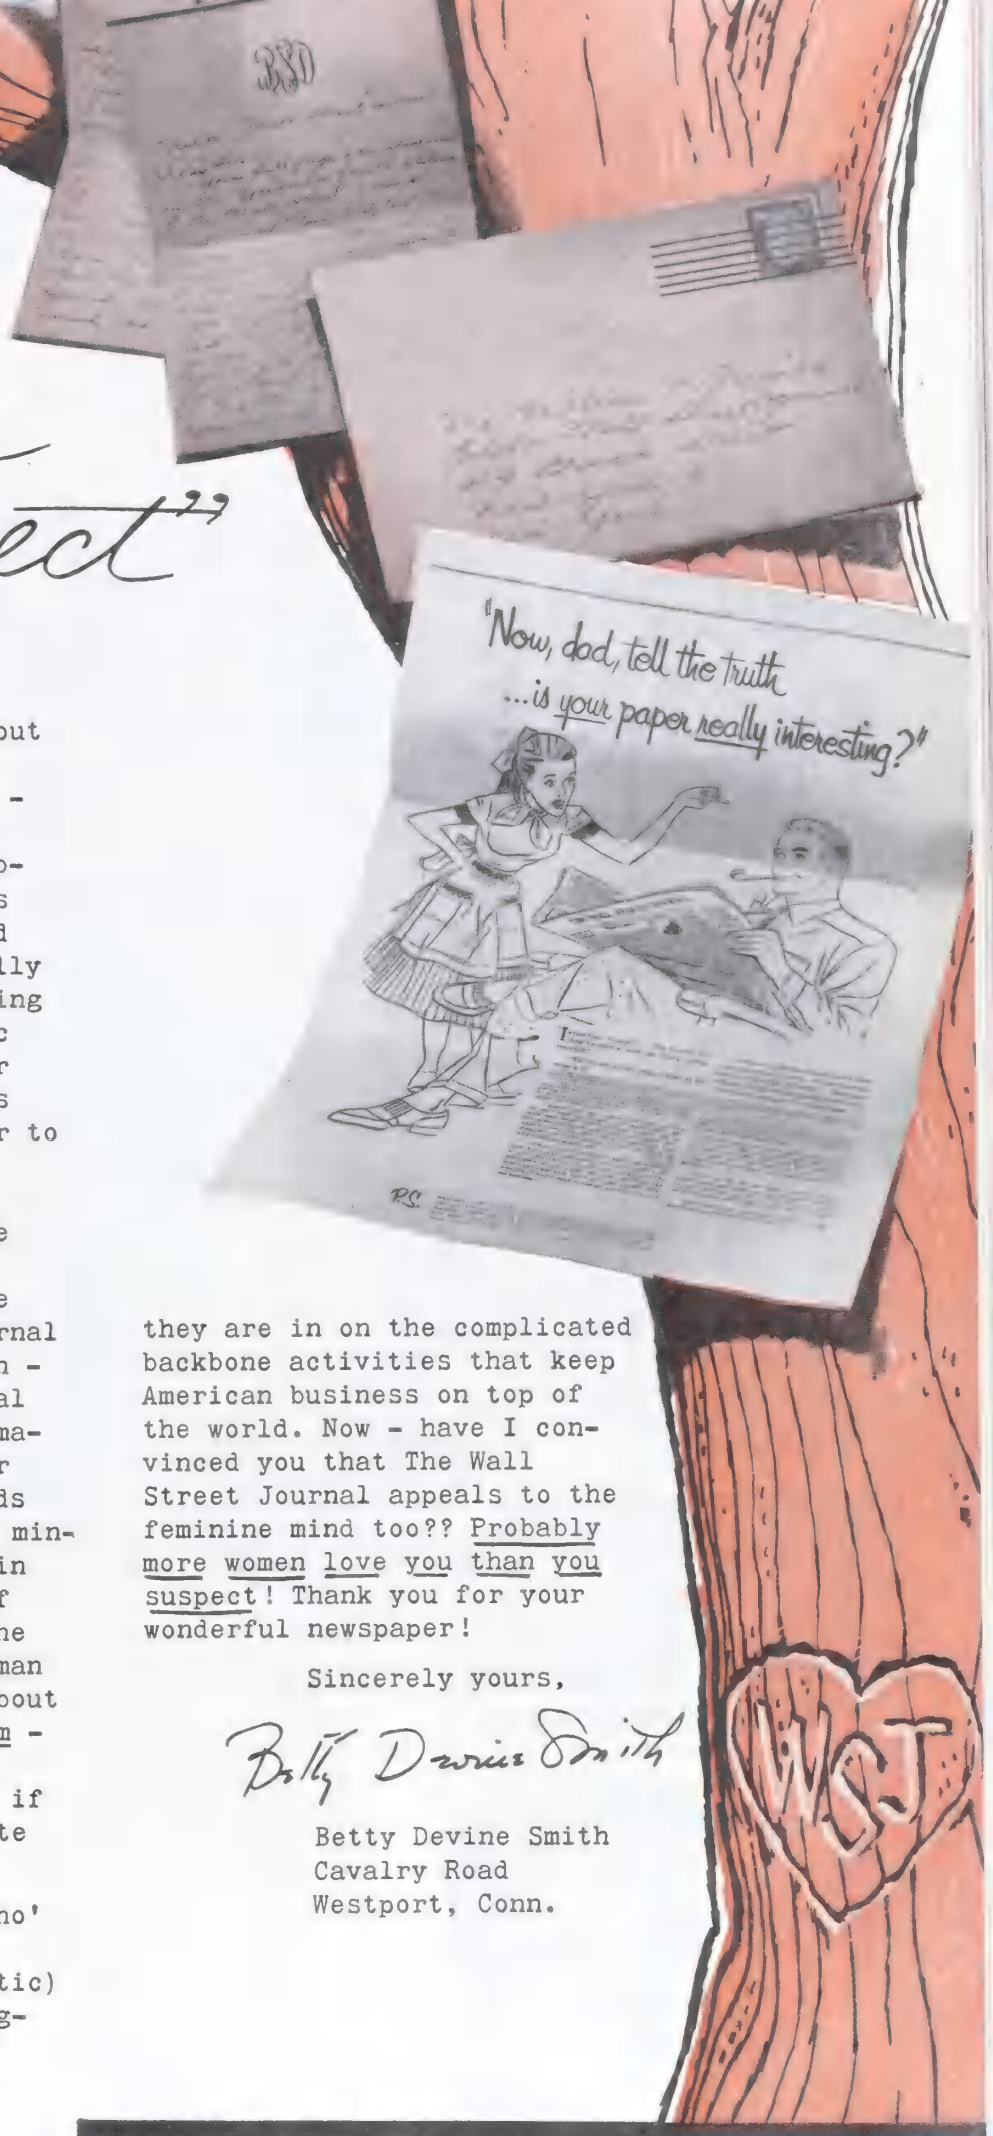
It took only a short time to change into fresh linen suit and white buckskin shoes, bu still time was limited, because Willis wanted t have things right when P. L. Nagel got there and suddenly Willis was worried about how Jerry would fit in. Willis was still considering the matter when he picked up the telephone.

"Head bellman, please," he said. "Jerry when you get out of that tub, would you mind getting the liquor and setting it out here on the writing table? All the bottles. P. L. likes to see lots of bottles."

"Hello, Mr. Wayde, sir," the bell captain said.

"Hello there, Archie," Willis said. He always made a point of knowing bell captains. "Could you rush up some ice to my room and about four Martini and four old-fashioned and four highball glasses, and about six bottles of soda?"

"Would you like some crackers and cheese and a few appetizers with it, Mr. Wayde?" Archie asked.



"As long as you can get it all up in ten minutes," Willis said, "and I won't forget your co-operation, Archie."

It was impossible not to have a sense of well-being on that sunny waning day of a Southern spring. Outside the windows of the sitting room were the fine glistening leaves of a large magnolia, and from its branches came the liquid notes of a mockingbird. The room looked homelike, with the bottles and ice and glasses and a few random copies of periodicals and the house organ, Harcourters Only, on the coffee stand in front of the sofa. The family photographs stood upon a long console table.

"Say, Jerry," Willis said, "I particularly want you to observe P. L. Nagel. He's a fine-type executive, who keeps a youthful outlook. He gives the air of being a playboy, but don't let that deceive you."

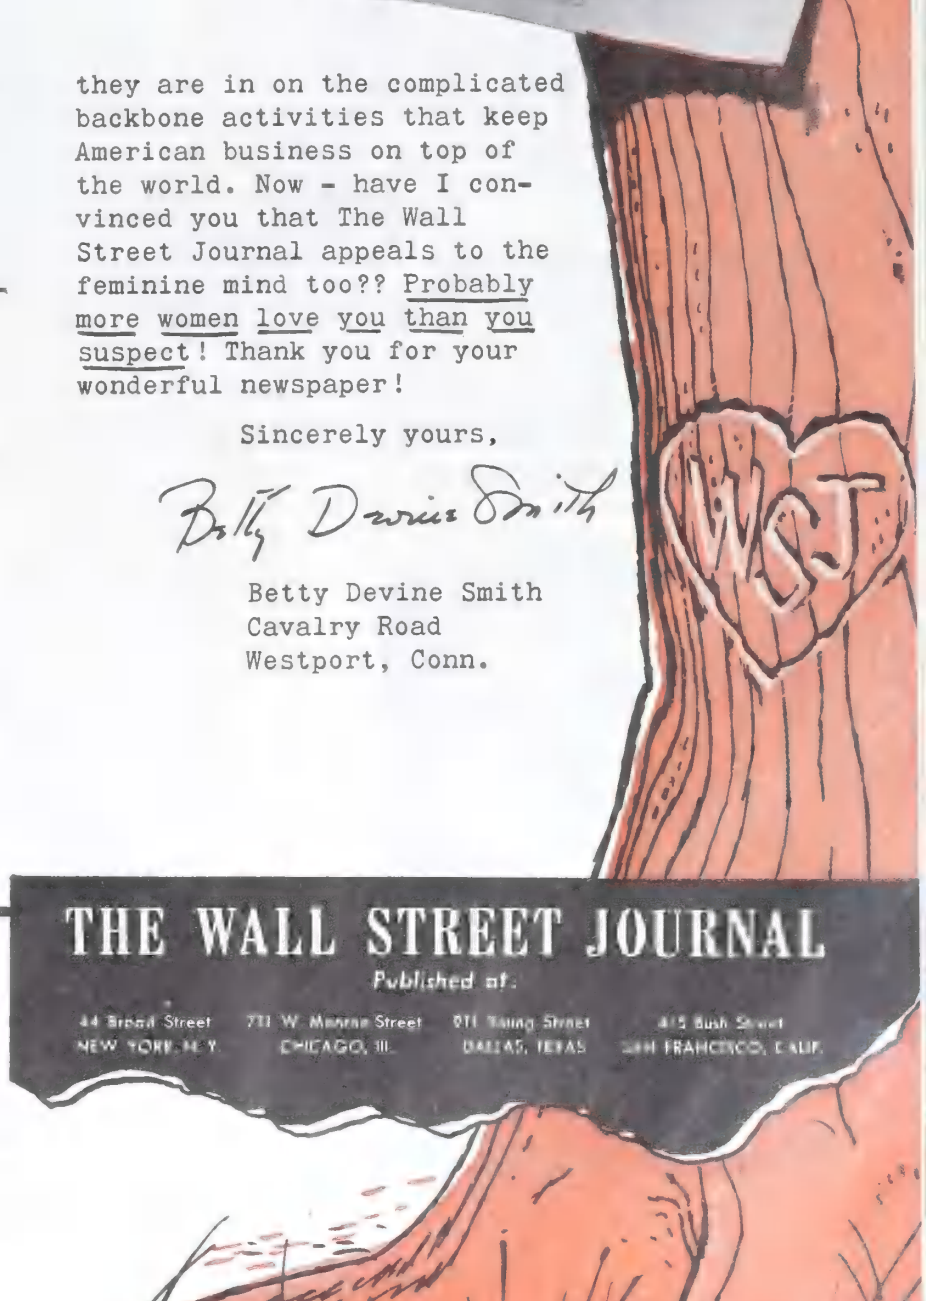
CONTINUED ON PAGE 92

Probably more women love you than you suspect"

illiam H. Grimes
r,
all Street Journal
oad Street
ork 4, New York

Sir:

Your full page advertisement in the November fourth edition of The Wall Street Journal headlined "Now, dad, the truth - is your paper y interesting?" inspires write my first and only etter to a newspaper. uggest in your ad that aper is strictly for men! al years ago I fell in with The Journal!



the What's News column an quickly find in capform the important things on in the world without to wade thru pages of tionalism, crime and . Your feature articles nformative, interesting ducational without being or stuffy. Women are - ould be - just as inter- in the manufacture and ibution of the products ise as the men who pro- them. Your staff writers nt the most technical ts in simple, readable ften humorous style - it over our heads and is fun to read. When I'm nished with The Journal I feel as if I've learned something worth knowing about the varied and far-flung industries of this country - there is so much going on! The inside story on the fabrics we buy, the appliances we use, the food we eat and the cars we drive is actually more fascinating and enduring knowledge than the domestic problems of movie stars, or who killed whom and why! As for recipes - I was happier to read that frozen chicken sticks will soon be on the market than how to disguise last night's leftovers in tomato sauce! Also you have no idea how invaluable Journal material is in conversation - especially with men. Several times I have dropped information gleaned from the paper in a group of bored husbands at my parties and in a few minutes all of them would be in an animated discussion - of course most of them read The Journal too! It gives a woman something to talk to men about that is interesting to them - and you don't have to fake knowledge or understanding if you have digested a complete Journal story.

Let me also add that altho' I am a homemaker (the word "housewife" sounds apologetic) I don't feel "mentally stagnant in a domestic rut." Journal readers feel as if they are in on the complicated backbone activities that keep American business on top of the world. Now - have I convinced you that The Wall Street Journal appeals to the feminine mind too?? Probably more women love you than you suspect! Thank you for your wonderful newspaper!

Sincerely yours,

Betty Devine Smith

Betty Devine Smith
Cavalry Road
Westport, Conn.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Published at:

44 Broad Street, NEW YORK, N. Y. · 711 W. Monroe Street, CHICAGO, Ill. · 911 Young Street, DALLAS, TEXAS · 815 Bush Street, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

s you think that only large and small exof business everywhere are readers of Street Journal. Well, most of them are, they are. But that only begins to picture ication's impact on the publishing scene he scope of its coverage.

rrespondent above, Betty Devine Smith, e of a New York business executive. She er husband's copy of The Wall Street Mrs. Smith is no "typical" reader – for Wall Street Journal readers just aren't typical. They're unusual in their information requirements; they're unusual in their ability to make use of that information. But they all agree on this, as Mrs. Smith says so well: The Journal habit is a most rewarding experience. That's true for all kinds of successful people in just about all walks of life.

And folks, that makes it quite an advertising medium!

Nothing shines aluminum like BRILLO Soap Pads

No soaking, no hard scrubbing! Sturdy, metal-fiber Brillo® Soap Pads whisk off scorch and crust. No need for scouring powders, brushes, dishrags . . . Brillo polishes as it cleans. One quick swish and aluminum gleams!

Brillo Soap Pads (red box) Soap-filled pads
Brillo Cleanser (green box) Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap in every BRILLO Soap Pad

THRIFTIER!
5 and 12 pad boxes

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 90

"I hear Simcoe is going into foam rubber in a pretty big way," Jerry said.

"Yes," Willis said, but he did not want to be talking about foam rubber when P. L. came in, and so he changed the subject. "Jerry," he said, "I was watching you this afternoon, particularly on the twelfth and fourteenth. You're developing the makings of a good sound game."

"I work at it," Jerry said. "I admit golf's a fascinating game, just from the point of view of precision."

Willis smiled. There was no doubt that Jerry Bascomb was executive material.

"Golf is something you've got to cultivate pretty prayerfully," Willis said. "By the way, Jerry, after you've had a little visit with P. L., maybe you'd better get in touch with the kids down the hall. I've just remembered that P. T. Green is throwing a little shindig in the Pine Room—you know, president of the Green Gauge and Roller Company. I don't know whether I can induce P. L. to go down or not, but I'd like you to show up in the Pine Room, and you might indicate indirectly to P. T. that you're our Planeroid specialist. You don't mind, do you, Jerry?"

"Mind?" Jerry said. "Why should I mind?" And then there was a banging on the door, and Willis heard P. L. Nagel's voice.

"Open up there," P. L. was calling. "It's the house detective."

When he was playing, P. L. always was a lot of fun, although Willis sometimes suspected that those playful moods were a sort of iron curtain that concealed many of P. L. Nagel's thoughts and motives. The truth was P. L. was not a natural-born comedian, and yet out of courtesy to an older man, Willis had to act up to the horseplay.

"Don't put the bracelets on us yet, chief," Willis said. "And how about a drink?"

If it was a flat answer, it had the advantage of stopping P. L. from being a house detective. In spite of his corpulence, which had been catching up with him in the last few years, P. L. looked sharp in a beautiful pressed lightweight suit and a canary-yellow necktie, and his growing bald spot gave the illusion of an island surrounded by white breakers.

"Just a tetch of bourbon," P. L. said. "Say, I've just been down at Alec Bingkrampf's with a crowd of wild men. It's my considered prognostication, after several drinks, that they're going to tear this caravansary apart tonight."

Willis laughed in the way one should when playboys and fun were mentioned.

"Have you seen the song sheet those boys have got printed?" P. L. asked. "They've got a real theme song for this convocation. Just hold onto your chairs and listen.

"Nothing could be finer
For an old Production Liner
Than the Hotel Carolina
In the morning."

It seemed to Willis that this was a very obvious effort, but P. L. was watching him critically, and so Willis had to be careful of his reaction.

"Well," he said, "I guess it has the makings of a theme song, but I'm not much of a judge of music."

"Say, Bascomb," P. L. said, "how about sweetening up this drink a little? Say, Willis, someday I'm going to snake Jerry away from you. He's too smart to be in a one-horse show like Harcourt Associates."

Willis rose, laughing heartily. "Oh no you don't, P. L.," he said, "because Jerry's smart enough to know he's all fixed right where he is."

"I wish you young fellows wouldn't get steamed up at a little clean fun," P. L. said. "When did I ever hire a man from out of a friend's office?"

Willis burst into another hearty shout of laughter. "You mean just when didn't you, don't you, P. L.?" he said.

After all, part of the game was being able to joke with competitors in a friendly way. Willis had P. L. there, and P. L. beamed at Willis and Jerry Bascomb.

"You ought not to tempt me by having Jerry here," P. L. said.

"I guess the boss would feel better if I pulled out of here then," Jerry said. "And seriously, some of our crowd has got to show up at Mr. Green's. It's been a real pleasure seeing you, Mr. Nagel. Table Fifty-two, isn't it, chief?"

It was Table 52, and everything about Jerry confirmed Willis' opinion that Jerry was top-flight material. He had handled P. L. very nicely, but even so Willis had a twinge of uneasiness because you could not always tell what anyone, even as loyal as Jerry Bascomb, might do when brought into contact with someone like P. L. This was one of the dangers in conventions, and it seemed to Willis that P. L. looked at him in a questioning way when Jerry closed the door.

"Seriously and all kidding aside," P. L. said, and he rattled the ice in his glass, "it's nice to snatch a moment of peace and quiet up here. Seriously, I'm mighty glad to have a little get-together alone with you, because you've kind of been on my mind lately, Willis."

Willis looked carefully at his old-fashioned glass. When you were dealing with someone of

DAUGHTER TO MOTHER

By WALTER DE LA MARE

I owe you life. Would I had owed you too
What, dumbly, gropingly, I craved from you, but never knew—
What death-sweet dangers I might journey through.
For when this poor crazed heart awoke from sleep
It was in solitude it faced the deep.

Not that I grieve, now deaf to tempests' shocks,
'Twas love that drove my vessel on the rocks,
There are worse shipwrecks. Yet, would I had known
You too had suffered; and, like me, alone,
And comfort giv'n. . . . But you are in your grave.
And the child love gave you, me it never gave.

P. L.'s caliber, you were playing in the big league. You needed to be careful if you wanted to keep your shirt. Willis could not avoid a feeling of suspense, knowing there was something behind every one of old P. L.'s verbal maneuvers, but at the same time it was a pleasure to watch P. L. at work. P. L. was looking in a surprised way at his empty old-fashioned tumbler.

"My tongue's hanging out," he said. "Say, rush me over some more bourbon, and what about you, son? You've been nursing that drink ever since I've come in here. You act as though you're suspicious."

"Why, I was just thinking we might be going down to Green Gauge or somewhere, P. L.," Willis said, "and I was merely saving a little space."

"Well, you just start in filling it, son " P. L. said, "because I like it here. Take a real shot of bourbon, son, and here's to our not being too smart with each other. Get me?"

"Why, no, P. L.," Willis said. "I don't exactly get you at the moment."

P. L. took out a handkerchief and patted the bald spot on his head. "Well, I rather think," he said, and shook his finger slowly at Willis, "I rather think before we're through here you'll get my meaning, eventually, and now let's you and me stop horsing around."

Willis had to laugh, although it was a time when he should watch himself. "If we're not horsing around," Willis answered, "and if you have something you want to tell me, maybe I'd better not have another drink until I get t news."

Even though he felt annoyed at P. L.'s t tics with the bourbon, Willis was relieved th the horsing around was over. The whole te ture of P. L.'s expression changed. He was li an actor off stage in his dressing room at t end of a performance.

"Son," P. L. said, "when you get to be r age, maybe you'll find yourself dreami dreams like I do. Right now I would like t you to dream back with me to the time wh you and I first met. At that period I was suff ing from a head cold, and my sinuses have improved any since. I made, you may recall in fact, I know you do—an offer to Mr. Her Harcourt of five million dollars for that mill his. I was not interested in the physical plant wanted the Klaus patents and other parts the Harcourt process, and Mr. Henry Ha court knew it. Well, he turned me down f sentimental reasons which surprised me, b cause I know and you know, too, that nothi runs long on sentiment—businesswise."

P. L. Nagel seemed to be in no hurry, a Willis began to wish that he would make h point.

"I hope you're dreaming right along wi me," P. L. Nagel said. "When old H. H. turn down that offer, I wasn't worried any. Tir solves most things, and I could foresee wh would happen under Bryson Harcourt's ma agement. It was my idea they'd be glad to s me that property, and they would have—if hadn't been for you, son. You fooled me."

Willis could not help feeling flattered, n so much by what P. L. said as by his utt seriousness.

"Oh now, P. L.," he said, "you know couldn't fool you. I'm not as good as that."

"I wouldn't be sitting here if I didn't kno you were, son," P. L. said. "But just you let m make my point. When you combined Harcou with Rahway I thought it would be a bust didn't envisage how the Planeroid and t Klaus patents were going to fit. I nev thought you'd be giving Simcoe competitio and that you and I would be talking serio business."

"Are we really talking serious busine P. L.?" Willis asked.

"You're damned well right we are," P. said. "And to prove it I'd like you to kind get up and turn the night latch on the door."

Willis was glad of the opportunity to mo across the room and the click of the lat made a satisfactorily decisive sound.

"All right, P. L.," he said, "go ahead a tell me what you want."

Willis was in the better position, of cours One always was when someone else want something. He walked across the room a stood in front of P. L. waiting, and he hard needed to tell himself to be relaxed.

"Sit down," P. L. said. "It hurts my ne looking up at you. All right, I want you in t first place, son, to come in as first vice-pre ident and in three years to be president Simcoe. That's one thing I want and I'm n kidding."

Willis crossed his right knee carefully ov his left. "Of course I'm very flattered, P. L. he said. "But obviously this is something th requires a lot of considering."

P. L. Nagel waved his hand carelessly. "C course it needs thought," he said. "With th punitive income tax there's no use sayi much about salary, but I'm confident we ca do something interesting with stock. I don want to name a figure now, but I want to lea one thought. You're about as far as you ca get where you are, son. On the other hand, t sky will be the limit at Simcoe."

Willis smiled courteously.

"You won't be happy there eventually P. L. said. "Anyway, I want you to be runni Simcoe in my place. I want the very best, a that means you, son, and that isn't all I want Apparently P. L. wanted to be asked wh else he wanted, but Willis' instinct told him was a time to wait, and it was amusing to ou wait someone like P. L.

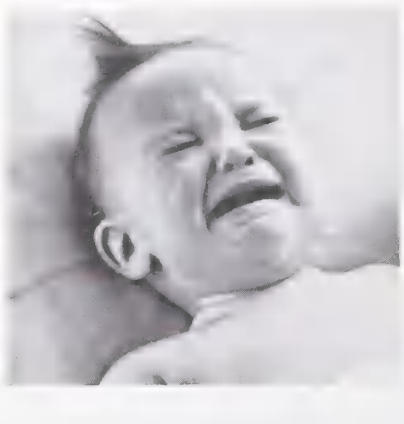
"I also want Harcourt Associates," P. said. "I regret it's going to cost more than fi million. The figure I'm thinking of is in t neighborhood of twenty-five, and now th

CONTINUED ON PAGE 94

You get these crisp, golden Toast Cups from slices of plain white bread

Spry makes the difference!



Here's How It's Done!

Trim crusts from slices of white bread. Brush melted Spry on one side of each slice and fit into 3″ muffin pans, pressing brushed side down into pan to form a cup. Bake in very hot oven (450°F.) 10-12 minutes or until golden brown. Fill with creamed tuna fish and serve as main dish.

Spreading just this little bit of Spry on bread gives you that Spry-crisp crust that adds so much to the flavor and appearance of your favorite creamed foods. You'll agree they're delicious, or we'll return your money. For more, easy Spry recipes, drop a postcard to Lever Brothers, 390 Park Ave., New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

The difference between this...

and this...

is often this...

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 92

you know what I want I wish you would sweeten up my glass."

Willis took the old-fashioned glass from P. L. Nagel. It was not a time to be superficial and he spoke very gravely.

"Frankly," he said, "I need a minute to catch my breath, P. L."

Willis had received several offers to leave Harcourt Associates, and the Nagel offer, though more flattering, could be considered as another of the lot, but the idea of the sale of Harcourt Associates was new. That vague offer of twenty-five million was skillful. It had been dangled out like bait, obviously after P. L. had made a careful study of the Associates, and was conceivably not a top offer. Willis saw that the picture had the unsavory implications of a package deal; but he also knew that he was facing a moment fraught with possibilities that might never come again.

"Well, P. L.," he said, "I'm somewhat curious as to why you want to absorb Harcourt Associates, but then I suppose it's more your business than it's mine."

P. L. took a sip of his bourbon. "I think you know the answer, son," he said. "I like your conveyor belting, and there are certain parts of your process that I would like to combine with Simcoe. It's a high price, but part of it would be an exchange in stock."

Willis cleared his throat. "I suppose," he said, "you wouldn't keep using the Harcourt Mill or Rahway."

He could see already that this was the most disturbing problem in the picture and one which he least wanted to face, and he was relieved that P. L. Nagel did not wish to face it either.

"We would have to make some experiments regarding integration," P. L. said, "but this seems a small detail."

"I'm not sure whether it is or not," Willis answered. "Very frankly, the prospect of closing the Harcourt Mill disturbs me. You remember, don't you, what Mr. Harcourt said about the family feeling for the mill?"

"I'd like it," P. L. said, "if we laid aside this angle for the moment. If you want my guess, a lot of the Harcourt family would like to take that offer. Why don't you face it? With those two little factories of yours, one in New Jersey and one in Massachusetts, you're swimming against the tide. I'm throwing you a life raft, son, because I want you up at Simcoe and I want those processes."

Willis glanced at his wrist watch. It was almost seven, and the discussion could not continue much longer, and looking at his watch at least showed that he was not so impressed by the conversation as to forget the time.

"Well, I must admit that this is all most interesting," he said. Willis stood up and squared his shoulders. "P. L.," he said, "I believe that sincerity and integrity are the cornerstones of any relationship. I am sure you will understand that in my position as the head of my company I am not a free agent, because I am the servant of my stockholders. Also I must add that I believe in loyalty, P. L., and my loyalty to the Harcourt family ranks as high as what I owe my own, especially with Mr. Bryson Harcourt incapacitated. I have to think of these things very carefully, P. L. I want to do what's best for everyone, and what is best for myself comes last."

"That's fine, son," P. L. Nagel said. "I like the way you put it. We both of us are servants to our stockholders, and I counted on you being loyal."

Willis paused for a moment before he answered. "I merely wanted to make this clear, P. L.," he said, "because there was one part of your offer to me personally which I do not like. I refer to my future in the Simcoe Company. That offer sounds to me somewhat like a bribe, an inducement to facilitate the sale of my company and perhaps to forget certain loyalties and obligations. I'm not saying you meant this, P. L., but it's the way it sounded. I want you to know in a very friendly way that you can't bribe me in that manner."

Willis stood looking at P. L. steadily, and P. L. set down his glass. "Why, son," P. L. said, and his voice was surprised and sad, "I guess I'm getting to be mighty clumsy. I like straight shooting as much as you do. I never intended any ulterior motive in that personal offer to you, none whatsoever. I want you as president of Simcoe because you're the best man of your age in belting and because I love you—yes, I love you, for the honest things you've said and for the very lovely and fine way you've presented them." P. L. Nagel pushed himself up from his chair. "Suppose we meet in my room at ten o'clock tomorrow morning and go on with this little talk, and now let's shake hands and no hard feelings, because I really love you, son."

As Willis often said later, the admiration he felt for P. L. Nagel was always pretty close to hero worship. When they shook hands, everything in their relationship reached a new high and all sorts of doubts were gone from Willis' mind.

When he walked down the broad staircase of the Carolina beside P. L. Nagel into the wave of voices that rose from the Production Liners filing into the banquet room, Willis could almost believe that he was already an integral part of Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting. It was ridiculous to let his imagination run away with him, because the whole thing might evaporate into thin air, but Willis was already thinking of what he should say to Mrs. Bryson Harcourt and to Bess and Bill in order to put the situation into an agreeable light.

The halls of the Carolina Hotel were ringing already with the song which P. L. Nagel had rendered earlier in the suite upstairs:

"Nothing could be finer
For an old Production Liner
Than the Hotel Carolina
In the morning.
Aspirin and coffee
Coming in the door
And you only have to holler
To get some more,
If you're an old Production Liner
In the Hotel Carolina
In the morning."

There was one thing of which Willis was positive. If these things came to pass—and every moment he felt more and more sure that they would—he would do everything to keep the Harcourt Mill in operation, out of loyalty to old memories. He certainly would do everything he could—within reason—to keep it in operation.

(To be Concluded)

BORN TO BE QUEEN

"Our child will not be raised in tissue paper," announced Juliana, Queen of the Netherlands. "She is to be called Trix, even by the servants. We do not want her even to hear the word princess."

Crown Princess Beatrix is growing up in as nearly a normal atmosphere as possible, although "it is very difficult to bring up children in a palace." With the co-operation of the Netherlands News Agency and the Dutch royal family Betty Hoffman has written the first intimate story of this seventeen-year-old girl who will one day be queen.

Trix is on a first-name basis with hundreds of people, is not above pulling devastating practical jokes on her close friends and family. She views her future role as queen with quiet seriousness—"I can't spell, and I'll never learn to write speeches!"—but it has not inhibited her love of mischief and high spirits, nor her liking for chewing gum, Cokes, and American slang.

BEGINNING IN THE MARCH JOURNAL

YOUR FRIENDS FROM BREAKFAST TO BEDTIME

om the moment you switch off your alarm ck each weekday morning, until you wind again at night, TODAY, HOME and NIGHT bring friends—exciting friends—o your home. Nothing like these programs sted until NBC-TV created them, brought ether their stars and backed them with full entertainment and news-gathering ources: three unique programs that add to day-long enjoyment.

DAY begins the day right. Dave Garroway, casual gentleman at the left, drops in at crack of dawn with the night's news—d takes you to the morning's news by re-te pick-up. Then there's the weather, the ne, sports news, important guests, amus-guests, amazing guests—and to top it off, J. Fred Muggs, the champ of chimps, cavorting for the cameras.

HOME helps around the house. The disarming lady is Arlene Francis, hostess and editor-in-chief of NBC's "electronic magazine of the air." HOME's staff and guests are the nation's experts on things vital to America's women—fashions, work-savers, beauty hints, shopping news. It began as a mid-day television program—now it is a necessity.

TONIGHT is the evening's last visitor. Steve Allen transplants Broadway to your living-room, and brings the glamour of New York night-life with him; his guests are the stars of the city's best stages and night-clubs. Between turns, there's the late news and the weather. And all this is tied together into a gay, gaudy package by Steve Allen's inimitable off-hand humor. Why sleep?

from breakfast to bedtime, your friends are on NBC-TV

ON THE WEST COAST

In San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco viewers have their own Big Three:

7 A.M. to 8 A.M.—7 TO 8 with Johnny Grant & the regional happenings.

8 A.M. to 9 A.M.—TODAY with Dave Garroway.

11 A.M. to 12 noon—HOME with Arlene Francis.

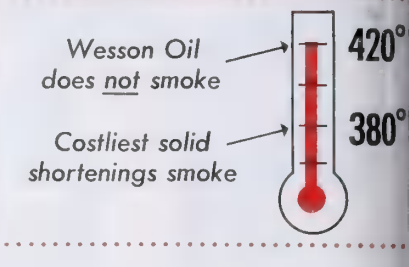
NBC TELEVISION



a service of RCA

This is the safer Wesson way to have delicious fried foods...

See how much higher you can he Wesson Oil than the costliest solid sho enings—and still Wesson does not smo or burn.

Smoke can mean your shortening breaking down. Then it becomes hard digest and harms fresh food flavor Wesson's extra margin of safety mea you are surer always of digestible fri foods with fresh, tempting flavor.

Wesson is easier, too! Pours from bott to skillet. No digging out shortening. melting and no waste. Wesson frying thrifty. You pour only what you nee
In all the world, there's no oil so ligh
so safely digestible and so popular Wesson. How pleasant to know that the good foods you fry in Wesso just couldn't be better tasting or bett for your family.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE—

for Frying, Salads,

Chiffon Cakes,

Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust

and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

SPECIAL WESSON OFFER!

3 NYLON STOCKINGS

(A Pair and a Spare)

SHEER 60 GAUGE 15 DENIER
PROPORTIONED FOR EXACT FIT

Guaranteed First Quality. Sheer, glamorous nylons made for long wear. Color: Muted Beige, for the new season look. Slim, pencil-line seams with trim, hug-tight heel. Fully proportioned from top to toe for true, personal fit. This exceptional value is made possible only by exclusive arrangement with one of the world's largest makers of quality full fashioned hosiery.

Allow up to 4 weeks for delivery.

$2.42 Value!

ONLY $1.00

AND A WESSON LABEL

USE THIS ORDER FORM

Wesson Oil, Box 1028, New York 46, N. Y.

Enclosed is $1.00 in cash and 1 Wesson Oil label. Send me, postage prepaid, NYLONS in size I have circled.

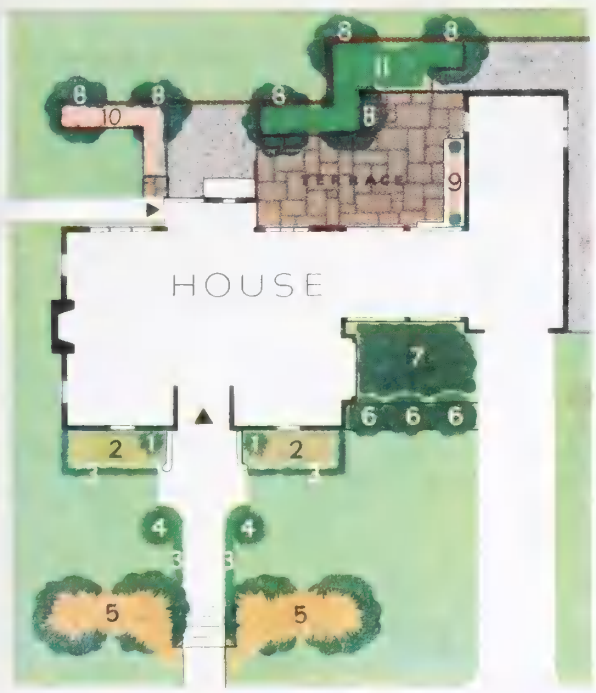
Short	8½	9	9½
Medium	8½	9	9½	10	10½	11
Tall			9½	10	10½	11

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ... State .....

Offer expires Dec. 31, 1955. Offer void in states, cities, or municipalities where taxed, prohibited, or otherwise restricted. Offer good in continental United States and Hawaii.



WESLEY BALZ

If it is hard to believe that the house above with the Williamsburg look is the bleak and bare one at the right, from only three years before, just read how it was done.

THE HOUSE THAT WANTED A WILLIAMSBURG FRONT YARD

. . . and got it in 3 years for $328

PLANTING LIST (in front)

1.	2 Japanese hollies (Ilex crenata) @ $5	$ 10
2.	8 laurel (Kalmia latifolia) @ $4	32
3.	56 yews for edging (Taxus cuspidata) @ $1	56
4.	2 upright yews (Taxus capitata) @ $5	10
5.	4 dogwoods (Cornus florida) @ $15 and 20 spreading yews (Taxus repandens) @ $3	120
6.	3 white birches (Betula alba) @ $6	18
7.	120 myrtle (Vinca minor) @ 10c	12
		$258

PLANTING LIST (in back)

8.	6 Rose of Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus) @ $2	12
9.	Plant box of annuals ($3 per year)
10.	Plant bed of annuals ($4 per year)
11.	40 Ivy (Hedera helix) @ 25c	10
		$22
	Peat moss and fertilizer	48
		$328

By RICHARD PRATT

THE first year's job was to get the four dogwoods off to a good start just inside the front-yard line, and cover the ground beneath them with low spreading yews. This combination planting (5) of colorful medium-height trees, banked under with lustrous evergreens, will gradually grow into an ever-lovelier curtain-wall between the house and the street. Much the same thing was done to protect the exposed breezeway at the right, using white birches (6) as a more informal screen, and evergreen myrtle (7) as a low-cost ground cover. Then to carry on the second year with the Williamsburg look of the dogwood-and-yew combination, the path was lined with an edging of yew (3) and flanked near the doorstep with a pair of tall-growing yews (4), the doorway being framed with a pair of Japanese hollies (1). The third-year step was to plant the bed in front of the house with laurel (2), within the edging of yew (3) that continued from the path. All the front-yard plants are choice, to give that rich and rather formal effect that goes so well with the house. A little trimming of the yews in the spring, and the effect will get forever finer. . . . In back, the six Rose of Sharon shrubs (8) were set the first year to screen the terrace. Next the ivy bed (11) was planted. And the box and bed of annuals (9 and 10) get set out every season.

LOOK OUT FOR TIGERS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

"Working?"

"The hate out of me."

She did not explain and after an awkward moment he said, "You don't look like a hater, I must say."

"No. It's not natural to me. But I can do it—I did do it. It's not anybody, though. Just fate. Just measles, to be specific. My little girl was coming today—she lives with my husband's people—and she has the measles. I'd counted on it terribly much." She moved, almost without sound, into the cabin, came back with a small snapshot. "That's Barrie," she said.

He looked down at the picture. "Incredibly like you. The spit 'n' image, as my mother used to say."

"Like me? Oh, I was never so gay as all that!"

He looked appraisingly from the picture to her, back again, then smiled and said, "Why don't you take your meals over at the camp?"

"I like to be by myself," she said. "I see too many people."

He rose, picked up the net, said, "Then I'd better let you be by yourself."

"Oh, I haven't minded you," she said. "I'm against cyanide, but I haven't minded you at all."

She let him go, not getting up, only putting up a hand in a small wave of farewell.

The next day he rowed straight to that small cover again. A month later he married her. The day he asked her he sat on those same steps with her. He was a calm man, but on this day his hands shook as he tried to light his pipe, and her eyes had laughter in them as she saw this anxiety. But when he began to talk, the laughter went away and she looked down at her sandals shyly. He talked for a long time, telling about the house, his mother—that strange, indomitable, tart, sometimes impatient woman who had died last winter—his job . . . then suddenly, "But I'm not looking for someone to mother me—don't think that. I'm talking a lot because I'm scared. I love you—that's all I really wanted to say." He was a reserved man and the word "love" was one which he had not used since childhood.

"Strange," she said, not teasing him, "I disliked you so that first day. Sticking pins in butterflies! . . . I never intended to marry again. But I seem to love you too."

They were married at the camp and Mrs. Nygaard even baked them a wedding cake.

He got Barrie for her. He said he would do it—it was his job and he was used to being authoritative. It turned out to be difficult, for Barrie's grandparents loved her and had thought they would always have her, but they were just. They let her go. And though unused to children, he loved Barrie at sight. She had a lightness and gaiety that were utterly enchanting.

So he took them to the brick house near the campus. He hadn't known he had such a capacity for happiness. He'd thought himself a little stodgy, old-fashioned, like his house, overcrowded with the furniture of academic knowledge. But Lisa and Barrie loved the house, incredibly—and him.

"Take any room you like," he said to Barrie.

She chose his mother's room.

"Good heavens! She can't mean it," he said to Lisa. "Why, my mother died in that bed!"

"Oh, but Barrie can't even imagine death, Jerome," Lisa said.

So he let her have the bed of heavy walnut, the bookcase full of satiric and scientific books, the scrapbooks full of the ironies of political life, the potpourri jars, the fifteen miniature penguins that Mrs. Denks had labeled with the names of faculty members; the brass umbrella stand that held umbrellas, canes, fishing rods, a bow out of his boyhood; the wallpaper with medallions of dark and gloomy maroon. And Barrie loved the room.

"Your mother must have been a wonderful woman," Lisa said.

"I suppose, on the whole, she was," he said. "She wasn't perfect, but I suppose she was remarkable. She had a tough, skeptical mind. At the end she took to trading on her eccentricities, but she was never dull."

"No, I can see she wasn't. The whole house says she wasn't. . . . I have the oddest feeling—that we would have been great friends."

"You might. She didn't go in for friendships much. Self-sufficient. But everyone came to see her. She could be very humorous. . . . One of the last things she ever said to me was about the hawk moth I showed her: 'Calasymbolus excaecatus indeed!' she said. 'If you're going to be a hawk, be a hawk, not a moth pretending to be one!' She'd have liked it that I married you. . . . I like it too."

She came and sat on the arm of his chair, put a hand out to his hand.

"Me too," she said. "And I know now why I married you. After thinking right off that you were cold and pedantic and—and cruel. It was the way you looked at Barrie's picture—as if you saw it—you've got a loving heart." Then, as if suddenly shy with him, she was up and away.

But he knew, humbly, that it was her loving heart that made all the difference, that turned the dark old house to light. When Lisa said of the old pictures of his grandparents in the heavy carved frames, "Oh, what loves they are! So stern and yet so married!" he began to feel proud of them for the first time. When he asked her if she didn't want to change the old-fashioned heavy carpet with the roses twining over it, her brows went up in astonishment. "Change this? But it's enchanting!" she cried. Oh, everything shone in a bright quivering light those weeks before college opened. Their happiness could almost be touched.

With no feelings hurt, Lisa got rid of Mrs. Snow, who had cooked for him and his mother for years. There were flowers on the table, laughter round the table, and the Bavarian china he had always felt outmoded was suddenly right and belonged to the paneled room with its deep window looking toward the campus.

"Mrs. Snow was dreadful, but you ought to have someone," he said to Lisa.

"Oh, I like making a house go," she said. "I like it."

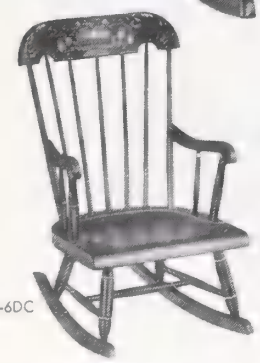
There was only one moment in those weeks that was not perfect. That was the very day after they came. "And this is my room," he said. "I don't let anyone else so much as dust here. But you may come in." It was the room lined with the cases containing his collection. The walls were covered with the small winged creatures of his passion, and other cases lay on tables or were propped against baseboards. There were a workmanlike table where he mounted his specimens, a desk, one chair—that was all. She didn't answer, didn't come in, but stood there in the doorway, poised for flight as he had first seen her. He looked up, wanting her in, but she said, "No, I won't come in. Everybody should have one room no one else can enter—shouldn't he?" He agreed, he always had agreed, but he was hurt astonishingly much because she didn't come in.

But that was the only flaw those first weeks. Barrie came in. She would sit for hours, watching him in fascination. He taught her common names—luna, wood moth, hummingbird moth—showed her the "green house with gold nails" out of which would come the monarch butterfly. But the last day before Barrie went off to kindergarten, he came into his room and saw something big and unfamiliar in his cyanide jar. It was a fair-sized toad, quite dead. He called Barrie and she admitted at once that she had put the toad there. "For you," she said, with her bright curly smile. He thanked her, but told her carefully about the dangers of cyanide, and he also told her that his interest was channeled into one line, that of the lepidoptera. He didn't talk down to her and he was not angry and she seemed to understand. He did not tell Lisa of this and was conscious that he had not. Oh, little flaw—hardly discernible. And the rest happiness, pure, unflawed.

NEXT MONTH

"I knew everything then that I needed to know. I knew the answer, too, but you don't win the impossible battles unless you are fighting for something greater than yourself . . . something you believe in the way I believed in Jonathan."

● The choice was hers and hers alone—the decision between victory and defeat, between light and darkness, between even life and death. And Sarah Lathrop had to choose, for she stood



AT THE EDGE OF THE SHADOW

By ELIZABETH BACON RODEWALD

complete in the March JOURNAL

72-6DC

X55-6DC

What better welcome than to offer your favorite chair? And once you try this Boston Rocker it will be your favorite. Nothing can surpass its comfort. The high back supports your head, the graceful spindles rest your body. The low-slung seat is an invitation to relax. Your friends will think you own an original when they see this flawless reproduction. Black and gold, mahogany and gold, and in a variety of other colonial finishes.

CHILD'S BOSTON ROCKER — A miniature replica of your own Boston Rocker . . . delight of delights for little boys and girls. Black and gold, mahogany and gold, as well as other finishes.

Since 1857

Nichols & Stone

The Home of Windsor Chairs

How to Smarten Your Home with authentic reproductions of Early American chairs. Ideas, room illustrations and complete historical information. All yours for only 25c a copy.

NICHOLS & STONE CO., BOX 42, GARDNER, MASS.
Please send me your booklet "Traditionally Modern." Enclosed is 25c in coin.

Name_____ Street_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

e sat near him while he wrote letters. pt when he worked in his room, she was ys near him.

'ou write so many letters," she said.

do at that," he said. "Lepidopterists have ıd of world club."

wrote so many letters during the war. I've r wanted to write any since," she said. don't ever go away—I won't write to ıd he forgot his letter, turned and smiled r and said, "But I won't ever go away." almost dreaded having college open. He d her good-by that morning and said, n't vanish, will you? I'll be back for n."

had to listen all morning to the con-ılations of his confreres. "Well, Denks! ou've done it! That I should live to see the " That was the hearty Frazier. "Good for Jerome! And a family made to order, I !" That was Edmonds, who was a little ed on the subject of children because his could not bear any. Dean Graham called into his office and said, "This is fine, ks. I'm very pleased. Mrs. Graham wants ve a tea or dinner or something for your She'll call you. We've often talked of a fine son you've been—you ought to e as good a husband!" He was fatherly, kling, kind, a little pompous. He liked r Johnson's "Why, you sly old so-and-so! erine saw her in the supermarket and she you never found her poring over a rential-calculus book!"

hen he got home, she had not vanished. 'ou're going to have callers," he said. eryone's so surprised. Well, I'm surprised lf. . . . I couldn't tell them you didn't like le."

)h," she said, "did I ever say I didn't like le?"

)idn't you? The first day I saw you?"

)id I? How could I have! . . . I love peo-. . . I hope they'll like me."

)on't be humble," he said. "They'll like don't feel like a professor's wife. I don't the rules. But I'll try to learn."

f you change by so much as a hair, I'll you," he said.

e came home the next day and found erine Johnson there, laughing, drinking rom a cup that had been on the top shelf ng as he could remember. Lisa smiled at quickly but then turned and smiled in seemed the same way at Katherine and as obscurely troubled. Then Barrie came nd Katherine made friends with her at and asked her to come on Saturday to with her Linda.

HE's awfully like you!" she said to Lisa. ust outside," Lisa said.

ter she had gone Lisa said, "She's fun!" he thinks you're too good for me."

sa laughed, touched his hand, then bent ke the tea things away. She looked happy. ıe dean and Mrs. Graham came together. always did everything together and peo-said that the dean didn't even have a ght of his own. "My dear," said Mrs. ıam, "we are so pleased that Jerome has d himself a wife. He's been so patient, so ful, all these years and we want to see him rded. We do hope you'll like our little emic world."

And what shall I do if I don't?" Lisa said, smiling straight at the heavy, kind face.

But you must, my dear," Mrs. Graham "It's part of being Jerome's wife."

nd after they had gone, Lisa said, "I liked He's stuffy, but I liked her. When I'm old)e just like her."

e laughed. "Never!" he said. "Never, in a sand years!"

ut the next time he met Mrs. Graham on campus, she paused, held out her hand to and said, "Jerome, we all thank you—I k you. Your Lisa is lovely." Then she t stiffly, heavily on her way to Dean ham's office, leaving him as startled as if statue of Diana by the pool behind the Building had come to life and kissed him. Irs. Snow came to sit with Barrie and they t to the Grahams' for dinner. Lisa put on ack velvet dress, very plain, with a stiff collar and no trimming except gold balls for buttons down the front. "Am I all right?" she asked Jerome.

"You're beautiful," he said, but frowned a little. "Too beautiful—you'll startle the faculty," he added. But there was nothing wrong with the dress. It was just her air of radiance, something the Dunn College faculty wives seldom possessed.

Then after dinner Katherine Johnson said, "I wish someone would play for me. Doesn't anyone ever play on your beautiful piano, Mrs. Graham?"

"Hardly ever," Mrs. Graham admitted.

"Why, I'll play for you," Lisa said. He saw her on the piano bench, the velvet dress swirling softly out about her; her fair head bent, and the room was full of sweet sadness, all the dreams of youth and love that were in the past for most of those there. He hadn't ever known she could play at all.

"It's the nicest dinner party you've ever had," Katherine said; and Mrs. Graham said, "I liked it, too, Katherine."

On the way home Lisa said, "I am going to love your friends. Even the dean seemed quite gentle and nice tonight."

He meant to say, "They were nice because you charmed them," but he said only, "They can be very dull. . . . I'm sure no one has touched the Graham piano in twenty years."

She was quiet a moment, then she said, "You mean I shouldn't have?"

"Oh, no! A little frivolity is good for us all, I'm sure."

But he saw some of the light die down in her and was ashamed. He hadn't meant to subdue the light.

The next morning he met Professor Link in the corridor and Link paused and his dry, withered face cracked into a smile. "Statistics deny the possibility," he said. "Nevertheless, Denks, if you could produce fifteen children, the world would be a better place. Teachers don't do their duty toward leavening the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 101

Now you can order these fine old patterns again

1847 ROGERS BROS.

exclusive re-order service!

Now for a limited time . . . you have an opportunity to "fill in" these beautiful old 1847 Rogers Bros. patterns.

Just check the pieces you want and visit your jeweler or silverware store. But hurry! Order must be placed before March 1, 1955 for September delivery.

The following are available in each pattern shown here: A. D. Coffee Spoon, $.90; Berry Spoon, $3.50; Butter Knife, $1.75; Butter Spreader, $1.90; Cold Meat or Serving Fork, $3.50; Dessert Spoon, $1.90; Dinner Fork, Regular, $1.90, Viande, $1.90*; Dinner Knife, Regular, $3.00, Viande, $3.00*; Gravy Ladle, $3.50; Iced Drink Spoon, $1.90; Oyster Fork, $1.90; Round-Bowl Soup Spoon, $1.90; Salad Fork, $1.90; Sugar Spoon, $1.75; Tablespoon, $2.25; Teaspoon, $.90. Convenient terms.

*Not available in Old Colony.

1847

1847 ROGERS BROS.

America's Finest Silverplate

A product of The International Silver Co.

Have the last word in a salad–deviled ham whip!

It's marvelous served with peas with flavor range☆

☆ a happy blending of sweetness and richness because these DEL MONTE Peas are selected from all the flavor-filled middle sizes

Nature's pet peas are the middle-size ones. She gives them all her very best-tasting flavors—from sweetness to richness. And it's that wonderful range of flavors that makes a batch of fresh garden peas taste so good.

That's why we select the tenderest and tastiest peas of all the middle sizes—and only the middle sizes—for DEL MONTE Early Garden Peas. That's why you get such full, natural flavor. Why not give them a try?

GARDEN BUFFET SALAD

- 2 No. 303 cans DEL MONTE Brand Early Garden Peas
- 1 medium-large cauliflower
- 2 cans (2¼ or 3-oz. size) or 1 can (4½-oz. size) deviled ham
- 1 to 2 tablespoons DEL MONTE Catsup
- 1 cup basic clear French dressing
- 1 glass (4 to 6 oz.) Roquefort or Blue-type cheese spread (pimiento cheese spread may be substituted)

Chill peas in refrigerator (or drain and marinate in French dressing while chilling, if preferred). Break raw cauliflower into flowerets of about equal size. Cook, covered, in boiling salted water till just barely tender; do not overcook. Drain; chill. With a fork, whip deviled ham with enough catsup to give consistency of thick whipped cream. At serving time, drain peas; arrange on plate with cauliflowerets as shown; spoon deviled ham whip along inside edge of cauliflowerets. Garnish with greens. Combine French dressing with cheese spread; beat with rotary beater till smooth. Serve in separate bowl. Serves 8.

Del Monte® Early Garden Peas

—the brand you know puts flavor first

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 99

mp." He went on without waiting for a ply. Johnson: "Well, for once Katherine was ght about a newcomer! Anyone who can ve a Graham dinner is something!" And latthews, who had always held himself aloof, aving had a book of poetry published, gave erome a smile of real friendliness as he came ut of his classroom.

He tried to put it right about the music. He ent to old Mrs. Braithwaite and made her an ffer for her grand piano that she wanted to ll but wanted to sell to the right person. He dn't have to bargain or argue. "You can ve it. Glad to have you have it," she said. Just waiting for someone like your wife to me along and play it. You've done well for urself, Jerome. Unlike most old bachelors."

Then the piano was there and Lisa was run-ng down the stairs, calling out, "Oh, Jerome! ow extravagant of you! How sweet!" She n her hands along the keys. "Lovely—vely!" she said.

"At least I won't have to go out to dinner hear you play for me," he said.

She let her hands fall, said, "You did mind y playing at Grahams'."

"Don't be silly!" he said.

It wasn't her playing he had minded, just e not even knowing she could play. But how say that? He watched her going off to meet rrie, bareheaded, without a coat, saw the n leaves drifting down and was sad, con-ious of being wrong, unable to say so.

Barrie was enchanted with the piano and anted to take lessons but Lisa said, "She'd tter wait. She isn't disciplined enough yet—e doesn't like to finish ings. Scales can be very dious at five."

Lisa played for him nen he asked her, but he ew that a little of the joy d gone out of his gift and knew why. He loved r very much, but he knew at his motive in buying the ano had not been wholly ve. But he did love her. So uch that he could not bear at there were rooms in her life he was not en asked to enter. Then a few days later he me in to the sound of music and singing. He lked in and half-a-dozen students and atherine Johnson stood around the piano. "Oh, hello, Professor Denks!" one of the ys called. "Mind a racket?"

"Not at all," he said. But almost at once ey had gone, except for Katherine.

"You ought to sing, Jerome," Katherine id. "I feel free as air. . . . You might as well, r your house is going to be overrun with ys who fall in love with Lisa here."

Lisa laughed and said, "They're so terribly ung, aren't they? I loved hearing them sing, ough, didn't you?"

"I did indeed," Katherine said. She looked e a New England spinster, with her black ir pulled straight back from her thin face. Nicest thing any professor can do, most use-l, is to have a house where the young con-egate. . . . Nice house for it—never realized I guess because I never came here much—ur mother scared me silly."

"And you're not afraid of me?"

"Not in the same way," Katherine said.

AFTER she had gone Lisa said, "I do like r—and it was jolly having the boys drop in th her. She's right, you know—about what u get from college. I'm glad they want to me to your house."

"Even if they all fall in love with you? I n't imagine anything more annoying. A shman in love is a pretty sickening spectacle."

"Oh? More than a professor?" Her voice as teasing, loving. "You don't want them to me?"

"Why, I don't mind. If it amuses you."

It was the next night, two weeks after the ent, when Lisa learned about the toad in the anide bottle. "Would you like a grass-pper?" Barrie asked eagerly. "I could get u hundreds, thousands, millions! I won't t it in the jar like the toad!"

"Barrie!" Lisa said, shocked to a sternness rome had never heard in her. "You put a ad in the jar?"

"Well, I thought he wanted it," Barrie said. "I thought it would surprise him. Is a grasshopper a butterfly, mummy? . . . You couldn't put a toad under a glass anyway—he's too fat, he'd squash!"

Lisa just stood very still looking at them. She said no more then, but that night she said to Jerome, "Would you mind if I got a puppy for Barrie—or a cat? I'd keep it out of your possessions."

"Why, get her anything she needs," he said. "I can't say the thought of a puppy overjoys me—and you'd have all the care of it."

"A CAT would do," Lisa said. "They aren't so destructive."

"She seems very happy without a pet," he said.

"It isn't for happiness I want it," Lisa said. "The toad—it frightened me, Jerome. I want her used to life."

"One has to get used to death too," Jerome told her.

"I know . . . but I'm on the side of life, Jerome—I want Barrie on that side too. I'm not saying it very well."

"It's your house—your responsibility," he said stiffly. "Get an elephant if you want to."

She turned away, but two days later there was a small gray cat in the house. Jerome met one of his students, young Perry, in the hall and Perry grinned at him and said, "Did Barrie like the cat?"

"Oh, was that your contribution?" Jerome asked dryly. "Barrie's enchanted."

Perry flushed and stammered something about hoping it wasn't a nuisance—he'd thought Mrs. Denks really wanted one—and so on.

"Oh, she did—she did. She's very grateful to you," Jerome said and got away.

So now there were four of them in the house. Nearly always more, for as autumn drifted toward winter, more and more often the house ran over with callow youths who brought their favorite books, their love affairs, their religious problems, their hopes and fears and strewed them about his house. There was much laughter there, often music, and he grew used to boys sitting on the floor in front of the fire, talking, talking, pouring out their half-baked philosophies. "Oh, come in, Jerome—come in! Sit here!" Lisa would say. Sometimes he forced himself to come in, but he had been used for years to his mother's mature, astringent comments on life and he was impatient with youth for not growing up faster. And these boys had never come before, had they?

One night after they had had coffee and toast by the fire, he came down to the kitchen and said, "If there's anything left, I might have a bite."

Lisa opened the refrigerator, then said, "You don't begrudge them toast, do you, darling?" She spoke lightly, and yet the moment was important and Jerome knew it was important.

"Oh, of course not," he said impatiently. "But they do take up space and time."

"But what are space and time for?" Lisa asked.

"I suppose I want it all for us," he said, and over her face went a look of such sweet radiance that he felt wildly happy and terribly grateful that for once his lips had spoken the same words as his heart.

"Oh, but we have time, darling—we have all the time there is," Lisa said. She poured him coffee and sat with him at the kitchen table and all was well between them for a little while.

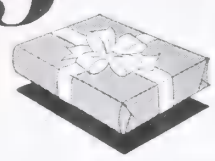
For a little time. The very next day a boy who had always been inattentive in class, apt to cut classes, came up to him and made overtures by way of asking help on a problem. He helped the boy, but with specific brevity, wanting to say to him, "I see through this overture. It has nothing to do with me. It is only a path to my house—to her."

Oh, he did love her; make no mistake about that. But he was unversed in the ways of love, in the words, and there was always this small flaw, this small resentment that there was some part of him she did not even want to know, and that there were parts of her she did not reveal to him. He knew when he made mistakes, but because of the flaw he was sometimes stiff when he meant to be loving, sometimes reticent when he should have spoken.

It wasn't only the boys. There had never been such a series of faculty parties as during that fall. Or perhaps they had always had them and he had been left out, or refused to go on account of his mother. Now he had no excuse and he and Lisa seemed always to be going somewhere, to the Johnsons' or the Grahams' or the Everts'. And the parties were gay and the talk more adult, but one could see with half an eye that it was Lisa who made the parties gay, that through her new life had flowed across the campus.

Then one day he said, "That's going too far—a breakfast party! You go if you like, but I'm way behind on letters and I'm going to stay home and do some."

"Oh, Jerome!" Lisa said, disappointed. "Katherine's counting on us. But I won't go if you'd rather not."



"No, you go. They won't miss me. I really have to work."

"Stay with me," he wanted to say. But she went off, taking Barrie. He went into his room Men occasionally stumble over the truth, but most of them pick themselves up and hurry off as if nothing had happened.

—WINSTON CHURCHILL
(Copyright: Odhams Press Ltd.)

You can give anyone a book!

On so many occasions, the one perfect gift is a book. Chosen with a particular person in mind, a book helps you mark an anniversary, thank your hostess, cheer up a sick friend, delight a gardener, reward a good child, reassure an expectant mother, please a good cook. Even more appreciated than a greeting card, the cost of a book is so reasonable, too.

Select one of these Better Homes & Gardens books wherever books are sold. If you prefer to order by mail, remit to Better Homes & Gardens, 904 Meredith Building, Des Moines 3, Iowa. All these books are guaranteed on a satisfaction-or-refund basis.

HANDYMAN'S BOOK. A money-saving guide in every home. Even an inexperienced home handyman finds himself able to make repairs and improvements well. Over 1600 step-by-step pictures. $3.95 (Canada, $4.50).

NEW* COOK BOOK. Every dish a success every time. For every recipe is triple-tested. This book won't let you fail. Over 5½ million copies in use. America's favorite cook book. Only $3.95 (Canada, $4.50).

GARDEN BOOK. Making the garden bloom without making mistakes. "How to" directions on every phase of garden care, in 520 loose-leaf pages filled with over 1000 drawings and photographs. Priced $3.95 (Canada, $4.50). Half a million copies in use.

BABY BOOK. Endorsed by over 14,000 doctors as a daily guide. A wonderful source of comfort and reassurance when questions arise about the baby's health or behavior. Step-by-step photographs, timetables, charts, menus. Only $2.95 (Canada, $3.50).

DIET BOOK. New! Not "dieting" but DIET! At last, relief from the bug-a-boo of starving to reduce. Instead, a medically-approved approach to year-round, safe and sane eating. Gain or lose weight as fast or slowly as you like. $2.50 (Canada, $2.95).

STORY BOOK. Now in one big book, 50 stories, fables, rhymes . . . all famous classics for children aged 3 to 8, all approved by responsible educators. With illustrations taken from the original editions. Big, legible type. Only $2.95.

and the cat was on his table, curled up, purring. He lifted it, put it out in the hall, closing the door firmly. But then he could not seem to write his letters.

Lisa came in alone.

"Where's Barrie?" he asked.

"She's spending the day with Linda. . . . You ought to have come, Jerome. It was fun—but it would have been more fun if you'd been there."

"Oh, nonsense! . . . I thought you were teaching Barrie to be responsible for the cat. It was in my room this morning."

"Oh, I'm sorry! She does try. Did it do any damage?"

"No, fortunately."

The Grahams' nephew came for Christmas. He was a worldly young man who had already received some attention as an artist. Mrs. Graham came to Lisa and said, "You must help me, Lisa. John feels we're a dull lot, but he comes dutifully every two or three years, for his mother's sake. You must help me to give him a good time for once."

So Lisa asked, "Could we afford a really bang-up party Christmas week?"

"I suppose we could—but do we need to? I'd hoped we could take it easy over the holidays."

"It's for this John Sturgess—the Grahams' nephew," Lisa told him. "They want some excitement for him."

"Do we have to furnish it?"

"She asked me to help."

"Then I suppose we'll have to. I've met him. He's insufferable. Thinks he's the only one who has been around and learned the facts of life."

The party came off. It was over. But the next afternoon Jerome came in and found John Sturgess making a sketch of Lisa sitting in the old chair with the green velvet cover, the cat in her lap. "Come in—come in!" Lisa said. "I'm a family portrait!"

"I see," he answered. "Hello, Sturgess. . . . I won't interrupt." And he went abruptly.

He heard Sturgess laughing and then Lisa's answering laugh. Sturgess didn't go till five and Jerome heard him say, "We'll try oils next time—would you mind?" and Lisa's answering, "I'd love it!"

"Is that part of the excitement?" he asked Lisa.

"Yes. An artist always wants to paint. It's an easy excitement to furnish," she said.

"Well, let him paint Katherine."

"Oh, don't be silly, darling! He's here for only two days more and Mrs. Graham just doesn't know what to do with him."

Sturgess came next day with paintbox and easel. Jerome took Barrie out for a walk and did his best to make her laugh, succeeding well enough and feeling better for his success. But just as the afternoon had turned chill and gray and they were turning home, he met Mrs. Graham, hat straight as a die, ugly black coat blowing in the wind. She paused and said:

"Hello, Jerome—and Barrie. How are you, my dear? . . . Jerome, I owe you an apology for the behavior of my nephew. I'm afraid he finds marital bonds merely ludicrous and not to be considered."

"Mine are very secure," he managed.

"I know they are," Mrs. Graham said, her heavy face working with distress. "All the same, he has behaved atrociously and I am ashamed."

When he and Barrie reached the house Sturgess was still there, working furiously. Jerome said, "Don't you think you've posed long enough, Lisa? You look dreadfully tired."

Sturgess frowned and said, "Fifteen minutes more. . . . Would you go away, please—I don't want anything changed and women always change the minute their husbands come in."

Lisa said slowly, "I am rather tired. Couldn't you finish it tomorrow?"

Sturgess gave a satiric grin, said, "Very well," began to wipe his brushes off.

After he had gone Jerome said, "The fool's in love with you and all the faculty's talking about it."

"Oh, Jerome! That boy? He likes to pretend he's an Artist of the World. I'm married to you—didn't you know?"

STURGESS never came back. The picture stayed there in the living room for several days, unfinished, though someone came and picked up the easel and the picture was removed to the mantel. Even unfinished, the picture had great charm, a lightness and gaiety that were essentially Lisa. Jerome Denks saw the charm but could not admit to it, could not mention it or Sturgess.

In February something went wrong with the furnace in Barrie's school, and school was closed down for a week. "I think I'll take her down to see her grandparents for a few days," Lisa said. "They have missed her so and it's a good time for it."

"I'd keep her away from them," he said. "No use having her torn between two homes."

"She won't be," Lisa said.

She did take her, coming back on the night train. She was very quiet and he said, "I do miss Barrie. I wish you hadn't let her go."

"I miss her too," she said. "I always miss her when she isn't nearby, but I wanted a few days without her all the same. I'm never alone with you, Jerome."

He was touched.

But he said, "Well, you run around so much—we could have more time if it weren't that people always want you to do things, go places. . . . You know, I wonder how it ever happened that you didn't marry before you did. I don't see how you helped it."

She took the cat up into her lap, curled up in the chair, just as she had sat in Sturgess' picture.

"Oh, it was easy to help it," she said. "I was numb all those years, it seemed. I forgot how to love. And then—there you were, darling. I knew how again. That's all there was to it. . . . Though sometimes it seems so strange that it was you. I don't see why you wanted me."

"Well, I did," he said.

She still looked faintly troubled, as if she wanted to say more, but Katherine and her husband came in then. He thought, moved by her wanting these days alone with him, that he would somehow manage to tell her how terribly much she meant to him, but they weren't alone so much after all. People were always coming in.

"You let people feed on you," he said once.

"Well, I feed on them too," she said.

Then Barrie was back and he somehow hadn't said the things he wanted to say. And the very first day there was the trouble over the cat. Barrie went to school without feeding him and Lisa wouldn't let her play with Linda after school. "But it was you who wanted the cat," Jerome found himself saying, with Barrie close to a tantrum.

The next morning when he and Barrie came out for breakfast Lisa wasn't there. She just wasn't in the house and there was no breakfast. Jerome got something together for Barrie, saw her get started for school. Just as she went down the walk Lisa came toward her through the snow in the red chinchilla jacket she wore for shopping.

Barrie gave her an apprehensive look bu Lisa only smiled, said, " 'By, darling!"

Barrie fidgeted, then burst into tears. "Wher did you go, mummy?" she demanded.

Lisa stopped smiling. She stood there ver still and said, "That's what Kiki would hav said yesterday, if he could have: 'Where di you go, Barrie? Where's my breakfast? Di you forget me?' That's how it feels, Barrie. . . Run along now, or you'll be late." She cam on toward Jerome in the doorway, gave a fain smile, but made no explanation to him.

THEN they began to get ready for the annua faculty play and they asked Lisa to play th lead. "Shall I?" she asked Jerome; and h said, "Why, if you like. If it would amuse yo I've always thought they should leave the play to the students, but it seems even full profe sors have to have scope for exhibitionism. Her eyes widened a little but she did not an swer. She did join the cast.

One night when they were to rehears Barrie was feverish with a cold. Lisa calle Katherine and said she couldn't come, bu Katherine said they'd come over to the hous for a little while, so that was that. Jerome wen upstairs and wrote letters, saying dryly to Lis that he would listen and let her know if Barr needed her. Twice Lisa came running up th stairs, thinking she had heard Barrie, bu Barrie slept and was quite herself in the morn ing.

He sat in the audience and heard Lisa sa in her memorable voice:

"Oh, heart be wise!
Else mayst thou love forever in hunger an tears
A golden husk!"

Then they were going home and he was sa ing, "Well, the faculty has drama out of i system for this year. Was it fun enough to pa for all the work?"

"It was fun," she said, as she had on before, "but it would have been more fun you'd been in it."

"It's not my cup of tea," he said.

In April, Matthews had a new volume poetry come out. Jerome heard of it here an there and then one day he came home an found a copy on the table in the bedroo "Where'd you get this?" he demanded.

Then he opened it to the front page, whi said, "For Lisa, who is responsible for th book. Henry Matthews."

" 'Who is responsible'?" he read slowly.

She went on brushing her hair with qui light strokes. "Oh, that's an exaggeration. B it does seem wicked, if you are a poet, not be a poet. I just quoted your mother to hi 'If you're a hawk, be a hawk!' I always thoug that was wonderful."

"An inspiration in all the arts, eh?" he sai It did not come out as lightly as he had mea it to.

She paused, put the brush down. " 'Inspir tion' is a very highfalutin word," she sai "But I do think it's wonderful that he's do this book, with all that he has on his shoulders

"What does he have on his shoulders mo than we all have?"

"Oh, it seems more. Sarah not loving hi Sarah's mother lying there dying with canc half the housework falling on Henry. You have an unfortunate manner too! But he's incredibly patient—and the poems are so fr and calm. That seems wonderful to me."

"Well, everyone has troubles," he sai knew it for not enough. He hadn't even know about Sarah's mother.

She said, "If I didn't know better — Then she smiled warmly, and rushed on, "O darling, don't even sound unkind! It isn't li you!"

But when Mrs. Graham said to him a fe days later, "Isn't Lisa awfully thin, Jerome he felt angry.

He said to Lisa, "Mrs. Graham thinks I' not feeding you enough. Are you really thin

"Oh, no. I like to be thin, anyway."

"As soon as classes are over we'll go up Mrs. Nygaard's—she'll fatten you up!"

He saw Johnson on the campus and Joh son said to him, "Look here, Katherine sa

CONTINUED ON PAGE 104

NONE THE WISER

By MARCELLA M. BANNON

That was the summer I didn't sleep at all,
But listened in the window and laughed along the hall;
That was the summer you were love and kin,
And the cheekbones poked through my thin, flushed skin.

The world was leaves reflected in black lake water,
And I was to my mother as she would have her daughter.

That was the winter belief came slow,
I listened to my laughter choke
and go;
That was the winter night was still,
I muffled up my crying; I shook with chill.

You were lost reflections in an ice-covered pond,
And I was none the wiser for being fond.

For larger cuts, burns, abrasions...

use the dressing your doctor uses...

because it's sterile at the moment of use

Sealed in individual envelopes

Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

9500 Skin Tests Prove

Palmolive Soap Is Mildest! Better for Complexion Care!

BETTER THAN ANY LEADING TOILET SOAP... FLOATING SOAP... EVEN COLD CREAM

Palmolive's gentle complexion care cleans thoroughly without irritation!

re's nothing women envy more . . . or men admire so h . . . as that lovely "schoolgirl complexion look." And too, can have a younger looking, far lovelier complexion by changing to proper care with gentle Palmolive. It so much to help you have a softer, smoother skin!

Skin specialists agree that a really mild soap means less irritation . . . more gentle cleansing. And now, milder Palmolive brings you these benefits—so important for a softer, smoother, brighter skin. For Palmolive is not only mild—Palmolive has been proved mildest of them all!

See how regular care with Palmolive Soap really improves your complexion. How it leaves skin feeling so wonderfully clean and soft . . . how it cleans without irritation. Try mild Palmolive Soap. You'll find no other leading soap or cold cream gets skin thoroughly clean as gently as Palmolive!

Skin Specialists Say: "MILDER CLEANSING IS BETTER FOR YOUR COMPLEXION!"

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Any Other Leading Beauty Soap or Castile Soap!

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Leading White Floating Soaps or Deodorant Soaps!

Palmolive Is Proved Even Milder than America's Leading Cold Creams!

PALMOLIVE SOAP HELPS YOU GUARD THAT SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION LOOK!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 102

you're ditching us for Canada; we won't have it!"

"Ditching you?"

"Thought it was all fixed up that you'd join us at the cove. Lisa seemed to think you'd like it—and it would be wonderful to have Barrie there for Linda. Lots of room and you could catch all the butterflies you wanted to."

"Well, I'll talk it over with Lisa," he said.

"You do that!"

He found it hard to mention it to Lisa, but he did. "What's this about the Johnsons?" he asked that night. "You didn't tell me that they'd asked us there."

"I hadn't got around to. But it doesn't matter, Jerome. You aren't terribly fond of them and you do love Canada. It doesn't matter at all."

"He seemed to think it was all decided. I felt a fool."

"Sorry—it all seemed a long way off. And then when I knew you wanted Canada, I just forgot it."

"Just an obedient wife, eh? We'll go anywhere you like, of course. But how was I to know? They'd never asked me before."

"I never thought of being obedient," she said. "I just want what you want, that's all, darling."

He did try to congratulate Matthews on his book, but he found his voice stiff.

"Don't tell me you read it!" Matthews said with that mocking air that set people's backs up.

"Yes, of course."

"Hope for you yet, Denks!" Matthews said, giving him an odd grin.

Then one morning Barrie came running in after school had started. She was crying, out of breath.

"I forgot to feed Kiki!" she wailed.

"Oh. Well, feed her now," Lisa said. "Did you tell Miss Potts?"

"No, I just came."

"All right. I'll walk back with you, darli

Jerome met her as he went to his first cl "Now wasn't that nonsense?" he deman "The weight of the world on her at five?"

"Oh, just little weights," she said. "She to learn, Jerome."

"She was ready for a nervous breakdow

"I'm glad she worried," Lisa said. "Y be late, Jerome."

A day or two after that Lisa said, "I ha feeling I should let Barrie spend the sum with her father's people."

"Good heavens, why?" he demanded. "S almost forgotten them."

"I know. That's it. She mustn't forget th You mustn't forget people who love you. They do love her."

"But she's your child. She belongs you."

"She'll still be my child. You can't learn soon to let them go, though—can you?"

He felt accused in some way of some known something, put on the defensive w out knowing what he should defend.

A few mornings later he said sudde "Would you like me to adopt Barrie? Leg I mean?"

She said, startled, "Oh, no! That's swee you—but no, I don't think so, Jerome."

But all that spring he had a strange fee of being caught in some web of his own takes. Sometimes he had moments when marriage was like a dream, from which might wake suddenly. And yet he loved He did love her. But he saw that she was thin, that she was too quiet, that her didn't light up quite so often with that r ance that was such a delight. She didn't the piano very often, and one day walk home after class he realized that the b didn't collect at the house any more. wanted to say something about that, but a his previous remarks he couldn't do it.

Then came the day when he came in found Lisa was out. The mail lay in the on the rug. He picked it up and saw there a letter for Lisa with the name and addres John Sturgess in the corner. He stared at i it blurred to his vision, then he dropped i the table as if he had been burned by it. looked at the rest of the mail, found a le for him from Geoffrey Bowen, the Englishm with whom he had corresponded for so years. He had always liked Bowen's lett crisp, knowing, humorous. Still, it was so moments before he opened Bowen's letter. he did so, Lisa came in.

"Your mail's on the table," he said.

She picked up the letter. "Well, well!" said lightly, tore open the envelope. She st there reading it, then laughed, but with trou in the laughter. "That's what being an a is, I suppose!" she said. She put the le down beside him as if she expected him to r it, but he could not even look at it.

"Why, Bowen's in Washington," he s "He wants to come and see me. I say—I wo like that! Would you mind? He's a butte man—he might bore you."

"Oh, ask him to come. When?"

"This weekend. I've never seen him— written to him all these years."

"Fun!" Lisa said. "Do you want any in—or just want him to yourself?"

"Oh, I doubt if he'd care for parties."

But all the time he was conscious of t other letter lying open there at his hand would be so easy to accept her offer, pick it and read it in an indifferent, husbandlike w She had made it easy. But he could not do He left it there and went up to see if his ro with its collections would pass muster wit man like Bowen. For a moment his triumph the field of lepidopterology were evidenced fore him and he felt a rush of excitement at thought of talking of them with Bowen, t he felt the excitement ebb away as he loo at the cases all around him, saw the bri wings, the delicate antennae, the names scribed so neatly: Debis creola, Vane californica, Argynnis aphrodite. All the nam fused together and became one name, J Sturgess, blackly clear on an envelope.

"Did you send your friend a wire?" L asked.

He sent the wire, but as he did so felt app hensive, almost unwilling to send it.

INSPIRATION! GOSSARD'S BRIGHT-IDEA BRA HAS DIVINE DESIGNS ON YOU! Sheer prettiness is just the beginning. See that inset-design? Its two seams give a double assist to the bias-cut sides so Gossard's INSPIRATION fits to the nth degree. And it lifts you high, round and fashionably. Even the shoulder straps are new—stitched to stay flat. All in all, INSPIRATION is the bra achievement you should see now to enjoy from now on.

at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

#1826 in fine cotton with embroidered cotton inset, $2.50. Also #2426 in nylon, $3.50. Both in white and A, B, C cups

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H. W. GOSSARD CO., 111 NORTH CANAL STREET, CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

owen came by train at 11:10 in the morn-on Friday. It was at the time of Jerome's rential-calculus class. "I'll meet him," said. "I can surely find him, don't you k? A butterfly man ought to stand out ehow!" He didn't want her to meet en, but he couldn't seem to arrange any-g different without making too much of an so in the end he let her.

hen he came home for lunch, Bowen was ng on the corner of the kitchen table talk-a blue streak to Lisa while she prepared
h. He was like his letters and yet a sur-
. "Ah, Denks!" he said, getting off the
, being tremendously tall in the low room.
eld out a bony hand, shook hands firmly.
last!" he said. "This is extremely nice of and Mrs. Denks!" He looked very British.
ad a long, beaky nose, a short mustache, blue eyes that went to slits when he hed, and his laugh itself was a short, very sh bark.
Take him away, Jerome. He talks so much istracts me. Lunch in five minutes," Lisa owen laughed that short bark of a laugh went out with Jerome, saying, "I feel as if ived here all my life. What a charming e you have, Denks—and what a charming ! Know what she said when she came up e at the station? 'But where is your cyajar?' Ha!"

uncheon was good, full of talk and laugh-
And after lunch, when he said he had to ack for an afternoon class, Bowen said, ok in on it, could I? Always like to watch r folks pass knowledge on. Duffer at it lf. Never could teach anything. Mind?"
ad to say he didn't. Nor did he much. He a good teacher and knew it. And he was measure glad to take Bowen away from ouse, but he didn't examine his feelings t that too deeply. The class went well and ound he was proud to have Bowen listen ell as proud of having his students see this nguished-looking guest.
t on the way back to the house, Bowen
"I say, I do like your wife! I should think would have been writing me about her r than about moths. Very gay, very sensi-
—you don't see that type often in Amer-lo you? Rare enough anywhere, I expect."
never tried to catalogue her," Jerome trying for humor, and the Englishman ed and said, "Oh, rather not!"
rrie was there when they went in and was ds with Bowen at once. And why not?
erome knew it troubled him to see Barrie g on Bowen's bony knee, smiling her curly at him.

N Lisa said, "Barrie, come help me get er. Jerome and Mr. Bowen will want to and look at butterflies—they're just too e to say we bore them, but we do."
'll go too," Barrie said.
No, you won't. You come with me."
Let her come," Bowen said. "If I had a girl like Barrie, I wouldn't be collecting rflies. Let her come."
rome took him to his room and he didn't why he felt let down, for Bowen was complimentary, begged to exchange sev-varieties of moths, showed a real interest e collection. But his remark about Barrie e the whole business secondary, an occu-n for men who had nothing else. He 't feel that was true and he resented hav-Bowen imply that it was. Barrie told him ommon names of some dozen species and en was delighted with that.
Now, that's enough, my dear," he said.
n't you learn the Latin—that's quite gh for a girl who looks like a Lycaena s herself!"
That's a dim view to take of knowledge," me said.
Not at all! Not at all! Gaining these bits nowledge gets to be a disease if you don't out."
ut, somewhat shyly, he then fished in the et of his jacket and drew out a small ebook to the study of lepidopterology.
u see, it led me into this!" he said. There his name on the cover: By Geoffrey en. "You get in a panic for fear your bits nowledge won't be recorded—as yours," aid. "Then you write a guidebook for others with the same disease." He said "Ha! Ha!" embarrassedly and led Barrie downstairs.

"Wonderful job your husband's done," he said. "Amazing! But what are we having for dinner that smells so good?"

Because Katherine had made such a to-do about it and because the colors were right, the picture of Lisa hung in the dining room. Before they sat down to dinner Bowen walked toward it, then stood off a little and looked from it to Lisa, back again. "I say—that must have been done by a top-notch man!" he said.

"It was," Lisa said. "But it was never finished."

"Looks finished to me. But then, I'm no authority. Quite definitely you, at any rate."

"I like it," Lisa said. "But why wouldn't I? It makes me look the way I want to look."

Later that night he said, "You know, it makes me feel good to be here. Collectors are apt to be dry-as-dust specialists or else romantic amateurs. Glad to meet one with a home and a family and a decent job—not all in one groove, you know. Your husband here was talking to me about the value of knowledge, Mrs. Denks—I maintain it's dangerous. Life's too short to try to know everything, eh? Truth is, I know too much about butterflies, too little about everything else."

"But science—would it ever be advanced if certain ones didn't try to increase their knowledge?" Jerome asked.

"Oh, you could argue me down. I don't doubt," Geoffrey Bowen told him. "But don't you honestly think, Denks, that it's better to be like your wife here, who doesn't know one butterfly from another—so she tells me—but who sees everything about her, the butterflies included, with extreme sensitiveness? Oh, much better to be like that, I'm sure you will agree. It's so easy, you know, if you keep your nose to a grindstone for a few years, to get an entirely false idea of the sharpness of your mind!"

DOROTHY GRAY Satura

WITH HORMONES AND VITAMIN A

DRAWS MOISTURE FROM THE AIR TO HELP DRY OR AGING SKIN LOOK YOUNGER...FRESHER!

THIS is the truly modern means to give your skin maximum benefits of beautifying moisture! SATURA, by Dorothy Gray, not only maintains the skin's inner moisture . . . it actually attracts moisture from the air to combat surface dryness and encourage the fresh, misty look of youth!

And SATURA does more! As its natural estrogenic hormones help "cushion" the skin against lines and wrinkles, its Vitamin A is absorbed by the skin to help relieve flaky-dryness. With these age-denying elements plus rich, skin-softening ingredients, SATURA is a most effective single preparation designed especially for dry or maturing skin. Use SATURA overnight and under make-up. It's greaseless, vanishing! 2-oz. $3.50: 4-oz. $5.00, plus tax.

For dry or over-30 skin follow the Dorothy Gray RULE OF THREE each day!

1 CLEANSE with Dorothy Gray Dry-Skin Cleanser . . . $1 to $3.50
2 STIMULATE with Dorothy Gray Orange Flower Skin Lotion . . . $1 to $3.75
3 LUBRICATE with SATURA at night

(Prices plus tax.)

TRUST  DOROTHY GRAY

for everything you need to stay a beauty!

It wasn't quite right, but Bowen was so enthusiastic, such an eager talker, that the evening passed quickly and the next day too. In the afternoon they went through the guidebook, checking against their own possessions and telling each other tales of captures that had seemed exciting. But suddenly Bowen rose, said, "I'm going to ask your wife to take me for a walk about the campus. Mind?"

"Of course not," Jerome said, but he did mind.

That night after she was in bed Lisa said, "I'm so glad you asked him here! He's a love, isn't he? One of the special ones. . . . I think, if you urged him, he'd stay through this next week. You'd have to urge him, though."

He couldn't do less than urge him and Bowen said, "If you're sure I won't be in the way, there's nothing I'd like better!" So he stayed. Jerome was half pleased to have him, half resentful of his presence. For Bowen had come to see him. But the staying on? And Bowen seemed to have forgotten that he had come to talk of butterflies. He hardly mentioned them all week. He was taken everywhere by Lisa and every day he talked of the ones he'd seen. Lisa even took him to see Mrs. Snow. "Quite like Mrs. Bean, back home in Kent," he said. "All full of mottoes! I used to collect Mrs. Bean's sayings—meant to offer them to one of these novel writers; never happened to meet the right chap to appreciate them!" And Lisa took him to the Matthewses. "Always admired poets," he said. "Good one, Matthews, I'd say—Mrs. Denks read me some of his poems. Sounded the way I like poetry to sound, but I'm not up on all the modern line, I may not know what's what. Niggling kind of a wife—a pity, fellow like that."

"Maybe you get to be a niggler married to a fellow like that," Jerome said.

"Eh? Oh, but he seemed first-rate. Don't think you could be fooled about that," Bowen said.

One afternoon he took Barrie and Linda to the park and professed to not having had so much fun since he'd been a lad in Cornwall one summer. "Even went down the slide!" he boasted, which made Lisa laugh off and on whenever she thought of it. People wanted to have parties for him, but he declined all such offers. "Much better fun seeing one or two at a time," he said.

THEN on Friday afternoon—Bowen was to leave that night—Jerome found Bowen, very tall, angular and British, standing waiting for him by the steps of the Liberal Arts building. He fell into step beside Jerome and they walked some distance in silence, which was odd in itself, for Bowen was quick to talk. Then Bowen said, embarrassedly, "Been making love to your wife, Denks. Not cricket, eh—under your own roof?"

"What the devil!" Jerome said sharply.

"Right you are. Shameful," Bowen admitted. "No encouragement from her, as you well may know. I'd take her away from you if I could, old man. Ought to make her happier—don't you think?"

It was preposterous, hearing Bowen talk so, especially in this bright young day.

"My relations with my wife ——" Jerome began stiffly.

"Your own affair? Certainly—certainly. Unpardonable, intruding. After you have been so kind as to take me in, a stranger. But we're not young men, Denks. Ought to be able to talk without offense. An outsider steps in and sees things you don't see when they're right under your nose. Don't like seeing you breaking your wife's spirit, which is a rare one, you know—maybe breaking her heart. She ought not to be married to dull, selfish dogs like us, Denks. By Jove, though, if I were married to her, I don't think I would be so selfish! . . . Talking too much. Always talk too much."

"Lisa's been complaining to you?" Jerome said coldly. He didn't feel cold. He felt hurt all through his body and brain.

For a moment Bowen did not speak. When he did his voice was as cold as Jerome's, cold and hard. "You are not fool enough to think that, Denks," he said. "Your wife is a loyal woman."

They reached the house, went in and Barrie came running, caught hold of Bowen's hand, begged him to tell her a story.

Bowen took Barrie on his knee and began to tell her tales about his boyhood in England. His voice was gay and one would never have believed that he had just said the things he had to his host. Lisa sat on a stool and listened, too, but rose and went for tea, brought it on the big black tray. Jerome reached to take it from her and saw that her eyes showed the darkness of tears. He almost let the tray fall but managed to get it on the table, even said, "I'll pour it."

He turned to offer a cup to Bowen, but Bowen and Barrie had gone to the old globe by the window and Bowen was showing Barrie where Kent was, where she was, the places where he had traveled.

"And here's the jungle I was in last," the clipped voice said suddenly behind Jerome. "Got a butterfly ten inches across right there. Difficult, hunting butterflies in the jungle—you have to be so constantly on the lookout for tigers!"

"Real tigers?" Barrie demanded.

"Real tigers," Bowen said gravely. "Oh, tea—thank you very much."

They got through dinner creditably, then Bowen said, "I'd like one more walk about the town before my train goes." He turned to Lisa. "Will you come with me?" he said urgently.

"We'll all come," Lisa said.

"I'll come!" Barrie said eagerly.

Jerome's eyes went toward the globe. Everything seemed to wait in the room. Now—now was the time to say the right thing, if ever he was to say the right thing. Tigers, tigers everywhere. No, within his heart was the jungle. There were the tigers congregated, waiting to spring. And all because he wanted to put a pin in a butterfly. It seemed to him he was silent for a long time, but actually it was only a matter of a second or two before he smiled at Lisa, said, "No, Barrie—you stay here and keep me company. You show him the town, Lisa. You're so much better at that sort of thing than I am. I'll put Barrie to bed and be ready to go to the train when you get back."

It wasn't what he said. That had been humdrum enough, he knew. It was never what you said, but the way of speaking, the generosity in your heart when you spoke. Trust, no jealousy, no cyanide jars or nets or pins.

Lisa hesitated. Her eyes, her smile, her hesitation were questions, were half doubt, half wonderment. But after the pause she said, "All right, darling. We won't be long."

Did she mean that everything was all right? Everything? He didn't quite know and while they walked through the sweet spring night he waited, but he waited with a curious fe of peace, of having ugliness washed awa played a few one-note-at-a-time tunes o old piano, then took Barrie up to bed, tu her in.

"I wish mummy would get back," H said. "I wish mummy'd get back to kis good night."

"She'll be back. Back in time," he surely. "And here's a kiss to keep you till she gets here."

He stood on the platform with Bo waiting for the train. Waiting for more that, but outwardly waiting only for the "You've been more than kind to hav all this time," Bowen said.

"Kind? I'm very grateful to you for ing," Jerome answered.

It was a difficult, even a moving mome the middle of the waiting.

"Hope I haven't been too much of a sance. Perhaps you and Mrs. Denks will to Kent one of these days and let me something of your hospitality."

"Perhaps we will. We might have to up a year or two for it—but perhaps we

The train whistled and Bowen's bony, st hand shot out, grasped Jerome's more sle hand firmly.

"I'll send you the moths—and I'll hold to coming! Thanks for everything."

"Thank you," Jerome said.

Bowen's beaked nose showed at a win He was gone. But even before the train ished Jerome was walking swiftly to home, toward Lisa.

She sat at the piano, head bent, but turned on the bench as he came in, looke him. He didn't know what to say. And haps there was nothing to say, nothing could be put into words. He felt shy, as he when he'd asked her to marry him.

"Well, he's gone," he said inadequa "Liked him."

Well, he had liked him, in spite of al thought surprisedly.

"Yes—I too," Lisa said. Then she said, her smile now had no doubt in it at all, the same, I'm glad he's gone. I do love e ing, different people—I love having them he but the best part is having them gone s can sit and talk about them. Just you and "Is there any coffee left?" he said.

That was what he said, and as they m together toward the kitchen, no one w have known that he had really at this mon asked her to marry him, and been acce

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

ONE phenomenon in our family is that the daughters are old enough to wear my clothes, but I'm not young enough to wear theirs.

Nothing starts the average man's day off better than to be able to criticize some woman at the wheel of a car.

There should be a short intermission between parenthood and grandparenthood, long enough to see a movie alone, visit Niagara Falls and pay all the bills.

To the younger generation, a good economist is one who goes broke even.

Too many cooks may mean the bridegroom is trying to help.

Concerning predestination, our Guatemalan friend says, "No man dies the day before."

With most people, being prepared for anything never seems to include the unexpected compliment.

A woman who builds up another woman increases her own stature.

A woman's beauty lasts as long as her disposition stays sweet.

A man marries only a woman, but a woman marries a man and a house.

The most important ingredient in a recipe is experience.

Maid to mistress: "You know I never tell the papas everything I tell the mammas, 'cause the papas just blow up but the mammas are the fixers."

It never hurts a man to call a woman beautiful—when she's in the kitchen.

When a woman begins to emerge as a housekeeper instead of a homemaker, a shifting of values is noted: furnishings become more important than fun; cleaning more important than companionship; house more important than husband.

All The Minerals, All The Vitamins, All The Food Energy

OF THE "HIGH-PRICE" SPREAD ARE IN TODAY'S

Blue Bonnet Margarine!

PROOF

Compared to the "High-Price" Spread, Blue Bonnet gives you:

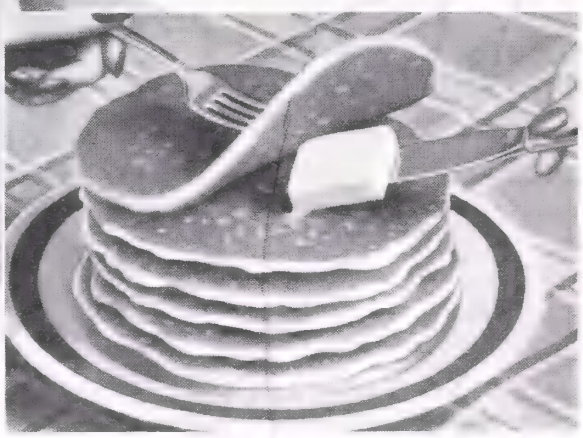
ALL THE MILK MINERALS—
ALL THE CALCIUM
ALL THE PHOSPHORUS

Four times more
VITAMIN D

More dependable
VITAMIN A
each pound, the year round

VITAMIN E

AND ALL THE VALUABLE FOOD ENERGY



WONDERFUL FOR YOUR FAMILY!

BLUE BONNET provides ALL THE NOURISHMENT you could get from the best grade of the "high-price" spread! In fact, BLUE BONNET is a more uniform source of vitamins than the "high-price" spread—and gives just as much of the milk minerals. And you can afford to use BLUE BONNET generously. Let the children have all they want. Use it in baking, frying—all your cooking.

Insist on BLUE BONNET Margarine always. You'll love it. Every pound tastes just so sunny-sweet. And BLUE BONNET spreads so smoothly on your bread!

★ ★ ★

SERVED ON HOT FOODS, or spread on bread, BLUE BONNET Margarine melts on your tongue instantly with a burst of the sunny-sweet flavor you love. And it's so nourishing!

Blue Bonnet FOR FLAVOR! NUTRITION! ECONOMY!

Taste how TUCK-A-BED hot dogs
sing with California flavor!

Lip-smacking good flavor is easy to come by. Just open up a can of California's own Ripe Olives. Sample a few for their sun-soaked goodness...save some out for nibbling before dinner...and use the rest like this:

- 1 cup ripe olives
- 2 tbsps. butter or margarine
- 2 tbsps. flour
- 1 tsp. salt
- ¼ tsp. dry mustard
- 1½ cups milk
- 1 cup grated American cheese
- 4 frankfurters, whole or sliced
- 2 tbsps. diced pimiento
- 2 cups cooked rice
- ½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
- 2 tbsps. melted butter or margarine

Cut olives in large pieces. Melt butter and blend in flour, salt and mustard. Gradually blend in milk; cook and stir until mixture boils and is thickened. Add the cheese, frankfurters, olives, pimiento and rice, mixing lightly. Turn into shallow baking dish. Blend crumbs and butter, and sprinkle over top. Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) 20 to 25 minutes, until thoroughly heated. Serves 4.

Make more meals sing with California flavor by putting an inviting bowl of ripe olives on the table. Keep them at hand for munching while TV-viewing, and offer them in the evening when guests drop in. The ripe olive bowl is always a warm "welcome bowl."

Free Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet

Write today for your free copy of the beautifully illustrated 24-page booklet, "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Address: Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-54, 24 California Street, San Francisco 11, California.

ripe olives*
make meals SING with California flavor

*RIPE, GREEN-RIPE...WHOLE, PITTED, CHOPPED, SLICED

ETHEL BARRYMORE—MEMORIES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 45

incidents that crowd in on any small life are incidents of childhood rather than of a particular child. I see myself a shy little figure against the background of a family group whose vivacity was that of my mother and father, whose stronger, darker, more frequent moods were those of my grandmother.

I was brought up in the interim of busy lives, lives of the theater, where children had to be set aside and cared for by others, so my most vivid memories of the beginning are naturally those connected with the rare times when the family were together. If I speak of my elders a great deal in these early years it is, first of all, because I had a remarkable grandmother and because my parents had a romantic glamour which appealed to a child.

I have never met anyone who had quite the amazing force without effort that my grandmother possessed. Her supreme rule at the theater crystallized into certain ceremonials that marked her comings and goings. She would drive from home in her brougham, and when she reached her office she would go over books, listen to reports, sign documents and inspect things with that regal manner which betokens state affairs. And as she rose to leave, it seemed as though a red carpet should have been spread before her. When, in later years, I saw royalty abroad, nothing was a surprise to me—I had seen my grandmother.

To her the theater was never "show business." My grandmother would rise up out of her grave if she heard me use that word. She'd say, "Show—do you mean a circus?" and she would say it as if she were the Red Queen saying, "Off with her head!"

She used to have dinner in Philadelphia at three o'clock, a cup of tea just before going to the theater and perhaps supper or a cup of soup afterward. We called her Mummum, which was probably invented by Lionel, as he was the eldest. And my father always addressed her as Ma'am—like royalty which, I must say, she received with equanimity. I feel that she regarded him, as a person, with an amused and affectionate tolerance and, as an actor, a gifted amateur. According to her, one didn't spring equipped for the fray from either the Inner Temple or the British civil service. My mother she adored, though there was never any demonstration.

I thought that house on Twelfth Street was enormous with large rooms and cavernous halls and most alarming echoes. I can see now the Victorian landscapes on the wall, the gold-colored sofa, the music box on the table which grandmother magnificently wound up so that it might unwind "The Carnival of Venice," and the square piano upon which were pictures of Edwin Forrest and his wife. There was a sturdy solemnity about the place which made me seem very tiny. Years later when I went back, somehow the house appeared to have shrunk. Everyone has experienced the same thing, I suppose. I sought, with some echo of the alarm I used to feel, for "The Ancient Mariner," once so big I could scarcely hold it on my lap, but it was only of ordinary size.

BUT about the house: on the second floor there was the sitting room, then the bathroom, and then the Annex, which was our playroom. Then there was the big front bedroom which was a little frightening to pass, for in it dwelt my great-grandmother who was ninety-five. There was nothing on earth to be frightened about . . . perhaps it was the deference and attention Mummum paid her, and Aunt Tibby flying to answer her bell. Grandma Kinloch was very nice to us in a vague, unaware sort of way, but I always felt a little terror.

Then there was the long flight up to the third floor, rather dark at night. I remember Jack being made to go up it alone as a very little boy. As he disappeared in the darkness he was heard to say, "You can't hurt me. I have a wonderful power!"

So that was our home when our parents were on the road or in New York, which I'm sure my grandmother spoke of as "out of town." On the ground floor, also, was the kitchen which held charm and mystery for us because we were never allowed to go into it. Such beautiful smells! And soft Irish laughter. We always had Irish cooks and maids—all known as Mary Aggie. I suppose there once had been a Mary Aggie. Then there was Lily Garrett, Mummum's dresser, always known, for some obscure reason, as "the pearl-handled knife." And her mother, Mrs. Garrett, who took home to her house our laundry. And Kitty, her daughter-in-law, who was our nurse. Kitty once took Lionel and me to see Mrs. Garrett and left us for a moment in the yard. There was a round wooden washtub on the grass, filled with heavenly blue, blue water. We were both sitting in it in our best clothes when she came out. Poor Kitty! (The Garretts were not Irish, they were pure Philadelphia.)

I can't say what my earliest recollections were specifically. Those things, as Mrs. Malaprop declares, were a long time ago "illiterated" from my memory. I do know, in her words again, that at no period was I a "progeny of learning," but seemed to have been a normal, healthy child in spirits, ably seconded and sometimes led by my brothers. I often wonder what those days would have been had I really known my mother well. I have only intermittent pictures of her—a tall, fair, slender girl with blue eyes. I looked at her in worship and in silence, longing to talk with her, but fearing, out of the very shyness of my nature, to speak to her.

My father, of course, had really startling beauty. My brother Jack looked exactly like him—as the image at the small end of the telescope is like the one at the other. When papa first came from England he had the eyeglass, the tall hat—all the marks of fashion of those days. Later he became perfectly appalling in his clothes; I will never know why, but he seemed to have a kind of mania to shock.

We were a mischievous set of children, always up to some adventure. My memory brings to view many wiggling moments. If in the presence of our elders we were not allowed "to utter"—our grandmother's way of condensing the injunction that children should be seen but not heard—when we were together we "uttered" loudly and continuously.

We were always falling into something or out of something. One summer Jack dropped from a tree on a flowerpot and cut his head. He always had the slight scar. And I vividly recall a fishing expedition Lionel and I took with our lines hung over the third-floor balustrade rail of the house on Twelfth Street. We could see them dangling all the way down to trance hall. In the anxiety to keep my l from Lionel's, I leaned too far and went the two flights through the oper between the balustrade. I lay there s without a cry. The air was torn by the shouts of Aunt Tibby, who had been dining room doing something with berries. She had seen the drop and she expect I would be alive. A cab was s Doctor Mitchell, who had brought us i world. And by some miracle—child seems, are watched over by a mira spirit—I was found to be safe and sou

Occasionally Mummum would go or and then Mrs. Griffiths was with us. I r ber asking the current Mary Aggie w was. "Housekeeper!" she said, rather b She was a perfectly pleasant person an us one Sunday to midday dinner wi daughter in Darby, and she gave u marvelous Philadelphia epic, Dexter's Mountain Cake! Think of all the mill benighted people in the world who don' about Dexter's White Mountain Cake.

THERE came a magic day when Lionel were packed up and taken by our fath mother to a private car where we wer comed by what I now know to be th charming and entrancing woman I was meet. She was Madame Modjeska. Pa to play Romeo, Orlando, Armand, and and mamma was what was called the l lady to a feminine star. I was only fou old, but I remember Madame as Ro and Camille more vividly than any mem Duse, Bernhardt, Réjane, or Ellen Te don't remember papa or mamma in the at all. But Madame Modjeska was st on my mind and heart indelibly for m and my gratitude is unbounded. Bo parents worshiped her. She was a Catholic, and as the months went by m became more and more sure she mus Catholic too. So suddenly Lionel and surprised to be baptized again. Madame jeska and her husband, Count Bozenta Lionel's godparents; and Miss Veronica ray, who presided over a very elegant bo house in New York, and one Perugini, th Catholic mamma could find at the mo were mine. Jack, who was only two time, had been left at home with Mum

CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

FIGHT COMMUNISM with "TRUTH DOLLARS"

100 words of truth—that's what each dollar you give buys on Radio Free Europe. 100 words of truth beamed right through the Iron Curtain.

RFE has 29 powerful transmitters this side of the Iron Curtain. Day and night, seven days a week they reach the people of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. These broadcasts are by exiles in their native tongues.

More dollars are needed to get the truth to more people behind the Iron Curtain. Send in your "Truth Dollars" today—one for every member of your family—and fight Communism in its own back yard. Do it now.

Send your "Truth Dollars" to CRUSADE FOR FREEDOM c/o your Postmaster

Now...

INSTANT OATMEAL

WITH NEW QUICK QUAKER OR MOTHER'S OATS

cooks creamy in 50-60 seconds

Something wonderful has happened to Quick Quaker Oats and to Quick Mother's Oats.

Now—in just moments you have fully cooked oatmeal S noother oatmeal. Creamier. With the same full flavor—the same bountiful nourishment—of oatmeal that used to take hours of coo ing.

Yes, these New Quick oat flakes—cut in tiny pieces—are rolled to a new tissue thinness. They cook in just 50-60 seconds in boiling water.

So isn't it smar' to eat a good hot oatmeal breakfast—when it's quick as coffee? New Quick Quaker Oats and New Quick Mother's Oats are in stores now. Look for the Yellow Ribbon on the label.

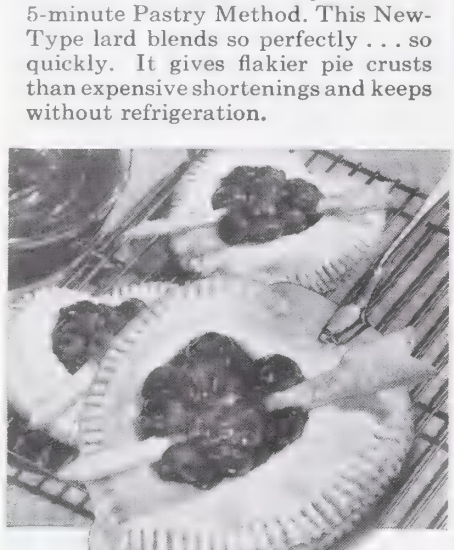
All the protein nourishment of old fashioned oatmeal is present in this new, quick product. It helps keep adults fit—not fat, because it is so high in protein.

Best cereal for growing children. High-protein Quaker or Mother's Oats helps children grow strong, healthy bodies. Gives them stamina they need for school and play.

QUAKER OATS

America's most popular cereal . . . hot or cold

Mother's Oats and Quaker Oats are exactly the same



How to make my

Flaky-Crust Cherry Hearts

—says Marie Gifford, Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

For flakier melt-in-your-mouth crusts every time, try wonderful New-Type Armour Star Lard and my can't-fail 5-minute Pastry Method. This New-Type lard blends so perfectly . . . so quickly. It gives flakier pie crusts than expensive shortenings and keeps without refrigeration.

To make the flaky tender crust use my 5-Minute Crust Recipe on every carton of Armour Star Lard. Bake as directed below.

For the Cherry Filling: drain cherries from No. 2 can of prepared Cherry Pie Filling, or use recipe in my new Pie Booklet offered free here.

How To Make the Hearts: roll out pastry into long rectangle ⅛ inch thick. Using 5-inch cardboard heart pattern, cut out 12 hearts. Cut a smaller heart from center of half the hearts for tops. Roll out trimmings of pastry and cut 6 six-inch arrows.

Place ¼ cup drained cherries on each bottom heart. Cover with cut-out top. Press edges with fork. Bake on cookie sheet in 425° F oven for 20 or 25 minutes or until lightly brown. Bake arrows during last 10 minutes. Before serving, cut arrows in half and insert as illustrated.

Heat remaining thickened juice. Add 2 Tbsp. butter and serve warm with Cherry Hearts.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET 32 new pie recipes. How-to-do-it illustrations. Write to: Marie Gifford, Dept. 151, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago. A carton top will be appreciated.

Armour Star Lard

The Modern New-Type Lard That Makes Flakier Crusts

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 108

so escaped for the time being. Father was infinitely amused by all this, but I'm afraid Mummum was shocked and horrified. Words like "Papists," and so on, escaped her. But when we—Lionel and I—got back to Philadelphia, she could detect no ghastly difference . . . until much later when we went to school, when she gave tongue; and for a brief moment was under the impression that she and papa had something important in common—one of her incredibly few errors.

Lionel and I were taken on that tour because Madame Modjeska had her own private car and she invited mamma and papa to be her guests and also Lionel and me. I remember mamma sitting in the car smocking a dress for me. And I can see Lionel now, sprawling flat on his stomach in the aisle, drawing ships and trains, as we traveled from place to place.

CULVER SERVICE

"That lovely girl and that overwhelming and unpredictable Briton—my mother and father."

After that wonderful tour with Madame Modjeska we came home to "The Tomb of the Capulets," mamma's name for Mummum's house—partly, I suppose, because down the street there was a man who made headstones and partly a humorous allusion to slight family differences between Uncle Jack and Uncle Sidney. About this time my father fell heir to some money left him by one of those inevitable English aunts so popular and obliging in that era of Victorian fiction. Because of this we went to England where we remained for two years.

Everything about those two years was magical. Those London days are clear and shiny in my mind. Our house was in St. John's Wood Road with a garden surrounded by a tall brick wall. From our nursery at the back of the house on the third floor we could see Lord's cricket ground where all the most famous matches were played. We used to borrow father's field glasses and try to watch the matches. We had a lovely big garden and a great many animals—dogs and monkeys. Papa loved monkeys and birds. The monkeys were kept in cages in the very large garden.

We also had a nurse named Polly. I remember that she had crinkly red hair and that papa said she looked like Mary Anderson only more beautiful. She took us everywhere—even to the Chamber of Horrors at Madame Tussaud's, which remembrance caused me to wake up screaming for years afterward.

I was a shy little mortal, with large eyes cast down in continual agonizing bashfulness. At such times my father or mother would call out to me, "Look up, Pauline," a line from "The Lady of Lyons." Everything was a quotation in our house. At the table it seemed as if we could never get away from famous lines. If we had to go to bed, it was "Stand not upon the order of your going, but go at once!" If we hurried through our meals, we were admonished to eat wisely and slow. Our manners were shaped in terms of Shakespearean dialogue.

In London papa was playing at the Haymarket Theatre in "Diplomacy" (Sardou) and in "A Woman of No Importance" (Wilde).

Mamma was usually "at home" Sunday afternoons, and I used to be produced at teatime to hand about cakes, and so on—always with my eyes firmly on the ground. Once as I approached a gentleman sitting on the sofa, mamma called to me, "Look up, Pauline!"—which I did, shrieked in terror, dropped the plate, and fled to the third floor. The man was Oscar Wilde. My parents nearly killed me. I don't remember ever being so severely punished for anything. There was something in the family known as The Green Slipper. It was made of soft Russian leather, and had been one of Mummum's bedroom slippers. The mere mention of it terrified us. . . . I doubt if it would have hurt a fly. It had a very complete workout that awful day.

Everything else, though, was lovely. I remember a children's party, with Lionel encased in a blue velvet suit and a perfect fury—which wasn't mitigated by a small boy shrilling at him, "Barrymore, you're fetched!" when Polly came for us. That became a family wheeze. I hope I can remember half of our family wheezes.

Then back to Philadelphia to Mummum. Lionel and I by then sounded like two English children. When we returned home all the famous legacy had been blown—but Polly came with us. She soon married the livery-stable man where Mummum kept her brougham. He got drunk every Saturday night and beat her up—mamma remarking, "She might as well have stayed at home!"

Then Kitty came back to us and, as time passed, presented several complaints to Mummum, one of which was that "Mr. Lionel was very naughty, Mrs. Drew."

"Well, what did he do?"

"He kicked me on the shins."

"Shins, woman!" thundered Mummum, "what are shins? Leave the room!"

It was suddenly decided that we should be sent to boarding school. I was sent to the Academy of Notre Dame, and Lionel to Mount St. Vincent on the Hudson. Jack stayed at home with Mummum.

My first months at the convent were easier than Lionel's at his school. The older girls, during recess, would put me on the end of a bench and ask questions, and would scream with joy at my very English answers. Lionel was having an awful time with his accent—the boys calling him "Lord Cornwallis" and making his life miserable. He ran away twice from that school, walking through the tunnel into the old Grand Central Station. No flashlights then—in fact, no nothing—except monstrous trains bearing down on a small boy in the blackness.

Entirely apart from my success as a comic exponent of the English language at the age of six, I loved the convent. The sisters were extraordinarily understanding, kind and helpful—especially when my life became difficult.

I was six when I was sent to the convent and I was there until I was twelve. Of course I had many weekends at home with Mummum and specially wonderful ones when mamma would come on Sunday. Occasionally papa might be there too. In those days I wore heavy bangs—and how much he disliked them. He used to push my hair back and say it should be like "Alice's" with a round comb. This made me burst into tears because I didn't want to be different from the other girls. I won the argument—but how right he was!

So I lived the routine of a convent boarder and being one of the youngest, the sisters called me "Little Ethel." Many years later I visited my old music teacher in Dayton, Ohio, where she had been transferred and I was still "Little Ethel."

Sister Aloysius was a great music teacher—strict and very tough—who stood no nonsense, was almost impossible to please. I got my silver medal for playing Beethoven's Sonata No. 13, but she saw to it that May Heizmann from Reading, Pennsylvania, got the first prize for playing "Nearer My God to Thee" with variations.

In a general way my father knew what his daughter was "taking" at the convent, but how well it was taking did not dawn upon him until one Sunday afternoon when Mummum summoned him to hear me play. He stood by and, as I looked up when I had finished, I could see that there were tears in his eyes. He said, "Vienna, Leschetizky—she must go ——"

I was thrilled and never heard of it aga

In the classrooms I suffered much beca of my shyness. Whenever we were told memorize anything for our English class had to stand up and say it the next day, I my full quota of torture. The ease with wh so many of the children rattled off Shakespe was a constant source of wonderment to The confidence of the amateur was not mi

Sometimes on Saturday afternoon we wo be taken to a matinee at the Arch Str Theatre. The building had pillars outside the old Greek Parthenon and inside it was red velvet and gold, as I think all theat should be. We sat in a box marked "D" a only Mummum had the key.

We were taught firmly as children that wh ever any member of the family appeared the stage we were never to applaud. Nev It just wasn't done, either when they came the stage or at the end of the performance. do so would have been to break one of firmest family rules of etiquette.

I remember one play called "A Par Match" by Charles Hoyt principally beca there was a lovely little girl in the cast cal "The Innocent Kid" whom I believed to be j my age. She had black silk stockings and lo golden curls and an enchanting little red dre We were taken backstage to meet the stars Evans and Hoey—and "The Innocent Ki turned out to be Mrs. Evans! I cried all t way home.

It was during these days that the mag tude of my grandmother most struck me. H power seemed to exude from her regal pr ence; she was commanding. I believe she u bent more to Jack than to anyone; her lo for him was of the tender kind. Yet she ne allowed any advantage to be taken of su sentiment on her part. One day Jack was la for a meal. He rushed in, out of breath, with evident plan of attack.

"Oh, Mummum," he exclaimed in an aw stricken voice, "have you ever seen a hou all painted black?"

"No," she said abruptly, "nor have yo Sit down."

Mummum would never allow us to be la for anything—it was just not heard of. Y

CULVER SERVICE

"The most charming and entrancing woman I was ever to meet—Madame Modjeska."

can't ever be late in the theater; punctuality part of it, and it was part of our life i Mummum's house. It has always been pa of my life, and I have no patience with la people, especially not with those who take great deal of trouble to be late.

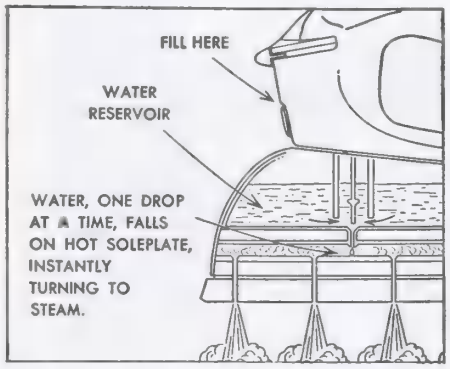
Those Sundays when mamma was playin in New York and could come to spend the da with us were a great thrill. I didn't feel that knew her very well, but she was very gay an made me laugh a lot. I didn't know then tha she was known as a truly witty woman.

Charles Frohman told me long afterwar that once when mamma was on tour in on of his companies she telegraphed him fro San Francisco that she needed new clothe for the play and he telegraphed back on word, "No."

My mother telegraphed "Oh." And he wa so delighted that she got the clothes.

Jack by now was old enough to go t kindergarten, and there was a little boys school on Twentieth Street at the end of ou

CONTINUED ON PAGE 112



New G-E Steam and Dry Iron lets you...

...on most fabrics without sprinkling!

USE IT AS A STEAM IRON

1. "IRON WITHOUT SPRINKLING," says Kathie Norris, "everything except heavy cottons, linens and starched fabrics! The steady flow of steam moistens fabrics, saves you the time and work of sprinkling, and of ironing pre-moistened clothes."

2. INSTANT STEAM! Drop by drop, water falls onto hot soleplate . . . flashes instantly to steam. Then the steam stops automatically when the iron is placed on its heel rest. Uses tap water in all but extremely hard water areas.

3. PRESS LIKE A TAILOR! Press suits, skirts and sweaters without a damp pressing cloth! You can see where to put creases, so you press perfectly! Save money on all kinds of pressing bills—you can do it at home, professionally.

R HEAVY COTTONS, LINENS and d fabrics, use it as a dry iron. You press the button to change your ron to a dry iron—no need to let ol down or even empty the water! ake the change instantly!

2. LIGHT, LIGHT WEIGHT! Only 3¼ pounds! This iron weighs less than a woman's purse. Means much easier handling and a lot less work. Larger soleplate—more than thirty square inches—covers a much wider ironing area in far fewer strokes.

3. NO MORE SCORCHING! Visualizer Fabric-dial gives perfect heat for whatever fabric you're ironing! See this G-E beauty at your G-E dealer's today! General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

USE IT AS A DRY IRON

IT'S TWO IRONS IN ONE!

ONLY $17.95*

Manufacturer's recommended retail or Fair Trade price.*

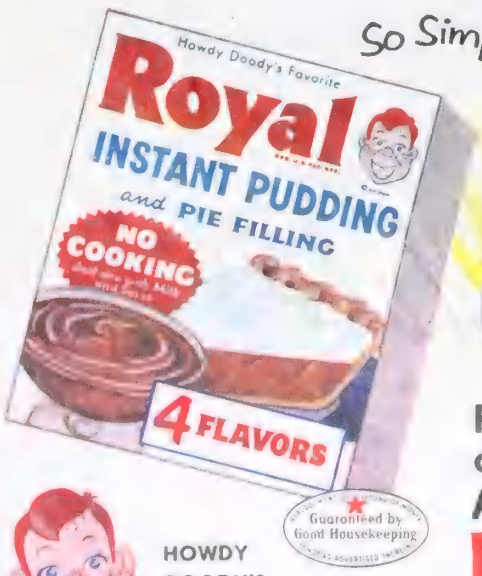
STEAM & DRY IRON

SEE these other wonderful irons at your G-E dealer's: G-E Visualizer Iron ($12.95*), G-E Budget Iron ($9.95*), G-E Portable Steam Iron ($14.95*), G-E Automatic Travel Iron ($9.95*).

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Only Royal Instant Pudding is SUPER HOMOGENIZED



for Melt-in-your-mouth FLAVOR AND SMOOTHNESS!

Instantly Smooth Without Cooking

Because ROYAL Instant Pudding—and only ROYAL—is both pre-cooked and super homogenized, you will find it a new sensation in puddings. Smooth as whipped cream . . . light and fluffy throughout . . . with no "skin" on top! And each deep, rich flavor is flavor at its best—without starchy taste!

ROYAL Instant Pudding is so light and easy to digest you can give it to babies. And you'll be happy to serve this wholesome, inexpensive, quick-fix treat for grown-up occasions—or let the children make it themselves when they beg for sweets. It's good to keep a supply of ROYAL Instant Pudding handy!

So Simple a child can make it!

HOWDY DOODY'S FAVORITE
Copr. KAGRAN

For scrumptious desserts every time... ALWAYS REACH FOR Royal convent garden, presided over by Sister Vincent who looked like a cheerful red apple. She adored Jack and I am sure spared him all trials and tribulations.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 110

Then he and Lionel were sent to Seton Hall, a Jesuit school in New Jersey. Poor Mummum! All these Catholic schools and now Jesuits!

Jack could always manage to upset the family by marvelous stories of things happening to him. When he was at Seton Hall he wrote an impassioned letter to grandmother, telling her how one of the priests had "felled me to the ground with a blow." The Episcopal side of our family smiled in the midst of their horror. And it was decided that my father should go down from New York where he was playing at the time and investigate the matter.

He, metaphorically rolling up his sleeves, said, "Ma'am! Leave it to me!" and off he went to New Jersey to wipe up the entire school. Jack, lurking in the hall, saw him storm into the headmaster's study, where he remained about three hours, emerging wreathed in smiles, declaring to all and sundry, including Jack, "Nonsense, my boy! Most charming man I ever met," dashed for a train and was late for his performance. I believe they'd been discussing the Carlisle Harris murder case, and had had a wonderful time.

In the summer, vacations were spent in various places. Sometimes we were joined by Uncle Googan—he was Sidney Drew. He was very gay and, I dare say, very naughty and generally beguiling. I think Mummum was greatly relieved when he married Aunt Gladys, as she was young, beautiful and very haughty. Also, she was the daughter of McKee Rankin, an actor of whom Mummum approved.

The summer when I was eight we had a house at Fort Wadsworth, Staten Island—or rather, it was a small boardinghouse, Madame Bourquin's, which our family almost entirely monopolized. We lived out of doors most of the time. Devoured by mosquitoes, I was a perfect tattoo of bites. Because marks, they spoke of me as "the child." I was also known as "the wa I would dare anything in the water, an of my mad adventures I came near dr

Then there was a summer at Pleas where Lionel and Jack built a cat which sank under them in the middl Shrewsbury River, and cheering crow both sides of the river leaped in to s small, very good swimmers.

Sometimes papa and mamma were w not often. They were off on tour, so together, sometimes not. But how w it was to see mamma diving throug breakers and then run laughing so ga along the beach calling, "Come along lunch!" It was lovely to hear her say Once when I was about ten Mummu me with her on a visit to Mr. Joseph J at his house on Buzzard's Bay. The o I had ever seen Mummum play w Malaprop and always with Mr. Jeffe Bob Acres. I used to think "The Riva the only important play in the wor evening Mummum and Mr. Jefferso sitting on the porch, rocking and remi when he said, "Don't you think so, L She said, "Yes. You know, Joseph, yo only one left who calls me Louisa."

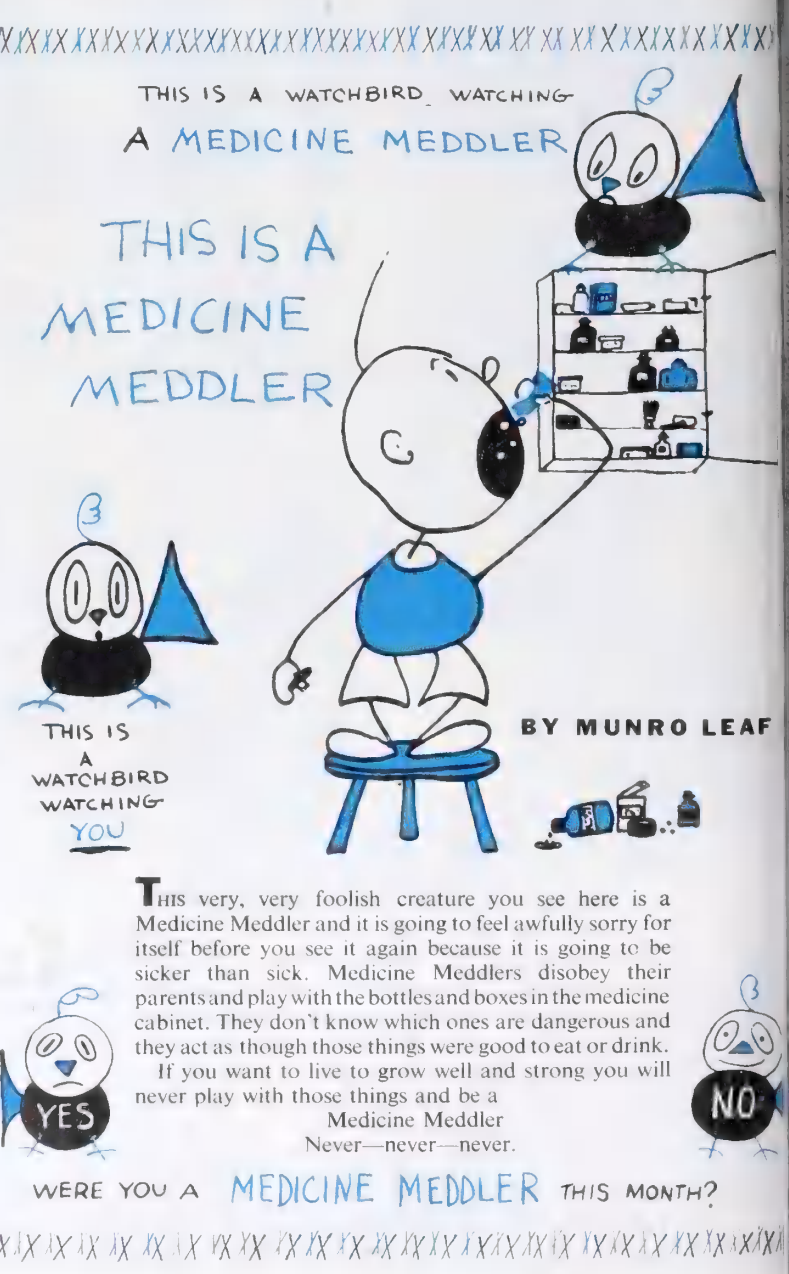
And I burst into loud tears. It seeme so sad. Mummum turned on me in indignation, when I was saved by floating across the bay.

"Coming fishing in the morning, J



"No, Grover. Mrs. Drew is spendi days with me."

"Oh! My respects, madame."

On the way upstairs to bed I asked was the fat man in the boat, Mummum

Then I really did get it. Apparently not refer to the President of the Unite as "the fat man in the boat."

I must dwell a little more on the C of Notre Dame on Rittenhouse Sq magine!

Me with My Own Chef!

You can say that again, dear lady, when you serve the newest of Sexton Quality Foods—Famous Chefs MENU MARVELS. Each Menu Marvel is a complete meal ready to serve. Each is the recipe of a famous chef, with the finest of ingredients, prepared in Sexton's Sunshine Kitchens.

Menu Marvels are effortless meals. Try them! Corn Beef Hash, Chicken Chop Suey, Spanish Rice, Chicken Fricassee, Beef Stew, Chile con Carne and many others.

Sexton Quality Foods

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

MARSHMALLOW fluff

Whatever your favorite cake mix—fluff is the perfect topping!

Ready to Serve

Write for FREE "Yummy Book" of dessert recipes, illustrated in color, Durkee-Mower, Inc., Dept. L2, Lynn, Mass.

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Make every-day menus extra special with . . .

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS
". . . it's the Quality Pack"

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

$5.00 IS YOURS EASILY
For Selling Only 100 Boxes of Our Lovely FLORAL EVERYDAY GREETING CARDS

Beauty and value sell on sight. Make 75c on each box. New 21-$1 Assortments, unusual Kodak, Lace, Tall Cards, New Gift Items, 100 fast-sellers. Cash profits to 150% plus $5-$50 in Bonus Gifts. Get FREE Stationery Sales, 4 best Assortments on approval. $1 Glove Dryers FREE. Get FREE if you act fast. WRITE NOW!
GREETING CARD CO., 4401 Cermak Rd., Dept. 80-A, Chicago 23, Ill.

Ferris NORTHERN GROWN EVERGREENS $1 ppd.

Four each of Blue Spruce, Douglas Fir, Norway Spruce, Scotch Pine and White Spruce. All 20 only $1.00 postpaid. One to a customer, please.
FREE! Handsome, colorful 1955 Ferris Nursery Catalog. 60 pages. 86th Edition.
EARL FERRIS NURSERY
675 Bridge St. Hampton, Iowa

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
BEST FOR HOME POPPING!

Philadelphia. It is a Belgian order, with its Mother House in Namur. I like to think of three wonderful women: The Sister Superior Agnes Mary, Sister Aloysius, my piano teacher, and Sister Julie de St. Esprit, who was mistress of the boarders when I was there and whose duty it was to know all about us—and I mean all. And she never failed in that duty. I owe her so much. I was never able to repay her because it was only late in my life that I realized that before any spiritual or moral lapses I might have considered, I would pause, for somewhere in the distance or maybe by my shoulder like a guardian angel, there was Sister Julie saying, "Really, Ethel, don't be absurd!"—very salutary.

Sister Superior Agnes Mary was a gentle, saintly woman—more of her later.

THERE were a few months when mamma and papa rented Uncle Jack's apartment in New York when he, his family, Aunt Dodo, and Bee, their daughter, were abroad; and I was there part of a vacation. And that was when papa took me to my first baseball game. I was about seven years old. We went to the old Polo Grounds on the elevated railroad. I was very excited, but not nearly as excited as my father. It turned out that he was a Giant fan, which I have found out during the years is not the same as being a baseball fan. Well, this day the Giants lost, and my father couldn't have been more agonized. He walked violently up and down the platform, throwing his arms to heaven, saying, "God! how could you do this to me, how could you?" I slipped into another car in the train, pretending I didn't know that eccentric Englishman—and I can't tell you how English he sounded in the shadow of Coogan's Bluff. I had no idea where to get off that elevated train, so I was eventually removed to a police station and returned rather in style to my parents and The Green Slipper. It was later that I learned to love baseball, but I never, never had a favorite team!

It is strange to think of the difference in behavior of my father, coming from the sort of family he did, and the family into which he married. He was, of course, intensely emotional and what is now called uninhibited. So, in a way, are we. But such is the powerful and lingering influence of my grandmother, our deepest feelings are never to be disclosed. They are our own private affairs, never to be paraded in public. Strong emotions—either sad or glad—may be hurled with gusto at an audience, with the footlights in between—and then we are being not ourselves, but an author's invention that we leave at the stage door, like the key of our dressing room. I have never heard of any Drew doing a recitation and I know we children never did. And I always hated "the game" where you had to act out various words! I have often fled a house when they insisted how good I would be.

The school terms passed one by one. I was always practicing at the piano and poring over books. On my occasional visits home during rare weekends I would get hold of "David Greve" or "Robert Elsmere" and read and read and read. I would never go out unless I was almost hurled out.

When I was thirteen years old I was suddenly taken from the convent and sent to New York to my mother. She was ill—bronchitis they said, and was to be sent to California and I was to go with her. We were to go by boat down to the Isthmus of Panama, across it in a train, then up the Pacific to Santa Barbara where mamma was to get well. It was all very exciting, and I kept hoping I would be all right and not too shy or scared. It was bad just before the boat sailed when mamma was saying good-by to papa and begging him not to forget her. It was my first sight of tragedy, although I didn't know it then.

I slept in the upper berth of that little cabin and one night I woke up to hear mamma crying and saying, "What's going to happen to my three kids!" I felt a sort of terror, but also felt I mustn't let her know I had heard. Then she coughed and coughed—not loud, rather gently—and then she fell asleep.

I stood on the back platform of the train crossing Panama, fascinated by the great deserted machines of the de Lesseps' attempt sinking into the ground . . . then the other boat, stopping at several little Mexican Want lovelier hair with easier care?

JUST SET AT HOME . . . with new JO•CUR

JO•CUR's wonderful new formula gives hair that exciting professionally set look . . . in a few minutes at home! So easy to use—just dip the comb. So effective on the most stubborn curls. Keeps every wave in place, smoothly. Dries fast, won't flake, non-sticky. New JO•CUR, in green or "clear". At most cosmetic counters . . . only 15c plus tax.

"Profile Bob", interpreted by Jean De Chant Salon, New York. Jo•Cur will preserve the beauty of your hair style.

MAKES YOUR WAVE BEHAVE
Your coif forgets its wayward ways, becomes smooth, responsive, with new JO • CUR Wave Set.

LONGER LASTING LOVELINESS
It's dollars and sense to safeguard your precious hair-do for pennies . . . with thrifty JO • CUR Wave Set.

ports . . . and then Santa Barbara, one night at the Arlington Hotel . . . then the lovely little house covered with roses even all over the roof and pouring into my window. And the great and wonderful gentleman who was our Chinese cook . . . and everything else.

Mamma, of course, had a letter to the doctor who was going to make her well. He was a great, tall man with a red beard, wise and kind. After he had listened to mamma's chest and heard her cough, I remember he said, "Yes—and who is taking care of you, Mrs. Barrymore?" and she said, "My little girl." And then he looked very grave and said, "You have no nurse?" And she laughed and said, "Oh, no, I don't want a nurse . . . just my little girl." And he said, "Yes, she will take good care of you." And I was frightened.

Mamma had brought all her clothes with her and I spent some happy hours upstairs in a big room with huge cupboards unpacking them. Lovely brocade evening dresses and brocade evening shoes. . . . I really think she had brought all the possessions she had.

"To Mummum the theater was never 'show business.' She'd say, 'Show—do you mean a circus?' as if she were the Red Queen saying, 'Off with her head!'"

People in Santa Barbara were very friendly and called on mamma, and one Sunday morning the mayor was to take her for a drive. When I brought in her breakfast that morning she was very gay and said how well she felt and that I must run off to Mass, as she knew how much I wanted to, so I did. And I was walking slowly home in the middle of the road, kicking stones and every now and then doing a little dance, when I saw a girl running toward me. It was Mabel, the mayor's daughter. She called to me, "Oh, Ethel! Hurry home, your mother has had a hemorrhage." I got home just before she died. She didn't k me. She was thirty-four and a great and lant lady, my beloved mother I hardly k

The dreadful days that followed were r livable by great kindnesses. First there wa Chinaman who, saying, "Little Missy not see," had made my dear mother and room look as if no terrible thing had pened. I sent a telegram to my father ar Uncle Sidney to tell Mummum and brothers. And th ordered my b dress—a grow dress—and put u hair. Then there the undertaker an the arrangements made, as I was to mamma back to P delphia and p Mummum. I sup I was in a stat shock because I d cry very much un began packing all lovely clothes and the lovely shoes. T I cried and cried, our dear China brought me a cu tea and patted shoulder and w away . . . so wise helpful. And mayor and his and some kind pe named Dibblee, others who helped I've been grateful them all my life. M ame Modjeska met me in Los Angeles— and her husband—and they helped me. F Madame couldn't stop crying, though tried so hard to, and I felt I had to com her. Then I was in my lower berth in my l black dress, and thought, "Next month be fourteen."

———

Next Month—Ethel, Lionel and John their first stage roles. Reports from Englan Miss Barrymore's romances with "dukes, e and even an Indian prince." The true story o real engagements.

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 39

lungs and heart. Postoperative pneumonias do develop, but they also develop in the young; and prophylactic antibiotic treatment is able to circumvent the majority of cases. Fluctuations in blood pressure must be watched. There is a regular regimen of treatment, including rigid care to see that the patient gets enough oxygen during anesthesia, the use of sedatives only sparingly, and careful control of body fluids by intravenous therapy. These are primarily matters for the anesthetist to handle."

"Then operations on elderly people are as much a matter of anesthesia as of surgery, Doctor?"

"I would say that the two are at least equally important. It is the surgeon's technical skill and manual dexterity that cut down the operative time as well as minimizing the traumatism to tissues. And it is his judgment and experience which will be exercised in postoperative care so that the patient will not be allowed to remain inactive, inviting hypostatic lung complications, or to become overfilled with fluids and narcotics to the same purpose, or undersupplied with vitamins and antibiotics; and to make certain that normal blood richness is maintained."

"Well, you are scattering many of my fears concerning the operation you say my mother should have, Doctor, but you haven't told us yet what sort of an operative procedure you recommend."

"It will consist largely of plastic work and removal of the uterus. It will not require any abdominal incision, although I would not hesitate to open the abdomen if it were necessary."

"Tell me, Doctor, do old people's tissues heal as well as young ones'?"

"Not entirely. There is undoubtedly a diff ence. However, we have been able to cut do complications to a large degree."

The two women were silent for a few m ments. Then the younger one said, "Do really believe that this is going to be a r tively safe procedure for our mother?"

The doctor picked up three slips of pa from his desk. "I can say that much, at lea he answered, "since I have the necessary l oratory data. Here is the picture, as I see Your mother's heart and lungs are as sou as we have any right to expect. Her bl pressure is within normal bounds for her a which argues against extensive hardening the arteries. Her kidney function is good a her blood analyses as satisfactory as we co reasonably expect. I am confident that sh today a better surgical risk than many in viduals I have known who were twenty ye younger. I believe we can operate upon yo mother without too great a hazard or I wo not undertake it.

"This is what I propose. I would like send her to the hospital a day or two in a vance of the operation, so that she can beco oriented and as complacent as possible. T will give the anesthetist an opportunity to termine the type of anesthetic best adapted her requirements. As for the operative p cedure itself, it will be as quick as I can ma it, consistent with sound surgical practice. W shall hope to have her out of bed the next da and with the co-operation of the house st may be certain that careful attention is giv to all the postoperative details I enumerated

"I am confident that she will be safe in yo hands, Doctor, although I do feel a lit conscience-stricken." E

QUICK RELIEF for COLD SUFFERERS

As a gargle STANBACK relieves sore throat due to colds.
Reduces fever, relieves aches and pains and sore, aching muscles that accompany colds.

Test STANBACK Against Any Preparation You've Ever Used

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Snap Back with STANBACK

Flocked-lined for hand comfort . . . sewed fingers . . . no clammy feel . . . long wearing . . . neat fit . . . Swirl-grip, non-slip finish . . . easy on and off Velva-Tex has got you covered!

Protect your hands from every household chore with these QUALITY gloves at a pin-money price.

At your drugstore.

Velva-Tex

RECOMMENDED BY PARENTS

The Faultless Rubber Co. • Ashland, Ohio

Do You Need EXTRA MONEY?

MAKE $50 TO $300 IN SPARE TIME . . . Show Friends Exciting Everyday Greeting Cards!

Lots of folks do it so easily . . . it's fun too! Take orders fast, showing beautiful "Feature" All-Occasion Assortment and humorous "All-In-Fun" Assortments, over 40 easy-to-sell items for Birthdays, Get Well, Anniversaries, etc. You make up to 50% profit each order! Big plus profits with glorious Easter Cards. Send no money . . . mail coupon now for both assortments prepaid, on approval, plus FREE Catalog of money-making line.

WALLACE BROWN, INC., Dept. B-9
225 Fifth Ave.. New York 10, N. Y.

WALLACE BROWN, Inc., Dept. B-9
225 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.
I need extra cash! Rush "Feature" and "All-In-Fun" Assortments on approval, plus FREE Catalog of money-makers.

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... STATE .....

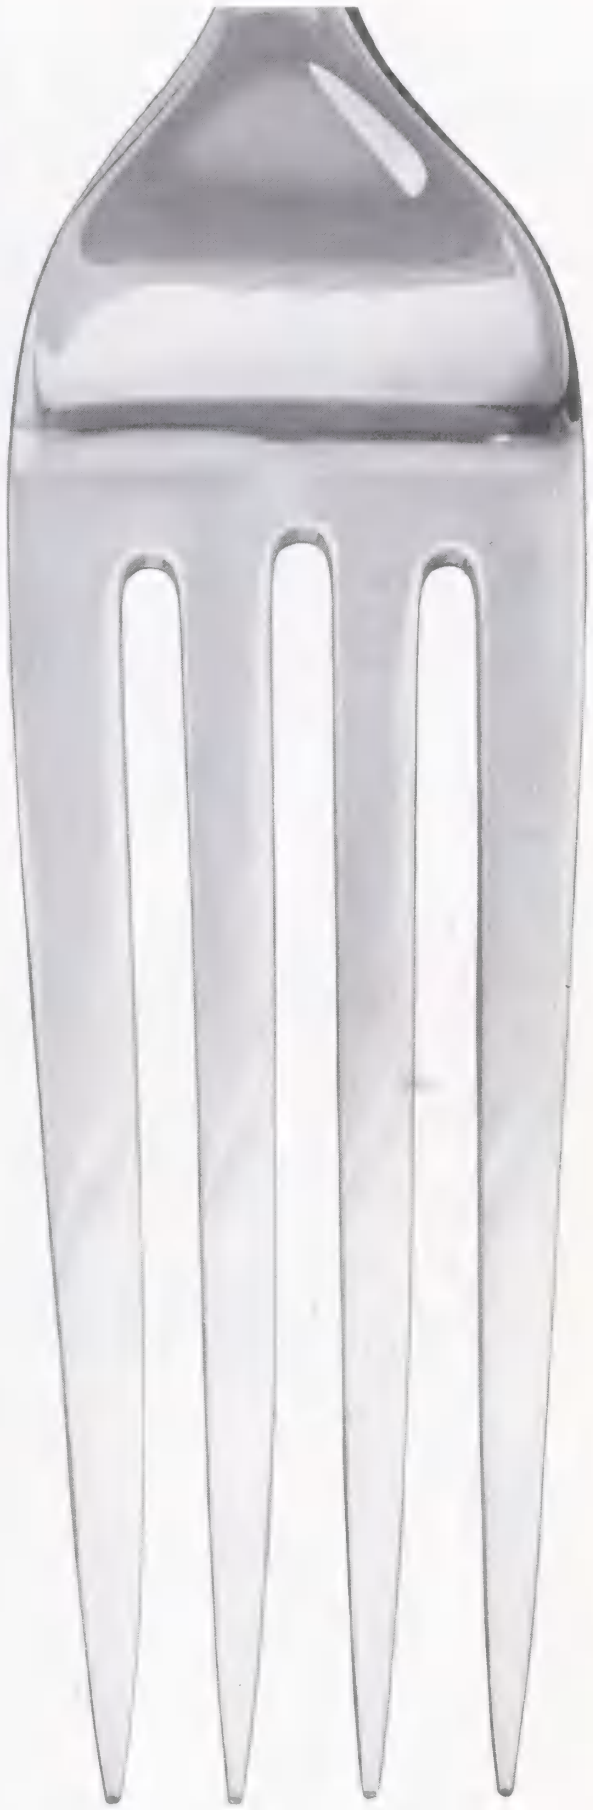
How To Keep Free Of Corns

Sore Toes, Callouses, Tender Spots

NEVER wait! At the first sign of sore toes or tender spots on your feet, apply soothing, cushioning, protective Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. You'll get super-fast relief and stop corns or callouses before they can start!

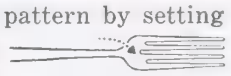
Quickly Remove Corns, Callouses

If you already have corns or callouses, one of the fastest ways of removing them known to medical science is to use Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads with the separate Medicated Disks included. No other method does all these things for you. Get a box today. Sold everywhere.



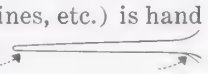
Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

CORNS CALLOUSES BUNIONS SOFT CORNS

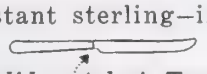


The Tōwle Touch

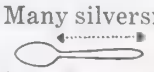
Sterling craftsmanship at its best... painstaking devotion to detail... personal pride in each and every piece.



CONSIDER THE FORK: A Towle fork is subtly different...see how Towle achieves added grace and symmetry for this particular pattern by setting back the center tine space–thus



...And a truly practical Towle Touch–a tiny notch between each tine to make washing easier. For extra cleanliness–every surface (tine points, between tines, etc.) is hand polished to smooth perfection.



AND NOW THE KNIFE: Take for example the famous Towle French Provincial knife. It is designed to give superb "feel" and balance in the hand...to lie correctly flat upon the table. The handle–crafted of extra-heavy, dent-resistant sterling–is permanently wedded to the blade through solid metal. A Towle knife is air-tight, water-tight, sanitary, safe...and will not rattle, loosen or come apart!

TOWLE DESIGNS FROM TIP-TO-TOE. Many silversmiths design their patterns only from here to here.

They use the same bowl and tine shoulder designs from pattern to pattern. Each Towle fork tine and bowl is part of the pattern because Towle designs from tip-to-toe...

See this distinction of Towle Sterling in the elegantly turned bowl of the Candlelight teaspoon...in the unique handling of the Contour butter knife and...the graceful tine detail of the Madeira salad fork. To bring out the full beauty and detail of Towle patterns, the warmth and richness of precious sterling itself, a last Towle Touch–Towle's prized "deep burnish" hand-finish on every piece!

THE TOWLE TOUCH AND YOU

Owning Towle Sterling will give you particular pleasure, for The Towle Touch is the sterling touch in tableware...beauty of form, perfection of detail, richness of surface possible in no lesser material...and recognizable always as the finest in sterling.

See the complete array of Towle patterns today at selected stores best qualified to serve you...they cost no more than standard sterling brands. Crafted by Towle of Newburyport, Massachusetts.

© 1955, The Cream of W

Which is your way ?

Some people put chunks of brown sugar over piping hot "Cream of Wheat" before serving, so the sugar melts and blends right in. Others sprinkle crunchy bits of brown sugar over the cereal while they eat, enjoying the contrast of textures and flavors. Either way, Enriched Quick "Cream of Wheat" gives you food-energy, minerals and vitamins . . . including a whole day's supply of needed Iron. Simple to fix! Cooks in just 5 minutes.

YOU'RE RIGHT! A HOT CEREAL IS BETTER FOR YOU

®

Bobbie: "Somehow I can't think any investment on earth could be more important than happy childhoods."

Ann Arbor, Michigan

Dear Editors: My husband has a gross yearly income of $11,200 and we cannot save a cent! In fact, we just barely manage to squeeze through each month. For the life of me I cannot figure out how other couples with children (we have three) can live so inexpensively. Every month we have extras which never seem to appear in the budgets you publish. For instance, last month we had five invitations to birthday parties to which our children had to take presents, $7.50 for an adult-night-school furniture-refinishing course, $10.32 for a television-repair job, a new tire for Linda's bicycle, two costumes at $6.25 each for the two girls to wear in the Ann Arbor Figure Skating Club Ice Carnival, $5.00 for Robin's violin lessons, a new windowpane to replace the one Jimmy threw a snowball through, a new handle and bowl for my mixer, and a veterinarian's bill for treatment of the dog's injured leg. It goes on and on like that, month after month. We never have simply the ten or twelve standard monthly expenditures. A year and a half ago we purchased a small new ranch house for $13,350. It's a nice little house, but the roof leaked, water oozed up through the tile on the floor, the front door warped, nails worked out at the ceiling and many other dismal little things happened our first winter in the place. These things all have been repaired at considerable expense to us, but new repairs crop up constantly. We will be lucky if the house is still standing in twenty years, let alone paid for!

Most sincerely,

Roberta Harper Lawrence

In Ann Arbor, Michigan, Merle and Roberta Lawrence balance the budget to a zero.

BROKE BUT HAPPY ON $11,200 A YEAR

By G. M. WHITE

PHOTOGRAPHS By GUY GILLETTE

Young Couples Now in America Lives

BOBBIE LAWRENCE habitually kicks her shoes off and does her housework barefooted (when she is forced to work indoors—she would much rather be outside). She is a firm believer in the theory that "a small house is more work than a large one" and she has had experience with both. Just now she can plug her vacuum sweeper in a wall plug in her living room and sweep her entire house without pulling the cord taut. The furnishings are adequate but certainly not luxurious. "We are always broke," she will happily stop housework to tell you. "If dollars are wealth, we are as poor as church mice. Don't ask me why. We just live."

"Just living" means the Lawrences have the usual electrical appliances, a station wagon, good food, good clothes, a good mortgage and the generosity of good-natured people. There are also three quite good Lawrence children: Linda, who is ten; Robin,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 119

Merle: "We're not accumulative people, I guess. Living counts for more than saving."

"So many things are important.
And they all cost more than you expect."

"The girls would have a hard time if we uprooted them to a new school to save money. It wouldn't be fair to them."

"You hear them sing in choir and you go home and write an extra check for some children's need or better world or such."

"My wife is sunny. It's no cinch for her while I plan studies and work late nights, but she never complains."

"Of course the expense mounts up. But you give confidence when you give accomplishments—dancing, riding, so on."

"The dedicated look on a feminine face in a dress store fascinates me," says Merle, who wrote Studies in Human Behavior.

"I think he inherited his marine skills. One of his ancestors was Don't-give-up-the-ship Lawrence."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 117

nine; and Jimmy, a sturdy, impish four-year-old who is usually near his mother. The two girls are in school, of course (they live outside the school district and must pay tuition). Then there is Fritzi, a sad semihousebroken dachshund puppy, if you want to pay any attention to him. He doesn't seem to care whether you do or not. He was, and is, inexpensive; he was born with an extra toe on each hind foot, a hernia, broken tail and floating rib.

Except for Fritzi, the Lawrence family is hardly unique, but their harrowing economic life in a next-to-the-top income bracket has several special features. One is that they live in a region where the cost of living is probably higher than in any other place in the nation. (In 1954 Consumer Price Indexes, Detroit ranks at or near the top for most items among twenty major cities. Residents of Ann Arbor, Michigan, where the Lawrence family lives, claim it is far more expensive to live there than in Detroit.)

Another is that neither Merle nor Bobbie Lawrence has any emotional attachment to money. They agree that the thing to do with money is spend it. Merle, a research physiologist utterly devoted to his work, does not feel that he is underpaid. A true scientist, if it were not for the conventional demands of family life he would happily work for nothing and he often does work, obliviously content, far into the night. Bobbie, a wholly outgoing person, handles the outgo of family funds, but Merle does not blame her that they go out so completely: "She keeps a meticulous checkbook, and balances it correctly every month—nothing to nothing."

He has no complaint about the way Bobbie handles the children, either, and the children reflect her sunny, easygoing ways. At Linda's tenth birthday party last September (which she gave with her usual somewhat lavish hand—eighteen children, gifts, hot dogs, ice cream and cake for all, and a live turtle as a special prize "for some other hopeless mother to suffer"), Linda did not greedily open each gift as it was handed to her but kept them all intact until her guests were more or less quietly seated in a circle around her. Then she carefully unwrapped each one and passed it around for her friends to admire. "I wanted all the children to enjoy my getting these lovely presents," she explained.

Among the gifts she received were two live turtles.

Bobbie is accustomed to mothering turtles, but mice she feared until "Shop, cook and clean—but I do them the hard way. It's always more tempting to skate or dig in the garden than be indoors scouring a corner."

"A life's too short for all there is to do. Linda and Robin are discovering music now, an exciting stage."

"Checkups—health's good. Probably from outdoor life and ounces of prevention."

"The scientist. . . . But when he turns from his work, he manages a transformation to the complete extrovert."

"Added garage, paving, grass. Nothing left for a rainy day? Why worry?"

"The big squeeze came when we moved and ran into a housing shortage."

Robin found a baby mouse, no larger than the end of her thumb. Its eyes were still unopened. She fixed a bed for it in a matchbox and, upon her father's advice, kept it on top of the hot-water tank where it would be warm. In this improvised incubator the baby thrived and took milk from a tiny doll's nursing bottle. She named him Squeakie. After a week or so, when Squeakie had become an accepted member of the family, Merle gave him his bedtime bottle, a chore so fascinating that he forgot the contents of the bottle were approximately three times the capacity of the mouse. When he began to burp in distress, Merle returned him to his crib on top of the hot-water tank. The next morning Robin discovered that Squeakie was dead. She was heartbroken. "I did so want to see the color of his eyes," she wailed.

"The greatest thrill of my life," Bobbie Lawrence says, "was giving my husband a son after we had had two daughters." Having four handsome brothers and a husband she adores (in spite of frightful teasing at times), she gaily confesses favoring the male sex. With everybody anxious to please him, Jimmy Lawrence is

CONTINUED ON PAGE 131

"Fixing up the interior ran too high. But it's colorful now, and it's home. Bills can be worth it sometimes. After all, you can't decorate a bank vault!"

Hush Puppies Quick, Easy, Good

These crisp golden corn meal puffs started years ago in the Old South. Northern folks discovered their delicious flavor and now it seems as though everybody is talking about Hush Puppies. Serve them as a bread with fish, meat or main-dish salads, or as piping-hot appetizers. Delicious!

(2 dozen)

- 1½ cups Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal (white or yellow)
- ½ cup sifted flour
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 small onion, finely chopped (optional)
- 1 egg, beaten
- ¾ cup milk

ift together dry ingredients. Add nion. Add beaten egg and milk to dry ngredients, stirring lightly. Drop a tea- oon of batter for each Hush Puppy into hot deep fat (360°F.) frying only few at a time. Fry until a golden brown. Drain on absorbent paper. Serve hot.

Grits au Gratin Easy, Quick!

Man-pleasing main dish, rich with Fresh Corn Flavor.

No white sauce to make . . . Cooking time cut way down.

(6 servings)

- 1 cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Enriched Hominy Grits
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 4 cups boiling water
- ¼ pound sliced sharp cheese, cut into pieces
- ½ cup milk
- ½ cup buttered bread crumbs
- ¼ teaspoon paprika

Slowly stir grits into boiling salted water. Cover and cook 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Put half the cooked grits in a greased 1½-quart casserole. Cover with half the cheese; then pour half the milk over this. Repeat, using remaining grits, cheese and milk. Cover with bread crumbs and sprinkle with paprika. Bake in slow oven (325°F.) 15 to 20 minutes.

Note: If using Quick Quaker Grits, cook only 5 minutes.

w see what's happened to Corn Meal!

Fresh Corn Flavor

Be sure it's Quaker or Aunt Jemima

Let the good cook in you shine out! Get the new-day Corn Meal with the wonderful Fresh Corn Flavor. Notice how quickly it mixes and cooks, what a tempting texture it gives you.

Now serve mouth-watering corn breads and casseroles that sing with Fresh Corn Flavor. (Four bright and easy ideas for Corn Meal – and Grits, too – right on this page!)

Quick Pimiento-Pepper Corn Bread

Easy 9-minute, 1-bowl method! Non-crumbly, delicately moist, and so delicious it dresses up the plainest meal

- 1 cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal (white or yellow)
- 1 cup sifted flour
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ cup chopped green pepper
- 3 tablespoons chopped pimiento
- 2 eggs, beaten
- ½ cup milk
- ⅓ cup melted shortening

Sift together corn meal, flour, baking powder and salt; mix with green pepper and pimiento. Stir in beaten eggs and milk; lightly stir in melted shortening. Bake in a greased 8" square pan in a hot oven (425°F.) 20 to 25 minutes.

Quick Pork Sausage Tamale Pie

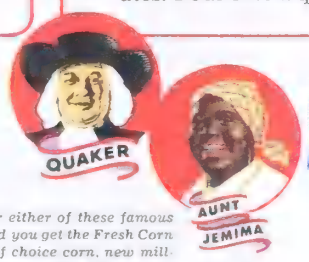
Easy Dinner-in-a-Dish. Juicy, meaty, hearty!

(6 servings)

Sausage Base:

- 1 lb. pork sausage links
- ½ cup chopped onion
- ¼ cup chopped green pepper
- 2 cups cooked lima beans, drained
- ½ cup chili sauce
- 2½ cups (#2 can) tomatoes
- 1 teaspoon salt

Corn Bread Topping:



- ¾ cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal (white or yellow)
- 1 tablespoon flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1½ teaspoons baking powder
- 1 egg
- ⅓ cup milk
- 1 tablespoon shortening, soft

For sausage base, brown sausages in frying pan. Remove sausages; drain off all but a few tablespoons fat. Add onion, green pepper; cook until brown. Cut sausages in pieces; add with other ingredients to onion and green pepper. Cover; simmer 30 minutes. Pour into 2-quart casserole.

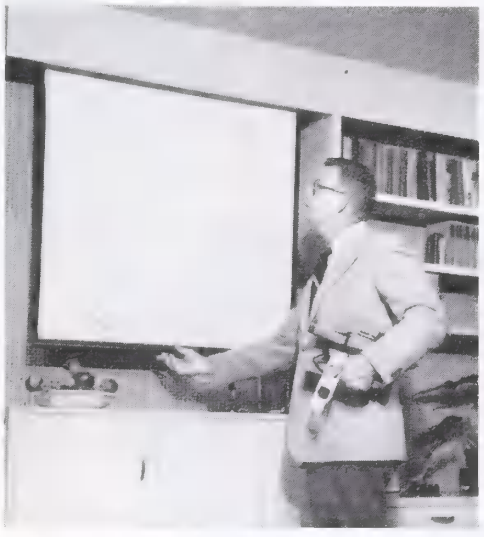
Sift dry ingredients into bowl. Add egg, milk, shortening. Beat with rotary beater until smooth, about 1 minute. Do not overbeat. Drop batter onto hot meat mixture. Batter will sink but rise during baking to form topping. Bake in hot oven (425°F.) about 20 minutes.

Quaker CORN MEAL

. . HOMINY GRITS AND QUICK GRITS, TOO

Look for either of these famous faces and you get the Fresh Corn Flavor of choice corn, new milling methods, new packaging.

Aunt Jemima CORN MEAL



. . . HOMINY GRITS, TOO

LEONARD NADEL

Cupboard now holds 21″ TV, set back into a closet. Doors fold open shutter-fashion. To right went a desk with pull-out shelf, file drawers, green plastic top. Green basket-weave wallpaper is water-fast. Small lamp serves desk, can swing to wall for a soft TV light. Larger lamp swings over to chair.

A 3-step program in space saving gives Lawrences more room all through the house.

Before showing colored slides, Merle rolls screen down from behind valance, gets his projector from a cupboard at left (not shown). Whole storage area extends only 18″ into room, with rest of the enclosed TV set going 10″ back into closet. Two big advantages: more living space, and muting of blare.

Young Home-Builders

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

Step 1 fits TV and table in living room

"AFTER renting a big farmhouse, we had thre days to vacate, and the only house we coul find and buy was small. We sold half our bi furnishings. Even so, we didn't have room." I Merle and Bobbie Lawrence's new home, book were still in cartons, cameras were stowed wit socks, a typewriter sat on a linen shelf, an family records were squirreled into a closet.

The only way to get space was to reorganize. I the 13′ x 18′ living room, the walls were minu any hideaway. Along one stood a big TV set an spindling desk. A second held a sofa; a third, tw big chairs. A fourth was windowed.

The changes started with a storage section il lustrated here. The TV set was recessed and a des built beside it. That move freed a wall near th kitchen for dining (and that freed the kitchen). An the house and family began to breathe more easil Dining table, 35″ x 58″, fits where TV and a tall desk used to be—next to kitchen. Table top is mahogany bought in Florida. Brass legs replace wood ones; new silver drawers push from side to side. Inspiration came from Bobbie's furniture course. With friends for Sunday supper, she presides over an electric fry pan, Merle tosses salad.

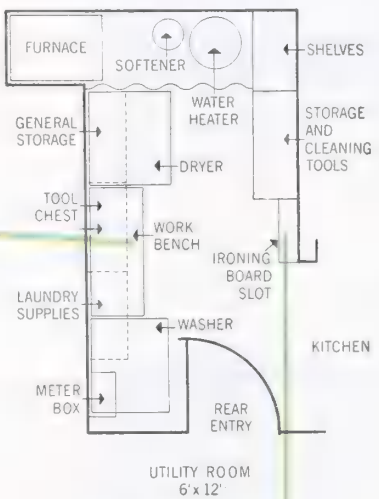
Step 2 now gives work space in the kitchen.



THE chipper little kitchen flags the eye with curtains made of a checked tablecloth. It's a popular spot now. Formerly the big mahogany table was squeezed up to the window and the family awkwardly slid onto side benches. Big table shifted to living room opened the way for a small table in the kitchen. It's plastic-topped and practical for lunches. The girls do homework on it. Even Merle studies here without distraction. Now that TV is no longer outside the kitchen door, but across the living room and into the wall, sounds are kept low. When Merle and the girls aren't busy here, Bobbie uses her new work center for chores, and volunteers have room to join her.

Work top between washer and dryer is Merle's radio-ham center, except on washday, when Bobbie uses it. Tools above, in slide-door cabinet, are in movable hangers on punched hard board. Below top are shelves for ice skates, lunch boxes, empty bottles and rain boots.

Robin beams at her reflection in the shining silver tray. Girls and Bobbie polish large pieces, using a treated silver cloth, dry, to buff up a sheen. Knives and forks, now protected by antitarnish lining in the dining-table drawers, need less work than ever.

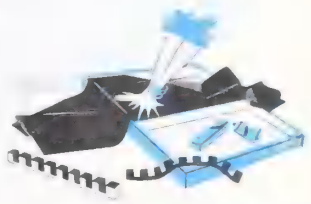
Step 3 opens the utility room to new use.

STEP into the utility room and you say to yourself, "Here's a family that really has a place for everything." No small trick for a small house! But a niche has been found for coats, cleaning aids, trays, tools, hobby material, skates, bottles for the grocer—and there's furnace, water heater and softener, washer and dryer—in less than 6′ x 12′.

Planning is the answer. Between washer and dryer went a workbench shelved for family needs. Storage cabinets went above it. A split-bamboo screen closed off utility end of the room. Next to kitchen went a cupboard for overflow supplies. Close-ups show how many small items are housed.

Cleaning closet, like wall closet, used sliding doors of natural-colored chipboard that needed only shellacking. Yellow-painted interior holds cleaning tools, with one side shelved for waxes, polishes, cleaners and such. Coats hang against blue background; behind is slot near kitchen door to hold trays, iron and ironing board.

STUART



Did you know?

When soap meets soft water, baths bubble.

In 85 per cent of the country, water is hard. But water softeners now replace rain barrels. Lawrences' rented tank equipment cuts down soap consumption, fabric mortality, heating bills, pipe repair. And shampoos are bright, linens white, dishware sparkling.

Drawers lined with antitarnish fabric keep a sparkle in silver. Bobbie fitted a special cloth to drawer, cut it to fit, leaving extra flap to fold over top. Fabric is glued to bottom and sides of drawer. Slotted bridges to hold flatware were covered with the fabric, then screwed to the drawer from the bottom.

A new kind of fitted sheet—three corners boxed, one fastened with ties—cuts tugging and gives a smooth fit.

Want to slice bread thin, for dainty tea sandwiches? Refrigerate it first!

Robin is so delighted with a little sponge mop, she helps clean floors. Mop 38" high is her mother's, used for window cleaning, and with handle top removed used for tub scouring.

Any small tools are a happy way to introduce children to homemaking. Available for girls these days: a small carpet sweeper and a vacuum cleaner, a padded ironing board and an iron that heats, a junior cooking set, and even packaged mixes to fit small cake and cooky sheets.

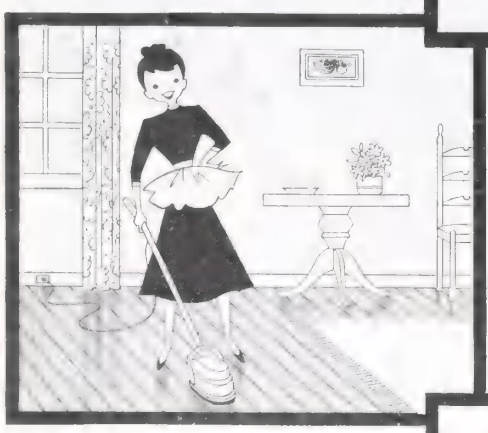
Some clever new can openers magnetically hold lids so they won't drop into cans and need rescuing.

When building sliding-door cabinets, nonwarp wood is a must. New board of resin-impregnated chips can be counted on to stay flat.

KVP Helpful Household Papers

Your guarantee of quality always is the KVP trademark. You'll find KVP Freezer Paper in locker plants, and with the other KVP papers in housewares and paper sections of leading stores.

Paper Maids SAVE TIME—SAVE WORK



Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Cookery Parchment • Gift Wrapping

KALAMAZOO VEGETABLE PARCHMENT CO. • KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

In Canada Buy KVP — APPLEFORD Paper Products

To give wood floors beauty — plus surface protection — Johnson's Paste Wax is your smartest selection

It seeps into pores, enriching the grain... You can buff back floor beauty again and again!

Wax once...relax months!

Johnson's Paste Wax

makes floors shine longest!

LEONARD NADI

I shop by bicycle twice a week—park the groceries behind me and Jimmy up fro

Simply Delicious

One-dish meals are so adaptable, I use these three for both family dinners and informal get-togethers.

By BOBBIE LAWREN

STUART

An all-year-round favorite family casserole, but the children think it's especially good in the summertime, made with Swiss chard from our own garden.

CHARD OR SPINACH AND TUNA DIVAN

Cook 2 packages frozen spinach or Swiss chard until tender; drain (2 pounds fresh spinach or Swiss chard may be substituted). Make a cream sauce using ¼ cup butter or margarine, ¼ cup flour, 2 cups milk. Season with ⅛ teaspoon onion salt, ¼ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Blend in ½ cup mayonnaise and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Place one 7-ounce can tuna, drained and flaked, in the bottom of a 2-quart casserole. Add h the sauce; mix the other half with cooked spinach or Swiss chard. Pc over the tuna. Top with ½ cup b tered cracker crumbs. Bake in mod ate oven, 350° F., 25 minutes u bubbly and hot. Garnish with sli tomatoes. 6 servings.

AMBROSIA

Toss sliced, peeled oranges with t ted dates and coconut.

Menuette: Chard or Spinach and Tuna Divan, Garlic French Bread, Ambrosia, Chocolate Oatmeal Cooki

The aromatic bitters in the sauce is the mystery ingredient that makes these meat balls really extra special in flavor. Perfect for one of monthly buffet suppers when it's my turn to entertain the faculty group.

SWEDISH MEAT BALLS IN SOUR-CREAM SAUCE

2 cups bread cubes in ½ cup Squeeze dry and add to 1½ s ground beef. Add 1 onion, hopped and sautéed in 2 table-butter or margarine, 2½ tea-salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 2 tea-ground nutmeg, 2 teaspoons a, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 1 on dried mixed herbs, and 3 eggs. Mix well and form into ll balls. Brown in a skillet using butter or margarine. Add ¼ teaspoon crushed garlic, and 1 more tablespoon butter or margarine, if needed. Blend in 4 tablespoons flour, 2 teaspoons tomato paste, 1 teaspoon beef concentrate, 2 cups bouillon made from 1 can of bouillon with enough water added to measure 2 cups, and 1 teaspoon aromatic bitters. Stir over low heat until sauce is thickened. Just before serving, stir in 1 cup thick commercial sour cream. Blend well, heat, and serve with buttered noodles.

Menuette: Swedish Meat Balls in Sour-Cream Sauce, Noodles, Green Salad with Tomatoes, herry-Vanilla Ice-Cream-Cake Roll.

Whether served from an elegant tureen, or informally on supper trays, my Easy Chicken Gumbo is just as delicious as one that takes hours to prepare.

ASY CHICKEN GUMBO

r ¼ cup chopped green pepper cup chopped onion in 3 table-butter or margarine until soft.
quart chicken stock (or canned a 1-pound-3-ounce can of to-, 1 small piece of bay leaf, and nd can of cut okra. Simmer 15
s. Remove bay leaf. Add ½ on salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ½ on basil, 2 teaspoons sugar, 1 oon minced parsley and 2 cups ooked chicken. Reheat. Serve ooked rice in 6 deep bowls.

SOUTHERN PECAN PIE

Prepare a 9″ pie shell. Arrange 1 cup shelled pecan halves in the bottom. Beat 3 eggs. Add 1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine, 1 cup light corn sirup, and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Stir until well blended. Combine 1 cup sugar and 1 tablespoon flour. Blend with egg mixture and pour over nuts in pie shell. Let stand until nuts rise to surface. (The nuts will glaze during baking.) Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 45 minutes.

ette: Easy Chicken Gumbo on Rice, Jellied Cranberry Salad, Buttered Rolls, Southern Pecan Pie.

Put summer sunshine in winter meals with golden cling peaches

Fiesta Peach Upside-Down Cake with Betty Crocker Honey Spice Cake Mix. Prepare batter as package directs. Melt ¼ cup butter in 9″ pan, stir in ½ cup brown sugar. Arrange drained cling peach halves, and cherries if desired, in pan. Top with half of batter. Bake 35 minutes at 350°. Turn out and serve warm. Bake remaining batter separately.

Fiesta Peach Salad with Miracle Whip Salad Dressing. To serve 4, mix well ½ cup chopped dates, ½ cup chopped nuts, ¼ cup Miracle Whip. Place a cling peach half, cut side up, on each lettuce-lined plate. Fill with date-nut mixture. Cover with another peach half, round side up. Garnish with Miracle Whip, watercress.

Fiesta SPAM Loaf. Cut a SPAM loaf in two crosswise. Between the layers spread canned sweet potatoes, mashed and seasoned. Surround with golden cling peach slices. Top with 2 or 3 peach slices arranged "fan" style. Drizzle on peach juice blended with ½ teaspoon prepared mustard. Bake in moderately hot oven, 400°, 30 to 35 minutes.

Sunny, luscious beauties tender and juicy-sweet delicious dozens of easy ways
thrifty, too.
Be sure the label says "clings"

Cling Peach Advisory Board

When gray hair is short, shaped and softly groomed . . .
expertly shampooed . . .
rinsed to glisten . . .
and in perfect harmony with your make-up and clothes colors . . .
it can be your most outstanding feature!

PETER BASCH

Bobbie Lawrence's salt-and-pepper hair is cut and shaped into flattering, feathery softness. Sides curl up and away from her face, front section gets a pretty lift.

The Young touch for gray hair

ALTHOUGH thirty-four-year-old Bobbie Lawrence has been going gray for the past ten years, only once did she do something about it. "My husband and I were going to an important party," she explains, "and I wanted to look especially well. On the afternoon of the party, despite Merle's disapproval, I went about changing my salt-and-pepper hair color back to its original dark brown. I used a temporary color rinse, doubled the strength, left it on twice as long as the directions indicated, all to make me, I thought, doubly dashing. By party time that night I was a real brunette. I waited until midnight for compliments, but when none were forthcoming I asked my friends if they didn't notice something different about me. The girls huddled together, studied me from all angles, then exclaimed, 'You've lost weight,' or 'That's a new necklace.' Not a soul noticed my hair. Rather than feeling disappointed, I was surprised and secretly delighted. For the first time I was convinced my gray hairs were not the age-making monsters I imagined them to be. Later, Merle had a good I-told-you-so laugh. 'Now for heaven's sake, Bobbie, wash that black stuff out of your hair and let the gray show—it does something for you!'"

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

Graying Gracefully? Bobbie's golden skin, turquoise-blue eyes and naturally dark "background" hair provide a perfect setting for a generous sprinkling of silver. The salt-and-pepper effect softens her skin tones, gives added illusion of hair highlight, enables her to wear the brightest colors without their seeming harsh and (some girls have all the luck) actually makes her appear younger than she might as a full-fledged brunette.

Blondes and brownettes (mouse-brownettes especially) are less likely to create such a vivid "going gray" picture. The addition of gray, unless cleverly coped with, is more apt to drabatize than dramatize. Here are some tips on how to blend, brighten and beautify your silver-turning hair:

Up and Away! Gray hair, worn imaginatively, can make its owner seem years younger than her blond or brunet twin CONTINUED ON PAGE 157

Carter's Tiny Tea-sers

Sweet-tooth cotton knits from Toddlertown

All over sugar and spice land, Carter's soft cottons mean best-in-the-world gifts. Long, happy wear. No dawdle at dress time. Jiffon necks whisk on in a whistle. Famous Nevabind sleeves mean no seams to bother tender underarms. Special treat for mother—time-saving Carter knits love dunking in suds . . . dry sponge-cake quick. Good-bye iron. Carter-Set®, too . . . won't shrink out of fit.

Starting at top with cupcake boy

JIFFON-NEVABIND® SHIRT. Diapenda® tapes. White, birth to 3 yrs. Pastels, to 1½ yrs. About 79¢.

JACKET (on bunny). Snap-fastened. Rosebuds. 6 mos. $1.25. (Pastels, too.)

PANTI-DRESS. Jiffon-Nevabind. Rumba ruffles. Pastel rosebuds. 6 mos.-2 yrs. $2.50.

HANDY-CUFF® GOWN. Jiffon-Nevabind. White. Pastels. 3-6 mos. $1.50.

TYKES SHIRT and TYKES NO-DROOP PANT. Both white, 2-8 yrs. 69¢-85¢.

THREE-PIECE PLAY PAJAMA. Tattersall top and booties. Pastel pant. Blue, yellow, mint. S.M.L. $2.95.

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

Best Carter's makes fine underwear for the entire family

$50 Spring Pattern Wardrobe

Lovely Bobbie Lawrence has a flair for clothes and for color. She knows the value of co-ordinating a wardrobe colorwise and getting the most out of each piece. Starting with a bright red coat, she added a basic navy-blue wool-jersey dress . . . wears it with white piqué at the neckline and a piqué pillbox. She chose a navy-and-white polka-dot acetate surah for afternoon and a two-piece cotton printed with the gayest pink and red roses . . . the washable gray flannel skirt looks pretty with the flowered shirt as well as with all Bobbie's favorite sweaters. The total cost of the fabrics, patterns and findings came to an unbelievable $49.26. By NORA O'LEARY

Pattern Editor of the Journal

SHARI AND

Bobbie's navy-blue wool-jersey basic lends itself to many changes. The neckline is pretty with white touches, colorful beads or just plain. The skirt is gathered, has side pockets. "Easy to Make" Vogue Design No. 8498.

BOW CLIP BY THERESE ABRENS

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on Page 144

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Gay cotton, 59c a yard, is printed with pink and red roses. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 8215, skirt, No. 8210.

Pretty cotton shirt is wonderful with classic pleated gray flannel skirt. Vogue Design No. 8413. Colorful beads.

BEADS BY RISA

Polka dots are a sure sign of spring. Bobbie accents hers with white. "Very Easy to Make" Design No. 8460.

The most cheerful topcoat—bright red. This one has turn-back cuffs. Vogue Design No. S-4560.

WHEN YOU PROTECT LOVELINESS WITH A LOTION, REMEMBER...

Trushay is richer in protective beauty ingredients than all other leading lotions combined!

ime you want to be particularly nice to your hands, hem out and buy them a bottle of Trushay! Be- drop for drop, Trushay is richer in protective in- nts than all other leading lotions put together! sticky or greasy, this fragrant, richer lotion is ously comforting and cooling as it smooths right per skin layers, supplements natural oils.

And Trushay's extra richness gives all your beauty added protection. Use it as a flattering powder base, a luxurious body rub, to smooth roughened knees, elbows, heels. Peach-tinted Trushay is so rich, you can even apply it before washing chores, to guard hands in hot, sudsy water. Try Trushay soon, won't you? Surprisingly, it costs no more than ordinary lotions!

JUST TWO DROPS WILL PROVE IT! Pour two drops of Trushay on the back of one hand; rub in with the back of the other. Then rub with palms to smooth in evenly. Right away, you'll see and feel Trushay's extra richness. For just these two drops alone give both your hands a luxurious softness all over!

TRUSHAY® IS ANOTHER FINE PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

DIET Delightfully WITH

Diet Delight BRAND

DIETETIC FOODS

Low-Calorie, Low-Sodium

Fruits • Vegetables • Dressings • Juices

Whether it's doctor's orders or just weight-watching, you want the right diet . . . the one that produces results without inducing boredom. Diet Delight Dietetic Foods perk up diet menus . . . provide you with desired Sucaryl® sweetened fruits, tasty, low-calorie dressings for salads, a pleasing variety in low-sodium vegetables. From now on, diet delightfully with Diet Delight Foods.

Calorie and carbohydrate content clearly marked on each label

FREE Delicious menus and recipes that fit your diet needs! Write Dept. L,

RICHMOND-CHASE COMPANY • Pioneer Packers of Dietetic Foods • SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA

EVERYBODY LOVES A TEA

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66

CANDIED GINGER GRAPEFRUIT PEEL

Peel as many grapefruit as you wish to use. We used 2. If the outer skin of the grapefruit seems hard, grate the surface before peeling, but don't scrape too hard. Cut the peel into strips or petals. Add to peel enough water to cover it. Boil 15–20 minutes. Drain and repeat with fresh water twice more—3 times in all.

Measure the drained peel, and for each pint of peel add 2 cups sugar, 1½ cups water, 1 teaspoon powdered ginger and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Cook slowly in open kettle until sirup is quite heavy. Do not let it overcook or caramelize. When done, remove from heat and for each pint of peel and sirup add ½ envelope unflavored gelatin that has been softened in 2 tablespoons cold water. Stir well to dissolve gelatin. Let peel stand in sirup until thoroughly cool. Then drain and roll pieces in sugar. The addition of gelatin to the peel keeps it nice and soft inside. Above quantity makes 100 pieces.

Anyway—among so many. By all the actuaries—they count up things and make statistics, don't they?—if they are reeking with truth and knowledge, there are 3,000,000 and 800,000 known sandwiches, and, as I myself made up two new ones, you figure it out for yourselves.

Here's a modest sheaf of five, to add to those on your tea table:

CRANBERRY NUT-BREAD SANDWICHES

Grind coarsely 1 cup fresh cranberries and mix with ¼ cup sugar. Set aside. Sift together 1 cup sugar, 3 cups flour, 4½ teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt. Add 3 tablespoons grated orange rind. Blend in 1 cup milk, 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine, 1 egg, slightly beaten, and ½ cup chopped walnuts or pecans. Fold in sweetened cranberries and pour into greased 9½″ x5¼″x2¾″ loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 1 hour. Turn out and cool on rack. Slice thin; make into sandwiches with butter or margarine. Bread slices best the second day.

ROLLED WATER-CRESS SANDWICHES

Cream ¾ cup butter or margarine until soft. Add ¾ cup finely chopped water cress, 1½ teaspoons grated onion, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ¾ teaspoon salt and a good dash of pepper. Cut an unsliced loaf of white bread into ¼″-thick slices. Trim to 3″x 3½″. Spread with water-cress butter. Roll up each slice, starting from a 3″ side. Just before serving, insert a fresh sprig of water cress in end of each rolled-up sandwich. Makes about 3 dozen sandwiches.

COTTAGE-CHEESE-AND-PINEAPPLE SANDWICHES

To 1 cup creamed cottage cheese add ½ well-drained chopped crushed pineapple, stand in sieve and press out juice with spoon), ⅛ teaspoon salt, ¼ cup to finely chopped almonds and ½ teaspoon powder. Blend all ingredients well and s on diamond-shaped slices of white b Diamonds should be about 3″ by Garnish with 2 half slices of radish minced parsley. Makes about 40 faced sandwiches.

SHRIMP-AND-CAPER SANDWICHES

Simmer 1½ pounds small fresh shrimp just tender in water to which has been a a little salt, celery and parsley. Shell devein them. Split 15 whole shrimp in lengthwise and set aside for garnis Chop the rest quite fine to give about cups. Add ¾ cup mayonnaise, ½ teas salt, ½ teaspoon grated onion, 2 tablesp minced celery, 1 teaspoon lemon juice 2 dashes Tabasco. Blend all ingredient gether well. Spread the shrimp mixtur crescents of ¼″-thick white bread. Cres should be about 3″x1½″. Garnish with split shrimp, capers and a little mi parsley. Makes about 30 open-faced s wiches.

BACON-AND-PIMIENTO PIN-WHEEL SANDWICHES

Cream together one 5-ounce jar pimi cheese and one 3-ounce package cr cheese. Blend in 1 teaspoon minced ch and 6 slices cooked bacon, crumbled Cut an unsliced loaf of white bread lengthwise slices, ¼″ thick. (Unsliced b sometimes has to be ordered from grocery or bakery in advance.) Rem crusts. If it is bread with a very loose ture, roll each slice of bread on each side a rolling pin once or twice. Spread s with bacon-cheese mixture. Place s stuffed olives along edge of one end of slice. Roll up slices, starting from the with the olives. Roll in waxed paper chill in refrigerator at least an hour. Cut into slices about ⅜″ thick. This much ch will be enough to spread about 5 slices, wh will give you about 3 dozen tea sandwic Note: If you have a freezer and want to m the rolls ahead, they freeze very well.

No doubt the tastiest spreads and a galax fine hot things will be in their place. I ex to see green and black olives and pâtés aspics and the grandeur of many a little lux from abroad to cheer and charm the we teagoer. Looking for friends? They're h They're having tea. You know, my girls, th is something about a tea.

Your ANNI

THE DREAMERS

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

Let us live a little longer
Peace-protected, dream-deceived.
Let our fancies half-believed Comfort us till we grow stronger

And are ready to accept
Flat equations, death and birth,
Flood and flowers on the earth,
God, and promises unkept.

For there is terror in awaking.
Our sleep-eased eyes are loath to see
How near the dream is reality,
How much of hope we are forsaking.

To us, who dream and cannot guess
The shape of truth, the mask of fable,
Even love seems intolerable
Until we learn to acquiesce.

Perhaps the sleeping beauty wept
Upon awaking, to discover
The darkness of her dream-light lover,
The dust within her halls unswept.

BROKE, BUT HAPPY, ON $11,200 A YEAR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 120

dom ignored. When a visitor was talk- to his mother, he missed hearing one mark that concerned him. He tugged at her d shouted, "Say what you just said to her me!"

Other than Squeakie's death, the family has own no hard luck and nothing but the best health. Doctor bills totaled only $10 last ar—that's not where their money goes.

Besides having the exclusive care of her ee children, Bobbie does the washing and ning and all her own housework. The old- daughter of the family, she often had to rt dinner on maid's day off (her mother d an office job) so she had some idea of oking but never learned to keep house. "I it the hard way to this day." Her pet hates the extra jobs, such as waxing floors and shing windows.

"I do just the minimum," she says. "I clean house thoroughly only once a week. I n't dust every day. Merle is awfully good out it, but not long ago I found he had itten 'Dusty' with his finger on top of the bookcase."

NEXT MONTH

Misery Street is East 101st Street between First and Second avenues in Manhattan. But it is the symbol of misery streets everywhere. Men and women seem smaller here, their children smaller still—simply a part of the moving clutter.

- For a mother of three sons it means worry and heartbreak—trying to feed and clothe them on a sometimes nonexistent check, living with the daily dread of gang wars, slashings, murders, muggings, dope, prostitution.

MY BOYS LIVE ON MISERY STREET

By G. M. WHITE

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the March JOURNAL

Merle says, "I ask Bobbie what she has done ay and she says, 'I've washed.' But the ma- ne is automatic. Or she'll say, 'I defrosted refrigerator.' But that's automatic too." n a spurt of economy last winter, she en- led in a furniture-refinishing course at the W.C.A., planning to furnish their house h old things she had redone herself. Merle nors the very idea of removing gooey paint d varnish from old furniture. "Hours you rk on it and what have you got? Cracked od." The first thing Bobbie learned in the urse was how to remove paint and varnish h hardly any mess, so she carted all the all tables in the house off to the shop, plan- g to prepare them all for refinishing in one swoop. But it was a short course, only one ning a week, and soon over. "I had so ny pieces to remove paint from that I just er got around to refinishing." Cost of the urse: $7.50, plus materials. Still missing: one e-leg and two end tables, probably lost in shop.

Merle leaves the family financing and bill ing entirely up to Bobbie. They have no nily-budget plan for expenses. His salary is posited in a checking account and she tes the checks as they are needed. But they roughly debate all large expenditures— 'e usually decide to buy whatever it is," bbie says, "and it always costs a little more n we thought it would. For example, take s house ——"

The Lawrence residence is a major factor their current economic dilemma. It is a gle-story, rectangular frame structure with cubicles on a concrete slab located in a using development three miles from town. For this they paid $13,350, without a garage, landscaping, sidewalks or an improved street. When they bought it, eighteen months ago, it was the "best bargain" they could find at a down payment ($3500) they could afford to pay. They also paid an assessment of $450 for street improvements and built a garage for $800.

Having depleted their savings, they then went into installment buying—landscaping ($60), an automobile ($2700) and home furnishings. Together with high income tax, high insurance payments and tuition for the children, the fixed outgo from their monthly income is extremely high. They "just live" on the remainder and, except for Merle's teacher's annuity, they have no savings.

Last year they spent more than they earned. "But we aren't in debt because we sold our war bonds to absorb the difference," Bobbie says earnestly. "A year from now we'll be out of the woods. I hope."

Shortly after they had moved into their new house, the water pipes froze. Bobbie called the agent who had sold them the place. "They froze?" he repeated. "Ma'am, the pipes in no new house ought to freeze. The builder will fix that."

And he did.

Merle called the agent when he noticed the exhaust fan in the kitchen was functioning improperly.

"Would you say an exhaust fan is supposed to blow out or in?" he asked him.

"An exhaust fan blows out, of course."

"Ours blows in."

"Well, isn't that ridiculous! The builder will fix that."

And he did.

The rains came. Water seeped up through the concrete slab. The composition-tile floor-

5½ hours a week

that's a modest estimate of the time you spend doing dishes each week, if you have a family of four. But Lux Liquid can change that!

for an easier time with the dishes

If you had a time clock in your kitchen, you'd "punch in" about 5½ hours a week "work time" for just one dull chore—doing dishes. A job as big as that calls for a special assistant—Lux Liquid Detergent—made especially for dishwashing. Lux Liquid floats grease right off . . . gets plates and glasses really clean, fast and easy.

One can of Lux Liquid actually outlasts several boxes of the leading dishwashing powder. Mild? Very . . . almost as mild as Lux Toilet Soap. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees Lux Liquid. Your first can will prove Lux Liquid is as good as we say or we'll refund your money. Stop putting in "overtime" doing dishes . . . get Lux Liquid!

P.S. People keep finding new uses for Lux Liquid. For instance, it's a great favorite for washing nylons, lingerie, and all fine fabrics.

A teaspoonful does a dishpanful!

Packed in a can as it should be—with a dripless spout

See the stars on Lux Video Theatre—Thursday nights, NBC-TV. Hear them on Lux Radio Theatre—Tuesdays, NBC

It's the next best thing to a dishwashing machine

ing squished when they walked on it. The hot-air ducts built into the slab filled with water and billowed steam. Interior paint began to peel off. The front door warped bow-shaped. Nails worked out of the dry-wall construction. Pictures fell off the walls.

"Nothing really wrong with the house," the man told Merle. "It's the drainage. Elevation's a little low. Tell you what I'll have to do, I'll have to dig up the yard and put some drain tiles in."

"But I just paid sixty dollars to seed and landscape it," Merle protested. The new lawn was pretty well destroyed in the ditching process.

A water-softener device is an essential in most homes around Ann Arbor because the water is so hard. These can be purchased, or rented for about $6.75 monthly, depending upon how often the filter unit has to be replaced. The Lawrences rent theirs. Bobbie discovered the plumbing in their house is so arranged that a plunger button on the water-softener connection must be pushed to divert the water from soft to hard. This is a nuisance and often forgotten.

"Can't the plumbing be changed so that we won't be using expensive soft water for the utilities?" she asked.

"Yes," she was told, "but it would be an expensive plumbing job. Mrs. Lawrence, you can't expect a house to be perfect when you pay as little for it as you did for yours." The housing shortage is still acute in this area and similar houses in the neighborhood are now selling for $16,000 to $18,000.

"Last winter was just a shakedown cruise. I believe we have all the bugs out of the place now," Merle says cheerfully—"except us."

This gay spirit in the Lawrence household would make far more serious problems than "being broke" seem slight. If they have no money left over at the end of the month, they worry about it very little.

Last winter Linda and Robin had fallen into the bad habit of slumping at the dinner table, so their father started a program to correct their posture. He agreed to pay the girls ten cents every time they caught him slumping if they would pay him five cents every time he caught them. At the end of a week he owed the girls $1.50 and they owed him twenty-five cents. To economize, father immediately abandoned this system of correction.

Merle Lawrence is a graduate of Peddie preparatory school; A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. (in physiological psychology), Princeton University. He is a naval aviator for multiengine planes and also holds Navy helicopter pilot's license No. 11; a lieutenant commander in the naval reserve, he served in both World War II and the Korean War. He was formerly an associate professor in the department of psychology, Princeton University, and is now head of the physiological-acoustics research laboratory for the Institute of Industrial Health and associate professor in the University of Michigan Medical School. Besides numerous technical papers, he has published Human Factors in Engineering and Design (an annotated bibliography compiled for the Navy Department); Studies in Human Behavior (a manual for advanced students), and Physiological Acoustics (a textbook in collaboration with Ernest Glen Wever). The son of the Reverend and the late Mrs. George W. Lawrence, of Ventnor, New Jersey, his early education was in part financed by his parents but largely earned through scholarships and research fellowships, including a National Research Council fellowship for a year's study in the otological department of Johns Hopkins Hospital. He has two sisters and a younger brother, who is also a Ph.D. and associate pastor of the Burlington, Vermont, Congregational church. As a Princeton undergraduate Merle was called "Stretch" because he was so skinny and tall (six feet two inches). He has since gained fifty pounds and the nickname no longer fits him.

A colleague says of him: "In the laboratory, Doctor Lawrence is completely the scientist. His blue eyes move sharply behind his spectacles and he speaks tersely with such unrelenting intensity and range of abstruseness that he scares many graduate students away. But when he turns from his work and closes his laboratory door for the day, he somehow manages a transformation to the complete extrovert, ready for any pleasure—the 'family man' happily willing to chat with anybody he meets."

It is not uncommon for Merle to spend several nights each week working in his laboratory in the Kresge Medical Research Building. When he does spend a quiet evening at home he is often sleepy and goes to bed early. There is a ham radio station in their bedroom (W8LUI) and he is also an amateur photographer, but his hobbies do not include fixing little things around the house.

"He is the original 'let-George-do-it-himself' guy," Bobbie says. "It is more work for me to get him to do anything than it is to do it myself."

One evening about eleven-thirty, when Merle had been asleep with a book for more than an hour, Bobbie found that the zipper in the back of her dress was jammed, so she waked him up and asked him to unzip her. He examined the jammed zipper with drooping eyes and muttered, "I'll need the pliers." After a long search, Bobbie presented him with the pliers. Doctor Lawrence, a physiologist and technician as agile with his hands as with his brain, thereupon took a firm grip on the zipper and ripped it neatly in its entirety out of the back of her dress, rolled over and went to sleep.

Roberta Harper Lawrence was known as "Sis" Harper until Merle married her and changed her name to Bobbie Lawrence. She attended Stuart Hall, a private secondary school for girls in Staunton, Virginia, and was graduated from Miss Fine's School in Prince-his flexible house expands or contracts o meet the changing needs of the family living in it.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 134

ARCHITECTS: LAWRENCE & HAZEN; PHOTOGRAPHERS: DEARBORN-MASSAR

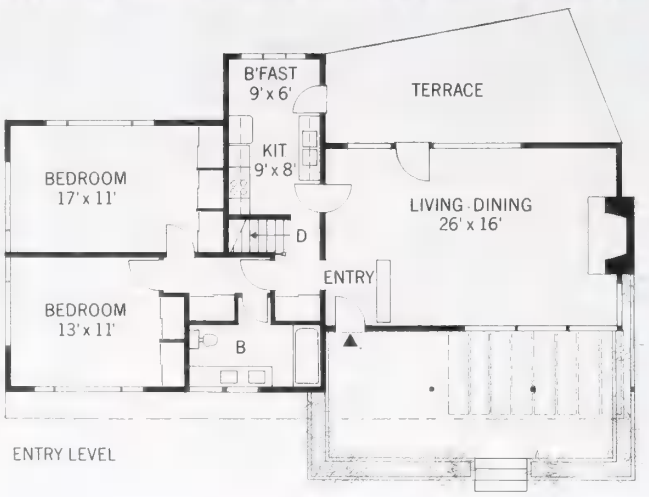
By CAROL L. MERCADO



a HOUSE THAT GROWS with you

HERE is a house designed to adapt itself to the size of the family, so that it's never too small, never too big, but just the right size for a lifetime of comfortable living.

The entry level, a two-bedroom house complete in itself, satisfies the requirements of young parents with small children. The lower level, unfinished at this stage, is roughed in for future expansion (see how the sloping site allows the lower-floor rooms to be as bright and sunny as the upper floor). As the family grows larger, the finished bedroom and bath downstairs provide a suite for an independent teen-ager; younger children remain upstairs, closer to their parents' room.

Later, when the grown children have established their own homes, the full-time living area in this flexible house can be reduced once again to the entry level. The downstairs rooms now accommodate guests, visiting children or grandparents. When not in use, they can be closed off completely, reducing housework along with the diminished living area.

Planned for a lifetime of use, the house is built of long-wearing, serviceable materials—concrete-and-brick foundations, natural weathered-cedar board-and-batten walls, split-cedar roof shakes. Concrete terraces can be hosed down along with the lawns for easy, quick cleaning. Potted plants edging the front-terrace retaining wall move indoors or out with the changing seasons.

So good with SEVEN-UP!

These hearty treats may not be "new,"
You've had 'em at their best (you think).
But you've missed a lot if you never knew HOW GOOD they go with the "fresh up" drink!

Parkerhouse Rolls with Vienna Sausages and Catsup

Peanut Butter and Chopped Bacon on Bread—with Jelly

Grilled Cheese Sandwich and Bacon Strips

Broiled Hamburger and Onion-Slice on a Toasted Bun

Tuna Fish Salad on Toasted English Muffin

Stackwich: Slices of Franks, Baked Beans, Swiss Cheese, Mustard, Pickle Relish

Copyright 1955 by The Seven-Up Company

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up!

Chilled, sparkling 7-Up is just the company you want for your favorite snack. Just what you want whenever you're thirsty! Seven-Up is the All-Family Drink . . . so pure, so good, so wholesome it's perfect for folks of all ages.

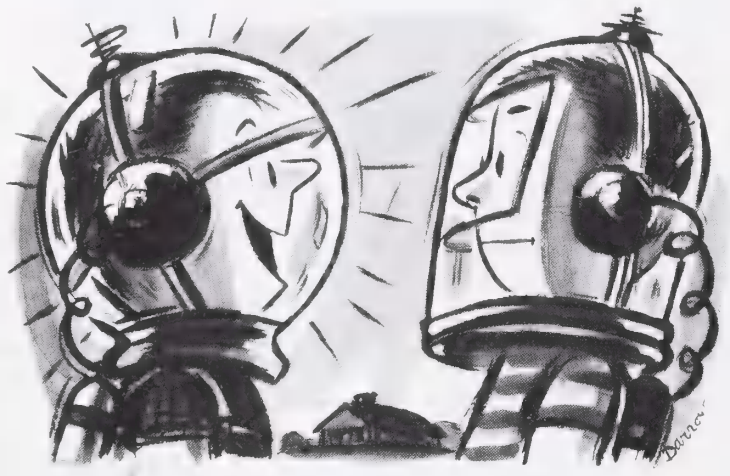
You like it . . . it likes you! Get it 24 bottles at a time—in the case, or in the handy 7-Up Family Pack. Buy 7-Up wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 132

ton, New Jersey, and attended a Trenton business college for a year. She was tennis champion at Stuart Hall; a winner in the Trenton city mixed-doubles tournament one year and runner-up in the New Jersey girls' singles. She worked as assistant society editor of the Trenton Times, as a secretary for an insurance agency and briefly, during the war, as a chauffeurette for an aircraft company (she was fired from this job for going on an unauthorized flight with a test pilot). She was a member of the Trenton Junior League. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Harper, now of Lawrenceville, New Jersey, expended most of an inherited family fortune living well and rearing and educating six children (a seventh died). One wealthy aunt, Louise Taylor Davis, sent Bobbie to Stuart Hall and another, Edith Harper Collier, paid her way to Miss Fine's School. "I'm afraid I did not think it out of the ordinary at the time," she says, "but I do thank them now."

As a schoolgirl, Bobbie dieted strenuously, "not to keep, but in hopes of attaining, a figure." Her four affectionate brothers (three older, one younger than she) called her "Old Horseteeth" and "Fat Hannah." After the birth of her first child, she became slender and remains that way without effort. A self-labeled "outdoor type," her chief interests, other than an all-embracing love for most people, most children and most dogs, are gardening and swimming. She is chairman of the Faculty Women's Swimming Club. An old knee injury prevents her from playing tennis.

Bobbie's mother, the former Roberta Ashby Taylor, learned to fly and soloed an airplane long after she was a grandmother. "Just to keep from getting stuffy," she claims. She was a great tennis player, perennial women's city champion of the Trenton, New Jersey, courts. For fifteen years she did not leave a tournament without at least one trophy. When her two daughters were of college age, she beat them easily and frequently outpointed her four sons, two of whom were outstanding college athletes. Able to employ servants and governesses in the early years, she largely ignored housework, raised her family of six like a breeze, enjoyed them as contemporaries. Now sixty, she still maintains a "come rain, come shine" temperament, refusing to worry. "What's the use?" she asks. "It doesn't get you anywhere." Her advice to would-be champions in any sport: "Have the will to win very much and don't lose your temper. That applies to everything in life. Some people can take it; others simply can't." "I inherited many of my mother's characteristics," Bobbie Lawrence muses. "I only wish I had inherited more."



Merle is a direct descendant of Capt. James Lawrence, American naval hero of the War of 1812. In command of the Chesapeake, James Lawrence was mortally wounded in an engagement with the British frigate Shannon in Boston harbor. As he was carried from the deck, he shouted the immortal naval battle cry, "Let her sink if she must, but don't give up the ship!" In World War II, on a routine patrol in one of the Navy's first land-based patrol bombers, a PB4Y, Merle Lawrence had the main hydraulic line shot away and received a flesh wound in the neck. When it appeared the plane was on fire, he repeated profane but equally famous epithets Navy men use to express complete chagrin; fortunately, the smoke was from leaking hydraulic fluid hitting the hot machine guns. He patched his neck with a strip of adhesive tape and flew gently back to base.

Bobbie suggests that one of Merle's extravagances when they lived in Princeton was the purchase, in partnership with several other men, of an old Army glider. "It went so

NUMBER OF FAMILIES, BY FAMILY INCOME, FOR THE UNITED STATES: 1952

Family Income	Number of Families
Total	41,000,000
Under $1,000	3,500,000
$1,000 to $1,999	4,400,000
$2,000 to $2,999	5,800,000
$3,000 to $3,999	7,700,000
$4,000 to $4,999	6,300,000
$5,000 to $5,999	4,900,000
$6,000 to $6,999	3,100,000
$7,000 to $9,999	3,700,000
$10,000 to $14,999	1,100,000
$15,000 and over	500,000

Current Population Reports, Consumer, U. S. Department of Commerce, April 27, 1954.

"Mine's better 'n yours. My mom uses Windex Spray to make it shine."

Windex Spray cleans all glass surfaces sparkling bright—cleans them in half the time it takes ordinary glass cleaners. Swish! Spray it on. Whish! Wipe it off. Presto! Glass shines bright; stays bright longer, for there's no waxy film to attract dust later.

And Windex Spray's such a thrifty buy. Even more economical in the big 20-oz. refill size. Get it today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also sold in Canada.

So fast, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Guess I was speeding—but I just remembered this is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains!"

Best not to waste a second when dangerous sewer germs are lurking in every drain. They breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Only Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck—and keeps drains germ-free and free-running. Make one day a week—Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Also makes septic tanks work even better. Get Drāno today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like Drāno . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.

HOW THE LAWRENCES SPEND THEIR MONEY

YEARLY GROSS SALARY $11,200.00
MONTHLY GROSS SALARY $933.33

MONTHLY EXPENSES

Income tax	$139.60	Magazines and newspapers	5.23
Food	125.00	Landscaping (installments)	5.00
House payments (two payments per month)	118.00	Telephone	4.00
Insurance (includes Teachers' Annuity of $70 per month)	117.59	Church	3.00
Car (including $70 monthly payments)	99.52	Charity	4.00
Household furnishings (installments on dishes, drier and draperies)	56.00	Paints, brushes (minor hardware and house maintenance)	3.00
Tuition and other school expenses	35.29	Dry cleaning	3.00
Clothing	35.00	Household cleaning	2.00
Fuel (includes electricity and water-softener rental at $6.75 monthly)	32.66	Recreation	3.00
Vacation fund	30.00	Left for miscellaneous, which includes TV and radio repair, hobbies (amateur radio and photography), gifts, garden and yard furniture and equipment, Christmas, dog (food, shots and license), fencing, driveway paving, drugstore supplies, haircuts, violin lesson, books, garbage collection, stationery supplies, bicycles and other childhood equipment	34.51
Garage payments (installments on construction)	27.00
Entertaining	15.00
Lessons for the girls (horseback, ice skating, swimming and acrobatic)	12.66
Dental and medical	9.00
Sitters	8.00
Dues (includes seven scientific organizations)	6.27	Total	$933.33

[Note: Since this monthly list of expenses was computed, Doctor Lawrence has received a substantial increase in salary. Insufficient time has elapsed to know how this will affect their spending or saving. His salary, while high, is not unusual for medical-college professors. In 1949–50 the average salary of medical-school professors was $10,700 in the basic sciences (Doctor Lawrence's category) and $14,069 in the clinical sciences (physician specialists). Source: Medical Schools in the U.S. in Mid-century, by John Deitrich and Robert C. Benson. McGraw-Hill, 1953.]

ly, we just had to buy it," he explains. taking title to the glider, the spon- usly formed glider club discovered they had no place to keep it or to fly it. Merle ne flight in it and sold out—for twelve on the dollar. However, his original was only $100.

carries his lunch to his laboratory in a lunch bucket like that of other workmen. efers eating at his bench to leaving an sting experiment for lunch in the faculty room. He does not smoke, drinks gly himself but pours for others with a hand. He admits that when they lived he Princeton stadium in Princeton, as as $40 monthly went for liquor during otball season, most of it consumed by s after games. He insists his ham-radio is inexpensive, estimates he has spent 100 for parts to build W8LUI. And as travagances, he says there's the matter wedding ring he gave Bobbie. She lost he sand at a beach party several years We collected insurance on it," she points but Merle hasn't offered to buy me an- one."

rle got acquainted with Bobbie while he graduate student at Princeton through other, Ashley, with whom he frequently ed. Ashley often talked about Bobbie d not show Merle her picture. For weeks they met, he sent her daily post cards, y penning a bit of doggerel and signing "The Spook."

aturday comes but once a week.
h, would it came each day!
hough as a rule I'm very meek,
hope you'll let me say,
Happy Saturday! —THE SPOOK.

eorgie Wash, he sired the land,
armers tilled the earth by hand,
appy days for every man.
uess who sent this if you can.
Happy Washington's Birthday!
—THE SPOOK.

brother reported her mounting be- rment when they dined together at the "For some reason," Merle recalls, "we ht this hilariously funny."

bbie's brother brought Merle to the hec- t happy Harper home in March of 1940. ed it, and her, and came often thereafter. April evening in 1941, he proposed. "Will e the mother of my children?" he asked he agreed, and they were married in the h Presbyterian Church in August, a year the day after Merle received his ensign's ission and Navy wings. Merle's father rmed the wedding ceremony; his brother, ge, served as best man. Bobbie's sister, ia, was her maid of honor and her four ers served as ushers. The wedding trip was ft of Bobbie's relatives. After the recep- attended only by members of the family few intimate friends, they went im- tely to a suite in the Plaza Hotel in New City which her uncle had reserved for e new bride dropped on the bed and cried.

"What's the matter?" the groom asked.

"I'm homesick," she sobbed.

After the honeymoon they had twenty-three days together before Ensign Lawrence was ordered to the Pacific. She did not see him again for sixteen months. They wrote every day, but the letters didn't always come every day. When the separation seemed almost unendurable, Bobbie wrote a letter to President Roosevelt, pointing out that Merle had talent and training far too valuable to be wasted flying airplanes out over the middle of the Pacific Ocean. Why not bring him back to this country before it was too late? She received a form reply to the effect that Lieutenant Lawrence's present duty was as useful to the nation as anything else he might do. "Both her letter and a copy of the reply are in my file at the Navy Bureau of Personnel in Washington to this very day," Merle says.

Bobbie's axiom for a happy marriage: "Share responsibilities." Her husband's: "Realize the rough spots come but they also go. They don't actually detract from the pleasant things."

Merle's rule for getting along: "Instead of fighting habits or attitudes you dislike in your partner, accept them." Bobbie's: "Keep your ultimate goal in mind and don't let little obstacles deter you."

As for the matter of spending all they earn, and a little bit more, they both hope it is not a permanent condition.

"We have lived within Merle's income before," Bobbie says, "and I am sure we will again when we get some of our bills paid off."

In any case, they never have quarreled about money and don't expect to begin now.

"The truth is," Merle says, "I want Bobbie to have everything she wants, regardless of what it is, because I love her."

"Oh, that"—Bobbie dismisses it casually, though not unappreciatively—"that's been our trouble all along." END

ADOLESCENCE

By RÉGINE OLIVIER

ccording to the time or to your desire, could listen to you, look at you, be silent
r talk, be sad or gay, wait for you like a plant or rain in summer days; and my heart was fire. . . .
n a book, under mine, I had written your name.
was sixteen. Time passed and with it many dreams.
ne day, on my window, dreaming, I wrote a name hat was not yours. We had grown up, and I loved him.

Plan it yourself with Drexel®

. . . for the room you had in mind . . . at the price you had in mind

Dresser and Mirror, $209; Chest Vanity with lighted "make-up" space, $199; Utility Headboard Bed, $99; Night Stand, $45. Starting pieces available as low as $219 for Dresser, Mirror and Bed.*

Buffet, $169; Table, $119; Side Chair, $36; China Base, $145; Deck, $99. Starting pieces available as low as $319 for Table, Four Side Chairs and Server.*

*Slightly higher in the West.

Plan it around BISCAYNE® . . . for a mood that's light and airy . . . for functional features that are down to earth. Honey-toned pecan and walnut, with sparkling brass accents, blend smoothly with your favorite color scheme. Over 50 pieces for living, dining and bedroom, priced just to your liking.

See Biscayne and other Plan-It-Yourself Drexel groups at your nearest Drexel store.

Get your "Portfolio of Fine Furniture", colorful booklets with Plan-It-Yourself ideas on Drexel's traditional, modern and provincial groups. Send 25¢ in coin to 14 Huffman Rd., Drexel, N.C.

Drexel FURNITURE COMPANY
Drexel, North Carolina

Sea food provides a pleasant relief from winter's heavy diet. Herewith, scallops amandine, Italian eggplant, a green salad, and fruit with sour cream for dessert.

CONVERSATION PIECE

By RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

THIS month let's turn for inspiration to sea food—that perennial favorite which is apt to be neglected during the holiday season but should never have too long a vacation from our menus.

For the main dish I've chosen baked scallops amandine. There are so many wonderful things to be done with scallops—in fact, it's difficult to go wrong in cooking this delectable sea food, and it has the added virtues of being comparatively inexpensive and available the year round if we keep in mind the convenient frozen scallops. And why not? They are excellent. Not that I have anything against fresh scallops, but they are seasonal and not available in some parts of our country.

Now that the big deal is settled we can start at the beginning of the meal and work through. For hors d'oeuvres we'll have both hot and cold. The cold will be carrot curls, scallions, celery sticks and radish roses. You can have a dip for these—I'll give you a recipe—or you can just sprinkle them with salt. Crisp raw vegetables taste so good before a meal, and the fact that they are good for us is a rewarding dividend. Tongue-and-chutney canapés will take care of the hot-hors-d'oeuvre department. They are delicious and quite easy to do. The chutney-and-tongue mixture is spread on bite-size rounds of bread, dotted with mayonnaise and sprinkled with grated Parmesan

CONTINUED ON PAGE 138

STUART

You'll enjoy your own party if the meal is prepared well ahead of time.

Take a can of crushed Pineapple

BAKE A PIE WITH NATURE'S MOST REFRESHING FLAVOR

Everybody finds it easy to agree . . . the nicest thing that ever happened to a pie is canned Pineapple!
Combine No. 2 can (2½ cups) undrained Crushed Pineapple with mixture of 2 tablespoons cornstarch, ½ cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt. Cook until thick and clear, stirring constantly. Add 1 tablespoon butter, 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Pour into pastry-lined 8-inch pie pan; add top crust. Bake at 425° for 25-30 minutes. (For Pineapple Meringue pie, see special directions in any cookbook.)

Any time you're thirsty is the time for golden Pineapple Juice of canned pineapple (bite size) are fine for fruit cups, to sauté with lamb chops or a roast, for hors d'oeuvres, as cake decoration

CHUNKS

TIDBITS of canned Pineapple are favorites for salads, fruit cups, to sprinkle on puddings and cereals

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Francisco

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 136

cheese. All this can be done in the morning, and the baking of them takes only five minutes.

The scallops amandine combine scallops, mushrooms, peas, parsley, sauce and various seasonings, and have a thick sprinkling of toasted slivered almonds on top. This isn't a rich dish—no cream is involved in the sauce—but it has a rich succulent taste.

The vegetable will be eggplant Italienne, a recipe which I've been wanting to give you this long time. I had it first in the marvelous Italian restaurant at the New York World's Fair—that's quite some years ago. The eggplant is peeled, sliced, and each slice is cut in half. The pieces are sautéed in salad oil, then stacked, cut side down, alternately with thin slices of Bermuda onion. I do this in a round casserole, making a ring of the eggplant and onion slices and leaving an empty place in the middle. This is filled with highly seasoned canned tomatoes and some of the tomato is trickled over the eggplant. It is baked half an hour in a hot—400° F.—oven.

For salad we'll have greens, artichoke hearts and cucumbers tossed with French dressing to which pepper relish has been added. The pepper relish provides a sweet-sour taste which is right for this meal. With garlic French bread the main course is finished.

The dessert is a favorite of mine, probably because it involves fruit and sour cream, a combination I can't resist. It's very simple—a mound of sour cream in the center of dessert plates, surrounded by strawberries or raspberries with an outer rim of stewed dried apricots. Over all is a sprinkling of grated maple sugar with lots of the maple sugar on the sour cream. At this time of year most of us will have to use frozen berries.

These recipes will serve eight.

RABBIT FOOD

Fix all the vegetables the day before and store in ice water in refrigerator. The radish roses and carrot curls have to be prepared ahead of time or the roses won't open and the carrots won't curl. To make carrot curls, cut very thin slices of carrot, roll them and fasten them with toothpicks. Remove toothpicks before serving. If you want a dip for the vegetables, combine ½ cup mayonnaise with ¼ cup chili sauce and add 2 teaspoons horse-radish and 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce.

TONGUE-AND-CHUTNEY CANAPÉS

Mix together ½ cup finely ground tongue, firmly packed, and ½ cup chutney cut into small pieces. Add ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper and ½ teaspoon curry powder. Cut small rounds of white bread and put on a cooky sheet. Cover rounds gene with the tongue-and-chutney mix dot—and I don't mean a tiny dot—mayonnaise and sprinkle with grated mesan cheese. I use a demitasse spoo putting on the mayonnaise. About 5 utes before serving, put the baking on the center rack of a preheated 50 oven. As soon as canapés are piping ho the bread is slightly toasted they are to serve.

BAKED SCALLOPS AMANDINE

Thaw 3 pounds frozen scallops and cu large bite-size pieces. Fresh scallops m used, of course. Add to them 1½ cups frozen or fresh, and ¾ pound fresh mushrooms. Sauté 10 minutes in 4 spoons butter or margarine to which 1 garlic, minced, has been added. Drai serving juice. There should be abou cups of juice. If you use canned h mushrooms, pour liquid from two 4- cans into juice and add mushroon drained scallops and peas. To mak sauce, mix 4 tablespoons and 1 tea cornstarch with 1 cup milk and add t juice with 1 teaspoon saffron, 1½ teas prepared mustard, 1 teaspoon salt, 4 Tabasco and 1 tablespoon monoso glutamate. Cook, stirring constantly, thick and bubbling. If you like, ½ cup s may be substituted for ½ cup of the Combine sauce and other ingredients, tablespoons chopped parsley, taste fo soning and correct if needed. Put mixt a low casserole. All this can be done th before, or several weeks before if you enough freezer space to keep it. S generous cup of blanched almonds ir and cut them into long slivers. Melt 2 spoons butter or margarine in a s add almonds and sauté to a light g brown, turning them often with a pa turner. Drain on paper towels, transf baking sheet and dry thoroughly in a l turned on oven. About ¾ hour before se time, sprinkle almonds over top of cass cover with aluminum foil and put in 400° F.—oven until very hot. Remov turn oven very low and keep scallop until you are ready to serve.

EGGPLANT ITALIENNE

Get 2 elongated eggplants. If you spe your grocer beforehand, he can save some of the right shape. Cut into ½" reserving small ends for some future plant dish. Peel and cut each slice in Sprinkle lightly with flour and fry quick both sides in salad oil until slightly bro

You hear a bigger whoosh
You smell a fresher aroma
You taste an extra richness

Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

CHASE & SANBORN

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

"I have no illusions about Herbert. I wish I had."

OVELY ALL-OCCASION CARDS lours FOR ONLY 1¢

aranteed by Housekeeping

Yes, just one simple penny for 21 tiful cards and envelopes that would ly retail at $2 to $3 if bought sepa-y. This offer made to prove how a few hours can earn you $50-$100 and e. Once you see these lovely All-sion Greeting Cards you'll want to showing them to friends and neigh-. Make extra profits with complete ction of Name-Imprinted Samples, onal Stationery, Gift Wrappings.

Only One To A Family! Limited Offer!

postcard for 1c box, for which you will is just 1c. Send no money! We'll also send additional assortments ON APPROVAL, ey-Making Plan and FREE Personalized les. Write postcard to:

ARTISTIC CARD CO., Inc.
838 Way Street, Elmira, N. Y.

LOOKING FOR A MART BABY GIFT?

It's new! It's different! Mother will love it! It's "SLEEPY-DRYE"* the all-cotton diaper cover that solves baby's wetness problems! Made with durable water-repellent! Worn over diapers. Triple-reinforced locks wetness in diaper! No more wet wet nightclothes! No hot plastic or r lining! Lets air in—lets irritating nia out! No more diaper rash! Now s body breathes! Approved for lasting ency by the Better Fabrics Testing u. Won't crack, peel, stiffen! Wash-5 nursery colors. Sizes to 5. At all lead-epartment and infants' wear stores Buy "SLEEPY-DRYE," the diaper that really works!

Sleepy-Drye" MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.

*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg Co

VE $2 to $13 a pair!
NO-IRON
iberglas
CURTAINS and DRAPES

FREE
log and Color Swatches

vonderful curtains and drapes amazing Fiberglas make! Never need ironing, stretching, starching! n wash, hang and drape them in 7 minutes! teed never to shrink, fade, stretch, sag! 30 sizes ny window! 7 colors in drapes. And our huge power and direct-to-you selling policy lets you little as $2.69 per pair. Write today for FREE ue and Color Swatches.

RONNIE, Dept. 76JJ-2
37 Broadway, New York 13, N.Y.

Cut medium-sized Bermuda onions into fairly thin slices; cut a little piece off the side of each slice to give it a base to stand on. Alternating onion and eggplant and placing them cut side down, make a complete ring in casserole, pushing slices close together and against rim. Take a little time and trouble with this, because if you do a neat job the effect is quite handsome. Sprinkle tops of eggplant slices with paprika. Put a 1-pound can tomatoes in a stewing kettle and mash a little with wire potato masher. Place over heat, add ½ teaspoon orégano, 1 teaspoon sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon pepperoni or dried bell peppers and boil a few minutes. Spoon most of the tomatoes into center of casserole and sprinkle a little over outer edge of eggplant-and-onion ring. Be careful not to mask the vegetables with sauce. About ½ hour before serving time, put casserole, covered, in oven with the scallops. The onions should become slightly tender but not limp and textureless. If your range has only one oven, take casseroles out while hot canapés are cooked and replace them afterward.

ARTICHOKE-AND-CUCUMBER SALAD

Rub salad bowl with garlic, fill with crisp carefully dried greens, add cucumbers cut any way you like and toss with French dressing to which a generous amount of pepper relish has been added. Drain one 8½-ounce can artichoke hearts, cut each heart in half, put them in salad bowl and toss some more. I add artichokes last to avoid tossing them to pieces.

GARLIC FRENCH BREAD

Cut French bread into slices a little less than 1" wide, being careful not to cut through bottom crust. Force slices apart and spread with butter or margarine to which finely minced garlic has been added. The amount of garlic depends on how much you go for the stuff, but don't be too lavish. Push slices back into loaf shape and wrap the whole thing in brown paper. Before serving, put package in a low oven until bread is hot. For a timesaver you may want to prepare several packages of garlic bread in this way and store them in the freezer. They will keep a long time and when needed all you have to do is to take a package from the freezer, let it thaw and pop it into the oven.

FRUIT WITH SOUR CREAM AND MAPLE SUGAR

Wash two 11-ounce packages dried apricots in hot water, cover with hot water and let stand 3 hours. Add ½ cup sugar, bring to a boil and cook over low heat, without stirring, until tender. Cooking time varies with different brands, but it shouldn't be longer than ½ hour. The apricots must be firm and whole. Barely thaw frozen strawberries or raspberries, or use fresh fruit if available. Make a ring of berries on dessert plates and surround with a complete circle of apricots. Fill centers with generous blobs of sour cream and grate maple sugar over all. If you can't get maple sugar, light brown sugar will do. Serve the dessert ice-cold.

Service. Here is another of those adaptable dinners which will work equally well for table or buffet service. But if it's to be buffet, I do strongly urge using small tables for people to sit at, if that's at all possible for you. Women are pretty good-natured about juggling plates, but most men resent it, I find. Except for sticking some things in the oven, all preparation for this meal can and should be done in advance, which is fine for the hostess and will leave her free to see that everyone, including herself, is pleasantly comfortable.

For serving hot and cold hors d'oeuvres together, there is a gadget on the market which I find very useful. It's a tray with an electrical heating unit in the center and a wood-grain-plastic covered space on each side for the cold things. This is not necessary, of course—a candle warmer is fine for the hot canapés—but I'm a patsy for gadgets and if you haven't seen this one you might want to explore. END

Pream is also available in glass jars in some areas.

New easy thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN INSTANT POWDERED FORM

Rich and delicious! Made entirely from fresh sweet cream and other milk products. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful. Keep handy in cupboard or refrigerator!

So economical! Costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! Only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream!

Instant dissolving! Put Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream it!

SALLY ROSS, Pream Home Economist, says:

CUT COOKING WORK WITH NEW PREAM RECIPES! HERE'S ONE:

New easy way to smoother cream sauce!

Mix 4 tbs. Pream, 2 tbs. flour, ½ tsp. salt in saucepan. Add 1 cup water. Cook and stir until mixture boils and thickens. Add 1 tbs. butter. Never, never lumps!

Send for FREE Recipe Folder

To: Sally Ross
Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone___

State_____

Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska and Hawaii.

© 1955, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

Check your weight here . . .

WOMEN

HEIGHT with 2" heels	WEIGHT with clothing: Small frame	Medium frame	Large frame
5'1"	107-115	114-122	121-131
5'2"	110-118	117-125	124-135
5'3"	113-121	120-128	127-138
5'4"	116-125	124-132	131-142
5'5"	119-128	127-135	133-145
5'6"	123-132	130-140	138-150
5'7"	126-136	134-144	142-154
5'8"	129-139	137-147	145-158
5'9"	133-143	141-151	149-162
5'10"	136-147	145-155	152-166

MEN

HEIGHT with 1" heels	WEIGHT with clothing: Small frame	Medium frame	Large frame
5'5"	126-136	134-144	141-153
5'6"	129-139	137-147	145-157
5'7"	133-143	141-151	149-162
5'8"	136-147	145-156	153-166
5'9"	140-151	149-160	157-170
5'10"	144-155	153-164	161-175
5'11"	148-159	157-168	165-180
6'0"	152-164	161-173	169-185
6'1"	157-169	166-178	174-190
6'2"	163-175	171-184	179-196

and check overweight here!

have grapefruit instead

A good first step in your reducing plans is—grapefruit. It's so low in calories it helps you pare off pounds. What's more its lively flavor grows on you, keeps dieting from getting humdrum.

Lots of vitamin C in grapefruit—one vitamin your system can't store up but needs every day. Vitamins crowded in, calories crowded out—that's grapefruit!

Worth its weight in health: Keep on hand ready-prepared grapefruit sections; canned grapefruit juice, chilled and ready to pour; or frozen concentrate—a can makes 1½ pints of juice.

Watch "Twenty Questions" on TV each week. Consult newspaper for day and time.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 35

short ribs if you like) for 6 to 12 hours, turning now and then. Then you heat 2 tablespoons salad oil in a Dutch oven or heavy pan and brown the roast well. Then add the marinade and ½ cup water, cover closely and cook until tender. The cooking time depends on the size of the roast; you can test by sticking a long fork in it when you think it is done. I find many people overcook pot roasts on the theory they won't be tender unless they are cooked forever. If we are using a pressure cooker, we cut the time about 10 per cent.

Of course nobody needs to worry over tough cuts of meat these days, for the new meat tenderizers really do a job. Beef liver, for instance, comes out butter-tender with a tenderizer sprinkled over a little while before cooking.

The cockers and Irish love a snowy day; they go wild with excitement, they roll in the soft cold flakes, chase around in mad circles. I wonder what it is that makes this excitement for them when normally they don't care about getting damp. Maybe it is a heritage from the long past when good hunting came over freshly fallen snow.

But Hildegarde prefers the warm hearth; she is such a gentle little lady—I always think she would be one to leave engraved calling cards on a silver salver, Victorian to the details. She is very beautiful and looks so young, although the calendar says she is not young at all. With the snowy heart-shaped marking on her face and her jet-black deep ears and neat little black-and-white body, she is lovely to look at. Sometimes we address her as Marlene Dietrich instead of the incomparable Hildegarde. And this is odd; we call most of the dogs all sorts of silly names, but when we call the little gentlewoman, we speak properly and say, "Hildegarde, come!" Whereas Heritage is referred to as Little Sister or Sissie or Pigeon, and the irrepressible Especially Me is called Teddy Bear (he has that kind of fur) or Ted-wed or simply Lamb! Hollyberry Red is Irish, or Holly or Berry Red. And when she has made off with m favorite blue sponge, I may ask where th wild Irish rose has gone.

A visitor asked me yesterday if I cou recognize the dogs by their barks. I know th psychologists keep arguing as to whether do speak or communicate with one another, an so on. But when you live with nine dogs ov a period of time, you know perfectly well tha every dog speaks with his own voice, has way of phrasing things and considerable vo cabulary. We can even tell when an argumen begins over a cherished bone whether it mean dropping everything and rushing or whethe it is a diplomatic objection not to be taken an more seriously than Russia takes ours.

Holly has the widest range in tone. Sh has a high squeak like a raw hinge whic means, "Ma, come quick, hurry up," and deep mannish trumpeting sound which mean "I've found something new under the sun; m goodness, what do I do with it?" And a lo rumble which says, "My food, my bone." An a long pealing bark which says, "I am just s excited with life I could really burst this in stant. What a world!" And a soft, genti murmuring deep in the velvet throat which pure conversation, questioning, answering serene and satisfied. Plus half a dozen othe ways of speech. She would drive an experi menter mad; fortunately, all we do is liv happily with her and cherish her.

Toward the end of February, we sometime get a driving bitter rain. The whole world gray, sky, woods, bare patches on the roa The snow settles. I hear the ice cracking o the pond's edge. It's good to stay snug inside the warm little house then and bake ginger bread, hang the soup kettle over the fire, an tuck our toes up. And read. And as nigh closes in, so swiftly, so deep, I like to poke m nose out briefly and smell the cold clean ai the imperative bite of that dark wind. I hop the secret little folk out in the frosty wood are tucked away in the piny thickets, an I hope they, too, know spring is on the way classes," Martha says. "Knowing how to play bridge seems to give the girls greater confidence socially."

Y.W.C.A.—WIVES' DAY OUT

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 29

Afternoon classes available to members vary from one Holiday term to another, taught by the best-qualified instructors the Y can find. Beginning golf, for instance (with 25 learners), was taught by the pro from a municipal golf course, and the last three classes of that term were actually held on the course itself. The millinery teacher (who has appeared on TV) demonstrates such practical things as how to make over an old hat of your own—or remodel one of your husband's. Beauty and charm experts have added their store of helpful knowledge. "But most popular are always the home arts and crafts," Martha recalls. "And practical child psychology."

At 3:30 the afternoon classes are over and the women start home. Children come down from the nursery calling their good-bys to friends. Jane Thompson and her small Betsy pause in front of the candy-vending machine in the lobby. Betsy carefully chooses a chocolate bar and drops her nickel in the slot. "This is Betsy's treat for the day," Jane smiles. "It started as a kind of bribe the first time we came—you know, 'Be a good girl all day and you can have a candy bar on the way home.' She has too much fun here to be anything but good. But this is a tradition now, and I wouldn't dare pass the machine without stopping."

"There's one more person you really should meet," Martha says when the last member of her Holiday class has left. "We call her 'our best salesman' for the Y.W.-Wives program. For the last two years she has come to all three of our Holidays every week—three terms a year. She's just home from the hospital now, after a rather serious operation. I promised I'd stop in for a minute."

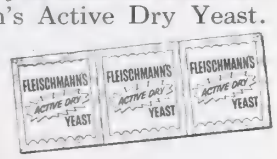
Margaret Greenberg can't manage the tw flights of stairs from her cheerful North Sid apartment yet, but it won't be long—she' feeling better every day. A friendly, vigorou woman with dark hair and a wide smile, sh claims that the worst thing about her illness i having to miss "almost a whole term of Holi days!" She asks Martha eager questions abou friends, sighs over not being able to have an part in the big centennial show. And if you as her opinion on the Y's program for home makers, she has a dozen quick reasons why for her, it "means more than I can possibl say. It gives you companionship, a chance t learn about new things, meet new people— why, my husband says I'm a new person my self! That I come home from classes al steamed up about things like communit problems—things I never even knew abou before, he says I'm all out to solve now!" She laughs at her own enthusiasm. "Any way, I can't wait till I'm well enough to ge back."

She turns to Martha and speaks mor slowly, not laughing now. "You remembe the day that our noonday speaker was a docto who talked to us about cancer—about earl detection of it being so important? Som people thought what he said was unpleasan and maybe even frightening?"

Martha remembers.

"Well," Margaret says. "After I heard tha talk I went to my own doctor for an examina tion. He told me that what he found wasn' necessarily dangerous, might never give m any trouble, but I figured that if there was ever one chance—anyway, I had the operation. An now I'm sure everything's going to be all right So, you see, maybe I'm grateful to the Y fo more than just friends and new interests Maybe I'm grateful to it for saving my life!"

END



Young mother enjoys cooking contests

Enters Her First Cooking Contest and Wins Honors

Cowgirl Shirley Ann admires her mother's prize ribbons. Mrs. Warren Voght of East Troy, Wis., won all ten in State and County Fair cooking contests this year. And like so many prize winners Mrs. Voght uses Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. "It always rises fast," she says. "And it's easy to use."

Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast is so speedy, so convenient. Keeps for months right on your cupboard shelf. When you bake at home use Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast.

Get the New "Thrifty Three"

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
POPS MOST-TASTES BEST!

REVOLUTIONARY COOKING IDEA

GRAVY MASTER
BRUSHED ON BEFORE COOKING
Makes Meat
BROWNER – BETTER EATING – TASTIER

It's SEA'LICIOUS.
A NEW TASTE THRILL!
Hilton's
DELICIOUS
OYSTER STEW
Made with luscious tender oysters, creamery butter and fresh milk.
So good for you!

THE VIRUS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 52

"Your father thinks so. The lawn mower is next door, back of Walcott's garage."

"O.K.," he said, "that's fair enough."

After a few minutes she found him sitting on the front steps. "You couldn't find the lawn mower?"

"I haven't seen it," he said. "Did you want it?"

She reached down and took the snow shovel from his hand. "You'll find it behind Walcott's garage."

"All right," he said. "That's the first place I'll look."

Presently she could hear from the kitchen the steady whining of the blades. It was half an hour before Mr. Burney came home.

"Nice to see the boy making a little money," he said. "How much is Walcott paying him?"

"Walcott?" she said. "Why should Mr. Walcott pay Marvin for mowing our lawn?"

"I don't know why." He opened the oven door and looked in. "Shouldn't think he would. Surprised me that he'd pay to have his own lawn done."

"Oh, dear." She sat down on the kitchen stool. "Mr. Walcott doesn't want his lawn mowed. Marvin is supposed to be mowing our lawn. He probably thinks he is."

"He did seem a little distracted; he kept going over the same strip of grass. I thought he was just padding his time."

"You'd better go out and head him this way," she said. "Dinner's ready. Be sure he leaves the lawn mower outside."

The dinner turned out to be quiet and uneventful. Mrs. Burney was finishing the dishes when her husband wandered into the kitchen. She waited while he prowled back and forth, tasting a cold biscuit, eating an olive. "Marvin?" she asked.

"In the living room." He poked his finger in the dishwater and inspected it moodily. "He's got a sandwich."

"He has? Well, he didn't eat much dinner."

"He isn't eating the sandwich," Mr. Burney said, "he's watching it. Staring at it."

"Oh?"

"Yes, somebody gave it to him, somebody named Dolores." He picked up a dish towel and began drying silverware. "A deviled-egg sandwich about four or five days old."

"I see."

"Do we know any Dolores? I thought he was interested in the Stevens girl."

"Yes, Patty. She's awfully sweet."

"Well, Patty is out. Dolores is what he said. Dolores—he whispered it like a dying gladiator. Then he said her highborn kinsman came and took her away from him. Can you figure that one out?"

"Yes, of course. Annabel Lee."

"You know the people?"

"The poem," she said. "Annabel Lee. It was her highborn kinsman Marvin was talking about."

MR. BURNEY looked disturbed. "He never did anything like that before. You know, I don't believe that boy is well. You suppose we ought to have him see a doctor?"

"He's already seen one doctor today. I don't think it did either of them any good."

"A good military school might turn the trick," said Mr. Burney doubtfully. "But I don't know that he ought to be turned loose around a bunch of firearms. Better to face it, I guess, and accept Dolores. Probably have to meet her parents, too, have them to dinner and all the rest." He picked up a biscuit and bit into it gloomily. "Pretty depressing."

"Cheer up. Maybe they travel a lot."

"I always wanted to have a son," he said. "I wish now I could think of some of the reasons."

"He's a little preoccupied," Mrs. Burney said, "and absent-minded. That's nothing to be upset about."

"No, the boy is in bad shape, he's not normal." Mr. Burney frowned nervously. "He was wandering around the living room a few minutes ago and he ran into the cobbler's bench. You know what he did then? Said, 'I beg your pardon.' That secondhand, dilapidated cobbler's bench your brother gave us."

MRS. BURNEY regarded him evenly. "If you knew anything about antiques—if you had the faintest inkling ——"

"Let's try to stay on the subject, shall we?" said Mr. Burney. "He's always been a reasonably bright kid—I'm talking about Marvin now. We've always done our part—had his teeth straightened, given him dancing lessons. Put money aside for college."

"Pretty ungrateful of him to fall in love after all that."

"It's just that I hate to see him go all to pieces on account of some girl. He'll never finish high school the condition he's in. Want to get married right away, I suppose, with no job in sight. Probably thinks he can support a family mowing lawns." He glanced at his wife. "What are you smiling at?"

"Just remembering a boy I knew in high school," she said. "He wandered into our home-ec class one day thinking it was civics. He even took the exam."

"You'll find that type wherever you go. But Marvin comes from good stock."

"So did this boy," Mrs. Burney said. "His parents were very conscientious. They even called the police once when he wasn't home by midnight. They found him standing outside this girl's house in the pouring rain. Just standing there with a ukulele in his hand."

Mr. Burney nodded. "Uh-huh, sure." He cleared his throat. "As a matter of fact, I wasn't standing there; I was merely passing by, walking rather slowly. And it wasn't what you'd call a real rain at all—just a light sprinkle. No more than a few drops."

"It melted the glue in your ukulele, your sister told me. It came apart the next day. And your hair oil ran down all over your best coat."

"I thought we were discussing Marvin," said Mr. Burney. "Marvin and Dolores."

"Yes, Dolores. I keep wanting to call her Geraldine. Isn't that funny? I don't suppose they're at all alike."

"Who did you say?"

She looked at him in surprise. "Surely you haven't forgotten Geraldine, with the giggle and the spit curls?"

He shook his head. "Never heard of her," he told her.

"I hope you don't think it was my window you were standing under with your wet ukulele."

Mr. Burney looked startled. "It wasn't?" he asked.

His wife gazed at him without expression and slowly shook her head.

"I see." He nodded thoughtfully and began folding up the dish towel. "Geraldine, eh?" He nodded again, a faraway smile on his face.

"So maybe we shouldn't worry too much about Marvin."

"Who?" he said. "Oh, Marvin. No, nothing to worry about. For all we know, Geraldine may be just the girl for him."

"Dolores," said Mrs. Burney.

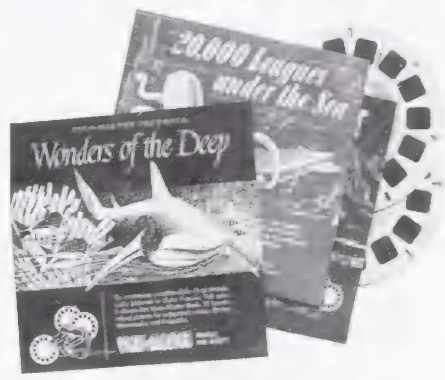
"Why should we interfere?" he asked. "It's spring, you know, the season of innocence and laughter and impossible dreams. Yes," he added simply, "the time for longing and heartbreak, too, and all that goes with being young." He paused, and when he spoke his voice was husky with nostalgia. "It's the happy season—once it's over there's no going back."

"No, there isn't." Mrs. Burney gently removed the dish towel from his hands. "Maybe that's the happiest part of all." END

If a man is going to be an American at all, let him be so without any qualifying adjectives; and if he is going to be something else, let him drop the word American from his personal descriptions.



—HENRY CABOT LODGE, SR.

children have FUN while they LEARN with View-Master "COME TO LIFE"

3-Dimension full color pictures

Your children can view the fascinating beauty and mystery of Wonders of the Deep as if they were there . . . or enjoy thrilling "come to life" picture stories like Alice in Wonderland, 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea...adventure, travel, world events and many other subjects. View-Master 3-Dimension pictures are educational—and fun!

Select as many wonderful wholesome picture reels as you like. Build a worthwhile picture library for your children.

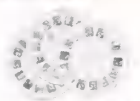
Check this partial list, take to your dealer

Colorfully Packaged 3-Reel Gift Packets, $1.00
(With Story Folders)

- ☐ Wonders of the Deep
- ☐ 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea
- ☐ Robin Hood
- ☐ Tom Corbett—Space Cadet
- ☐ Alice in Wonderland
- ☐ Mother Goose Rhymes
- ☐ Arabian Nights
- ☐ Cowboy Stars
- ☐ The Coronation
- ☐ Performing Animals

Ask to See State Packets — (Ohio, Texas, Georgia, Arizona and many others)

Popular View-Master Reels



- ☐ Roy Rogers and Trigger
- ☐ Fire Fighters in Action, USA
- ☐ Down on the Farm, USA
- ☐ Bugs Bunny
- ☐ Tom & Jerry
- ☐ Woody Woodpecker
- ☐ The Rodeo (Life With U.S. Cowboys)
- ☐ Cattle Roundup & Branding
- ☐ Tarzan Rescues Cheta

Also See Famous Cities and Landmarks of the World.

Viewer $2.00

Reels 35¢
3 for $1.00

Jr. Projector $9.95

ask to see
VIEW-MASTER
3-Dimension pictures
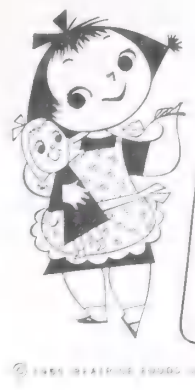
® Sawyer's Inc., Portland 7, Oregon at selected photo, gift and department stores

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

Free! 10 Recipes for Cottage Cheese Treats



Peach Sunburst Pie
Lemon Wafers
Puffy Cheese Omelet
Cheese Tuna Special
Two-in-One Casserole
Cherry Layer Salad
Fruit Salad Deluxe
Cranberry Salad
Cheese Bowl
Pineapple Crumb Pie

These are the recipes I'm sure you'll prize for their zesty flavor-appeal. Delicious, economical cottage cheese is the special ingredient in each. For best results, just be sure you use Meadow Gold Cottage Cheese. It's fresh and good as cottage cheese can be. Extra smooth and tender . . . and extra-creamy, too! And Meadow Gold Cottage Cheese is rich in healthful minerals everyone needs. Try it tonight, in this refreshing Peach Sunburst Pie.

Peach Sunburst Pie

1 9-inch graham cracker crust
1 No. 2½ can sliced peaches, drained
1 cup Meadow Gold Cottage Cheese, sieved
½ cup peach syrup
1 egg yolk, beaten
¼ cup sugar
1 tbs. grated lemon rind
2 tbs. lemon juice
½ tsp. vanilla
1 tbs. unflavored gelatine
2 tbs. cold water
1 egg white, stiffly beaten
½ cup Meadow Gold Whipping Cream, whipped

Combine cottage cheese, peach syrup, egg yolk, sugar, lemon rind, lemon juice and vanilla. Soften gelatine in cold water, dissolve over hot water; blend into cheese mixture and chill until slightly thickened. Arrange peach slices in bottom and around edge of pie shell so tips stand about ½ inch above crust. Fold egg white and cream into chilled mixture; spoon into pie shell. Chill until firm. Garnish with peach slices and maraschino cherries. Serves 6.

HOW TO GET YOUR FREE RECIPES
Each recipe printed on a 3 x 5" file card. Write to: Beatrice Foods Co., Dept. J-25, 120 S. LaSalle St., Chicago 3, Ill.

© 1955 BEATRICE FOODS CO.

GOD IS LOVE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 49

She had almost told him then. But words spoiled things. And she wasn't going to have a sensation so comforting and intimate knocked about and labeled, passed off, a little uncomfortably, as one of those notions women were apt to get when they were expecting.

Her mouth twisted as she remembered how she had felt the night before coming into the hospital. Expecting the baby and something else, too, some further sign of God. Oh, not the beating of wings exactly, but it was a climax. Surely if God had been with her making the baby, He would be near now waiting to see it delivered, sharing this last most important part. And instead there had been . . . nothing; just her body in pain, and an emptiness, and a terrible, dreary routine that went on and on. And she had thought of God then with a cry from her heart, Why this? O dear my God, is this Your plan; why this?

She had been leaning on a fantasy, talking to herself. There was just the baby, a biological process and no God about it. O.K. That was the way it was. The baby was real. The baby was enough.

He was wonderful to hold, a satisfactory weight against her arm, but awe-inspiring, so tiny for all his eight pounds and so queerly himself. Already a person.

Peter Hagan uncrumpled his mouth in a wail that turned into a yawn. He opened his blue eyes suddenly to stare at his mother. And the eyes were spang crossed. Lucilla screamed.

Five days later she could laugh at that. She sat on the edge of the bed, dressed once more in street clothes, waiting for Phillip to come up from paying the bill and for the nurse to bring young Pete from the nursery. She was feeling complacent, and she smiled remembering her first sight of the baby. Of course she had learned his eyes were perfect. All babies' eyes crossed sometimes when they were little, before the muscles learned to track.

It seemed queer to have on shoes again. I got dressed too soon. You felt so strong lying down, restless to be up and about, and then when you got up the strength oozed right out of you. Her bed, stripped down for the next patient, had never seemed so inviting.

She stood up again carefully, the folds of her gray suit heavy against her waist. Footsteps in the corridor. Phillip carrying the bundle of baby clothes in one hand, the receipt in the other. Hard on his heels, Miss Hanson trotted, carrying the baby. Miss Hanson was the nice one with the mole, always reminding Lucilla of the lady mouse in her childhood picture book, so cheerily bustling on little short legs, her glasses sliding down her sharp nose. She laid the baby down, picked up the clothes. "Pins?"

Phillip looked abashed.

She pulled a handful from her pocket. "They mostly don't. All embroidery and no pins. The diaper pins are nicer, but these will do. Oh-oh." They waited in silence.

"Another diaper?" One look at Phillip was enough and as though the baby saw, too, he began to cry. Miss Hanson had to shout. "Never mind. I always bring along a few disposables for first parents. Next time you'll know. Bring some extras."

Peter screamed all the way down the hall. Miss Hanson was at Lucilla's other ear. "He has a little rash, nothing to worry over, but I'd get right at it. Get yourself some zinc ointment and don't be afraid to slather it on so he won't be scalding himself the next five minutes. It's written down here. And don't worry."

She waved them through the door. Peter cried on. He cried all the way through the parking lot and into the car and all the way home. He stopped once, at the intersection of Homestead and Vermont, and that's when Phillip told her.

"Lucy," (how she hated to be called Lucy) "I didn't want to worry you, but that woman who was coming to help can't come. The agency is sending us someone else tomorrow at eight."

"What about tonight?" Lucilla's voice was shrill.

"Nothing to it!" He patted her knee and narrowly missed a passing sedan. The baby began to scream once more.

Lucilla clutched her son and her mind spun frantically. What about a formula? They had one bottle of it supplied by the hospital, but that was hardly enough. And why was the baby crying so terribly? He was supposed to be asleep. Everyone said, "Go home with him in the evening; let him have his bottle in the hospital and then take him home sleeping for the night." Sleeping, ha!

She shifted him back up to her shoulder, patted, cooed, ground her teeth. The baby screamed on. Well, it was obvious, he didn't like them. Their own baby and he didn't want to go home. He preferred the hospital.

When she walked into the living room Lucilla saw her home for an instant as visitors must, before it fell into familiar lines. It did look nice. How Phillip must have worked: everything was shining and the blue basket waiting by the fire. With a twist and a shimmy she worked her arms from her coat, let it slide to the floor while she laid Peter carefully in his own little bed. The basket gave a creak as she straightened, creaked again, lurched over sideways and collapsed.

"Lucy!" Phillip rushed from the kitchen. "Never scream like that near a baby. You want him to have convulsions?"

He worked the baby loose from the tangle of blankets, gave him to Lucilla and righted the bassinet. The baby's cry subsided to what was beginning to be recognized as a normal scream.

"He's not hurt, just frightened. I was showing it to some people this afternoon and I guess I forgot to brace the back legs again." An apology from Phillip was often followed by a swift change of ground. "You'd better go change him, and where's that thing of instructions about making the formula?"

"On the table. Phillip, I know he's supposed to wait until ten o'clock to eat again, but maybe he's hungry. Let's give him the bottle we have before we try making the formula."

"I broke it when you screamed."

He looked so suddenly weary, so rumpled and sorry that she forgot her own aching need to sit down somewhere. "Phil. Isn't it awful?" she said.

They exchanged a glance over their son parted, Lucilla to the bedroom, Phillip to kitchen.

Heartened, she laid the baby down and t a motherlike speech to him. "Mister man she imitated half-remembered tones of all mothers she had ever heard—"you're goin have some nice dry diaps, and you're goin sleep."

The baby paid no attention. His bin was soaking, too, but there seemed to be much material in the dry one. Was it the sa size? It was. The diaper was huge. Miss H son did this and this and did this. W Lucilla went through the same motions, g pinned, lifted the baby, everything slipp Three times she folded, twisted, pinned, s veyed the clumsy result.

At first she wept quietly, little creeping tea then the sobs came, wrenchings torn by H cups. She pulled off her dress, kicked her sh aside, unfastened her garters.

"Lucy—this says corn sirup or maltose. maltose better? Well, for heaven's sake!"

Lucilla was in her nightgown, jostling baby up and down on the edge of the bed, face blotched and swollen. Tears dripped do her cheek, and her head moved wearily fr side to side.

"For heaven's sake," he repeated, unbe ably touched. "What kind of a thing is th This was supposed to be a party, your fi night home. You don't act as if you're glad be home at all. You didn't even say anythi about all the flowers."

"Well"—to her surprise, Lucilla uncover a grievance of her own—"you don't seem care about the baby either." Fresh tears wa ing any kind of excuse flowed readily. "Eve one told me how funny and sweet the fath were when they got hold of the baby. They said every father could hardly wait to hold and look at it, and you don't care about h at all. Just keep handing him to me."

He stood speechless. Afterward, he told h it was because of the unfairness. He stro back to his sterilizing and found that t nipples, left boiling too long, were gummy. H started over again, thanking the providen that led young fathers into buying an ov abundance of supplies. An hour later he ca ried his finished product into the bedroom.

"Lucilla." He stroked the hair back fro her forehead, dried her cheek with a corner the sheet. Later, when they crawled into be he tucked her close.

She knew then how lonesome the hospit bed had been. Solid comfort, to press u against Phillip's long body, reunited. Fathe mother, son beside them sleeping in th basket. They whispered in the darkness.

"Lucilla, I did want to hold the baby. B he kept crying and you seemed so upset."

"Phillip, forgive me; it's just glands something. They all said that mothers cry lik that at first, only it surprised me too. I was beast."

They stiffened, jerked back to unbelievin alertness by sound in the night. The baby wa awake again. And he was crying.

When Miss Fuller arrived at eight, brigh and-chirpy and full of breakfast, Lucilla wa still in her nightgown wandering around th living room.

"Oh, I'm glad to see you, I've been waitin to go to bed. Oh, and I'm Mrs. Hagan, o course, and the baby is Peter and he's asleep He just went to sleep now. I thought we coul roll his basket back out here and I'll go t bed. There's plenty of formula. We just fin ished a new batch." She moved with th dreamy preoccupation of a drunk.

The baby slept while they moved him. H slept until two without stirring, but Mis Fuller did not. She kept appearing in the bed room like a recurring dream. A nightmare.

"Miz Hagan, now, that kitchen's an awfu mess. Do you want I should clear it up?" . . "Miz Hagan, there's two kinds of soap there Which do you use for dishes?" . . . "Miz Hagan. The phone. Is there anybody here named Jerry?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 144

SOLDIER'S MOTHER

(From the letter she did not send.)

By ELEANOR HALBROOK ZIMMERMAN

I could not fall asleep last night. . . .
Like a lost ghost I prowled the house,
Tightening the doors already tight,
Frightening the hungry midnight mouse,

Feeding your dog an extra bone,
Fingering your books on the high-hung shelf,
Achingly listening for the phone. . . .
Son, I'm ashamed of myself.

The moonlight falls on the goldfish pond;
The winds are awake in the lonesome trees;
I can find no comfort at all beyond
Such little things as these.

"¡Valiente!" cried the Spanish admiral cheered as his launch fished this man and seven more ıerican sailors out of Santiago Harbor, Cuba, on the rning of June 4, 1898. This was straining Spanish valry to the breaking point, for Richmond Hobson (right) and his little suicide crew had spent the previous night taking a ship into the harbor entrance under a hail of cannonade and deliberately sinking her to bottle up the Spanish fleet.

Richmond Hobson, who planned and supervised ery detail of the operation, from placing the scuttling rges in the ship to dropping anchor under fire, was ually an engineer, not a line officer.

n Santiago Harbor, he led his first and only action inst the enemy. But his cool-headed daring made ı as much a hero of the day as Admiral Dewey. And ved again that America's most valuable product is ericans.

These Americans—proudly confident of their nation's ure—are the people who stand behind United States ies E Savings Bonds. They are the people who, by ir spirit and abilities, make these Bonds one of the rld's finest investments.

That's why there's no better way to protect your fue than by investing in America's future! Buy United tes Savings Bonds regularly!

★ ★ ★

It's actually easy to save money—when you buy United States Series E Savings Bonds through the automatic Payroll Savings Plan where you work! You just sign an application at your pay office; after that your saving is done for you.

And the Bonds you receive will pay you interest at the rate of 3% per year, compounded semiannually, for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish! Sign up today! Or, if you're self-employed, invest in Bonds where you bank.

For your own security—and your country's, too—

invest in U.S. Savings Bonds!

PUBLIC SERVICE ADVERTISING COUNCIL

The U.S. Government does not pay for this advertisement. It is donated by this publication in cooperation with the Advertising Council and the Magazine Publishers of America.

Why does my foundation ride up?

Improper design and inexpert fitting.

Why does my foundation often feel uncomfortable after wearing it a few hours?

Your figure changes during the day (after meals, for instance.)

Is the "bound in" feeling I get with my present foundation necessary?

No. A scientifically designed garment fits without undue compression.

Many women have found that wearing a Camp Support answers all these questions. A Camp is a scientifically designed foundation . . . featuring the exclusive "Magic Web" adjustment. Camp gives balanced support from waist to thigh. And since it is adjustable, you can have the amount of support you want . . . where and when you want it. You will find Camp moderately priced . . . will appreciate its longer wear. Immediately available at good stores and corset shops.

Write for this free booklet "New Facts About Your Figure and Your Corset"

CAMP

S. H. CAMP & CO., Dept. 13, Jackson, Michigan
Creators of Scientific Men's and Women's Foundations for Daily Wear and Anatomical Supports for the Medical Profession

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 142

When the baby woke at two, the "Miz Hagans" reached a crescendo and Lucilla got up and put on her robe. By three-thirty Peter was bathed, fed and asleep again, and at four Miss Fuller put on her hat and went home.

"Phillip," Lucilla said hysterically, "the woman's a fool. I told her finally to just sit down on the couch and think nice thoughts. Nobody can sleep when somebody keeps asking them questions. And she waited ten minutes and came back again with 'Miz Hagan, I just don't feel right to be sitting and doing nothing. It makes me nervous!'"

By the third night Lucilla had a new story. "Phillip, I let Miss Fuller go. Tomorrow's Saturday and I can't see any sense in our paying her eight dollars a day to watch Peter sleep and keep waking me up. She says she gets lonely and there's another job she can take, so I told her to go ahead. Anyway, it frightened me. She came into the bedroom to ask me some fool question and I almost hit her with the wastebasket."

Phillip was doubtful. "Cilly"—there were deep lines under his eyes, and his shoulders slumped—"do you know of anyone else having a baby and going through all this? Are we normal? I honestly meant to help you out last night. I kept telling myself to get up, but nothing happened. I think I was asleep this morning right in the middle of my lecture. Everybody laughed."

"I don't know. One thing: the doctor says Pete has his days and his nights mixed. He sleeps all day and does his eating and exercising at night. He'll gradually work himself around. But this way, maybe I can sleep while he's asleep and just plan to be awake at night." She spoke with a confidence she didn't entirely feel. All very well to say sleep while the baby sleeps. When Peter was awake he seemed to keep her busy every second, and then when he did sleep she had twenty-seven things waiting to do to get ready for the next round. It was a marathon that had no end. Just about the time she got things caught up to where she could think about resting, the baby was awake again. "But I didn't see where Miss Fuller has been any help. By the time I got through telling her what to do I could do it easier myself. And, Phil, we just don't have the money."

When eight o'clock came Monday morning, and no Phillip and no Miss Fuller, Lucilla knew a moment of real panic. She was on her own, sink or swim. She resisted an impulse to go in and look at the baby. She resisted another to straighten up the front room.

First thing, I have to get some sleep or I won't be able to keep going. Phil made formula last night and we're ahead on diapers. She lay down on the couch. There are two main jobs, his bath and formula. The rest is easy, feed him and change him. Then if there's any time left over I can start to catch up on the rest of the things. Maybe by next weekend I can even get a bath myself. . . . Lucilla slept.

By Friday morning, plunging breakfast dishes, one-handed, into and out of soapy water, she cast a glance over the week just past and felt a stirring of pride and optimism. On Tuesday she had scalded her hand over the sterilizer, but that was nearly healed. Anyone coming in might think things were disarranged to a point of frenzy; actually, within the chaos was a kind of order. By making a graph of Peter's waking hours, the number of bottles he took and the number of ounces, they saw suddenly a rough pattern to his behavior. The number of bottles varied madly within the twenty-four-hour periods; the number of ounces was, remarkably, the same eighteen. He knew what he was doing! Most important, Lucilla found that she could begin to predict, loosely, when he was going to be asleep. That helped a lot. The diaper rash was clearing up under a constant bombardment of zinc ointment. Why, then, this nagging sense of depression?

Chimes from the nearby tower. Eight o'clock. Phillip had been gone for nearly an hour. He found he could grade his papers better at school these days before class.

Waking Peter for his bath at eight was part of the new system for trying to get his routine worked around to a normal day and night, but it made him cross, frantic for his bottle.

Towels on the drainboard, the tub into place . . . already her movements were practiced enough to leave time for thought. The trouble was that while things were smoothing out in some ways, in others they stayed the same. The baby was wonderful in a weird sort of way, but where was the joy she had dreamed over during her pregnancy? The three of them like a picture on the calendar? Ha! Phillip was sleeping on the couch nights, and his footstep on the stair after work was the signal for her to drop whatever she was doing and crawl wearily into bed to get some sleep for the broken night ahead.

Everything ready, she went to get Pete, woke him up apologetically, set to work in nervous haste. His cry, more and more insistent, made her clumsy. Voices calling from the street below. Students late for class. Oil warmed in the pan of water, boric-acid solution . . . one part of her mind checked details as she went, noting with satisfaction the trim

Few persons have courage enough to appear as good as they really are. —J. C. HARE expertness of her diapers now, and another part continued its abstract meandering. What bitterness, to remember how she used to curl up in the armchair with a cup of coffee this time of morning talking with God! Now she'd just appreciate the sitting down.

And that was just it. Something was terribly wrong, that you should be happier expecting a baby than after you'd had it. What was it?

Two new voices down below yelled something about a trig assignment.

G is L. An equation. The long-forgotten phrase from Sunday school popped appropriately into mind: God is Love.

Back in the kitchen, Peter bottled and changed, she thought of it again. God is Love. Was that meaningless? Or was it true, another deeper equation? If G is L, then L is G. Love is God. And love was not meaningless. That she knew; and she smiled.

What is love? asked Lucilla, and answered herself: Love is a warmth. A reaching out between people.

That was the way it was with Phillip. But had it been with Peter? Suddenly she knew. In all this frantic time of newness and scares, problems and decisions, she had never once just taken time to sit still and love the baby. To enjoy the warmth.

Her glance rested on the mail stacked on the table, some of it unopened. Gifts and ribbons and wrappings pushed out of the way, dust everywhere, diapers in the pail waiting to be boiled: so much to do, but did any of it m ter? Peter was asleep, but did that ma either? She picked him up.

"You know," she whispered to the chee soft against her own, "I'm beginning to you rather terribly and it just occurred to I never told you. It just occurred to me better come in here and tell you I particul admire the way you wrinkle your nose w you sleep. And the way you arch your mo around hunting for the bottle long before ready. I'm going to call you Archie."

Crazy-nonsense things, but her arms ha new, tight confidence . . . and the tones of l seemed to reach through the web of sleep rounding Peter. His head moved on her sh der, seeking the hollow of her neck, and the fists, clenched against the world, relaxed. there was the joy and all the exultation, m than enough. Flood tides of it singing thro her blood, carrying off the worry and weariness.

My pride and my humility, thought Luc Tears stung her eyes.

When Phillip came in at five she was re for him with a smile he hadn't seen in da

"News for you, boy. We're going to eat gether for a change. What is sleep, after but a kind of habit? Really, Phil, you kn when you add it all up I do get eight hours of twenty-four. Only instead of riding al with the thing, I've been tensed up fighting It hasn't been much fun for you, has it?"

Deep inside Phillip something relaxed, to heart again. "I'll do the dishes," he grinn

In the night he heard her stumbling at f o'clock and turned on the lamp. So she carr Pete in and they bundled together on couch watching him take his bottle.

"Look how hard he works," Phillip wh pered. The lamp was a circle of light ring them in against the dark. He reached o then and took her hand . . . that four-o'cl feeding was one of the nicest hours they h ever spent.

Saturdays Phillip really enjoyed sleep late. It seemed a shame to wake him. Onl was getting time for Pete's bath; and the cou was so near the kitchen, the porcelain tub noisy to handle.

There came the chimes. . . . No classes Saturday any more, but the bells rang anyw

You know, Lucilla mused with the beg nings of wisdom, it seems to me that if wash a baby perfectly six days of the week, one morning you could sponge him off w warm oil right there in his little basket we'd all be happier. She put the bottle on heat and on second thought poured herse second cup of coffee.

Peter woke while she was changing him a gave a workmanlike yawn.

"Wake up there, young fellow," crooned. And suddenly and as unmistaka as the scent of roses she felt God beside looking over her shoulder into the basket.

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTERN ON PAGE 128

Vogue Design No. 8498. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 40, 30 to 40. 75c

Vogue Design No. 8210. "Easy to Make" skirt, 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8215. "Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 42, 30 to 42. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8413. Skirt, 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8460. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress or jumper dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.

Vogue Design No. S-4560. Coat: 12 to 40, 30 to 40. $1.00.

Did you ever?

By LITTLE LULU

Ever carry Kleenex Pocket Packs?
It's such an easy way
To keep your Kleenex handy, neat and fresh—at work or play!

You see, each Kleenex* Pocket Pack fits purses, too, with ease.
You're set for every tissue use from make-up job to sneeze!

Be thrifty—Buy quality

Buy Kleenex Pocket Pack

Still only 5¢

NTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

When you bake them...when you frost them...remember– your family, even more than your guests, deserves

Real Butter Cakes

Here are recipes to make you pro thanks to the special, irresistible flavo
REAL BUTTER. Try them soon. The cak high, light and proud with a fine delic crumb and a tenderness most wor never achieve . . . the frosting is rich creamy-smooth—the perfect mate to y magnificent butter cake. The secret both is REAL BUTTER!

Real Butter Cake

½ cup butter
1¼ cups sugar
3 eggs
2 cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons baking po
⅔ cup milk
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream butter. Add sugar and mix well. Add eggs one time, beating well after each addition. Sift flour with and baking powder and add alternately with the milk.
vanilla. Pour into two buttered and floured 8-inch r cake pans and bake at 375° for 25 minutes.

Real Butter Frosting

½ cup (1 stick) butter
1—1-lb. package confectioner's sugar, sifted
1 fresh egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon milk or c

Sift confectioner's sugar. Cream butter until smooth.
quick hand-mixing use medium-soft butter. Add confectioner's sugar to butter. Cream thoroughly u sugar and butter are well blended. Add salt, milk vanilla. Blend. Add unbeaten egg and beat until smo Add remaining confectioner's sugar. Beat until sm and fluffy. Yield: 2¼ cups.

For Butter frostings at top of page: CHOCOLATE—
2 oz. bitter chocolate. Whip in basic butter frosting rec LEMON—Omit vanilla, milk, cream. Add 2 Tbls. le juice and grated rind of 1 lemon. Whip in. PEPPERMI —Omit vanilla. Add scant ½ tsp. mint extract. Color li pink. BROWNED BUTTER—Brown butter in skil
Use basic recipe with only 1 teaspoon milk.

This message is paid for by dairy farmers across the nation as part of their program to show you can live better with foods made from milk.

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"
20 North Wacker Drive • Chicago 6, Illinois

Watch Disneyland (ABC) and Bob Crosby (CBS) on TV
Listen to Bob Hope on NBC Radio

HAROLD FOWLER

Here are twin quilts gaily decorated with the symbolic flowers of every state, drawn to emphasize their own natural grace. The flowers are cut from patterns and appliquéd onto each individual square, later joined and quilted for charming spreads.

State Flower Quilt

by Henrietta Murdock

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

Quilts have always had sentimental themes, but our state flower quilts are both sentimental and beautiful. The fact that states have chosen flowers as symbolic of their native beauty is a bit of Americana we can view with pride.

You will notice that there are twin quilts, each containing twenty-four state flower squares. The technique is appliqué and the graceful flower forms are achieved by using clear, contrasting colors in Nature's own combinations.

First you choose a favorite background color for your quilt. Be sure you choose a soft middle tone of this color. The reason for this is that you want to contrast the flowers and foliage in silhouette against it.

Plain washable percale or gingham is the best material to use. Make a list of the shades and tints you will need for the flowers, unless you use your own scraps, and buy them all at the same time. There are dozens of such shades, and by trying them out together in the store you can better judge their harmony. A half yard or less of each color is sufficient. Be sure to buy matching threads while you are about it. Of course you will need more of the foliage greens than of the other colors. Yardage for the plain backgrounds of the squares, lining, and so on, is included with the pattern. For patterns, send 25c to Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania. Ask for No. 2616, State Flower Quilts.

THEY SAY IT WITH ACTION

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63

ligent, widely experienced in politics through national campaign work for Estes Kefauver and Adlai Stevenson, Kathryn seemed a natural for the job. Voters demonstrated that they thought so too.

An especially heady stamp of approval has been given Mrs. Stone by her fellow legislators, all male. When soon after she took office the speaker of the house asked her to deliver a message to the senate, she was escorted there by the entire population of the lower chamber.

"Why don't you leave her with us?" ventured one gallant Southern senator.

"Sorry," was the flattering reply. "She's the only one we have."

MRS. GERTRUDE LYNCH
Rhode Island Legislature

Young mother: "Oh, I'm not particularly interested in politics."

Campaigner: "But you're interested in our school system, aren't you?"

Mother, emphatically: "Well, of course!"

Campaigner, equally emphatically: "The school system's a good place to start."

Woman-to-woman talk like this on front doorsteps and in supermarkets won 38-year-old Gertrude Lynch election and re-election to her present seat in the Rhode Island Legislature. "Women's general urge to talk," she says, is a real political asset—and whether they realize it or not, women actually influence many issues through their everyday conversations at markets, hairdressers, schools.

Gertrude Lynch first became interested in government through her volunteer work with civic groups. "I could see that government and political parties needed the help of ci Women, particularly, weren't holding u end of the responsibility, she felt. Her ophy has continued to pay off—to the that she was re-elected in 1954.

Ever since an around-the-world tri college gave her "perspective on being ican," trim, attractive Mrs. Lynch ha upholding her country's ideals as zealo any Roger Williams. Characteristicall tells other women:

"Don't let the accusation 'idealist' ke out of politics. Our government was th idealistic ever conceived."

The three Lynch children—Susan, 1 liam, 8, and Ralph, 4—who are "grow in a world they are too young to shap just one more reason their mother work for better, more idealistic government. is already involved in world shaping: junior authority on the U.N., often exc ideas with a German pen pal.

Soon after she'd married John Ly 1938, Trudy, as her friends call her, w work for the Junior League—cutting o terns. "But I was absolutely no good at she laughs. She found real satisfaction next community job—taking a blind t on her calls to blind people. By 1943, s working with the Junior League an League of Women Voters for a sta juvenile court.

"Now I knew I wanted to particip government, not just observe." And so years ago Gertrude Lynch entered he race for public office and became th Republican woman member of the Island House of Representatives. She w couraged at the end of her first year by seemed to her lack of progress.

"I expected miracles," she admits. learned that one person can't accomplis overnight. Legislative work means work."

One achievement since that first feel discouragement was the passage of a bi to her heart—legislation providing for nurse training—enthusiastically approv Republicans and Democrats alike.

ROSALIND WI
Los Angeles City C

If political success stories went by the 24-year-old Rosalind Wiener would senior in law school now. Instead, she's ica's youngest legislator and Los Angele city councilwoman in some 37 years.

Able, alert Rosalind really meant to lawyer. But when she was drafted by zens' committee to run as city-council date from the fifth district, she couldn no. Now she hopes she's in politics for Councilwoman Wiener has demons from the first that despite her youth s clever politician. With the odds eight t against her in the campaign—and all too—Roz and helpers developed some new electioneering twists. Monday, the volunteers decided, was stay-at-home ni Los Angeles. And so each Monday a army descended on householders with of cellophane-wrapped soap and a spiel:

"Are you interested in clean, fresh go ment for Los Angeles? If you are, you'l for Rosalind Wiener. She's young, ene and fully qualified."

Saturday afternoons saw the group pr ing "Wiener for Councilwoman" balloo children swarming out of the neighbo double-feature.

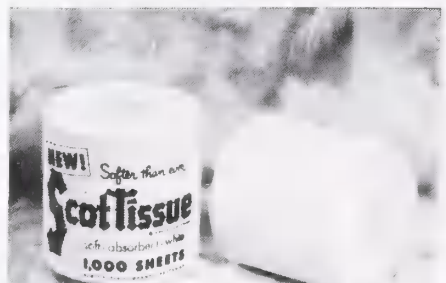
Roz Wiener's political career began ea at age 19, while a civic-administration st at the University of Southern Californi active member of Los Angeles' Young D crats. Eager to be a political doer, she pl into the 1950 congressional campaign, w up serving on the Democratic state comm One thing led to another: at first Roz rank-and-file member of the citizens' mittee looking for a likely city-council date. Each possibility had to be elimi Then by common consent the other me turned to Roz with the question: "Why you run?" Roz did.

Her formula for getting ahead in po "It just takes some good old-fash drudgery," Rosalind insists.

You choose his baby soap for gentle mildness . . . be careful to select his bathroom tissue for safe softness too

You tell him how much you love him by your wise, gentle care

Every day your wise care can help to keep your tiny baby happier and more comfortable.



One simple way to make his new world more comfortable is to choose his bathroom tissue for true tender-skin softness.

The new ScotTissue is softer than ever for your baby's thinner skin. Yet it has the strength and absorbency you want for neat, efficient clean-ups.

Next shopping day, get several rolls of the new ScotTissue. It is your best choice for baby. And in the big 1,000-sheet roll it is your most economical buy for the whole family. Another great Scott value. "ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

He likes to be kept comfy-dry. He will like the comfort of the new ScotTissue too. So kind to his thinner skin. Yet it cleanses thoroughly without shredding or tearing

1,000 sheets—over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues

d she keeps as a souvenir a well-worn of campaign shoes to prove it.
chairman of the Health and Welfare and Recreation and Parks committees of the Council, Rosalind takes a leading part in Angeles' fight against juvenile delin-cy. Working actively for the development ore recreational and cultural activities, ays "these must be provided not only for ounger children but for teen-agers who nt the greatest problem."
August of last year Rosalind became the of Eugene Wyman, a Beverly Hills attor-
And now she works "to combine success-a career in politics with marriage."

KATHARINE ELKUS WHITE
Mayor, Red Bank, New Jersey

r Honor, the mayor of Red Bank, New y, Katharine Elkus White, has found her s "city mother" to some 12,743 citizens l of problems as any other kind of house-ng. The budget must be stretched, imement projects mapped, efficient govern-maintained.
eanwhile, everybody goes to tell City Hall the corner street light stops working or arbage isn't picked up on schedule. Mrs.
e's phone even jingles when somebody's er husband is behind in his alimony.
r from being overwhelmed by all this, or White is exhilarated by the total job of ng the city tick. A Democrat (the first to the office of mayor of Red Bank in twenty and now serving her third term), she has times thought her six Republican council bers moved too cautiously on city im-ements.
Of course," she admits immediately, re limited by funds, which isn't political
."
the end of her second term, Mrs. White the council had these accomplishments ir credit: a modern recreation park; safer c regulations in school zones; a half-on-dollar bond issue for new sewers.
st spring Gov. Robert B. Meyner gave busy mayor an additional assignment—of commissioner of the New Jersey High-Authority. Of major concern in the mean-has been the Garden State Parkway, a c route planned to extend for 165 miles g the eastern half of the state and, except he bridge over the Passaic River, expected e completed this month.
atharine walked into politics at 21. Just f Vassar, she went with her mother to the Democratic National Convention in ston, saw Al Smith nominated, was lled" by the crowds and speeches, has covering the country in behalf of Demo-c candidates ever since. Politics and home-ing go together, she says, and "women ldn't just sit home and be critical of their rnment without being willing to partici-
"
arried to a vice-president of a manage-t-consultant firm, Arthur J. White, and her of Lawrence, 23, and Frances, 21, the or admits to "baking a mean cake." Civic es don't keep her from putting up home-e jams and jellies each year.
atharine's interest in politics may have ed when her father, the late Abram I.
s, was ambassador to Turkey under Prest Wilson. Or it may have been the mere a of politics which first intrigued her.
y in her crowded career she worked with ral little-theater groups in New York City.
nds say that the mayor of Red Bank somes has been taken for Rosalind Russell.
local Jersey cab driver puts it another
"Mayor White," he says, "has got real
."

MYRNA HARMS
City Council, Peoria, Illinois

oria, Illinois, made some political innovas in 1953. It adopted the council-manager of city government. And it elected a polly inexperienced, 34-year-old homemaker he city council. Her winning philosophy refreshingly simple:
like to call public officials 'servants,'"
she. "After all, they're expected to get gs done for people."
rst woman ever elected to Peoria's top making body, Myrna Harms got there the way. She filed as a nonpartisan candidate, openly admitting that she didn't know the chairman of either political party. Understandably, she wasn't welcomed with open arms by the tightly organized groups of reigning politicians. But in her first campaign experience, she ran ahead of the field. People apparently liked the idea of an official whose motivation was simply to get things done—for them.

Myrna has spent most of her adult life working with and for people. An English and speech major at the University of Illinois (where she earned her own tuition and living expenses), she later taught high school. When her husband George entered the Army in 1943, she promptly enlisted and became a public-relations officer in the WAVES. Currently she is caring for Patricia, 8, Deloris, 6, and George II, 4; helps her husband run his flower shop and does all her own marketing, washing, ironing, baking.

As she promised, Myrna is getting things done for Peoria. There are big things like "maintaining a balanced budget through rigid economy and maximum efficiency." There are small things, too: it was Myrna who saw to it that the brass spittoons were removed from City Hall. Behind every job, every pointed word in city-council meetings, lies a sincere desire to clear the political air of smoke and smugness, to act on the principle in which Myrna Harms so thoroughly believes—that a public official is truly a servant of the people.

MRS. FLORENCE J. BECKERS
State Representative, South Dakota

Teaching, photography and retail business all have figured in the busy career of South Dakota's State Representative Florence J. Beckers. But from the beginning there was no question about where she was going. By birth and by inclination, Florence was destined to be a politician.

Daughter, granddaughter and niece of men active in state political affairs, Florence be-

...But isn't there more insurance?

It happens all too often . . . the shocking discovery that yesterday's insurance is sadly inadequate for today's actual needs.

Today, at lower cost, there's a way to help avoid this tragedy. If you and your husband make up your mind to budget just a few dollars a week, you can guarantee protection for your family.

Write for our free new booklet called "Face the Facts." It will show:

1. How you and your husband can figure out the amount of money your family would need in case something happened to him.

2. How much money you would have to budget for a plan that will give your family protection.

We'll mail you a copy of this booklet absolutely free and without obligation. Use coupon or a postcard.

John Hancock
MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

THE JOHN HANCOCK
200 Berkeley Street, Dept. L-3
Boston 17, Massachusetts

Please mail me a free copy of your new booklet, "Face the Facts." To protect our family, we can set aside ☐ $2 a week; ☐ $4 a week; ☐ $6 a week.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone_____ State_____

came a volunteer party worker as soon as she was tall enough to reach a doorbell. In her own words "rather an ordinary person just working for good government in every way I can," she's built up an extraordinary record in Western Republican circles.

Before her formal political debut as a member of the state legislature in 1951, she taught school. And, like her political idol, Senator Margaret Chase Smith, of Maine, she served as state president of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs. Currently a member of South Dakota's Little Hoover Commission, Mrs. Beckers is especially concerned with expanded facilities for improving youth's chances for higher education.

When the legislator was running for re-election in 1952 against strong odds, she almost gave up hope of winning. Her most durable supporter, husband and partner, Mike, was recovering from a severe illness. Forced to spend nearly all her time managing their retail-drug and photographic business, Mrs. Beckers couldn't campaign as thoroughly as she once had.

One memorable night she returned to her office to find five women friends sealing and stamping personal campaign letters to voters. "All I'd asked them to do was vote for me," Mrs. Beckers says. "Don't let anybody tell you that women are petty and jealous in politics."

From long, close observation of political campaigns, Mrs. Beckers, re-elected last November to a third term, gives this simple advice: "Get your name and face before the public. Most important of all, tell people what you stand for and ask for their vote."

MRS. JOHN B. SULLIVAN
U. S. House of Representatives from Missouri

It took a special ruling by the Missouri attorney general to get Leonor Kretzer Sullivan's name on the 1952 election ballot the way she wanted it: Mrs. John B. Sullivan.

Proud of her late husband's record during three terms in the U. S. House of Representatives, the attractive St. Louis widow wanted to run for office under his name so Missouri voters would know she'd be carrying on his legislative program if elected to Congress.

When she was officially sworn in two years ago, Lee signed her oath of office as "The Hon. Mrs. John B. Sullivan."

"You can't be a Mrs. and an Honorable too," she was told.

"Well," she retorted, "that's the first time anybody ever told me it wasn't honorable to be a Mrs."

During their years together in Washington, the Sullivans were a team—so close-knit that Lee became known as "practically a second congressman" from her husband's district. A wartime volunteer at first, she gradually "sort of took over" in his office as a staff member. Democrat John B. Sullivan died suddenly in January, 1951. In a special election two months later a Republican was elected to fill the vacancy. Mrs. Sullivan decided to be a candidate in the next general election—November, 1952. "John always championed the underdog," Lee says. "He believed in good government and believed you had to fight to get it. I wanted to carry on that fight."

With a pocket-sized volunteer staff, Mrs. Sullivan set up informal campaign headquarters in the basement of her mother's St. Louis home. She wrote her own letters and publicity, made the door-to-door rounds by herself. When men muttered about "Woman's place . . . kitchen," Lee heartily agreed—she's a first-

The path to cheerfulness is to sit up cheerfully and to act and speak as if cheerfulness were already there.
—WILLIAM JAMES

rate cook. Then she'd explain that circumstances often force women to go out and earn a living.

As Missouri's first congresswoman, Lee Sullivan's ideal is to be "an individual lobby in Washington for human needs." Her concern with public housing, aid to dependent children, revision of income-tax laws and her efforts to expose the artificial shortage behind high coffee prices and get Government agencies to do something about the problem helped win her re-election last November—by 67,715 votes out of a total 95,313.

This session Lee has promised to work for Federal aid to build 300,000 new classrooms, for new highway and health programs. And, through her quarterly letter to the folks back home, she hopes to achieve her greatest goal of all—"an aroused citizenry which will insist on action to meet today's needs today."

CONSUELO NORTHROP BAILEY
Lt. Governor, Vermont

Last November a tall, dark-haired woman flopped into an easy chair in her home overlooking Lake Champlain, Vermont, for a short, well-earned rest. Since June, 1953 had visited each of her state's 246 towns cities, traveled some 20,000 miles. How di feel now? "No different," she says, " when I was a good private citizen—many ago."

Yet Mrs. Consuelo Northrop Bailey just set a new precedent in her 30-year c in Vermont state politics (in which she never lost a bid for office). Last Novem election made her the first woman lieute governor in the nation. For Mrs. Bailey, a yer and Republican National Comm woman, and wife of fellow attorney H Albon Bailey, this was the most importa many "firsts."

Elected state's attorney of Chitte County in 1925, she vigorously fought runners and became the first woman ev try a murder case in Vermont. In 193 age 31, she won a seat in the state senate- youngest woman ever to be elected to the mont legislature. Then in 1933 she becam first Vermont woman admitted to practic fore the U. S. Supreme Court.

Deciding to return to politics, she ra the general assembly in 1950, established other first three years later with her ele as speaker of that body. Last month, ta over the gavel of the state senate, she be the first woman in the country's history to presided over both chambers of a state lature—a legislature, she is proud to let know, she considers "one of the most d fied in the United States."

Although reared with a respect for trad (she is a descendant of early settlers i state, treasures a family set of china used Daniel Webster dinner in Boston 150 ago), she does not limit herself in her ne to presiding over the state senate, as has customary for one in her position. Ins she has undertaken to relieve Gov. Josep Johnson of many of the burdens that us fall to the head of state. No doubt voters be watching her activities with interest—f traditionally Republican Vermont, the p lieutenant governor is considered a step stone to the governorship. And this wom determination and strong character wh lieves hard work is the way to success may run for the top office one day. "It is fa say," she once declared, "that I mysel ways tried to qualify for a higher and important position."

Even though, in her observation, "wo have to work twice as hard as men t elected," she adds with feeling, "it's w every bit of sacrifice."

Rate yourself

on this true or false quiz about internal sanitary protection

	True	False
1. Tampax is based on the well-known principle of internal absorption.	☐	☐
2. Tampax was invented by a doctor.	☐	☐
3. Tampax can be worn by any normal woman.	☐	☐
4. Though only 1/9 the size of an external pad, Tampax is as absorbent.	☐	☐
5. User's hands need never touch the Tampax.	☐	☐
6. When properly worn, Tampax cannot be felt.	☐	☐
7. Tampax prevents odor from forming by preventing exposure to the air.	☐	☐
8. Tampax can be worn in shower or tub.	☐	☐
9. Both the applicator and the Tampax itself are easily disposed.	☐	☐
10. Regular, Super and Junior Tampax refer to differences in absorbency rather than in size.	☐	☐
11. Millions of women have used billions of Tampax.	☐	☐
12. Tampax is over 20 years old.	☐	☐
13. Tampax is sold in over 70 countries outside America.	☐	☐
14. Tampax is sold at both drug and notion counters.	☐	☐
15. A month's supply of Tampax can be carried in the purse.	☐	☐

Answer: All of the above statements are true. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

THE BEAUTIFUL WASHERWOMAN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 65

otherwise idyllic life. Of course, drawing up his budget to make his money last two years and still have carfare home at the end of it, he'd known that he certainly wouldn't have enough money to pursue any women. But, he'd thought, why worry? Like any other student of American geography, he knew that Florida was a body of land almost completely surrounded by beautiful babes with practically nothing on playing beach ball with tanned young men. He'd just get a tan and get into the game. It had come as a large surprise to find that the typical Florida beach female was a middle-aged shell fancier from Ohio with her dress tucked into her bloomers so she could wade in the surf hunting ash-tray shells for her friends back home. He had talked to many of them and they were fine, really fine. So were their husbands, children and, often, grandchildren. So he was sitting up in bed greatly interested when the women who apparently were going to live across the lane came out from behind the car.

There were three of them, in shorts, each with long and pretty legs and each carrying a sleeping child. They were led toward the cottage by the girl with the longest legs, the nicest and fullest figure, and dark hair which fell loosely around her shoulders. When this one stopped to unlock the door, the second one bent over the child in her arms and Stewart caught a glimpse of red hair. And the one in the rear, a blonde who also was no slouch in any department, turned and called to the two men who were unhitching the trailer, "Baby stuff first, remember!"

"O.K.!" they both said. These men were fair and thin, one a couple of inches taller than the other. And there were only two of them.

"I'll come back out for it," called the dark girl in the lead as she got the door unlocked and they filed out of sight.

Three girls. Three kids. Two men. A conundrum. Stewart looked carefully around and about. There was certainly no third man. Of course it was possible that one of the girls was married to someone in the services, someone who would come later, anything. But it was also possible that one was not married at all. Exclamation mark.

Stewart did have a better nature. It said, Pull down the blind and go back to sleep.

No. But this is eavesdropping, or something.

Maybe after all is quiet one of those girls will come out into the moonlight and stretch her arms to the sky and whisper softly, "Ye gods, I wish some man would show me the path to the beach."

You are indulging in fantasy.

It's the only way I meet any women these days. I hope it's the dark one.

(Sigh) Me too.

The men had got the trailer unhitched and were pushing it around to the side of the cottage, out of sight. Inside, lights were going on, windows were being raised, children were ing, airy female voices were calling back forth. Then the dark girl appeared agai the men returned and unlocked the se trunk. They all talked in low voices as be two or three in the morning, or whene was.

"Ammunition," the girl said.

"Ammunition," said the tall man, b ning to load her outstretched arms. "B warmer," he said. "Formula."

"Blankets," she said.

The shorter one pulled out blankets loaded them on. Next he hung a full lau bag around her neck by the cord. The balanced a toaster on top of all. Then turned her so she was pointed at the do

"Mush!" they cried, and slapped the se her shorts, and poor Stewart almost fell o bed.

"Hey!" she said, wincing, turning, tryi look mad.

The men looked at her blandly. "T only brotherly encouragement."

"Not even my brothers can do that!"

"Oh, no?" they said, and started fo again.

She tried to run. They didn't chase he they must be her brothers! Stewart g down a sensation of very strong happi She staggered the rest of the way throug sand to the steps. Loading each other

CONTINUED ON PAGE 152

I'm so mad I could cry!

Did you know that a cotton dress can shrink two whole sizes after a few washings?

Don't run this risk! Always be sure you see "Sanforized" on your cotton with your own two eyes. Make even your favorite salesgirl show you the "Sanforized" label before you buy.

A "Sanforized" cottor can never, never shrink out of fit . . . out of style. See that you get it!

Sanforized

SAVES THE STYLE...

PROTECTS YOU AGAINST SHRINKAGE!

CLUETT, PEABODY & CO., INC.

PERMITS USE OF ITS

TRADE-MARK "SANFORIZED"

ADOPTED IN 19

ONLY ON FABRICS W

MEET THIS COMPANY'S R

SHRINKAGE REQUIREMENTS.

FABRICS BEARIN THE

TRADE-MARK "SANFORIZED"

WILL NOT SHRINK MORE

THAN 1% BY THE GOVERNMENT'S STANDARD TEST.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 150

the men watched her and laughed and when she finally had made it up the steps she turned and smiled a lovely smile back at them and then was gone. Stewart came to. He pulled down the blind and sat there alone and felt homesick. His father had died in the war and his mother was married again, living in Seattle, and since high school Stewart had lived four years in the Navy and four years in the Buffalo Y.M.C.A. and really had no home but this, but he felt homesick all the same.

The first thing he thought the next morning, when he was wakened by an unfamiliar metallic screech, was that of course even if they were her brothers, maybe she had a husband coming along later. None of the girls, for that matter, had looked old enough to have two kids, which arithmetically seemed necessary if she had none. He got out of bed. Through the undraped windows at the front of his apartment he saw the scene that usually warmed him every morning. The sun was rosily low over the ocean, little birds hunting coquina were running like toys before every wave on the wide flat beach, gulls were conducting morning choir practice. It all scarcely registered today.

The metallic screech sounded again. He ran up the blind overlooking the lane. The truck was gone. So was the sedan. On the side steps of the cottage the three kids were sitting in a row in the new sun like sleep-stunned sparrows, two little girls about one or so and a boy slightly older. On the porch behind them the dark girl was hanging out laundry. She was in shorts again, but wore a long-sleeved plaid shirt as a concession to the morning chill. When she pulled the clothesline the screech sounded again. The pulley. Idea. Go over. Find out all.

He reached for his shorts and sneakers, pulled on a warm early-morning shirt of his own, washed, combed his hair, and made tracks through the long narrow room which, with stove, refrigerator, sink, bed, easy cha and tiny corner cubicle of a bathroom, was apartment. On the way out he picked up oilcan he used on his fishing gear. A ramp down the side of the garage from his fr door. Four pairs of solemn eyes watched H as he crossed the lane and through the sa until he stood at the foot of the steps.

The girl was almost out of sight behin sheet she was fastening to the line. Below sheet he could see bare feet and nice ank Above it very large brown eyes were look steadily into his. He'd been merely vitally terested in her before. Now powerful wa plunged up and down through him like m elevators. The sun and the sky and the bro eyes and slim bare feet and the three kids began to shimmer like an underwater spec effect. What he intended to say was to ask she'd like him to oil the pulley. It should ha been an easy enough question, but the tr was that while earlier he had almost talk himself into believing that she was the sp woman, a sister-in-law brought along for ride, now it struck him that everyone else w gone and she was minding the kids. So wh he opened his mouth to ask her if he could the pulley what actually came out was a de croak, "These kids yours?"

The eyes above the sheet warmed. thought maybe she was smiling, but couldn't see. "I'm their aunt."

"Are you all of their aunts?" he ask "I mean, are all of them your aunts?"

The boy, who was perhaps three, sa "She's all of our Aunt Shelley."

"Oh," Stewart said, wishing he could view the bidding.

Fortunately, at this point the girl to charge. She ran the line out a little and agai her armful of laundry he could see her th finger, left hand. There was neither glit there, nor gold. And close up she was ev prettier, a knockout, white teeth and a sort olive tan to go with all that he had observ from afar. Definitely the most beauti washerwoman he'd ever seen. "I'm here w my brothers and their wives," she sa "They're all out right now. These are th kids." She looked at him rather keenly. " that what you came for, taking a local censu or something?"

"Oh!" Stewart said, remembering the c can. He brandished it. "That pulley," he sa "I'll oil it for you, if you want." He picked l way around the kids on the step and then was on this concrete space about three fe square with her and she was looking at hi and he couldn't swallow very well. He had reach around her to oil the pulley. Thus, wh he turned his head ever so slightly he look straight into her eyes. They were on his and had an overpowering impulse to kiss her. Ma ness! But was it? Her lips were parting a litt She was going to speak! What would she sa Did she love him, too, already?

"Hey!" she said. "Those diapers don't ne oiling!"

"Oh," he said. "Sorry." He adjusted h aim.

"Nor my toes," she said a minute late looking down at her toes.

"I'm a dope," he said, and also looked dow at her toes. They had oil on them. But wh he looked into her eyes again, he saw som thing there. She had perceived. She kne what was making him oil toes and diaper Like any woman who suddenly recognizes th devastating effect of her charms on a man, sh looked soft, and he was saying huskily, "Th is a terrible way to start," when the blue seda drove up and the kids on the step yelped chorus of "Mummy! Mummy!" and th blonde and the redhead got out. Stewa pulled back, reaching hard for his aplomb, bu they seemed to notice nothing remarkable in strange man oiling their sister-in-law. The hurried for the door, their kids chasing them "Got a job, Shelley!" the redhead calle "Start work at eleven! Come on in and hea about it!"

She smiled at him, but the spell was gone "Thanks," she said. "Good-by. Must go."

"I'll see you later maybe," Stewart said t the screen door as it slammed behind her.

Slowly he walked back across the lane, th sun hotting up the world very nicely now

AMERICANS EVERYWHERE NO LONGER SUFFER when Acid Indigestion Strikes

Last Year nearly TWO BILLION TUMS... Instant on-the-spot Relief ...sent Distressed People Happily on Their Way

The American tummy—is now relieved of the pain of heartburn and the discomfort of acid indigestion ...by a little roll of TUMS that costs only 10¢.

For millions of Americans the simple secret of carrying TUMS as faithfully as they carry their keys—has meant the end of discomfort from this common stomach trouble.

At the first sign of sour stomach—like millions of sensible Americans, just pop tasty TUMS in your mouth like candy mints. Instantly, excess acid is neutralized without acid rebound. Heartburn, acid indigestion fade away. TUMS are only 10¢ a roll and you could not buy a safer, quicker, more wonderful relief even for a ten dollar bill.

TUMS for the Tummy

ell, I'll be —— Well, I'll be —— he said to nself several times. While he fried some mpano and made toast and coffee a vast ssful vista stretched in front of him, days lking on the beach with her (and the three ds), nights in her arms in the moonlight. He t up and read the license plates on the sedan. aryland. He hoped her brothers would be ictable. The three girls and three kids seemed be flying around. No place there right now r a drone, obviously. Maybe go for a walk, ve her a chance to get her work done so they uld talk again.

He walked. He made himself walk his usual orning two miles south to a half-wrecked astal observation tower left over from the ar. Usually it was a leisurely walk. This time whizzed past his usual playmates, merely aved to the graceful old lady who had nced with the Imperial Russian Ballet be- re the revolution, and to the ex-professor of athematics who spent his days making sun- als in circles drawn on the sand, and to the d ex-banker surf fisherman who was burying s usual lunch, six cans of beer, to keep cold. In practically no time he was back his rocker in the sun watching life swirl ound the white cottage.

And it really swirled. That first washing was ken in, another hung out. The sisters-in-law, essed in waitress smocks, took off in the dan again. The brothers came home yelling r food, fast, and Shelley apparently had it ady, for they ate and were gone in half an our. She came out to shake mops, take sand- urs from small feet, brush sand from weep- g eyes; disappeared to rattle dishes, take the ids in for naps. Stewart watched like a man ying to find a place to board a speeding erry-go-round, found none. Once in a while e berated himself. Acting like a fool. School- oy. Nut. Unworthy of a mature man. It was ke scolding a dynamo for producing too uch electricity. He had really been lone- ome. He knew it now.

At six when the brothers came home he rced himself to leave the chair, go up to eat. Not hungry. Ate a sandwich anyway. Usually t this time of night he had a beer. His budget r entertainment, nine dollars a month, llowed him two cans of chain-store beer a day s long as a month had only thirty days. This noment usually was treasured. He took a can rom the refrigerator, looked at it, put it back. his was serious.

At eight-thirty he made up his mind. He was ure the kids were in bed. He hadn't heard a ry for half an hour. As he got up he felt as he ad the first time he'd been out for gunnery ractice in the Navy. Dry mouth. Knot in tomach. But he walked down the ramp and across the lane to the back door. Through the screen he could see past the darkened kitchen to a lighted room beyond where shadows moved and voices were raised in argument or lowered in love. He knocked and then realized he hadn't figured out a line of talk. He saw Shelley coming, against the light, and he was thinking very hard. She switched on the porch light.

"Why," she said, and he thought she looked rather glad, "it's the oil man!"

"This time it's fish," he said.

"Fish?"

"I wondered if you'd like some. I often catch too many."

"We'd love some! What kind?"

"Well," Stewart said, "I mean, the next time I have some, like tomorrow if I go fishing, I could bring some over here, I mean."

A long glance traveled between them. "Come on in," she said.

He followed her through the kitchen. That, in itself, was quite an experience. Her whole person, from her slightly toed-in bare feet up past the beautiful backs of her knees and beyond, gave a single powerful impression of the sort that sinks fleets, changes history, makes or breaks hermits and budgets. It was rather a ratty little living room, full of rocking chairs cast off from better homes, scarred tables, worn sofas. But all the lights were on, both in the room and in the eyes of the people who looked up as he entered. The red-haired girl, now in jeans and a shirt, was stretched on a couch with her head in the lap of the shorter of the two men and she somehow looked as if she had just been kissed. The blonde had been darning a sock and was looking over the shoulder of the taller man, who was playing solitaire, and at the instant Stewart came in she pointed at a black queen and the man caught her hand and held it there on his shoulder.

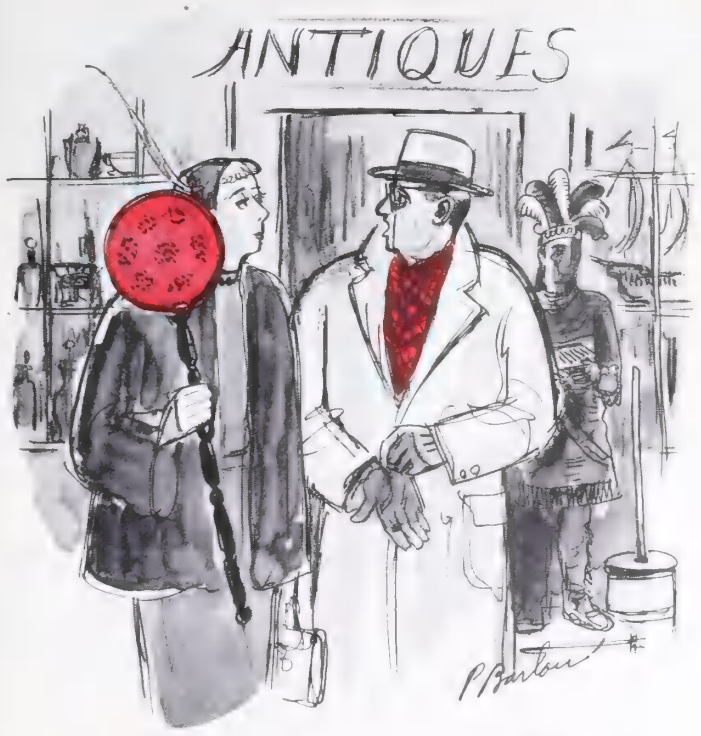
Shelley seemed to be blushing a little. It became her. "This is our neighbor across the lane," she said.

"Tell me," said the man on the couch, turning a very amused eye on Stewart and then Shelley, "what is his line?"

She laughed, and so did the others, hers embarrassed and theirs the same kind of warm laughter that had come when she'd been loaded like a burro, staggering in the sand, last night. "He came to see if we would like some of his extra fish, except he hasn't caught them yet."

Everybody laughed harder, looking at Stewart. The man playing solitaire got up and held out his hand. He had good teeth and blue eyes. "I'm Paige," he said. "That's a new one. You've got real talent. Most of the guys who chase Shelley pretend they've got a house they want us to paint, or something. We got a lot of business that way, though."

Shelley wouldn't meet Stewart's eyes as she introduced the others. The short one on the couch was Charlie; the girl with the red hair overflowing into his lap was his wife, Maxine. The blonde was Paige's wife, Roberta. The surname for all was Taylor.



"Time for a beer?" Charlie asked.

"Time," said Paige.

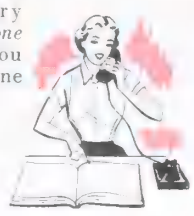
"Beer?" Charlie asked Stewart.

"Love one," Stewart said.

Charlie went to the kitchen and Stewart underwent some very direct questioning. None of it was from Shelley, but somehow he felt he was talking to her. He was into an explanation of his budget when Charlie got back with four cans of beer, two bottles of root beer, and his pockets full of jelly glasses. Shelley and Roberta had the root beer. The talk became easy. They were from Baltimore. Paige and Charlie had worked for other painters until they got enough money together for the truck and then the car, and then had hit the road. Shelley was twenty, had finished high school three years ago, had been a stenographer when she quit to come with her brothers. Now she did their books. This was the one month out of three when she stayed home and did the housework while Maxine and Roberta worked. On

"Now that you've bought it see that you use it."

I THOUGHT THIS TIE WAS RUINED...STARTED TO THROW IT AWAY



...Now, thanks to SANITONE DRY CLEANING it looks brand new

From February 1 to March 1, your Sanitone Dry Cleaner will be making a very special offer on neckties. That's his way of inviting you to see for yourself how much better Sanitone Dry Cleaning is in every way—how it gets out ALL the dirt, even stubborn spots—makes colors, patterns and textures look radiantly new again. Naturally, what he can do for ties, he can do for any garment. So try him on ties and see for yourself. Watch for his announcement—better still, give him a ring—right now!

How to find your nearest SANITONE Dry Cleaner

Look in the classified pages of your telephone directory under Cleaners for "Sanitone Approved Service." There you will find listed the Sanitone Dry Cleaner in your town.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Sanitone

DRY CLEANING SERVICE

A Division of Emery Industries, Inc. ▪ Carew Tower, Cincinnati 2, Ohio

the other months she worked and one of the others stayed home. They had followed this system since leaving Baltimore last summer to let the winter chase them south, down through Virginia and the Carolinas and over into Alabama and now to Florida. "Journeymen painters," Charlie said, grinning. "Free estimates. All work guaranteed."

It was a good evening, until right at the end when Stewart, feeling very warmed with the beers and the prospects, hoping Shelley would come to the door with him but not really too desperate because he felt there would be many tomorrows, rose to go and said, "It's sure going to be nice to have neighbors."

"Well, you won't have us for long," Charlie said.

Stewart felt a cold breeze on his warm hopes. "Why?"

"This place is rented from the first of the month to someone else. It's owned by a guy we're painting three new houses for down at the other end of the beach. Part of the deal is that we get this place rent-free for the week while we do his work."

Stewart's glance traveled to Shelley. She didn't look happy at all. "But then you'll get another place around here somewhere, won't you?"

The brothers looked at each other. Charlie shrugged and Maxine came close to him and he put his arm around her waist. "Sometime we're going to stop in one place," he said. "That'll be when we've got a lot of money or a long job, or when we find a place we just don't want to leave. Then these dames are going to quit working and we're going to buy them houses and stoves and automatic washers and twenty-two pairs of shoes each and pay them back for being gypsies with us now. Meantime we go where the jobs are. We've just got the one, here."

"Oh," Stewart said. He couldn't bear to look at Shelley.

"There's a guy up in Mobile, we worked for him on the way down, he said if he could swing the finances he was going to put up another forty-house development and would keep in touch with us. We drop him a card wherever we go. If he gets going, we might go back."

"Oh," Stewart said.

HE knew in his more lucid moments in the next few days that he should be glad they weren't staying long—that is, if he still wanted to be a beach-going loafer for two years. Shelley liked him. He liked her. Maybe it was even love, already, both ways. They walked the beach while the kids played in the tag ends of the waves. They sat on palm drift logs. They sat on her back steps. She had long eyelashes which drooped at the corners. She had a quick radiant smile. When he was with her his bones wilted like warm celery.

On the fourth day he put on a suit for the first time in five months and went downtown in Coral Sands, into an insurance office, and spoke warily of a job. The man looked very bored. "Listen," he said, "I'm from Chicago, see? My partner's from Minneapolis. One of our salesmen is from Bangor, Maine. Another's from Auburn, New York. This whole state is full of people looking for jobs so they can stay here. Only way to come here to work is come with money, buy a business, and run it."

Stewart conjured up his bank balance. "What could I get for thirty-five hundred bucks?"

The man thought. "Maybe an orange-juice stand, but not in a very good location."

No answer there. The only answer anywhere was that if this went on and she said yes when he asked the question, within two weeks he would be back in Buffalo waiting in the anteroom of Dean, Lanigan, Wilson, Grundy and Hoskin-Hay, insurance brokers, to ask for his job back. The next day he would be slogging through the slush again selling insurance.

He was sleeping the next morning when there was a tap at his door. He opened his eyes and through the glass doors leading to his front balcony he could see Shelley looking anxiously at him. Was she crying? He sat up quickly. The sun was a red rim on the sea behind her. She turned her back so that he could get out of bed and into his bathrobe, which he

NEW! IMPROVED 2 WAYS to work FASTER
BETTER for you!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Sani-Flush

NEW! easy-to-open top
Top flips right off under your thumb! Snaps back on! Spill proof, too.

NEW! improved formula
America's favorite toilet bowl cleaner now works faster than ever. Makes stubborn stains disappear like magic. Disinfects as it cleans! Just follow directions on familiar yellow can. Safe with septic systems.

Sani-Flush
THE HYGIENIC PRODUCTS COMPANY, CANTON 2, OHIO

Complete protection for sinks and dishes... it's all Rubbermaid

It happens every day: A pan slips and scratches your costly sink bowl. Or you're in a hurry and chip a good glass. What you need is cushiony Rubbermaid to hush clatter . . . reduce breakage . . . add a gay note of color.

Extra-wide Drainboard Trays completely protect counter tops. A Sink Liner Mat turns one sink into a rubber-cushioned dishpan . . . Twin Sink Dish Drainer fits into the other sink bowl, air-dries dishes in cushioned safety . . . and the Sink Divider Mat saves many a cup handle and glass rim. What's more, only Rubbermaid can take grease, harsh soaps and heat without cracking, warping or discoloring.

You get all this protection by Rubbermaid for as little as $9.54 wherever housewares are sold. For free folder showing all Rubbermaid products, write to The Wooster Rubber Company, Dept. L-15, Wooster, Ohio.

Prices slightly higher in Canada.

Rubbermaid HOUSEWARE

Over 60 Fine Products . . . in Your Choice of Fresh Colors

Rubbermaid Sink Strainer is all-rubber, won't mar sink bowl or step-on can. $1.29.

Rubbermaid Appliance Mat provides extra work space, protects appliance surface . . . resists sliding. $2.98.

Rubbermaid Stove Mat keeps range work surface new-looking longer. Oven heat or hot pans can't damage. $2.35.

New! IN FULL COLOR WINDOW DECORATING BOOK

"Window Inspirations" has 32 big, full-color pages; more than 60 window treatments; how to make curtains, draperies, etc.

50¢

Help yourself to fresh, new home beauty. Sensational "slide-rule" color guide included. Act now!

KIRSCH Company
10 Prospect Street, Sturgis, Michigan

IF YOU GET THIS $10.98 DRESS WITHOUT PAYING 1c

Will You Wear and Show It in Your Community?

No advertising sells our dresses half as well as they sell themselves. So, we want women all over America to see our dresses —not on models, but on average women of all ages, shapes, and sizes. Will you wear and show our pretty frocks to friends and neighbors? Through our excitingly different Introductory Plan you can earn your own dresses — a complete beautiful wardrobe — without spending 1c of your money. 150 glorious styles to choose from. Get full details FREE. Absolutely no cost — no obligation. Just send name, address, age and dress size on postcard. Hurry — big response expected. FASHION FROCKS, INC., Dept. S-2056, Cincinnati 25, Ohio.

Now Many Wear
FALSE TEETH
With More Comfort

FASTEETH, a pleasant alkaline (non-acid) powder, holds false teeth more firmly. To eat and talk in more comfort, just sprinkle a little FASTEETH on your plates. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

le hurried to the door. He couldn't tell the crying. Maybe her eyes were always ig in the morning. He didn't know. He d he did. The thought was very weakenharlie had a call from that man in Mobile ght, when we were down on the beach," id, all in a rush. "You know, the man he big job there?"

wart knew. He felt terrible.

e wants them right away," she said. "He hey can be the painting contractors on b if they get right up there. That'd be big. . . . They told him they had three work to finish here and he said he was he couldn't wait that long. He's been to locate them and was just going to p when he got our last card. Now if they e up there by tomorrow night the job is . That means doing three days' work . They've gone already. . . . I told them me over and see you about it."

wart was sad, shaken and confused. This ght all his own problems right to a head. ut what?"

ou told me about what a hot painter you in the Navy. . . . They haven't got time to t and hire somebody. Might waste half a ooking. Will you?"

hat was only the side of a ship," he said. his is only the side of a house." But she peaking like an unconvinced lawyer. She 't want to go! She doesn't want to leave

"There's only the one house left," she "They'll do the inside. That's the compli-cated part. They'll work until they finish it, probably tonight sometime, but then they'd still not have the outside done."

"This is great," he said sadly. "If I work, you'll go away. If I don't, maybe you won't."

A very small voice. "Yes."

"What do I do, then?"

She either was trying not to cry, or shooting for a new world's record for fast blinking. "Help," she said. "They want it an awful lot. This might be the job that would be so good that they'd want to settle down. They all want that, really."

"All right," he said. He took her hands. "But what about us?"

Her face was turned away from his but suddenly she came to him, quickly and wholly, clinging. They kissed. It was their first kiss. Then she ran. He started after her in his bathrobe, remembered, threw it off, pulled two socks onto the same foot, recovered again, put the kettle on the stove without water in it, discovered that when he tried to make coffee, too late, and when the sedan's horn honked in the lane he grabbed four doughnuts and ran.

Shelley wasn't outside. Maxine was at the wheel. She shoved him a brown paper bag and looked at him oddly. "Shelley made you a lunch," she said. "She was crying. What happened?"

"I kissed her, I think," Stewart said. "Or she kissed me. Or something." He felt very odd, inside and out.

The development was fifteen blocks away. Bulldozers had cleared a flat space in the

STUART

Bathroom Space makers

By ELIZABETH GOETSCH

A young couple in a small house handily make an average-sized bathroom house towels, linens, medicines, cleaning powders and even a clothes hamper. Neat ideas:

- A plywood storage cabinet, built around basin, is topped with hard plastic. Left section holds bath and cleaning supplies. Middle section has a drawer with sliding top smaller children use as a step. Right section, cut out for ventilation, conceals tip-out clothes hamper.
- A tall plywood cupboard takes minimum floor inches while its shelves hold the family's full stock of towels. Locked section of cupboard stores medicines. Individual towel rings brighten up door.
- Sky-blue coated wall fabric, candy-striped sailcloth curtains and new vinyl-tile floor spruce up scheme, are easily kept clean.

The "Secret" of Lovelier

BROADLOOM RUGS

and Wall-to-Wall Carpets

at Savings up to ½

"IF you will send me Your Old Rugs, Carpets, Clothing at my expense, I GUARANTEE to send you the Finest, Longest-Wearing Rugs or Carpeting you ever had for So Little Money . . ."
—Walter E. Olson, President

IT'S EASY . . LIKE MAGIC! WRITE TODAY for the beautiful, FREE Olson Rug and Decorating Booklet in full colors (and 81st Anniversary Gift Offer) that tells how . . .

The Valuable Wools and materials in discarded carpets, rugs, clothing, etc., are reclaimed like new, sterilized, shredded, pickered, bleached, merged, BLENDED WITH CHOICE NEW WOOLS, and woven in 3 days into thick, deep-textured . . .

New Two-Sided Broadloom with the thrilling twist-weave beauty of heavy, luxury-priced wool rugs—at ½ the cost. (example: a 9 x 12 ft. Olson Rug weighs 46 lbs., not 32 or 35 lbs.)

OLSON FACTORY TO YOU!

Choice of 44 Colors, Patterns, regardless of the colors in your material. Any Size—up to 18 feet wide, seamless and any length:

Solid Colors	Embossed Effects	Florals
Tweed Blends	Early American	Lovely
Two-tone	Oriental Designs	Ovals

No-Risk Trial Offer. Monthly Payments if you wish. We guarantee to please or pay for your materials. Over 3 million customers. We do not have agents or sell thru stores.

Chicago New York San Francisco

Mail Coupon or Postcard today

See the lovely, new → Broadloom colors, patterns, texture effects in actual colors. 46 Model Rooms.

FREE America's Greatest Money-Saving Rug and Carpet Style Booklet in Colors—and GIFT Offer!

OLSON RUG CO., R-19, Chicago 41, Ill.

Mail beautiful color Booklet and Gift Offer, Free, to:-

Name .....

Address ..... ©ORC

Town ..... State .....

jungle and the three houses were pleasantly spaced in the hot white sand, two painted in the soft pastels that went so well with all this sunshine. At the end of the row was the truck. Up on a scaffold in the sun Charlie and Paige were working as if someone had a gun at their heads.

Charlie yelled, "What's up, doll?"

"Stewart here has come to help you," Maxine called back.

Stewart got out of the car. The sand was soft beneath his feet and even these soft old jeans felt heavy on his body after five months of shorts. But he felt excited as he walked over to the side of the house. Maxine called that she had to get back and help. She drove off. Stewart stood at the bottom of the scaffold and looked up at the two thin faces grinning down at him.

"I didn't think you'd do it, Stewey boy," Charlie said. "I don't think I would have."

"Me neither," said Paige. "Imagine a guy who could loaf all day, working!"

"That Shelley," Charlie said. "Dynamite. Let's get him up here before the spell wears off."

They each reached down a hand and he took hold and up he went. Charlie handed him a brush and said, "Let's see how they do it in the Navy."

Stewart dipped, stroked; dipped, stroked again. Charlie told him to end each stroke in the area already painted, and demonstrated the even effect thus achieved. Paige cautioned him against scrubbing the paint too thin, watched for another minute, then jumped down from the scaffold. A minute later he appeared inside, lugging more paint and brushes. Stewart could see him through a window. Charlie stayed a minute longer, then he got down too. "You're O.K., Stewey boy," he said. "In more ways than one. If you run out of paint, holler. Probably won't before noon, though. I'll get you some then."

Stewart did run out of paint before lunch. Paige came out with more and told him to knock off and eat any time he wanted.

"How about you?" Stewart asked.

"We'll eat as we go along."

So Stewart ate on his scaffold—chicken sandwiches, a small cherry pie, a pint of milk. Good.

By one o'clock the back of his neck was on fire, the sun burning even through his deep tan, and his right arm weighed four tons. He painted with his left. By three it weighed six tons. Once in a while he caught a glimpse of Paige and Charlie inside, each with a ball of putty in his left hand, smoothing flaws with their thumbs before they painted. It had a look of good workmanship and Stewart thought that only men who had something to drive them, beautiful wives and nice kids and a big charge to make something of themselves, could work like that. He lifted his tired arms again and went back at it. They stood for everything he did not. He'd finish this outside before dark if it killed him. It would kill him, in fact. But he'd have lots of time for a resurrection. All the time in the world.

He didn't finish by dark. It didn't kill him either. Just almost. Charlie and Paige had one room to go inside when the sun went down and they turned the lights on. Maxine came with more food. They turned the truck lights on the front of the house, Stewart's last side. Once he fell off the scaffold. Hardly felt it. At the end it was like a dream.

It was ten when they got home. Charlie jumped out of one side of the truck and Paige out of the other and Stewart just sat there in the middle. He couldn't move. Charlie went to the sedan and called, "I'll go and get our pay, Paige. You get those dames ready!" Stewart still sat there. Shelley came running out of the house and didn't see him and called, "Where's Stewart?" And Paige said, "In the truck."

She came to the door of the truck.

"Hi," he said.

"Tired?"

"A little."

"Wait there," she said. He did manage to get up enough strength to watch her walk away. It was like watching someone walk out of his life. The screen door slammed when he still was thinking that, and she came back with a cold can of beer and handed it in to him.

"How did you know?" he asked.

"I didn't," she said. "I just thought maybe."

He took a long draught and remembered a saying he had heard once of a man describing part of the perfect life, something about a glass of bitter ale when day's work is done. He had forgotten how it felt. She stayed there while he drank the beer and when he was finished she said, "We're all ready."

"You're not going tonight!"

"Just do a hundred miles or so. That'll mean we can do the rest tomorrow."

They looked into each other's eyes.

"We'll go in about an hour," she said.

He put the beer can on the floor of the truck, moved, and groaned. She held the door open for him and their eyes met again as he stepped stiffly to the road. He put his hands in his pockets. That way, he had some support for his arms.

"I'll walk home with you," she said. As they crossed the lane Charlie came back in the car. He got out and waved what looked like a check. Stewart walked up the ramp. Shelley came with him, right to the door. It was dark now, and the moon was out in the clear sky. They stood alone in the moonlight and the surf hissed and crashed, a girl in shorts and a tired man in jeans, and their eyes were about a foot apart and looking into each other and, often happens with human beings, what th had planned had no real bearing on what th did. They kissed. They kissed again. Th kissed again and again and again and aga long kisses that never wanted to end, and i minute Stewart said, "I love you."

Shelley said, "I love you too."

Then there was a silence. At the end of Stewart put his hands back in his pockets, r for his arms again. He walked back down t ramp with her. They walked across the la and up the steps and into the middle of barr and cases and suitcases and Charlie a Maxine and Roberta and Paige, all with glas raised to each other, laughing, as if in a toa They stopped and looked at Stewart a Shelley in the doorway, but none seem really to be concentrating.

"Well," Charlie said.

"Well," Stewart said. "What's up?"

"Nothing that hasn't happened before Paige said.

A queer reply, but Stewart had too much his mind to stop and figure it out. He had ma his plans all in one second, in the middle o kiss, and like any plans made in the middle a kiss his were not the best formulated plans the world. But they did have the virtue needing only one other vote to make the plans that nothing in the world could chan

"Shelley and I want to be married," he sa

He then remembered that he hadn't ask her yet. He looked at her and they conduct a conversation with their eyes which almo made Stewart forget what he had been sayi out loud.

"And stay here?" Paige asked. "Or live Buffalo?"

"If you'll let me," Stewart said, "I want buy a piece of the business. I'll paint the ou sides and you paint the insides, and meanwh you can teach me how to paint the insid and then I'll be able to paint the insides, to and ——"

He looked at Paige. Paige nodded. Char nodded. They shook his hands. Roberta a Maxine kissed him, really joyously. Shell made a sort of instinctive move that broug her close up against him and his problems giving notice for his apartment, getting h money out of the bank, many other things, departed. He'd do it all by mail.

Charlie looked at his watch. "Take-off fifteen minutes."

Abruptly the place was a beehive aga Shelley pushed at Stewart to make him mo "Go and pack!" she said, and then sort melted against him again. "I don't want you be left behind."

"We'll get a ring when we stop for lun tomorrow," he said.

"Go and pack."

"We'll get married as soon as we can get license," he said.

"Go and pack."

He tried to kiss her. A line of children wi eyes full of sleep and legs wobbly march blindly between them and out the back doo He tried again. Maxine gently shoved the aside so she could get out with a bag.

"I guess I'd better go and pack," Stewa said.

As a special concession, they were allow to go in the truck with Charlie, who drov They followed the bobbing red light on t boat trailer through the northern outskirts Coral Sands.

Stewart and Shelley were very quiet over their corner of the seat. Her thick dark ha was against his cheek. He kissed her and wh he opened his eyes after the kiss he sa Charlie glance at them and grin and thought of something. "Hey, Charlie," said, "what were you all drinking a toast fo when Shelley and I came in?"

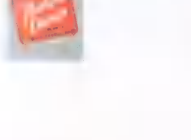
"Maxine is going to have a baby," Charl said. "So is Roberta. That'll make three for and two for Paige." He grinned at them in th light from the dash. "Leaves a vacancy in th one-kid class too."

Stewart couldn't look at Shelley for a mi ute. He gazed out along the northboun reaches of U. S. 1. He could see a long wa ahead. The scene was wonderfully rea "Someday," he said, "this outfit is going need a twenty-four-passenger bus." EN

TEXTURED AND COLORFUL

PLASTIC AND MODERN

Panama pattern shown on wrought iron lounge furniture by Southern Seating Co. High Point, N. C.



PRACTICAL ON ALL TYPES OF FURNITURE

FABRIC BACK

Masland Duran®

PLASTIC UPHOLSTERY

Think of the loveliest texture you ever saw! Add to this the advantage of easy cleaning and long wear. That's textured Masland Duran—a superbly different combination of the practical and the beautiful. Many luxurious colors and patterns. Ask for textured Masland Duran on the furniture you buy. Write for free folder with sample. The Masland Duraleather Co. Dept. L-2, Philadelphia 34, Pennsylvania.

ONLY MASLAND MAKES DURAN. THIS TAG IS YOUR PROTECTION

THE YOUNG TOUCH FOR GRAY HAIR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 126

pends on color, rather than flattering spark a look of youth. We believe there auty rule that applies to every graying Vear your hair short, shaped and softly. By wearing the hair which is closest to in a gentle upswept direction, and by lift to the hair near the temples and at nead, you will be adding beauty while ultaneously subtract years! Whether -all hairdo is brushed back or forward, or waved, semibanged or serene- depends, of course, on which direc- es the most to flatter your face and ze the slim roundness of your neck ulders.

outhful arrangements, such as flowing ys, bouncing pony tails or shoulder- uff, can do as much to age the gray- oman as can the overly severe, giving- rowing-old knots.

Polishing. ir can sparkle hlights or ap- and drab, de- upon the at- receives from your hair is dry, or if you druff, preface gular sham- h a warm-oil m treatment half hour in Gently mas- oil or cream scalp, then preparation gly through from roots to Nw wrap your a Turkish tat has been ut n very ater and let en and steam together toward of healthy ghs. (The towel always be good wan while on ea. If you leave fc more than or o minutes, ill ae to rewet n wm water.) low his treat- by ampooing air til it shines ques, taking tage of one of nan excellent oospecifically lateo combat s, if at is your m. her types mpo are equally effective in helping r uccessive oiliness. Nowadays the or ite-haired woman can, if she , pamper herself with a shampoo in- exclively for her. This creamy lotion oo wes toward the goal of bringing er highlights.

her "special" is the home permanent d with the gray- or white-haired woman . Properties which might tend to yellow wise discolor light hair have been elim- If directions are followed exactly, there reason or the home permanenter to oftly prey long-lasting curls.

led Beauty. If your sprinkling of gray es not enchant you, if more pepper would suit your taste, then you might xperiment with one of the temporary ses. These preparations come in cap- n to be diluted with clear water and final rinse. The/ blend in, rather than ompletely, the gray hairs. When ap- perly, your original hair shade will ate over the gray which is still there, derably less noticeable. One obvious e of a temporary color rinse is that it washes out with each successive shampoo, leaving you always in confident control of the color of your hair. These rinses come in a wide range of colors to accommodate any woman—from palest blonde to deepest brunette. Printed directions for selecting "your" shade, as well as complete instructions on how to apply, are enclosed with each package of capsules. Since directions may differ according to the individual manufacturer, it is important to read and follow exactly the instructions given with the product of your choice.

Temporary color rinses also come in a range of shades (from steel gray to palest blue or violet) which add dash and up-to-dateness to the all-gray- or all-white-haired woman. When applied properly they camouflage yellow-tinged hair and create a delicately pale halo to soften your face.

Cues to Make-up and Clothes Colors. Unless the gray or white hair is predominant, the selection of make-up and clothes color should, as usual, be guided by what they do for your skin tones. Bobbie Lawrence with her naturally gold skin (she works on her "tan" by sunning herself from May through October!) rightly selects from the corally, or clear red, family. For evening, the faintest touch of blue-green eyeshadow, along with a modest amount of black mascara for her eyelashes, emphasizes the clear blue of her eyes. Olive-skinned beauties who follow her color lead will like the results.

When hair is predominantly gray or white, a bisque beige powder and/or foundation that has the slightest pink or rosy cast will provide a softly pretty contrast. Lipsticks in red faintly touched with blue are generally the most flattering. If your eyelashes and brows have faded, bring them back to life with make-up. Brown eyebrow pencil, lightly sketched in short strokes on the brows, will add character as well as color. Enrich eyelashes with a black or deep brown mascara or, if you are a master hand at applying make-up delicately, try a pale shade of blue or green! Add a touch of eye shadow in the same tone.

YOUR gray hair can bring its own air of distinction and beauty to many colors. Most shades of blue (especially if you are blue- or green-eyed), purples from deep violet to palest mauve, gray greens, clear soft pinks in accessories can seem meant for you. Unless you are, like Bobbie, prematurely gray or have exceptionally clear skin tones, avoid vivid reds (except perhaps in small accessories), beige, dull shades of gray, unrelieved black and white. Steer clear of harsh greens (the yellow-toned or Kellys), fuchsias, rusty browns. A thoughtful choice of color in clothes and make-up can bring you an enviable look of delicacy combined with dash!

If, far from feeling grudgingly resigned to your graying hair, you feel perfectly happy about that first frosty sparkle, you are a lucky woman. Instead of sighing wistfully over your yesterdays, you will meet your tomorrows with a young heart! END

"WITH LOVE, TO MY VALENTINE"

The valentine you send this month commemorates a day of courtship at least seven hundred years old. In Chaucer's time, St. Valentine's was the day when the birds chose their mates. Our earliest record of young men and women doing the same on that day is in a letter posted in February, 1477, addressed "Unto my right welebelovyd Valuntyne, John Paston, Squyer." Soon the custom grew of sending costly presents to one's heart's desire; but about two centuries ago the valentine card, exquisitely made and bearing a poem of love, became popular too. In some parts of England, St. Valentine's morning was of such momentous meaning that no work was begun in houses or mills until the postman arrived!

An unengaged girl would of course marry the first bachelor she met on the morn of St. Valentine's Day, so a maiden of those days would be astute enough to avoid meeting anyone she did not wish to marry. If no suitable bachelor appeared before noon, she could use the following charm to be certain of finding her love: "On Valentine's Day take two bay leaves, sprinkle them with rose water, and place them on your pillow in the evening. When you go to bed put on a clean nightgown turned inside out, and whisper, 'Good Valentine, be kind to me, In dreams let me my true-love see.'"

NOW! A NEW FROST WHITE LETTER PAPER IN OPEN STOCK

NEW Autocrat WHITE

A new Frost-White paper famous Autocrat quality in a beautiful new version

YOUR CHOICE OF SIZES
Monarch (50 sheets)
Club (80 sheets)

Here is your chance to get a double supply of White & Wyckoff's newest and most beautiful Autocrat vellum – yet pay for just one package! Two handsome boxes of fine letter paper, banded together in a money-saving, get-acquainted offer that costs you only 75¢.

Visit your favorite Department Store or Stationer while this special offer is being made – get your two boxes of smart new Autocrat White. You'll want to keep supplied ever after, and you can – from Open Stock. Matching envelopes available or envelopes and paper boxed together if desired. At better stores everywhere.

WHITE & WYCKOFF DISTINCTIVE WRITING PAPERS
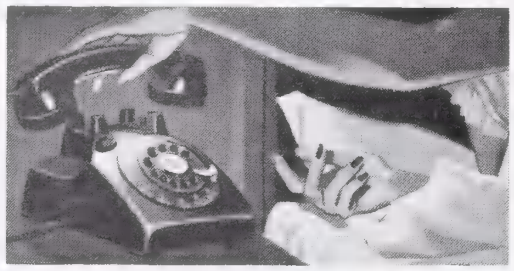
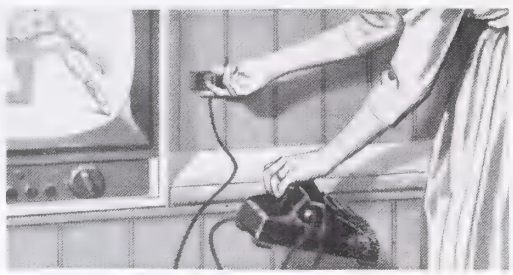
HOLYOKE, MASSACHUSETTS



A handy extension telephone in your kitchen saves you time, countless steps and precious energy—at a cost of only pennies a day!

Now . . .



TELEPHONES

where you want them!

A telephone at the bedside is a comfort and a convenience. It can be a real blessing when you or someone else must stay abed. And there's also a light-up telephone for dialing in the dark.

A portable telephone can be plugged into telephone outlets—in guest room, game room, laundry or workshop, or outdoors on terrace or porch.

Special signals to announce incoming calls in different ways are also available. There are chimes . . . and a flashing light. For outdoor locations you may have a gong, horn, or loud bell.

To find out about the various telephone services available and how little they cost, just call the nearest business office of your Bell telephone company.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Reminding you that someone, somewhere would enjoy hearing your voice today

THE LITTLE TOWNS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

everywhere, many of them chains. The contents of the stores and shops (and also their prices) are pretty uniform. The "brand" has taken over.

But the small-towner is eagerly prideful of what sets his town apart—and he is proudest, I have found, of its social and civic achievements.

Nearly every town I visit has something that is the "biggest" in America (or the world) and its citizens will tell you so, usually with a grin and the preface of "Believe it or not." Van Wert has its cheese factory, "the largest in the world," unique in that it alone produces the famous "Liederkranz," America's only original contribution to the soft fermented cheeses favored by gourmets. I was enchanted to learn that the Swiss immigrant who created it did so by sheer chance, that all the cheese factory's laboratory technicians have never been able to isolate the bacteria which make it in twenty-four days of curing; that the coy bacteria reside in the wooden racks and bamboo mats where the cheese is ripened; that the management therefore (apologetically) can't use stainless steel; and that every ounce of the process of making it has to be performed by hand. (It enchants me, along with the cheese, because I like to think that a few good things defy the chemists.)

In Pratt, Kansas, population 8000, one is quickly told that here are the greatest freshwater-fish hatcheries (started by an ingenious nature lover originally, but now operated by the state) in America or the world, along with the finest museum of Kansan wildlife. (It's a honey.) And Pratt is also the largest manufacturer of fly swatters!

But having disposed of the "biggest and best," citizens want to show or tell you of the projects created by the community: the new schools, the hospital, the clinics, the amateur symphony orchestra, the little theater, the beautiful churches, the public forum, the public swimming pool, the lovely park and recreation grounds, the youth clubs. Mr. Babbitt is still boosting, but he's a different Babbitt boosting different things. And while he shows you around he wants to discuss the course of American education and how to deal with juvenile delinquency. "We have not had a single case of juvenile crime in this community in four years," a citizen told me. "We used to have some. But we put our minds on it, and I think we've done a pretty good job. We think our kids are about as happy and good as you'll find anywhere."

The vast majority of human beings dislike and even actually dread all notions with which they are not familiar. . . . Hence it comes about that at their first appearance innovators have generally been persecuted, and always derided as fools and madmen.

—ALDOUS HUXLEY: in Proper Studies

WHO does all these things in the little towns—things that are transforming them?

As far as I can learn, nearly everybody. Once the most "important" people in the community were the ones with the most money, even if they were mean as old Scrooge. Now a well-to-do man who is not also public-spirited goes without acclaim. So, of course, he becomes public-spirited even if not naturally gifted, one might say, in that direction. Not only because it's good business but because every human being wants to be admired, and if possible loved, by his fellow men.

You can't be loved in America's little towns if you set yourself above others. Very rich people live in little towns, but they don't have butlers. Even if they could get them, it wouldn't be "in style." It is in style to entertain informally—and casserole cooking is becoming an art. It is in style for the mistress of a very beautiful and obviously expensive home to bring the roast beef out of her stainless-steel kitchen, where she has cooked it herself, for her husband to carve and pass around, and for her guests to help stack the dishwasher afterward. Carol Kennicott's prediction that dishes would one day be washed by machinery has been realized. Nor could she today, with the same accuracy, criticize the lack of socia sciousness.

It is in style for a busy young ban coach a kids' football team. It is in st the son of a pioneer whose father ama fortune in the nineties to turn his gr herited house into a recreation cent in style to care about others.

INDUSTRIES are moving to the small and they are different, too, from wh were twenty-five years ago. No longer eyesores. They, too, stand amid lav shrubbery. They aren't belching sm blacken the countryside, and often th more like private schools tha factories.

Small-town folks are far more sophis cultivated and knowledgeable than we Kennicott's neighbors, partly becaus body has more money, because travel democratized, and because radio a vision bring the affairs of the world in living room. Small-towners are as fami the faces of Broadway actors as Yorkers. The "elocutionists" they g nearest big town to hear are Charles L Raymond Massey, Judith Anderson others who have made a new drama reading. They travel sixty miles to lis symphony concert and return the sam They follow the panel discussions sion—and participate in them after "Just the same, talented small-town for the cities," towner himself m me.

This is true a natural. The grea are usually restl want to test an their talents in room. But small to smaller cities) ha theless produced a our leading nat writers and othe Of America's five of the Nobel prize ature, Sinclair L gene O'Neil, Pe William Falkner and Ernest Hemi but O'Neill came originally fro towns, though Pearl Buck was brought missionary's child in China. Lew, aper wanderer, lived in many parts f the States and died near Rome, but is wo always centered in "Gopher rairie" "Zenith." And he willed that his ashes be interred in Sauk Centre. Falkn never moved, except temporarily farthe his birthplace, New Albany, i Miss than to Oxford, in the same sta.

American writers of estabhed i tional reputation have come most exception from small towns o small Carl Sandburg, Willa Cather, Sin Ste Thomas Wolfe, Edna St. Vcent Maxwell Anderson, Erskine aldwell nessee Williams. Even the high sophis Scott Fitzgerald, for whom here is vogue, was born and brought not in metropolis but in St. Paul, Minnesota.

It has recently been said (by professo Atherton) that it is hard to fid philos interests anywhere in the Middle We hard to find them in small towns. But tainly just as hard, proportionately, them anywhere else. Our entury is voted to philosophy but technolo latter is not quite so overwhelmin smaller places.

Carol Kennicott, who revolted agai Street and her prairie own, was n and no philosopher. Essentially sh yearner, just a little brighter, more more romantic and more aspiring what, she never knew—than her n more bored than profoundly rebelli eventually, you may remember, she home. Now, thirty-five years later, the guess that she never would have is too much going on.

Print

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

When you buy a shampoo, keep in mind one thought – the condition of your hair. It is either dry, oily or normal. For each of these hair conditions there is a different Breck Shampoo. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. You will enjoy using a Breck Shampoo because it is mild and gentle in action and not drying to the hair. The Breck Shampoo for your hair condition will leave your hair clean, soft and naturally beautiful.

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

IN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
W YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

Now! Satisfy Your "COFFEE HUNGER" with NEW NESCAFÉ®

—tastier coffee made the modern way!

In the morning when your mouth's watering for a good cup of coffee—quick, make Nescafé! That "wake up" Nescafé flavor, that robust Nescafé richness really satisfies your coffee hunger! Yes, any time a sociable cup of coffee seems like a good idea, it's time for Nescafé!

all coffee
nothing but coffee!

When you're hungry for tastier coffee, try New Nescafé

© 1955 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

FEB 1955

PUBLIC

JOURNAL

March

The Magazine Women Believe In

RN TO BE QUEEN Dutch Princess Beatrix, 17, to ascend her country's throne an intimate, delightful story coming from within the walls of the palace

SIX

THE JOURNAL'S MORE HOUSE FOR THE MONEY PORTFO

FORUM ON CHILDREN IN TROUBLE

11 PAGES OF FASHION

Journal

Contents

March, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 3

Journalities

ETTY HOFFMAN, who does our Fifty ears Ago column and has written any articles for the JOURNAL, says riting the story of Queen Juliana and he Netherlands royal family (Born to e Queen, beginning page 58) was the most fascinating assignment she has ever had. To do the royal biography, she lived in and about Soestdijk Palace in Central Holland for several months. She was the first reporter of any nationality to be shown completely through Soestdijk. "The royal family was most gracious nd charming," she says. "But it eemed we were eating all the time. I ame home ten pounds heavier." Betty's own palace is a Bucks County armhouse where with a lawyer husband she reigns over twenty acres, two mall boys, two dogs and a dozen heep.

tty Hoffman

VIÑA DELMAR (Midnight of a Brides-naid, page 62) reports: "My parents were show people and it was in a sincere but unsuccessful attempt to follow in their footsteps that I gave several years of my youth to the belief that I was an actress. While pursuing this dream I saw about forty-six states of the Union, part of Canada, and one day I even saw that the possibility of my ever getting anywhere on the stage was indeed remote. After that I became an usher in a theater, a typist in many different offices, and for one fragrant week I worked in a florist's shop. Other than writing, my chief interests are my husband, Eugene, and our son, Gray."

Viña Delmar

Are you feeling low, run-down, out of sorts? Maybe you need some snimativ. If your husband feels the same way, you absolutely do need Snimativ for Two, page 84. LENORE GOLDSTEIN, the author, didn't invent snimativ, but she uses it successfully in her love story. "I could use some, too," she confesses. "I live in Forest Hills, New York, with my husband and two poorly disciplined children. The famous tennis stadium is on one side of the street and the Long Island trains rumble at irregular intervals on the other. Daily I struggle through the crushing routine every homemaker knows all too well. It's a noisy life—but an entertaining one."

enore Goldstein

Stories

MIDNIGHT OF A BRIDESMAID, Viña Delmar . 62
A FEELING OF RESPONSIBILITY, Marjorie Carter . 72
SNIMATIV FOR TWO, Lenore Goldstein . 84
SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (Conclusion), John P. Marquand . 96

Special Features

WHICH WAY TODAY'S YOUTH?, Dorothy Thompson . 11
EATING FOR BETTER HEALTH . 27
SCHOOL LUNCHES INCREASE, Margaret Hickey . 27
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 53
BORN TO BE QUEEN (First part of six), Betty Hoffman and A. N. P. . 58
MEMORIES (Second part of four), Ethel Barrymore . 64
MLLE. MALO, Painting by Edgar Degas. Description by John Walker . 66
THE CHILD NOBODY CARES ABOUT, Beatrice Blackmar Gould . 67
CHILDREN IN TROUBLE . 68
WHO ARE THE KILLERS? . 70
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES:
"My Sons Live on Misery Street," G. M. White . 171
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 203
MY SON JOE, Frank D'Amelio . 221

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 20
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 36
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 47
WHO ISN'T SHY? (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 50
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 57
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 86
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 141
THIS IS A CAR CRABBER, Munro Leaf . 208

Fashion and Beauty

PICTURE OF SPRING, Wilhela Cushman . 74
THE PERFECT COMPLIMENT, Wilhela Cushman . 78
A HUNDRED DOLLARS' WORTH OF FASHION, Ruth Mary Packard . 80
THE FEMININE TOUCH, Nora O'Leary . 82
"MOMMY, YOU LOOK LIKE A WITCH!", Dawn Crowell Norman . 131
YEAR-ROUND MATERNITY CLOTHES, Nora O'Leary . 188

Food and Homemaking

TROPICAL FLAVOR, Ann Batchelder . 98
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 100
SHELF MAGIC FOR SHORT-ORDER COOKS . 146
COOKING IN RUSSIA, Lady Kelly . 212

Architecture and Interior Decoration

MORE-FOR-THE-MONEY HOUSE . 87
THE PLAN IS SPACIOUS BOTH INDOORS AND OUT . 88
THE LIVING ROOM IS CAREFREE AND BEAUTIFUL . 90
IN THIS KITCHEN NO TRAFFIC JAMS! . 92
A JUNIOR HIDE-OUT IN MINIMUM DIMENSIONS . 94
TWO BATHROOMS IN THE SPACE OF ONE . 95

Poems

SUNDOWN, Herbert Merrill . 113
TO GROWNUPS BEARING GIFTS, Marion Lineaweaver . 124
SONNET, Mary Wright Lamb . 133
HOME, Eleanor Graham Vance . 154
TROY IN GREEN, Robert P. Tristram Coffin . 176
BALLAD, Elizabeth McFarland . 179
TELEPHONE, Jean Todd Freeman . 192
APRICOT IN A CITY COURTYARD, Virginia Brasier . 200
THE ONE-ROOM APARTMENT, William Bramley . 211

Cover Photograph by Tana Hoban

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

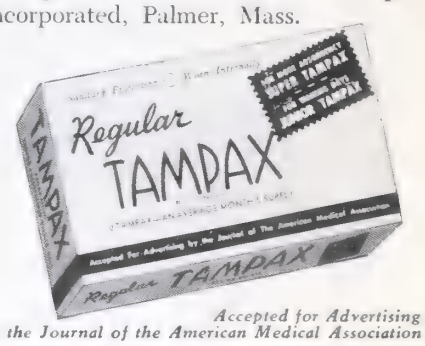
Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Trayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.



Are you chained to the calendar?

Is everything you plan geared to "those days"? Have you ever refused a wonderful party invitation simply because it's slated to occur on one of your "problem week-ends"? Well, stop it! Stop giving up your normal activities simply because you're afraid of possible embarrassment. Stop it—stop it—stop it!

STOP encumbering yourself with a bulky belt-pin-pad harness—with sanitary protection that's uncomfortable to wear and hard to dispose of. Tampax (worn internally) is completely invisible and unfelt when in place. And even the applicator is a throwaway.

LOOK at the other advantages of Tampax. It prevents odor from forming. It's so small month's supply goes into the purse. It's easy to insert, easy to change—and wearer's hands need never even touch the Tampax.

LISTEN to the facts. The fact that Tampax was invented by a doctor. The fact that millions of women have used billions of Tampax. Then decide now that this is the product that helps you break those "calendar chains." Choice of 3 absorbencies at drug or notion counters. (Regular, Super, Junior.) Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Journal

Contents

March, 1955

VOL. LXXII No. 3

Journalities

BETTY HOFFMAN, who does our Fifty Years Ago column and has written many articles for the JOURNAL, says writing the story of Queen Juliana and the Netherlands royal family (Born to be Queen, beginning page 58) was the most fascinating assignment she has ever had. To do the royal biography, she lived in and about Soestdijk Palace in Central Holland for several months. She was the first reporter of any nationality to be shown completely through Soestdijk. "The royal family was most gracious and charming," she says. "But it seemed we were eating all the time. I came home ten pounds heavier." Betty's own palace is a Bucks County farmhouse where with a lawyer husband she reigns over twenty acres, two small boys, two dogs and a dozen sheep.

Betty Hoffman

VIÑA DELMAR (Midnight of a Bridesmaid, page 62) reports: "My parents were show people and it was in a sincere but unsuccessful attempt to follow in their footsteps that I gave several years of my youth to the belief that I was an actress. While pursuing this dream I saw about forty-six states of the Union, part of Canada, and one day I even saw that the possibility of my ever getting anywhere on the stage was indeed remote. After that I became an usher in a theater, a typist in many different offices, and for one fragrant week I worked in a florist's shop. Other than writing, my chief interests are my husband, Eugene, and our son, Gray."

Viña Delmar

Are you feeling low, run-down, out of sorts? Maybe you need some snimativ. If your husband feels the same way, you absolutely do need Snimativ for Two, page 84. LENORE GOLDSTEIN, the author, didn't invent snimativ, but she uses it successfully in her love story. "I could use some, too," she confesses. "I live in Forest Hills, New York, with my husband and two poorly disciplined children. The famous tennis stadium is on one side of the street and the Long Island trains rumble at irregular intervals on the other. Daily I struggle through the crushing routine every homemaker knows all too well. It's a noisy life—but an entertaining one."

Lenore Goldstein

Stories

MIDNIGHT OF A BRIDESMAID, Viña Delmar . 62
A FEELING OF RESPONSIBILITY, Marjorie Carter . 72
SNIMATIV FOR TWO, Lenore Goldstein . 84
SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (Conclusion), John P. Marquand . 96

Special Features

WHICH WAY TODAY'S YOUTH?, Dorothy Thompson . 11
EATING FOR BETTER HEALTH . 27
SCHOOL LUNCHES INCREASE, Margaret Hickey . 27
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 53
BORN TO BE QUEEN (First part of six), Betty Hoffman and A. N. P. . 58
MEMORIES (Second part of four), Ethel Barrymore . 64
MLLE. MALO, Painting by Edgar Degas. Description by John Walker . 66
THE CHILD NOBODY CARES ABOUT, Beatrice Blackmar Gould . 67
CHILDREN IN TROUBLE . 68
WHO ARE THE KILLERS? . 70
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES:
"My Sons Live on Misery Street," G. M. White . 171
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 203
MY SON JOE, Frank D'Amelio . 221

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 20
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 36
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 47
WHO ISN'T SHY? (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 50
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 57
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 86
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 141
THIS IS A CAR CRABBER, Munro Leaf . 208

Fashion and Beauty

PICTURE OF SPRING, Wilhela Cushman . 74
THE PERFECT COMPLIMENT, Wilhela Cushman . 78
A HUNDRED DOLLARS' WORTH OF FASHION, Ruth Mary Packard . 80
THE FEMININE TOUCH, Nora O'Leary . 82
"MOMMY, YOU LOOK LIKE A WITCH!", Dawn Crowell Norman . 131
YEAR-ROUND MATERNITY CLOTHES, Nora O'Leary . 188

Food and Homemaking

TROPICAL FLAVOR, Ann Batchelder . 98
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 100
SHELF MAGIC FOR SHORT-ORDER COOKS . 146
COOKING IN RUSSIA, Lady Kelly . 212

Architecture and Interior Decoration

MORE-FOR-THE-MONEY HOUSE . 87
THE PLAN IS SPACIOUS BOTH INDOORS AND OUT . 88
THE LIVING ROOM IS CAREFREE AND BEAUTIFUL . 90
IN THIS KITCHEN NO TRAFFIC JAMS! . 92
A JUNIOR HIDE-OUT IN MINIMUM DIMENSIONS . 94
TWO BATHROOMS IN THE SPACE OF ONE . 95

Poems

SUNDOWN, Herbert Merrill . 113
TO GROWNUPS BEARING GIFTS, Marion Lineaweaver . 124
SONNET, Mary Wright Lamb . 133
HOME, Eleanor Graham Vance . 154
TROY IN GREEN, Robert P. Tristram Coffin . 176
BALLAD, Elizabeth McFarland . 179
TELEPHONE, Jean Todd Freeman . 192
APRICOT IN A CITY COURTYARD, Virginia Brasier . 200
THE ONE-ROOM APARTMENT, William Bramley . 211

Cover Photograph by Tana Hoban

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.
Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

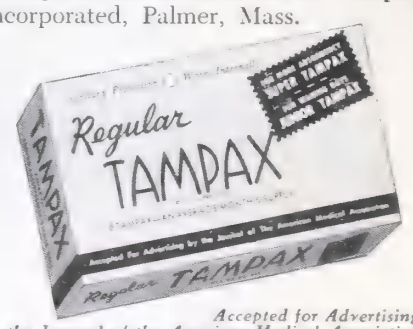
Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1955 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Republic of Honduras, Republic of The Philippines, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for unmailed copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Frayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Better Farming, Jack and Jill, and Holiday



Are you chained to the calendar?

Is everything you plan geared to "those days"? Have you ever refused a wonderful party invitation simply because it's slated to occur on one of your "problem week-ends"? Well, stop it! Stop giving up your normal activities simply because you're afraid of possible embarrassment. Stop it—stop it—stop it!

STOP encumbering yourself with a bulky belt-pin-pad harness—with sanitary protection that's uncomfortable to wear and hard to dispose of. Tampax (worn internally) is completely invisible and unfelt when in place. And even the applicator is a throwaway.

LOOK at the other advantages of Tampax. It prevents odor from forming. It's so small month's supply goes into the purse. It's easy to insert, easy to change—and wearer's hands need never even touch the Tampax.

LISTEN to the facts. The fact that Tampax was invented by a doctor. The fact that millions of women have used billions of Tampax. Then decide now that this is the product that helps you break those "calendar chains." Choice of 3 absorbencies at drug or notion counters. (Regular, Super, Junior.) Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

. . . a Rainbow touched here

The grapes are cool jade-green, the peaches rosy with ripeness. There's rich red in the cherries, silver in the pears, and the brightest of gold in DOLE'S own Hawaiian Pineapple. What's round is plump, what's cubed is gem-cut. So good to look at—so good to eat! So good for you! Wonderful DOLE Fruit Cocktail—wonderfully easy to serve, too! Buy some today. Enjoy it often.

Our readers write us

So You Don't Like the Weather?

Newtown, Connecticut

Dear Editors: March, 1888; I was sixteen years old—and all through the years the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL was my first love and still is. I am sending you my diary of the four days of the great blizzard word for word as I wrote it then:

Sunday, March 11, 1888. We went to church today but it started to snow hard. We did not go tonight as we always do on account of the snow.

Monday, March 12, 1888. Cannot see out the windows on the first floor for they are covered with ice and snow. The winds howl. The kerosene can is empty—we have to burn candles—father says no one has ever seen its equal.

Tuesday, March 13, 1888. Still snowing and blowing. Father and Jake, the hired man, fastened the clothesline to the door and tied it around their waists, then dug a path to the barn. They milked the cows and brought in the eggs and killed chickens for dinner. It took them nearly three hours and they were nearly frozen.

Wednesday, March 14, 1888. Snowing all day but clearing tonight—no trains running, no mail, no paper. Father went to the store a quarter of a mile and got kerosene and candy for sister and me. He made it in two hours—falling down once.

The snowbanks are twenty feet high most places. We get out of our bedroom window and walk on the snowbanks around the house. It has a heavy crust and holds up. It is fun but the men are all worn out working day and night to make the paths. Our hired man ate twenty-three pancakes this morning. He said it was the snow. Mother asked him, "What about the summer—I suppose it's the grass?"

Sincerely,
JOSEPHINE HOYT WRIGHT

Against Long Pants

Frankfort, Illinois

Dear Editors: Why do clothing designers and mothers insist on putting little boys into long pants, bow ties, and so on, as soon as they start walking? I am sick of seeing boys look like little men.

Am I simply old-fashioned?

Yours,
(Name Withheld)

Could Your Community Copy?

Oak Grove, Oregon

Dear Editors: I especially enjoy your "how we do it" letters. Perhaps others would be interested in our Portland Beginners Guild, organized twenty-eight years ago by a group of Sunday-school teachers, and now affiliated with Portland Council of Churches, for the interdenominational exchange of methods.

The average church has a frequent change of teachers and the guild helps each new teacher adopt the ideas in the teaching manual to her own situation. And always any question brought by a new teacher is discussed.

Membership includes fifteen denominations, and many like myself from suburban areas. We do not always quite agree but we are better teachers for working together in friendly harmony. Sincerely,
MRS. L. C. VAN HOUTEN

On a Rainy Afternoon

Brooklyn, New York

Dear Editors: To the distraught mothers with rainy-day blues, we offer some suggestions.

Karen's waterproof apron, high boots and linoleum square help prevent the traditional "No" to water play. Soap flakes, straws, funnels, strainers and egg beaters add to the imaginative flair of early childhood. Sincerely,
MRS. MURRAY WEISS

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

MURRAY WEISS

Water . . .

Soap . . .

Whee, suds!

'N' bubbles!

Quick mop-up.

At last!

A LIQUID SHAMPOO THAT'S EXTRA RICH!

IT'S LIQUID
PRELL
FOR
'Radiantly Alive' Hair

Thrillingly new and different—
Procter & Gamble's emerald-clear Liquid Prell!
No other shampoo has this unique, extra-rich new formula. It bursts instantly into mounds of lather—rinses in a twinkling—is so mild you could shampoo every day. And Liquid Prell leaves hair so caressably soft and easy to manage—glowing with that 'Radiantly Alive' look! Why not try it today?

JUST POUR IT . . .

AND YOU'LL SEE THE GLORIOUS DIFFERENCE!

Some liquid shampoos are too thin and too watery—they're messy, hard-to-use, and wasteful.

Some liquid shampoos are too heavy—contain a cloudy ingredient that leaves a dulling film.

But Prell has a smooth, "just-right" consistency that won't run—never leaves a dulling film.

PRELL—FOR 'RADIANTLY ALIVE' HAIR

NOW AVAILABLE 2 WAYS:

The exciting, new extra-rich liquid in the handsome, easy-grip bottle!

And the famous, handy tube that's ideal for the whole family. Won't spill, drip, or break. It's concentrated—ounce for ounce it goes further!

PROCTER & GAMBLE

Bring a wee bit
o' Scotland to your table!

A hearty Scottish soup . . .

Cock-a-Leekie

by Crosse & Blackwell

Ah, the Scots have a way wi' soup! To chunks of chicken meat and a golden milk broth they add savory onions, aromatic leeks, nutritious barley. Delicious Cock-a-Leekie! But to put this noble Gaelic soup in reach of a thrifty housewife, ah!—that called for a skill like Crosse & Blackwell's. Come, Scots and soup-lovers, just heat it and serve it! Try Cock-a-Leekie tomorrow! When you do, send us the label, and we'll send you a valuable coupon. For name of nearest dealer, write: CROSSE & BLACKWELL Co., Baltimore, Md. Fine foods since 1706.

Try these C&B Soups, too:
Cream Vichyssoise, French Onion, Consommé Madrilène, Creme Mushroom Bisque, Cream of Onion, Clear Green Turtle, Black Bean with Sherry, Cream of Shrimp, Crab à la Maryland.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

Her "Two Cents" Worth

El Dorado, Arkansas

Dear Editors: I have read in your magazine about the suffering in other countries. We do not have a spare nickel. We live on my husband's Social Security. But I also happened to read that soft-drink bottlers in Arkansas estimate a loss of $835,200 yearly through bottles' being thrown away, so I got busy.

I pick up every empty bottle that I find, return it to local dealers and receive two cents. So far, I have sent two rather large boxes of clothes and a box of sewing material to Korea, as asked for in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, every cent paid for with empty soft-drink bottles. Have almost enough cash on hand for a $10 CARE package.

I know this seems small, but I hope that every bit will help, and it does prove that, even if one has no money, one can always do something. Sincerely,

MRS. J. M. KING

▶ By comparison, contributions of some of the rest of us might seem small. Mrs. King deserves a cleanup bonus from her city fathers. ED.

Remember Them?

Seattle, Washington

Dear Editors: The triplets have spent the years since our "HAL" article was published, changing from "babyish toddlers" to quite individual personalities. Mitchell and Michael spend all their time being "cowboys." Michele is very feminine and "helps" me when she isn't "bossing" her brothers. Dick and I have several new gray hairs, but aside from that we are much the same as your reporter found us.

Three no crowd.

I have made many friends from letters I received and it is good to know we have not been forgotten! Sincerely,

ARVELLA WEIR

Are You a Journal Hoarder?

Hartford, Connecticut

Dear Editor: My husband has consented to build a basement recreation room—but as a condition, he insists I get rid of my back issues of "my second Bible." So reluctantly I'm about to part company with seven years' (84) copies of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. I've guarded them carefully. Why, you never can tell when I may have to rush down and refer back to something! What'll I do now?

Thanks for just existing and continually improving your wonderful magazine. Sincerely,

REBECCA WOLINSKY

▶ Checks with apartment superintendents, community magazine collectors, back-number dealers, Pullman porters, airline hostesses, bus and streetcar cleaners, indicate women cling to their JOURNALS longer than to most magazines—discard fewer copies. JOURNAL hoarder Wolinsky should advise her husband that's what those nice built-in storage cabinets in the best-planned recreation rooms often contain. ED.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

How to make my

Apple Crisp Pie with Streusel Topping

—says Marie Gifford, Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

Next time you bake an apple pie, make it this new easy glamorous way—with crunchy streusel topping.

And, to be sure your crust comes out tender and flaky, follow my simple 5-minute Pastry Method using Armour Star new-type Lard.

Armour Star Lard is today's new-type lard with greater shortening power. Blends quickly and easily, actually requires less handling.

You get richer flavored, flakier pie crusts than with expensive shortenings. And, unlike ordinary lards, Armour Star new-type Lard stays sweet and fresh without refrigeration.

To make the flaky tender crust: sift together 1½ cups unsifted all purpose flour, ¾ tsp. salt. Add ½ cup Armour Star new-type Lard and blend together until mixture looks like coarse meal. Add 2½ Tbsp. tap water. Mix lightly and press dough together. Roll out to ⅛" thickness. Fit into 9" pie pan and crimp edges.

To make the filling: combine ½ cup sugar and ½ tsp. cinnamon. Mix with 6 cups pared and sliced apples. Fill pie pan with this mixture.

For the crunchy streusel topping: cut ½ cup butter or margarine into ¾ cup brown sugar and ½ cup flour. Sprinkle over apples. Bake in 425° F. oven for 30 minutes, or until apples are tender and topping is browned.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET

32 new pie recipes. How-to-do-it illustrations. Write to: Marie Gifford, Dept. 153, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois. A carton top will be appreciated.

Armour Star Lard

The Modern New-Type Lard That Makes Flakier Crusts

New milk convenience . . . all day long!

From breakfast 'til bedtime . . . Pure-Pak disposable cartons add new convenience to your glass of milk! Get your milk in the new Pure-Pak that "pours like a pitcher." Don't let habit deprive you of this handy new milk package. Ask for it today . . . It's easy to get!

Over half of all bottled milk is now delivered in paper cartons . . . and Pure-Pak outsells them all! At your store or at your door . . . in all 48 states. Nothing to wash or return. Used only once, only for dairy products, only by you. Call Western Union Operator 25 for names of dairies offering home delivery of milk in Pure-Pak.

"You never outgrow your need for milk"

Pure-Pak

YOUR PERSONAL MILK CONTAINER

PURE-PAK DIVISION, EX-CELL-O CORPORATION, DETROIT 32, MICHIGAN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6

Lettie Lane . . . World Traveler

Dunedin, New Zealand

Dear Editors: Early this year we were on a picnic and in a disused cottage my ten-year-old son and I discovered several copies of 1910 JOURNALS. One a bridal number, and how we laughed over the styles, sighed over the cheap cost of housing, and could hardly wait to find a pair of scissors to cut out Lettie Lane's Around the World Children.

Yours sincerely,
MRS. G. M. COXHEAD

▶ JOURNAL, published since 1883, has never turned up in the tomb of an ancient Egyptian king, as far as we know, but we can think of few other places where contemporary readers haven't discovered old copies. ED.

FOUND IN A DOCTOR'S WAITING ROOM

How frequently all doctors wish for the right consultant for their patient; one with a wise and understanding mind, compassionate in spirit, tolerant in views, and decisive in direction. That we as physicians should seek outside of ourselves these qualities, and recognize their need in others, confirms the fact that in our daily lives as practitioners we must all at times be more than doctors.

Apart from the medically ill, we all see the child, distraught because of an unhappy home, the mother physically and emotionally bankrupt, the father materially successful, in many cases responsible for hundreds of employees, yet completely unable to guide and direct his family responsibilities. We may well ask ourselves if these people are truly sick. They are indeed, so much so that over 50 per cent of the daily ills seen in the physician's office are represented by such examples as these. . . .

While modern psychiatry has in twenty years spanned the darkness of centuries, it is increasingly apparent that this alone is not enough. It may well be that the answer lies in the Bible story. Christ was Himself a healer of the sick, physician without office or instrument, Who bequeathed to us all a wealth of spiritual knowledge, beside which our scientific achievements seem at times uncertain indeed.

Truly there is a lamp unto our feet which guides us all in our daily lives, and the care of those entrusted to us. We should never forget that by our side at all times is that greatest and most willing of consultants, Almighty God.

ROBERT B. MARIN, M.D.

Teachers' Opportunity

Brookline, Massachusetts

Dear Sir: I wonder if teachers know of the many advantages offered in children's camps for the summer months? There is a shortage of men and women with educational backgrounds; the remuneration is very good, and in most camps the entire family is welcome.

Counseloring and the higher-up key positions offer a good salary, plus a summer of healthful and enjoyable vacation for the children.

Sincerely,
MRS. MORRIS P. BERK
Camp Wingo,
Harrison, Maine

How They Value It

Darmstadt, Germany

Dear Miss Brookman: The JOURNAL is wonderful at home, but here it is worth at least $5 per copy to all us Army wives.

Sincerely,
MRS. J. T. QUICK

For those who care enough to look their best...

Dusharme imparts a whisper softness, a willing obedience to the hair . . . crowns every coiffure with the loveliness of the loved. Little wonder that professional hair stylists use it . . . recommend it for home use between shampoos. Dusharme is the lanolin hair creme that dresses but does not discolor the hair . . . the Pearl of Hair Cremes for those who care enough to look their best.

Dusharme

MINNEAPOLIS 15, MINNESOTA

At last! an adjustable foundation garment

CAMP magic web

Finger tip adjustability is yours with Camp's exclusive Magic Web adjustment feature. Now you can adjust from firm to loose support whenever you wish with just a flick of your fingers (you never touch the lacings on a Camp). Think what that can mean in day-long comfort! And what's more . . . minor variations in weight are automatically taken care of by your Camp . . . periodic figure changes cause no need for a new garment.

CAMP Bras . . . if you care about comfort

For the heavier figure, choose a Camp Bra with the "Magic-Web" adjustment feature for complete comfort and control. The Camp types shown here feature sufficient width in back for balance to prevent "creeping". The elastic releases add to comfort, provide perfect fit. Choose the Camp Support or Bra that exactly fits your figure problem at your favorite department or specialty store.

Write for your copy of "New Facts About Your Figure". The name of your nearest dealer sent on request.

CAMP

S. H. CAMP & CO., Dept. 17, Jackson, Michigan

Creators of Scientific Men's and Women's Foundations for Daily Wear and Anatomical Supports for the Medical Profession

Your chapped, even cracked hands—now SEE them heal—FEEL them heal with new

War-Proved Healing Agent*

You can't be proud of hands that are hurt...hurt by detergents, cold weather, paper cuts, and the millions of invisible wounds that are called "chapping." (When you snag your stockings, it's your snagged fingers that need healing.)

Only flawless healthy skin can be soft, always-beautiful. Only Revlon Aquamarine Lotion contains this active agent that actually heals as it softens. You'll see the proof everywhere: elbows grow young and smooth, "pump bumps" melt away. Why not begin today to correct skin that feels old, dry, tight, with this luxury lotion?

* Glyoxyl Diureide (pronounced gly-ox-ill dy-your-ee-ide) is a colorless, odorless ingredient whose regenerative effectiveness was proved during the war. It actually stimulates cell growth and forms healthy new skin unbelievably fast. The name's in medical journals—and now, on every bottle of Aquamarine Lotion.

Only in Revlon

AQUAMARINE LOTION

$1.00 plus tax

1955 REVLON PRODUCTS CORP

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things

...for yours, too

99 44/100% PURE®

. . . for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHINE!

FOR DIAPERS. . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow's gentle care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap for fine hand washables.

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like bedspreads, curtains, blankets thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

Bruce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Editors

Which way today's youth?

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

"The Three Trees (with lovers in the foreground)." Signed and dated "Rembrandt, 1643." Rembrandt's most famous etching. The country around Diemerdijk may be represented in this print.

Some weeks ago the American ambassador to Russia, on a routine return to Washington, remarked that although the Soviet Union was internally stable, two tendencies among Russian youth were disturbing the government—a nihilistic "don't care" attitude, and a turning toward religion.

Both are in contradiction to Marxist-Soviet theory. "Soviet man" must care, or the state and community will suffer. But he must find the satisfaction for all his spiritual questions and yearnings in the official credo of Marxist materialism.

That some Soviet youth are ceasing to care about anything while others are turning toward religion was already known to those of us who read the translations of the Soviet press, as published by the Joint Committee on Slavic Studies. For months the Soviet press has been complaining of juvenile delinquency, lack of social interest, and slackening of "communist morale." It has also been chiding young communists for church attendance, and for marrying and having their children christened in church. Religion is no longer persecuted in Russia, as it once was, and savagely. The present official attitude is apparently that religion is all right for the simple and still ignorant, but intolerable for "advanced" and initiate young party members.

My own first reaction to Mr. Bohlen's remark, which I noted briefly, in a newspaper column, was that the two contradictory tendencies characterize the youth of all countries, including our own: the spirit of total rejection of everything that is, countered by a fervent search and need for affirmation of new (or old) values.

Why is this so?

Let us try to put ourselves imaginatively into the mind of any young man of this generation.

Let us suppose you are a German, thirty years old, the youngest child in a family of five children. When you were six your father, an office employee, was out of work; your eldest brother, who had finished school two years earlier, had never found work at all; the family had sold its few precious possessions and lived on unemployment insurance and relief; and everywhere you heard the phrase, "It can't go on like this; something must happen."

Your father said the republic couldn't govern—so many parties, all of them fighting one another—"nothing but greedy politicians. No order anywhere."

Some of the older boys, companions of your brother, talked about something called "communism," saying that there was one country where no one was out of work, and that was Russia. But others said Russia was a slave state, that you couldn't import a foreign revolution, and that whatever happened had to be German. Your father said that except for four or five years there had never been good times in Germany since the war, that the peace treaties hemmed in a country that had to have more room, that the depression had begun with the withdrawal of American capital from European banks. Only your mother, cleaning, mending, patching, washing, and forever peeling potatoes, which with salt herring and dark bread was your only food, never spoke of such things. You were too young to understand much, but you felt that though people didn't agree, something had to happen.

One day your brother came home in a new brown uniform and said he had joined the storm troopers—no pay, but he got food and clothing and was off the relief rolls. He was spick-and-span and there was enthusiasm in his eyes as he raised his arm in a sharp salute, "Heil Hitler!" Soon his friends, including the one who had talked favorably of communism, were in the same uniform. You were nine when the revolution materialized. The streets were full of marching young men, and the air with new songs; your father soon had a job because all sorts of things were under way: new roads being constructed, new houses being built—your family expected to get one of the new low-cost apartments; and now you, too, wore a white shirt and khaki shorts.

Only one thing upset you. At school three of the boys in your class had been sent home, never to return. One of them was your best friend. They had to go because they were Jews, and the teacher said they were responsible for Germany's losing the last war. You didn't see how Max, who wasn't even born then, could be responsible; you felt awful when he looked at you with tears in his eyes and his mouth quivering, and you failed to defend him because you were afraid. He'd helped you with compound fractions that you were bad at; teacher looked pale, as though he didn't like it, because Maxie was bright; and when you told your mother about it, she CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs, Anne Einselen
Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague
Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian, Jean Todd Freeman, Eileen Sharpe
Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Elizabeth McFarland, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp, Polly Toland Cooke, June Schwartz, Babette Brimberg, Betty Jo Ramsey, Betty Coe Spicer
Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Gretchen Wehler, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith, Antoinette Bacchetta, Jeanne Hardman, Joan Hafey, Laura Date

THE CORONET. New, trim, dressy look in spectators. $10.95

PRIMA DONNA. Soft, light and so very smart. $11.95

THE VANITY. Spring's airy, dress-up sandal. $1

Suddenl

You'll know it . . . you'll feel

THE ADRIENNE. Glove lining: graceful ornament. $11.95

SLEEK LACE. New designs on airy nylon lace. $11.95

THE HEATHER. Nylon lace favorite for spring. $1

This product has no connection whatever with The American National Red Cross • The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes

LIDO. Beautifully ornamented sling pump. $12.95

THE CHALET. Softest sandal, glove-lined. $11.95

THE BIARRITZ. Paris fashion on the mid-heel. $11.95 t's Spring!

he moment you see the fresh fashion touches in beautiful new

Red Cross Shoes

FEATURED IN CANADA AS GOLD CROSS SHOES

HE DRESDEN. Pretty pump on the low heel. $11.95

THE FESTIVAL. Swiss Milan straw Cobbie. $ 9.95

SOFT TWIST. Cobbie in softly draped kid. $10.95

Largest selling brand of fine footwear in the world.
Styles from $8.95 to $12.95

L Shoe, Ltd., in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd., in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.) Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd slapped her dishcloth on the sink and growled, "I don't know what this country is coming to. It's against God!"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

Nobody had ever talked much about God, though your mother, and sometimes your father, went to the Lutheran church every Sunday, and you to Sunday school. But presently you stopped because so many other boys did. Instead you went to meetings to hear about "Germanic" religion, and the power of the German will, and the older boys said Christianity was an international Jewish plot to weaken the Gentile Aryans with bosh about everybody being brothers. One day there was a new pastor at your church, and your mother grumbled that he was no Christian and she, too, stopped going there.

But these were minor things in all the exhilaration of movement and belonging, and togetherness. When you were thirteen Austria and Germany were united, and the rest of the world seemed satisfied, and soon the Sudeten Germans would be "liberated" from the Czechs. Your father was gloomy, saying, "That's the way wars start; the Fuhrer should let well enough alone," but German troops marched into Prague, the British Prime Minister came to Germany and signed a pact for "peace in our time," and everyone was deliriously happy. Now all that was needed was to unite Germany with East Prussia by a corridor across Poland. Again your father and mother were nervous, but a great surprise came: the Russians signed a pact with Hitler;

The standards of the so-called older generation must be raised before we can expect youth's standards to reach the mark we would all like to see. —NORMA B. CARSON in Paris journalists were writing, "Why die for Danzig?" Britain and France certainly couldn't do anything for Poland; it would all be over in three weeks!

But there was war. You were fourteen. Poland, and then a pause, Holland, Belgium, France, victory upon victory, all Europe taken in less than a year. Both your older brothers were soldiers. Kurt, who was now a lieutenant, sent mother a black silk dress from Paris, and lingerie and perfume for his young wife, and Hans sent cheese from Holland. Your mother was glad to have a new dress, but when she put it on she sighed and said, "I'd rather see the war end than have a dress."

The papers were full of pictures of German soldiers surrounded by beaming Dutch, Belgian, French, Jugoslav children, whom sometimes they held in their arms. It made you feel good to think everyone was so happy that Germany was winning, but when Kurt came home on furlough he didn't seem very happy. "They hate us," he said, almost with surprise. "There's an underground—criminals in it, I guess—our men get shot from ambush. Then we shoot hostages. It makes one sick; probably innocent people—one never knows." He spoke of a friend. "He found a French girl—really crazy about her—wanted to marry her. The F.F.I. found out and shaved her head, tore off all her clothes—drove her naked through the streets. She was white as marble . . . her eyes ——" He put his hand over his own. "My God, what a war!"

There was talk about Russia, how Russia was no real ally, but always winning new concessions, wanting the Balkans, moving forward in the Baltic; and then, suddenly, there was war with Russia, and Hans was called from Holland to the Russian front, where everything was going well, too, the papers picturing grinning Russians surrendering en masse. But your father, who had a much better job now, in a government office, was gloomy. "Germany can never win a two-front war," he said. "Hitler's crazy." You should have reported your father to the authorities, but you didn't. People were disappearing. Not only Jews. Right out of your father's office they'd taken two former Social Democrats.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

Painting of Native Girl in a Pareu

SUIT BY TONI OWEN

You're known by the figure you keep—and sarong

keeps it so comfortably!

Fashion is painless when Sarong's unique criss-cross front lets you enjoy new freedom. You walk, stand and sit with native comfort. Your girdle stays in place! And Sarong's diagonal construction curbs any sign of tummy curves. Smoothly contoured back and sides marry your hips and thighs to the new, slender look. Let lightweight, boneless Sarong make so little of your size—so much of your beauty.

From waist length to corselette, zippers to pull-ons, there's a perfect Sarong for you. Sizes 24 to 40. $7.95 to $18.50 Sarong Jr. for the teenage and Junior figures. Girdle, $5.95. Panty Girdle, $6.95 Small, medium and large.*

the criss-cross girdle that walks and won't ride up

Sarong® SARONG, INC. 200 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N.Y. • IN CANADA: SARONG GIRDLES BY DOMINION CORSET CO., LTD.
TM REGISTRATION WORD SARONG, NO. 553826 • GIRDLE PATENT NO. 2445392 *PATENT APPLIED

Foreign Correspondent writes:

"Wonderful the world over!"

Tweed is the one fragrance above all others you can wear anytime, anywhere.

TWEED Perfume from 2.25
Mist 2.25 Bouquet 1.50
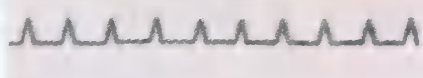
prices plus tax

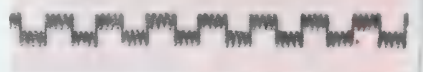
Lentheric

NEW YORK PARIS LONDON



Automatic Zigzagging—for satin stitch, script stitch, appliqués, buttonholes, setting in lace.

Automatic Multiple Zigzag—for mending, patching, joining overlapped seams, applying binding.



Automatic Blind Stitch—for making "invisible" hems, overedging seams, sewing in zippers.

Automatic Scallop Stitch—perfectly spaced, big or small, for fancy edging, embroidery, trim.

Automatic Arrowheads—facing in either direction, for decorating children's clothes, table linens.

Automatic Dominoes—for monograms, borders, pocket designs that would take hours by hand.

NEW! Twin Needle also comes with the Automatic. Sews with two different color threads at once—for beautiful toned effects.

These are only a few of the exciting stitches the new SINGER Automatic will do.*

he new Swing-Needle SINGER Automatic es 101 stitch variations as simply as it sews a straight seam!

is a machine so modern, so advanced—so ent from usual machines—you'll have to see action to believe what it can do.
s the new Swing-Needle* SINGER Automatic hine—with amazing do-it-for-you "FASHION* s." It not only does the finest straight sewing does just about any kind of decorative stitch you can imagine completely automatically.

Stop in; try it. Discover how it takes hard work, handwork and guesswork out of sewing.

It's the newest in the famous family of SINGER Machines . . . favorites for over 100 years.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

*A Trade-Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. Copyright, U. S. A. 1954, 1955, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.

Step together, slide . . . little feet so well-protected by these good-fitting, long-wearing shoes . . . shoes that offer sound support and lots of growing room. Stride Rites . . . famous for fit and quality all over America . . . are available in light-hearted Spring styles, bright Spring colors . . . and sizes and widths galore.

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

They'd been put in Mauthausen Concentration Camp. They were gathering up Jews and "subversives" from all over Europe, and people said horrible things were going on, particularly in Poland, even little Jewish children being killed, but it was enemy propaganda, your mother said. "No German—not even they—would do such a thing." Once everybody had said "we," speaking of Germany and National Socialism, but now people called the leaders "they."

Then it was winter and Hans wrote no more from Russia about victory, but about the terrible cold, the dreadful roads, the guerrillas everywhere, the peasant houses where they were billeted, with dirt floors, bugs, no furniture but a table and benches, no bed but loose straw, the "communist paradise." . . . "On this front the war is just barbarous savagery," he wrote. "It's beyond description." Then he wrote no more, because he was dead.

Kurt was also killed in Russia six months later, and presently you, too, were in the army, sent to North Africa, to fight the British and Americans.

When you were eighteen the skies were exploding all over Germany. In North Africa you heard that your sister Martha and her baby had been killed in the bombing of Hamburg, and your other sister's husband had fallen. You remembered the movies you had seen of the bombing of Warsaw and of London. Your mother had said then, "Soon it will be our turn," but you had scoffed, "Germany has the best air force in the world." Yet it hadn't conquered England, and now the Americans were in, with terrible machines, thousands and thousands that Hitler had said they'd never turn out in time to turn the tide. You heard at the front that some officers had tried to kill Hitler, but he'd escaped. You knew then that everything was over, that they'd tried to end the war, and the traitorous thought crossed your mind that it ought to have happened, and successfully, long ago. But having failed, people were being arrested wholesale. High officers were being shot. There was no more of that oneness that had so warmed your heart as child and youth. The "traitors" had names you had read in your schoolbooks, names that had once made German history: Von Stauffenberg, Von Hassell, Peter Yorck von Wartenburg, Trott zu Solz, Von Moltke. They were going to the gallows. And generals shot—shot for treason! Things like that happened in Russia—under Bolshevist purges. But Germany was fighting Bolshevism—with its own methods.

Children need love, especially when they do not deserve it.

—HAROLD S. HULBERT:
"I Quote," Virginia Ely.

You were invalided back home and were there when it ended—the people hovering in shelters no longer to escape the bombs, holding out underground from the combat-drunk Russians, raping and plundering . . . when would the British and Americans come!

They came, too, and the raping stopped, and the wholesale plundering. But streaming in came the Germans from the east, pushed out by the Poles, the Czechs, the Rumanians, the Yugoslavs, homeless, penniless, workless. The Allies were going "to make a new and better world," end war forever, set a new law of nations and put on trial those who had committed crimes against humanity. The concentration camps had been opened, to reveal mountains of corpses, gas chambers, mass graves, and living beings more pitiable than the dead. You felt full of horror, full of shame. But who was guilty, or what was guilty? You remembered the savagery in Russia. If deporting populations was a crime, why was it continuing now that the war was over? If an eye was to be paid for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, had they not been paid? Had not everyone paid? Could not the books be closed? Could they ever be closed?

Now Germany was to have "democracy," There was a Labor Government in Britain

CONTINUED ON PAGE 128

For Quick Relief of HEADACHE NEURALGIA

Remarkably Effective

STANBACK, the medically approved formula, contains several fast acting ingredients—In combination they work faster than any one alone to bring soothing relief from pains of HEADACHE—NEURALGIA

Snap Back with

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MAKE MONEY A DRESS SHOP IN YOUR HOME

Established New York firm desires ambiti women to sell dresses, suits, featuring newest New York look. EXPERIENCE UNNEC SARY. Good commissions. FREE DRESSES to wear bonus. No investment. Write for sample book.
BELLECRAFT FASHIONS, 111 Eighth Ave., Dept. L-3, N

TO HELP YOU EXPLAIN MENSTRUATION

As your daughter grows, you naturally wonder when you should tell her about menstruation. And you may not be quite sure just what or how to tell her.

You'll find the booklet "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?" a wonderful guide in discussing this subject with your daughter . . . whether she is shy, seems disinterested, or has questions.

"How Shall I Tell My Daughter?" is approved by doctors, and is offered to you free by the makers of Modess. For your copy, write: Anne Shelby, Box 5532-3, Personal Products Corp., Milltown, N. J. Or mail coupon.

Personal Products Corporation
Box 5532-3, Milltown, New Jersey

Please send me a free copy of "How Shall I Tell My Daughter?"

Name_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

Street_____

City_____ State_____
(OFFER GOOD ONLY IN U.S.A.)

Never before!

SUCH RICH LATHER...INSTANT RINSING... SHINY-CLEAN HAIR! YET THIS NEW SHAMPOO NEVER, NEVER DRIES YOUR HAIR!

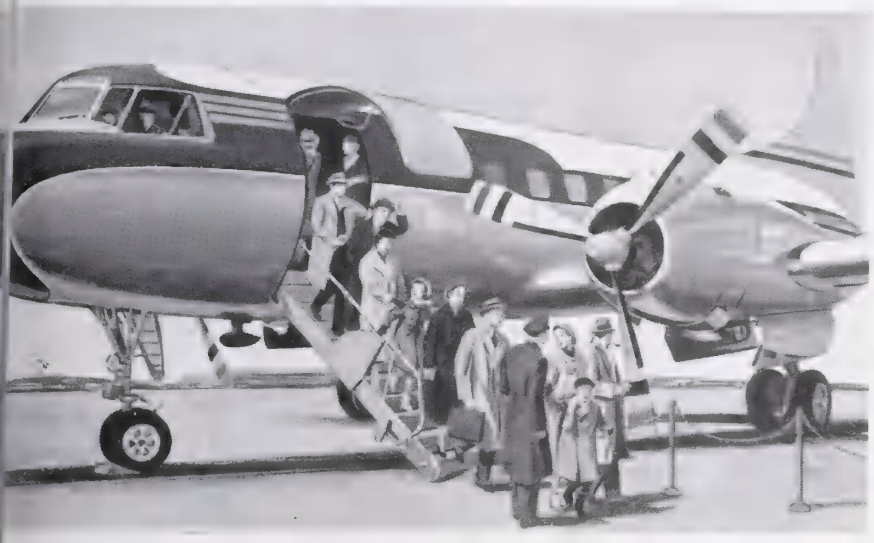
New Woodbury Shampoo

FOR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

Right after shampooing with New Woodbury, look in the mirror and see how shiny-clean and attractive your hair is. But the surprising fact is, your hair is also unusually easy to manage. This is because New Woodbury Shampoo has a special ingredient which protects your natural hair oils. You can set your hair right away with perfect results. New Woodbury lathers richly, rinses quickly – even in hardest water. No special rinse needed. We don't believe you can buy a better shampoo than New Woodbury. Yet it is so popular, it can be priced much lower than any other quality shampoo. Try it now, during the Introductory Sale. And enjoy the clean, zestful feeling that follows a good shampoo!

Introductory Sale ⅓ off
50¢ bottle only 33¢

Winter's a wonderfu



YOU'LL ENJOY THESE Y

Year after year, millions of people discover the major advantages of air travel. Last year nearly 28 million travel-wise people flew on scheduled U. S. airlines—and this year millions more will fly. Why the change to air travel? Because smart men and women everywhere are finding that only air travel can give them all the advant speed, safety, comfort and economy—in winter and every season year. Ask any airline representative or your travel agent to gi full details about the wonderful conveniences of winter airline time to fly...

OUND AIR TRAVEL ADVANTAGES EVEN MORE IN WINTER

GET THERE FASTER—Today 580 cities in all sections of the U.S. have airline vice. Through easy connections and frequent schedules, you can fly nearly ywhere in the nation in a few hours. For example, it takes less than 8 hours ing from California to New York, or less than 3½ hours from Chicago to Dallas.

2. MANY TIMES SAFER—You're high above winter's icy roads and other driving hazards when you travel by airline. You are safer in the air than driving your car. In fact, official records show that air travel on scheduled domestic and international routes was five times safer than riding in autos and taxis.

ROOMY COMFORT—Along with safety, speed and dependability, modern ury airliners offer comfort plus. Large, quiet cabins are air conditioned, with etch-out room between soft reclining seats. Attentive personal services help ke your trip more enjoyable and easier than ever.

4. TRUE ECONOMY—Where else can you get so much for your travel dollar? Here you have airline luxury at prices often lower than for surface travel, when you consider all the things you have to pay for. In addition, family travel plans, air coach or tourist services today provide the thriftiest air travel in history.

America's leading airliners are Douglas DC-3s, DC-6s and DC-7s, Convair-Liners, Martin 4-0-4s, Boeing Stratocruisers and Lockheed Constellations. Every type depends on Pratt & Whitney Aircraft engines or Hamilton Standard propellers, or both—products which help make them the finest and most dependable passenger aircraft in all the world.

UNITED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION East Hartford, Connecticut

In Canada: CANADIAN PRATT ■ WHITNEY AIRCRAFT CO., LTD.

kers of PRATT & WHITNEY AIRCRAFT engines, HAMILTON STANDARD propellers and aircraft equipment, and SIKORSKY helicopters for our armed forces and the finest airlines in the world.

You hear a bigger whoosh
You smell a fresher aroma
You taste an extra richness

Why? Because Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than any other leading brand. It's the only one that's pressure packed. And pressure packing preserves coffee freshness and flavor better than vacuum cans or bags.

Chase & Sanborn Coffees are served by more fine hotels and restaurants throughout America than any other brand.

Chase & Sanborn

THE COFFEE THAT TELLS YOU IT'S FRESHER!

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

The dogs get elbow deep in mud this month. Then they wonder why they are shut out of the living room! This is Holly as a puppy.

RAIN and wind, and wind and rain, and a most exciting month actually it is, with the smell of cold wet earth rising in the sharp air and all the brooks running like mad, and the pond black in the pale noonday light. There is something so direct and primitive about March.

Jill takes to training Hollyberry in the road where there is no soggy mud. I can see them from my window, the shining Irish and the tall woman in the blue-checked stadium coat heeling away down the wind. Holly's tail is as gay as a sailboat putting out to sea, her proud lifted head is beautiful beyond telling. She quivers with eagerness when she sees the leash; she hates to have any other dog trained, but it is hard for her to slow to human limitations.

It is hard to believe we have had Holly over a year—and how that grave-eyed little puppy has changed! An Irish puppy, staggering around on delicate legs, is a little like a young fawn. At one year, the Irish is poetry in motion, fairly skimming through the air.

Speaking of motion reminds me of the book I have been reading on management in the home which has a chapter on motion-mindedness, which has to do with planning your housework to the peak of efficient rhythmic ease. When I got through ironing today, I turned to this book to read about motion-mindedness in ironing. I was not at all surprised to find the description of a poor ironer fitted me like a rubber glove. Fast and jerky, ah, yes, and running the iron back and forth ironing in wrinkles at every stroke, alas, yes, that is my ironing! So I read the description of the expert ironer. Nothing to it, iron glides along—shirt folded neatly in nothing flat—well, I shall certainly study this book, but I have a horrid suspicion that not even a good book can teach me the art of elegant ironing.

Some people have a knack for things, some don't, but of course there's no reason not to struggle to improve. Anyway, I tell myself, I can cook. And I am a fine washer of clothes. And I hang things on the line very nicely, too, admiring the colors and textures as the pins snap neatly and the towels and sheets begin to blow. Since we have no a jot of room in the little back kitchen for a dryer, the clothes go in the same old-fashioned clothesbasket and are lugged out to the line between the tall green pines. I love to walk on the soft cinnamon-colored pine needles as I lift the cherry-red towels out of the basket and hang them up. And all the dogs come racing about me and the pines are quivering with bird wings and the clouds scud over and it is all very pleasant. Now and then I startle a rabbit at the edge of the swamp and he goes alolloping off (this is my own word and is just what rabbits do).

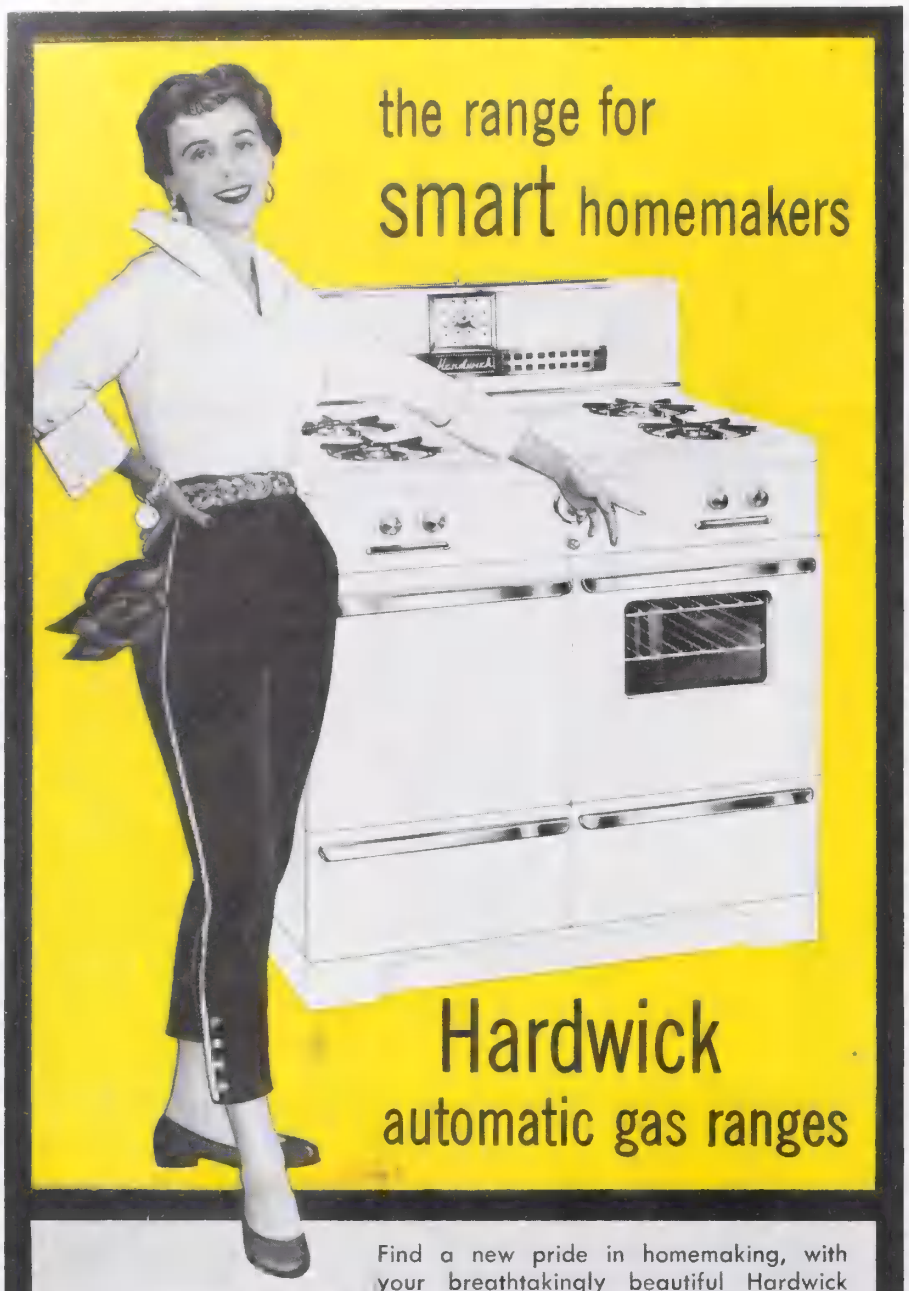
Country life, I think, has so many fine things about it; one does a mort of work, but there are so many things—such as going to the store: we roll the little carriages around, stop and lean on the handles and catch up with all the news, have a social hour. Jill flew home yesterday and said the boys were going to repaint the market and what did I think would be a good color? I felt cozy all day thinking it was a community proposition whether the market is pale green or pink or white. Louis handed out a whole carton of absolutely fresh marrowbones for the dogs, too, all cut so neatly and ready for cocker or Irish fun. And Mr. Tyler, handing out the paper, invites me to come up and see his lovely lithographs and the painting of the Boy Scout and we climb upstairs and I admire the gallery but especially the pictures of all the youngsters Mr. Tyler has helped out all the years in one way or another.

Now and then someone asks me if it isn't dull living in the country. No theaters, no concerts, no museums, no fine restaurant dinners, no night clubs, and so on. But I find living in the country is exciting all day long every day in the year. Of course with nine dogs there would never be what you might call a lull anyway.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 22

Now you can make juicy, tender Roasts from inexpensive cuts of veal

Spry makes the difference!



Here's All You Do!

Combine in small bowl: ¼ cup Spry, melted, 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Rub Spry mixture thoroughly into all surfaces of a 3-lb. roast of veal. If you buy a rolled roast, have the end chopped and rolled into the roast. Place meat in shallow roasting pan and roast in moderate oven (350° F.) about 3 hours.

Just this little bit of Spry seeping down through your roast protects it from cooking dry. Lever Brothers guarantees that with Spry you can make juicy, tender roasts from inexpensive cuts of veal! You'll agree or we'll return your money. For more recipes, drop a postcard to Spry, Lever Brothers Company, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

Find a new pride in homemaking, with your breathtakingly beautiful Hardwick range reflecting glory on your whole kitchen . . . and you! Save time and work while turning out recipe-perfect dishes, thanks to Hardwick automatic features: EconoMatic; automatic lighting without matches, EconoTrol 3-in-1 top burners for waterless cooking. EquaFlo oven burner for perfect baking and broiling—and many other famous Hardwick time and money savers. You simply must see the high-style Hardwick for '55—at your Hardwick dealer today.

A.G.A. APPROVED for Natural, Manufactured and LP Gases.

Hardwick 30" beauty

...with a giant 24" oven!

Startling good looks combine with Hardwick's traditional top cooking performance and luxury features to give you a wonder-range that takes only 30" of kitchen space. Mammoth oven is larger than on any standard-size range, gives perfect heat balance.

Write for FREE descriptive literature and name of nearest dealer.

HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY • CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20

I do love the theater, that odd musty smell of plush and asbestos and paint and canvas—I think it's the backdrops that give it off—and the rolling up of the curtain and that first moment of looking at the scene; but I also love a sunset over the shadow-deep hills of my valley—the change of color, the dramatic descent of the sun, the aftercolor so pure and rich and then the soft pinky violet light that comes. In open country you can see the whole of the setting of the sun and it is always different, always a miracle.

For music we always choose our own from the record books and play anything from Bach to bebop according to our mood. For museums we can go occasionally to the big city so I can stand in front of El Greco's Toledo and give my soul a special renascence of beauty. Then we can get home for supper and choose between broiled bay scallops and shad roe from the freezer. Night clubs never did tempt me because I get sleepy too early. I prefer to toast my toes awhile by the apple-wood fire and then tuck in with a really good book, wander out later to let the dogs out, let them in, and have my hot milk and pepper. It's a good way to live.

The dogs get elbow deep in mud this month. Then they wonder why they are shut out of the front living room! Their ears have mud balls on every hair. Louella Shouer gave the glamorous Especially Me a blue terry bathrobe, and we wash him vigorously and zip it on him. As soon as he is dry and out of it, he runs out and digs again and comes in looking exceedingly like a blond mud pie.

There should never be such a thing as religious controversy, any more than we should argue with a lover about his taste.

—WILLIAM LYON PHELPS:
Autobiography With Letters
(Oxford University Press)

"Well," says Jill, "you can't have everything; you have the dogs and fun with them or you have a nice clean house with shining floors. In March," says she firmly, "you take your choice."

"I take the dogs," say I, and that settles that!

Living with dogs is such a special pleasure. No day is ever dull and time never hangs heavy. From the minute Holly bangs her feeding dish on the floor to say she wants another helping to the end of the day when Melody nips out with the lovely old bone and hides it, it is always new and different and fun.

I have been reading some old favorites on the rainy afternoons. I like Walter de la Mare's lines especially:

So much herself is she that when she is near,
All love-delighting things are twice as dear.

How this does express shared experience—from the first time son or daughter says, "Mommy, I like the way you look in that dress," to a loved one saying, "I feel that way, too, just now, the way the wind came up ——"

March meals are fun—for the cold windy days make good fare extra good. We stop counting calories long enough to have one meal with spaghetti stirred richly with cottage cheese, preferably the real big-curd pot cheese. The big loose curd is so delicious. Moist and crumbly and flavorful. I cook macaroni or spaghetti or noodles—we like the wide tender noodles—and stir in a half box of cheese and top with paprika.

I love the way night shuts down in March. The sky is so cold and the scudding clouds so dark and dramatic. The branches of the great maples are ebony—not yet frosted with young leaves. Although I watch so eagerly for signs of spring—the emerald skunk cabbage

CONTINUED ON PAGE 201

Cheers for meatless dishes

Lenten dishes are never dull when seasoned with Lea & Perrins Worcestershire. Adds zest and tang to bland fish, macaroni, cheese and eggs. Use it generously in your cooking . . . and for individual seasoning at the table, too.

LEA & PERRINS SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

FREE! Recipe Book, DISHES MEN LIKE • 168 easy recipes
• 84 good go-togethers'
• 7 pages carving diagrams
Write LEA & PERRINS, Inc.
241 West St., New York, N. Y. Dept. J-3

The EGG WHITE Fluffy FROSTING MADE WITHOUT BOILING!
7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING

Here's a frosting made with country-fresh egg whites. All you do is whip up—whisk on! So-o smooth, with a delicious flavor no other frosting has!

Whips Soft
Spreads Soft Stays Soft

FREE Illustrated booklet. Shows cakes for all occasions. Gives 19 recipes for 7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING. Send name and address to 7-MINIT, Dept. 3J, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

Dessert's in the skillet–easy as can be!

it's great with pineapple with balanced flavor ☆

☆ true-to-the-fruit goodness because DEL MONTE Pineapple is picked only when natural tartness and sweetness balance perfectly

And DEL MONTE Pineapple comes from the very best families — our own pedigreed stock we've grown and selected from more than 60,000 strains. So be sure it's DEL MONTE Brand Pineapple — if you want honest-to-goodness tropic flavor in every style.

SKILLET PINEAPPLE COBBLER

1 can (1 lb. 4 oz.) DEL MONTE Brand Crushed Pineapple (about 2½ cups) ½ cup syrup drained from the pineapple
3 tablespoons lemon juice
2 cups biscuit mix
¼ cup butter, melted
½ cup granulated or brown sugar
½ teaspoon grated lemon peel

From pineapple, drain ½ cup syrup. Mix syrup with lemon juice and combine with the biscuit mix to make a dough. Pat out into a square on floured surface, and divide into 12 equal portions, rolling each lightly into a ball. Arrange balls in well-greased 9 or 10-inch skillet with cast iron, aluminum or heat-resistant plastic handle or handle which can be removed during baking. Combine butter, sugar, peel, pineapple; spoon evenly over biscuits. Bake in moderately hot oven (400° F.) 35-40 min. Serve warm, with cream if desired. Serves 6-8.

Enjoy 5 handy styles: sliced • crushed • chunks • tidbits • juice

Del Monte® Pineapple

—the brand you know puts flavor first drink them, too!  compare Del Monte Pineapple Juice  never too tart — never too sweet

An Advertisement Presented in the Public Interest by New York Life

SHOULD YOUR CHILD BE A NURSE?

BY RUTH SLEEPER

Director of the School of Nursing and Nursing Service, Massachusetts General Hospital
President, National League for Nursing, Inc. (As told to LLEWELLYN MILLER)

The need for nursing is as old as pain itself.

The profession of modern nursing is very young.

The first schools for nurses in this country were opened less than 100 years ago—in 1873. Few people realize how enormous have been the changes in the education, income and working conditions of nurses in each decade since.

I remember the reaction of my family when I told them that I wanted to go into a nursing school.

"But we will hardly see you for three years!" they protested.

Even a short while ago student nurses lived under most rigid restrictions and had very little time they could really call their own before winning their diplomas.

Today many colleges and universities are offering degrees in nursing. Life in nursing schools grows continually more like life in any other school, and the life of the graduate nurse is changing rapidly also.

If your daughter wants a profession that will reward her all of her life, I advise a long look at the many absorbing fields of work opening for the modern nurse. I know of no other career that offers the girl of today so many increasing opportunities.

It is a career that puts her in stimulating contact with a busy world of interesting people, from the beginning of her studies.

It is a career that she can take with her from one town to another, if she needs to move or wants to travel.

It is a career that prepares her as nothing else can for success as a mother.

It is a career that she can return to, even deep in her middle years, and find warm welcome.

It is a career that takes her into every level of society, bringing endless new interests and drama.

It is a career that brings financial security. No graduate nurse need wait and worry about finding a post.

Best of all, it brings the reward of being useful to others.

Today we have 390,000 active registered nurses. We need 50,000 more to fill current needs.

Our population has more than doubled since 1900, due to fast rising birth rate and greatly lengthened life span. Health education programs and free clinics inspire more people each year to seek early aid for illness. The phenomenal growth of insurance plans makes it possible for more people to afford hospital care. Over 59 per cent of our population is now protected by some form of medical and hospital insurance.

Hospital admissions have doubled since 1935. Ten years ago the average stay was nearly 16 days. New drugs and medical technics have cut this average to t eight days, which means that more intensive ing is needed—and more nurses than ever before.

ll signs indicate that the need for nurses will become ter, rather than less. This is not because young nen are finding other careers more tempting, as you nt conclude. Each year more girls are recognizing rewards in nursing and are enrolling, but the demand nurses continues to outstrip the supply. There is no nce of over-supply in the foreseeable future, and the duate can turn to any aspect of nursing that attracts most.

she joins the staff of a hospital, she can choose ong absorbing specialties. She can concentrate on k with children, in obstetrics, in surgery, on the cinating new technics of orthopedics such as the abilitation of polio victims which calls so heavily on nurse's skill and imagination. Psychiatry is an insely interesting field in which opportunities for the se are expanding fast. Or she can specialize in admination or teaching . . . to mention only a very few of avenues open to her.

Since Florence Nightingale went to the Crimea 101 ars ago, nurses have been an enormously mobile oup. If your girl wants to travel, many posts are open her, both in this country and abroad.

She can choose foreign service with the World Health ganization, with our own government's foreign operions, or with one of our armed services. Industry nds nurses abroad, and fast growing health programs e using nurses in factories, hotels, department stores, planes, ships and in scores of other interesting ckgrounds.

Schools need nurses. Many married nurses who want me in the afternoon with their own children find partme positions ideal and easy to get. Nurses are needed doctors' offices. Private practice brings its special reards in choice of hours and cases.

Opportunities in community and public health programs are growing rapidly. Many bring the added security of Civil Service benefits. A visiting nurse has an absorbing career, moving through many homes each day and leaving order and aid behind her.

What does it cost to become a nurse?

Costs vary widely, but in all schools a student nurse pays for part of her expenses by the care she gives to patients while learning to nurse.

ne of the finest rewards in nursing comes from helping the wborn get off to a good start in life. New technics in obtrics and pediatrics have been a major factor in advancing the e expectancy of children born today.

There are two ways to become a registered nurse.

A girl can enter a hospital-conducted school of nursing for a three-year program leading to a diploma. Usually there is no charge for her room, food, laundry, uniforms and books. Tuition ranges from approximately $200 to $500 for her three-year course. Her classes and work with patients occupy no more than 44 hours a week, and she usually has one or two days a week free. About 90 per cent of our nurses are prepared in this fashion.

Courses offered by colleges and universities cost more and take longer, but they give a flying start toward top positions in nursing. Such plans combine college courses at regular tuition rates (though some scholarships are available to those with outstanding qualifications) and several years of nursing study and practical experience in the clinical field, hospitals, or other health agencies where, again, the student's contribution to patient care may reduce her expenses. Graduation after four or five years brings a degree—Bachelor of Science—as well as a nurse's diploma.

In all cases, the graduate takes an examination with the nurses' licensing board of her state which gives her the right to use R. N. (Registered Nurse) after her name.

What does a nurse earn?

No one goes into nursing to make a fortune, but substantial incomes as well as security are available to the ambitious.

The average beginning salary for a staff nurse, nationwide, is from $2,800 to $3,500 a year. Promotion can be rapid. Top salaries in administrative posts range from $12,000 to $14,000 a year. A graduate nurse without experience can enter the Army Nurse Corps or the Air Force Nurse Corps with rank and pay of Second Lieutenant. In the Navy she starts as an Ensign. The Armed Services give full pension privileges as do jobs under Civil Service. Other positions in nursing are covered by Social Security, and many provide retirement benefits.

How can you tell if your daughter will be successful and happy as a nurse? Ask yourself these questions about her to see if she shows promise of developing the characteristics needed in nursing:

1. Is she reliable? A patient's life may depend on the nurse's faithfulness in carrying out orders in the doctor's absence. Does your girl rinse the dishes even when you are not there to check? Does she admit a mistake rather than evade responsibility?

2. Does she reach out for responsibility? The girl who volunteers to help at home shows the willingness and capacity for teamwork that a nurse must have.

3. Is she a good student? A nurse must learn many complicated technics and skills. Many schools want only girls who stand in top third of high school classes.

4. Has she an inquiring mind? A good nurse constantly asks "Why?" Is a crying child in pain? Or is he terrified, as was one little boy told by his sister that if he were bad the doctor would cut off his toes? A nurse must soothe worries as well as wounds.

5. Is she adaptable? A nurse must have the out-going friendliness that comes from understanding and liking other people.

6. Has she a good sense of humor? Humor is like an air cushion. It eases the jolts. A nurse must be able to see the ridiculous and not laugh; see the heart-breaking and still smile for the patient's sake.

7. Is she tolerant? Pain does not recognize personalities, creed, or color.

8. Is she generous? A nurse must often put the needs of her patient before her own pleasures.

9. Is she discreet? A nurse is trusted with many secrets and must have a high sense of honor about keeping them.

10. Is she in good health, physically and emotionally?

Does your daughter have these qualifications? I say "daughter," because, while about four per cent of nurses today are men, the profession is one in which women shine predominantly.

If your girl brings the qualities of mind and heart and spirit that nursing demands, it will give her, in return, rewards far beyond wealth—rewards that never can be lost or stolen: a life of stimulating contacts, honor and respect in her community, and the priceless satisfaction of knowing that every hour of her working life has been of use to others.

Observing and charting a patient's progress from day to day is an important responsibility. Here a nurse puts to practical use one of the many skills she has gained to help others get well.

HOW TO HELP YOUR CHILD PREPARE FOR ANY CAREER

Whether your child is a toddler or in his teens, you are the keystone to whatever career he is to build. Your task is to inspire, guide and make possible. In the course of building his career many people will make contributions: teachers, researchers, specialists of many kinds.

One specialist—and his training and devotion to duty earn that title for him—is your New York Life agent. It is never too soon to enlist his aid—for he can help you to make sure that the future you plan for your child will become a reality.

Booklets available on other careers

This article on Nursing is one of a continuing series on career opportunities for young men and women. Thus far, similar articles have been prepared on Newspapering, Law, Medicine, Accounting, Teaching, Architecture, Aeronautical Engineering, Public Service, Farming, Chemistry and Selling. Each is available in booklet form and will be sent to you on request. You'll also find additional help in our free booklet, "The Cost of Four Years at College." Just write:

nylic

NEW YORK LIFE
Insurance Company
51 Madison Ave., Dept. 12-J, New York 10, N. Y.

The New York Life Agent in Your Community is a Good Man to Know

THE TWELFTH OF A SERIES OF ADVERTISEMENTS PRESENTED TO HELP GUIDE AMERICA'S CHILDREN TO A BETTER FUTURE

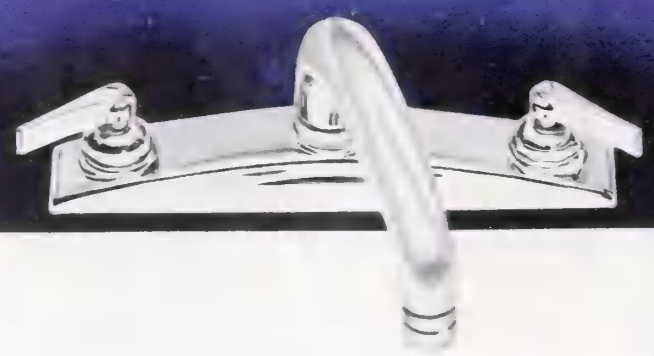
NEW !

contains Bleach !

ONLY CLEANSER THAT BLEACHES PORCELAINS WHITE AS NEW !

BLEACHES AS IT CLEANS. Bab-O scientists have developed a revolutionary cleanser that contains a special bleach. Millions of tiny bleach bubbles of activated oxygen give Bab-O its amazing whitening power.

SAVES RUBS • SAVES SCRUBS • BLEACHES STAINS FROM SINKS AND TUBS as no other cleanser can. Stains from coffee grounds, tea, fruits disappear!



NEW BLEACH "BUBBLE-ACTION" MAKES POTS AND PANS SHINE! Prove it yourself! Take a greasy roasting pan, and see how Bab-O gets under grease and floats it away without hard rubbing. Cuts 4 times more grease—faster than any other cleanser. Try it! Look for the cleanser with the bleach in it! Get Bab-O in the regular or giant economy size, today!

SAFE! The bleach in Bab-O is safe for all fast colors, colored porcelains—safe as a beauty soap for lovely hands.

And M-m-m-m . . . Bab-O smells nice, too!

only Bab-O BLEACHES as it CLEANS cuts 4 times more grease—faster!

Eating for better health

. . . Henderson County, Kentucky

School Lunches Increase

By MARGARET HICKEY

IN many schools today teachers are discovering the importance of teaching the vitamin ABC's along with the three R's. Children usually eat whatever tastes best—or they may not eat at all if they don't feel like it. Lacking stamina, they become restless, fail to learn their lessons.

One of the most practical ways to teach children to like and eat good food is through the national school-lunch program, which operates under the Department of Agriculture with joint Federal, state and local support. The school cafeteria can be an ideal laboratory-classroom where children who have been talking about nutrition with their teachers can actually taste and become familiar with well-balanced meals. And there are obvious physical benefits. Wisconsin principals and teachers observe an improvement in behavior and alertness—and even in classroom work and grades—in children who eat school lunches. Mississippi officials notice better complexion and all-round appearance of good health. A typical South Carolina menu of turnip greens, pork roast, corn muffins, butter or oleomargarine, milk and raw apple (costing 22 to 25 cents) has helped promote better attendance, according to the state school-lunch supervisor.

This year and next the Department of Agriculture is encouraging schools to increase milk consumption by reimbursing schools for each additional half pint served to children. (Funds totaling $50,000,000 for each fiscal year have been advanced by the Commodity Credit Corporation for surplus milk.) A Georgia school now offers, to each child who wants it, a second half pint of milk with lunch at no additional charge. A school in Massachusetts serves milk for 3 cents at midmorning recess. An Arkansas school has installed a milk-vending machine.

Although the number of children participating in the national school-lunch program has been increasing every year, still the program reaches only about one third of the nation's school children. Among the states, Louisiana sets the record with 67 per cent of its children eating school lunches; Mississippi is second with 48.4 per cent.

Recognizing the need to reach the other two thirds of the school children, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, first sponsor of any type of school lunches, has been working for national legislation providing adequate appropriations—a job attracting the JOURNAL'S Political Pilgrims. In school-lunch communities the P.T.A. sees to it that every child has a meal, whether he can afford it or not, still helps get new programs going.

In Stony Point, New York, the P.T.A. sparked a citizen campaign to build a new cafeteria. Eighteen fathers donated labor; Boy Scouts loaned equipment. Within a year, during which about 150 meals a day were served, debts of more than $1100 were paid off. Last year in Plains, Montana, P.T.A. members planted, harvested and froze enough vegetables to provide hot nourishing noon meals at low cost for the 117 children of Plains School. Since the school has no lunchroom facilities, the P.T.A. arranged to serve the lunches in the basement of City Hall, assigned volunteers to escort children to and from the school.

As the Henderson County, Ky., nutrition program, featured this month, shows, it doesn't take money. Community spirit and determination produce results. END

"MARTHA NELL drank a whole glass of milk last night! That's something we never could get her to do." Wonder and pleasure shone in Mrs. Burns' face as she recalled her child's simple statement at dinner: "Teacher said milk is good for you."

Not much to get excited about, ordinarily, except for an anxious mother. But to Public Health Nurse Edwina ("Eddie") Roberts, making her rounds in Henderson County, Kentucky, it was important news too—a promising sign that the Citizens' Health Committee campaign for "better eating habits" for children really was getting results.

There were other indications. At the brand-new county high school, for example, a lumbering 240-pound girl who confessed to her home-economics teacher that she had been drinking eight bottles of soda pop a day asked to make diet and figure improvement her term project. And in the second-grade class at Spottsville school, which had been studying about leafy green vegetables, a stubby, khaki-clad youngster proudly announced that he had made a new "friend"—broccoli—which his mother had served for the first time at his insistence.

Eddie Roberts, small and pert in her navy-blue nurse's uniform and black felt beanie, will insist "we haven't done as much about improving nutrition as we should." But thinking back to 1952 "when we first began getting steamed up," she admits "we have made progress."

It all started one day in January three years ago when Mrs. Roberts paid a regular visit to Smith Mills school. Mrs. Carl Vincent, second-grade teacher, called her aside. "I've been so worried about some of these youngsters," she said. "Most of them don't eat breakfast before they come to school. That pale child in the red coat has been listless and slow in her work ever since she started school. And yesterday two boys got sick and faint—I had to drive them home at noon. I thought you ought to know."

Before she left, Eddie Roberts visited other classrooms. "These children live on farms and have to get up so early to catch the school bus—no wonder they don't get breakfast," another teacher said. "You should see them when they get off the bus. First thing they do is rush into the school store and buy popcorn."

At Central School in Henderson teachers had similar stories. "My class gets restless and inattentive by ten oclock," one CONTINUED ON PAGE 30

ED FEINGERSH

Fifth-grade youngsters at a Henderson, Kentucky, school learn from public-health nurses that green pepper is a body-building, inexpensive food in anybody's diet. A program for better eating habits is part of the educational curriculum.

"You'll love your favorite cake mix Upside Down!"

suggests Betty Crocker

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"It's the easiest way you can think of to have a m-mm-good-tasting party-looking dessert! Just place your favorite fruit or fixings in a frying pan or baking pan (with butter and brown sugar). Pour on a quick-as-quick batter made with a Betty Crocker Cake Mix (tastes so good because you add your own fresh eggs!). Bake...and take a great big bow!

"Be creative, why don't you? Read all about these quick 'n easy upside-down cakes until your mouth waters. Then bake the one you like best...or any other you think up! It will come out well...I can promise you that Betty Crocker Cake Mixes bake perfect cakes—even upside down!"

P.S.—"Our Betty Crocker Cake Mixes are now in Canada!"

Easy! Chocolate Upside-Down Cake! Melt ¼ cup butter in 8" or 9" square pan. Blend in ½ cup brown sugar and arrange ½ cup chopped or whole fat pecans over the sugar mixture. Then pour half the batter made from Betty Crocker Chocolate Devils Food Cake Mix on top of the pecans. Bake for 35 to 40 minutes in a 350° oven. Turn upside down...do not remove for a minute. Bake remaining batter in an 8" or 9" greased and floured pan.

Easy! Black Cherry Upside-Down Cake! Takes Betty Crocker White Cake Mix to make this one. Drain one No. 2 can black Bing cherries (or use one can drained sour red cherries plus ½ cup sugar). Place cherries in 8" or 9" greased square pan. Top with half of batter made from Betty Crocker White Cake Mix. Bake 30 to 35 minutes in a 350° oven. Invert on platter and serve warm with cream. (Use leftover batter for cupcakes.) And be thankful!

Easy! Dutch Upside-Down Cake! This one you'll like! And any child can bake it! First melt ¼ cup butter in 13" x 9½" x 2" oblong pan. Blend in ½ cup brown sugar and ½ tsp. cinnamon. Next arrange thin, thin-sliced apples evenly over sugar mixture—about 4 cups. Pour in a batter made from Betty Crocker's famous Honey Spice Cake Mix. Bake 45 to 50 minutes in a 350° oven. Serve warm . . . warm as the praise it will win you!

Hawaiian Upside-Down Cake! Just melt ¼ er in 9" x 1½" round layer pan. Blend in ½ cup brown Place drained canned pineapple rings, nuts and cherries tty pattern over the sugar mixture. Pour half the batter made from Betty Crocker Yellow Cake Mix over the fruit in the pan. Bake for about 35 minutes in a 350° oven and your cake's ready to be turned . . . and admired . . . upside down. Bake remaining batter in another 8" or 9" greased and floured layer pan.

guarantee a perfect* cake every time you bake cake . . . after cake . . . after cake!"

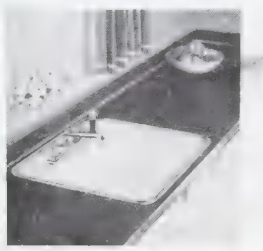
says Betty Crocker

FECT? Yes, we DO mean perfect. You be the judge. If a cake you make with ■ Betty Crocker Cake Mix is less than t, mail the box top to Betty Crocker, Box 200, Minneapolis, Minn., and General Mills will send your money back!



Just add water and your favorite flavoring for perfect Angel Food cake Fast as lightning! Brillo® Soap Pads make the scorchiest, crustiest pan shine like new!

Nothing shines Aluminum like BRILLO Soap Pads

Faucets, counter tops come glossy clean with Brillo Soap Pads. Sturdy metal-fiber pads polish away food stains and sticky spills.

No soaking, no hard scrubbing! Brillo Soap Pads whisk off scorch and crust. No need for messy scouring powders, brushes, dishrags . . . Brillo polishes as it cleans. Every metal-fiber pad is plump with special-formula soap containing jeweler's polish. That's why nothing shines aluminum like Brillo Soap Pads! And Brillo is wonderful for cleaning sticky stove-tops, burners and ovens. Grand for casseroles!

Brillo Soap Pads (red box) Soap-filled pads
Brillo Cleanser (green box) Pads plus cake soap

Aluminum storm windows and door frames stay new-looking with Brillo! Paint specks, weather stains and streaks disappear—fast!

Aluminum canisters, cake covers, ice buckets — so smart, and so easy to keep bright and spotless with thrifty Brillo Soap Pads!

THERE'S POLISHING SOAP IN EVERY BRILLO SOAP PAD

THRIFTIER! 5 and 12 pad boxes

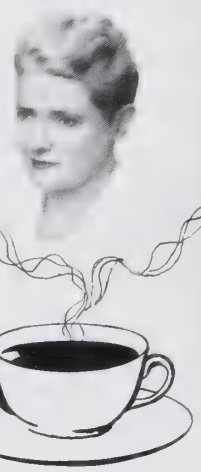
CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27

said. "I'm sure it's because they don't eat breakfast. And it's not a matter of family income either. Lots of parents don't eat in the morning. Don't consider it important." The lunchroom supervisor reported that nearly all the paper-bag lunches brought from home contained jelly sandwiches and cake. "Not my idea of a good meal for a youngster," she added, "when they can have a balanced school lunch for only twenty-five cents." But a number of children weren't eating lunch at all, spent their money instead on ice cream and candy sold at school during recess.

The sale of snacks, in a sense competing with the school health and lunch programs, is not confined to Henderson. In about half the state's counties boards of education authorize principals to use money from their individual school budgets to purchase snacks for resale. Appropriations sometimes are not adequate to cover schools' many minor needs. Usually the snacks are sold in the school bookstore; occasionally they are sold by the principal himself or by students at a table set up informally in the corridor. With the proceeds from the total bookstore sales, the principals may buy necessary schoolbooks, workbooks for children who can't afford them, or they may set aside a fund for a trip for the senior class. The real problem, Eddie Roberts decided, was one of education: to teach the children to like the right kind of foods and to eat well-balanced meals—including good breakfasts and school lunches. After all, as one principal pointed out, "If the children don't buy candy here, they buy it at the corner store."

Man cannot degrade woman without himself falling into degradation; he cannot elevate her without at the same time elevating himself.
—ALEXANDER WALKER

Eddie Roberts took notes on the suggestions and complaints of teachers and reported to Dr. Clarence Harvey, then director of the health department. About this time, August, 1952, the Citizens' Health Committee of Henderson County was looking for a new project. Organized in 1949 by Dr. Bruce Underwood, former Henderson health officer and now state health commissioner, as the first of approximately 60 citizens' health committees now active throughout the state, it had just successfully aroused public interest in support of a $3,000,000 sewage plant. Its membership included representatives from the medical and dental societies, the homemakers' clubs and Farm Bureau, P.T.A., a county magistrate and a citizen at large.



At a meeting called by Chairman James Armstrong, editorial writer for the Henderson Gleaner and Journal, Mrs. Roberts stood up and told the group about her talks with teachers. Almost before she had finished, Doctor Harvey interrupted. "Let me tell you about my examinations at just one of the schools last week," he said. "There were ten children with crusty red eyelids, several with rough-textured skins, flabby muscles—every one a result of improper diet. Six children small and undersized—lacking in growth food. Two overweight, also eating improperly."

"I've heard about enough to be convinced," James Armstrong said. "Can you get statistics to picture all this graphically?"

When school opened, teachers in six schools volunteered to take a survey of what children ate during a single day. After interviewing 238 children above the fourth grade (many younger children, the teachers felt, couldn't name individual items—to them it was all just "food") the teachers turned over their statistics to a group of P.T.A. mother volunteers for tabulation. Working around a table at the health department, these women drew up a chart showing one day's eating habits. Of the 238, only 12 per cent had eaten adequate breakfasts; 24 had had nothing;

CONTINUED ON PAGE 33

"Coffee-break"
with
Mary Margaret McBride

One great help in the "back to church" movement today is the charming hospitality of "a coffee" after the service is over. It does so much to bring neighbors and fellow-worshipers together and make new members of the congregation feel more at home.

When, in similar spirit, you hospitably offer coffee to your guests, I'm sure you make it as delicious as you can. With all the wonderful brands available these days—so perfectly roasted and ground and with their freshness so carefully protected—you've surely found one that's exactly to your taste. It only remains to brew it "just right" every time. Fortunately, that's easy to do. All it requires is that you follow the directions of the Coffee Brewing Institute: Use one Standard Coffee Measure, or two level tablespoons of coffee to each ¾ measuring cup of fresh, cold water. Once you've discovered the right timing for your coffee maker, always stick to it and time it exactly. Coffee should never be allowed to boil. It's best, of course, if you serve it the instant it's done. And if you have to let it stand, keep it hot by putting the pot in very hot water—or leave it on an asbestos pad over the flame.

It's possible that the people who make your favorite brand of coffee have put a Standard Coffee Measure right in the package. But if you haven't one of these convenient little bright-colored plastic measures, just send a dime and your name and address to the General Manager of the Coffee Brewing Institute at the address below and they'll get one to you right away. You'll find it a great help in measuring accurately. And don't forget that accurate measuring and timing is the only way to insure your getting rich, flavorful, fragrant coffee every time!

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

120 Wall St., New York 5, N.Y.

Spring is the time for

THE FRESH LOOK!

Start planning your easy-to-buy Youngstown Kitchen now!

Let your imagination run riot! With versatile Youngstown Kitchens, you can make any kitchen dream come true, at a price you can afford!

Plan a modern, open kitchen like the one above . . . or pick the style that suits you. Flexible, all-steel Youngstown Kitchens units give that lovely, fresh look to any kitchen. They won't warp, rot, swell or stick; they're built to last a housetime.

Your factory-trained Youngstown Kitchens dealer is anxious to help you. Let him explain the budget terms that make your dream kitchen so easy to buy. And be sure he shows you the Youngstown Kitchens Jet-Tower* Dishwasher and the remarkable new Food Waste Disposer. Let him help you plan . . . and give you free decorating advice, too!

Spring's the time for the fresh look. If building or remodeling, specify a Youngstown Kitchen. You'll save!

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

STEEL Youngstown Kitchens

Sold in the United States, Canada and most parts of the world

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • WARREN, OHIO

For name of your nearest dealer, consult the yellow pages of your telephone directory under "Kitchen Equipment—Household," or "Kitchen Cabinets," or call Western Union, Operator 25.

COLORFUL BOOK HELPS YOU PLAN!

Please send me my copy of Youngstown Kitchens' new "Answer Book to Kitchen Planning and Decorating." I enclose 10c to cover mailing. (No stamps, please.)

- ☐ I plan to build a house
- ☐ I plan to buy a house
- ☐ I plan to modernize

Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-355, Warren, Ohio

NAME (Please Print)

ADDRESS

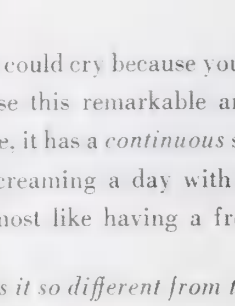
CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

© 1955 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

How you can keep your skin dewy-smooth, with the non-stop softening action of Tussy Moisture Crea

If you could cry because your skin looks dry and aging, use this remarkable anti-dry, anti-age cream. You see, it has a continuous softening action. In fact, one creaming a day with Tussy Moisture Cream, is almost like having a fresh facial every hour!



Why is it so different from the cream you're probably using now?

Largely because it contains "Humidine," along with special beauty oils. Hour after hour, "Humidine" brings invisible, softening moisture from the air, right to your skin!

Follow the arrows for beauty... overnight. At bedtime, stroke Moisture Cream up and out, from throat to forehead; and around your eyes. Now, tap fingertips gently all over your face. As the cream sinks in, its moisturizing action and beauty oils make dry lines, crow's feet and frown creases...less and less conspicuous. Leave it on all night: you'll see that even crinkly neck skin looks smoother, younger!

For dewy beauty all day, dab just a dot of Moisture Cream on forehead, nose, cheeks, chin and throat. Blend it in. You'll be amazed at how much smoother your make-up goes on, and how long it stays on.

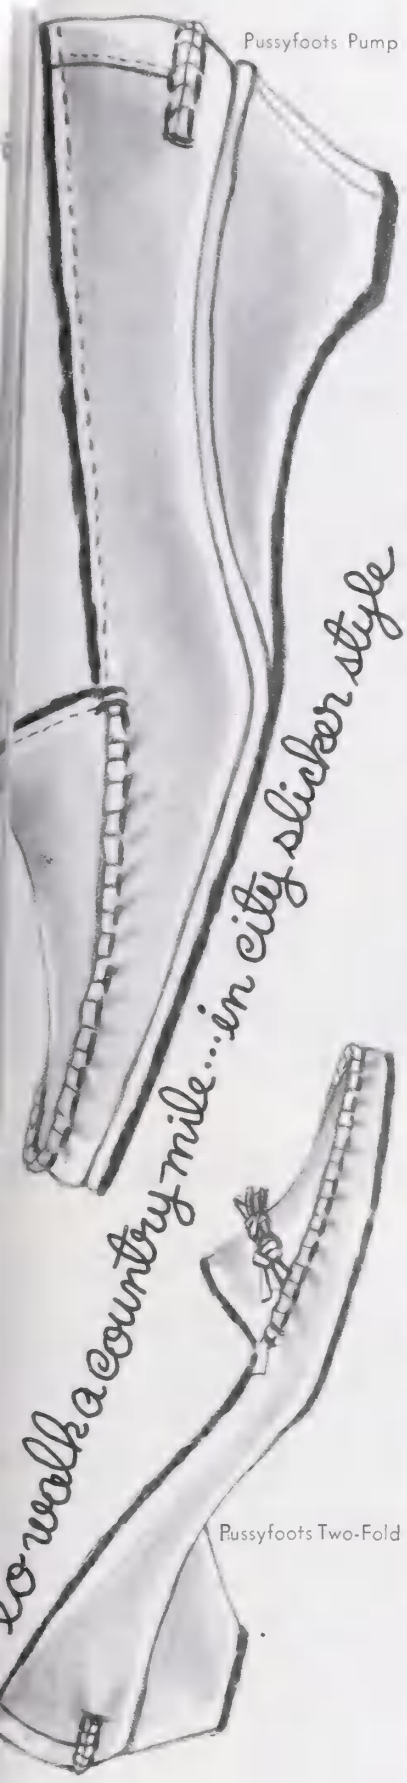
Faithful users of Tussy Moisture Cream have creamed away "years" from their looks. You can, too. It's only $3.

Tussy complete "BEAUTY DIET" for dry skin...



Follow this simple routine planned especially for dry skin.

Cleanse with Tussy Emulsified Cream, $1.25

Brace with Tussy Dry Skin Freshener, $1.00

Beautify with Tussy Moisture Cream, $3.00

prices plus tax

pussy-foots by

OLDMAINE Trotters

MAINE TROTTERS ARE SOLD IN THE FINEST STORES
FROM 8.95 TO 14.95 OR WRITE DEPT. L 3

D TOWN SHOE CO., 179 LINCOLN ST., TON 11, MASS. • FACTORIES IN OLD TOWN, MAINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30

107 had eaten only two items. (One pale-cheeked little girl who had had a glass of milk and a vitamin pill was credited with two items.) The survey also showed that children were not eating enough of the basic foods—only 49 per cent had a minimum of one serving of leafy green vegetables a day; 43 per cent had one serving of citrus fruit; 27 per cent had three to four cups of milk; and 81 per cent had one serving of meat, eggs or dried beans or peas.

This was the information James Armstrong and the Citizens' Committee needed for newspaper and radio reports to the community. As soon as school principals, teachers, P.T.A., county medical society, health department had the facts, the Citizens' Committee announced plans to teach nutrition in the schools, starting with Central and Smith Mills schools. The state board of health assigned Miss Marjorie Murphy, a nutritionist, to help with the project.

"How do you go about teaching nutrition effectively?" teachers immediately wanted to know. "My eating habits aren't much better than the children's," one teacher admitted. "Our textbooks talk about carbohydrates, calcium, phosphorus. How can you expect third-graders to get anything out of that?" . . . "We can tell a child he should eat green vegetables, but suppose he says, 'I don't like them.' What then?" . . . "What about parents? After all, it's the mother who cooks the meals."

Eddie Roberts decided that the best way to answer these questions was at a general meeting after classes. Eddie, whose dark eyes always shine when she talks about health, is one of the most sought-after speakers in town. On an evening when she isn't attending an official function, she sometimes invites a group of high-school seniors to her home to chat over hot chocolate and cookies about careers in nursing.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest, is generally the greatest fool. —COLTON

"Forget the textbooks," was her first suggestion to the teachers. "Instead of talking facts—which bore the children anyway—let's have displays, tasting parties, trips to market." Then her voice took a more serious tone. "Yes, we need adult education too; but if we can put over the idea with youngsters, they'll carry it home."

Three doctors attending the meeting volunteered to take hemoglobin counts of children and provide free iron pills wherever a deficiency was noted. Afterward, Mrs. R. R. Severns, seventh-grade teacher, spoke to the principal of Central School. "Why don't we substitute a fruit-and-vegetable bar for the candy and ice-cream snacks sold at recess?" she asked. "I'd like to make that a class project." Her idea approved, she presented it to the class next day, asked for volunteers to go with her on a shopping tour after school. With part of $10 Mrs. Severns voluntarily advanced, ten youngsters helped in the selection of a bunch of carrots, several apples and bananas, cans of pineapple, orange and grapefruit juice. The next day at ten minutes to ten, when classes began recess, children from all grades flocked to the snack center as usual. But instead of the customary sweet snacks, they saw an entirely new assortment. There was some indecision and hesitation at first as the youngsters inspected the vegetables, fruits and juices. Finally one by one they began making a selection. One little boy decided to try a carrot. After munching a minute or so, he walked over to Mrs. Severns. "This is the first raw carrot I ever ate." And he bought another.

To show how nutrition could be tied into regular class lessons, Nurse Ida Whitledge

CONTINUED ON PAGE 144

STYLE NO. 2912

I love a Lassie!

. . . for putting my fondest fashion dreams well within my reach. This Spring, it's the beautiful fitted coat of Crispella wool crepe with its slender waist and billowing skirt. Of course, the lining is guaranteed for the life of the coat. In grey, charcoal or navy, sizes 8 to 18, $49.95

Write for FREE "Fashion Booklet" and name of nearest store. REPEAT TREAT! . . . Lassie again offers your Personal Perfume Packet . . . 2 bottlettes each of 12 world famous perfumes. Limit, 2 packets per person. Send 50c for each in coin for postage and handling. Lassie Maid, Dept. LJ3, 512 Seventh Ave., New York 18.

"THE ITEM OF GUARANTEED QUALITY"
LASSIE Maid

FAMOUS LASSIE COAT BRANDS: LASSIE JUNIOR, LASSIE MAID, LASSIE PETITE®

COCONUT CREAM

BUTTERSCOTCH

Now! Perfect Pies in half the tim

LEMON

CHOCOLATE

Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corp. Copr. 1955, General Foods Corp.

with Jell-O Puddings and Pie Fillings

VANILLA

LEMON

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

"Our Conover girls know it's successful for every skin type—dry, normal or oily!"

says Candy Jones

Conover School Beauty Director

"Pat Heyer, Smith College sophomore, is already planning an interior decorating career," says Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover). "She knows that in this field—as in so many others—the girl who looks decorative has a big advantage! So last Summer when Pat came to us, she learned our method of complexion care—a twice daily beauty wash with Cashmere Bouquet soap. Hundreds of Conover girls have proved what it can do for every type of skin—dry, oily or normal."

"It's such wholesome beauty care for my oily skin!" reports Pat. "It takes only a second to cream Cashmere Bouquet's gentle, fragrant lather over my face with my fingertips. Then my skin feels so much smoother and softer . . . looks radiant!"

Complexion and big bath sizes

P.S. "Make the most of your Cashmere Bouquet complexion with make-up keyed to your skin tones. For pale skins, a pink or creamy powder; ruddy skins take beige or light tan; while olive complexions look lovely in sun tan."

Candy

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

"So you're Jane's mother. I would have sworn you were sisters."

How to be charming though chewing is one of the niceties discussed by Robert H. Loeb, Jr., in HE-MANNERS, the Facts That Every Young Man Should Know About Etiquette. It may be painfully humorous for many of us, but is no doubt helpful for the high-school boy and his older brother, who really want to know but prefer to be kidded into the knowledge. How to carry on a conversation, how to break the ice, the "thank-you-very-very-much" letters, how to enjoy your own wedding—they are all disposed of.

These are the normal boys, uneasy but eager. BLACKBOARD JUNGLE opened our eyes to the other kind, the blasé, antisocial boys governed by no law but gang law. It was a painful revelation. Now Rocky Graziano, prize fighter, in an autobiography called SOMEBODY UP THERE LIKES ME, goes even further. His is an unabashed confession—a book that carries you into the mind and soul of a criminal. It is not fiction. It is the East Side Italian boy himself, who lied, stole, fought, ran away; who went from reformatory to reformatory until he was old enough to go to prison; who slapped an officer, went AWOL and landed in Leavenworth.

Graziano tells his story to Rowland Barber*, who does a remarkable feat in reproducing it. He retains enough of the lingo to keep the flavor, but not so much as to make hard reading. The impact is terrific. Not a book for the squeamish, it should be read by social workers, psychiatrists, and any others who are willing to face the potential terror of our city streets.*

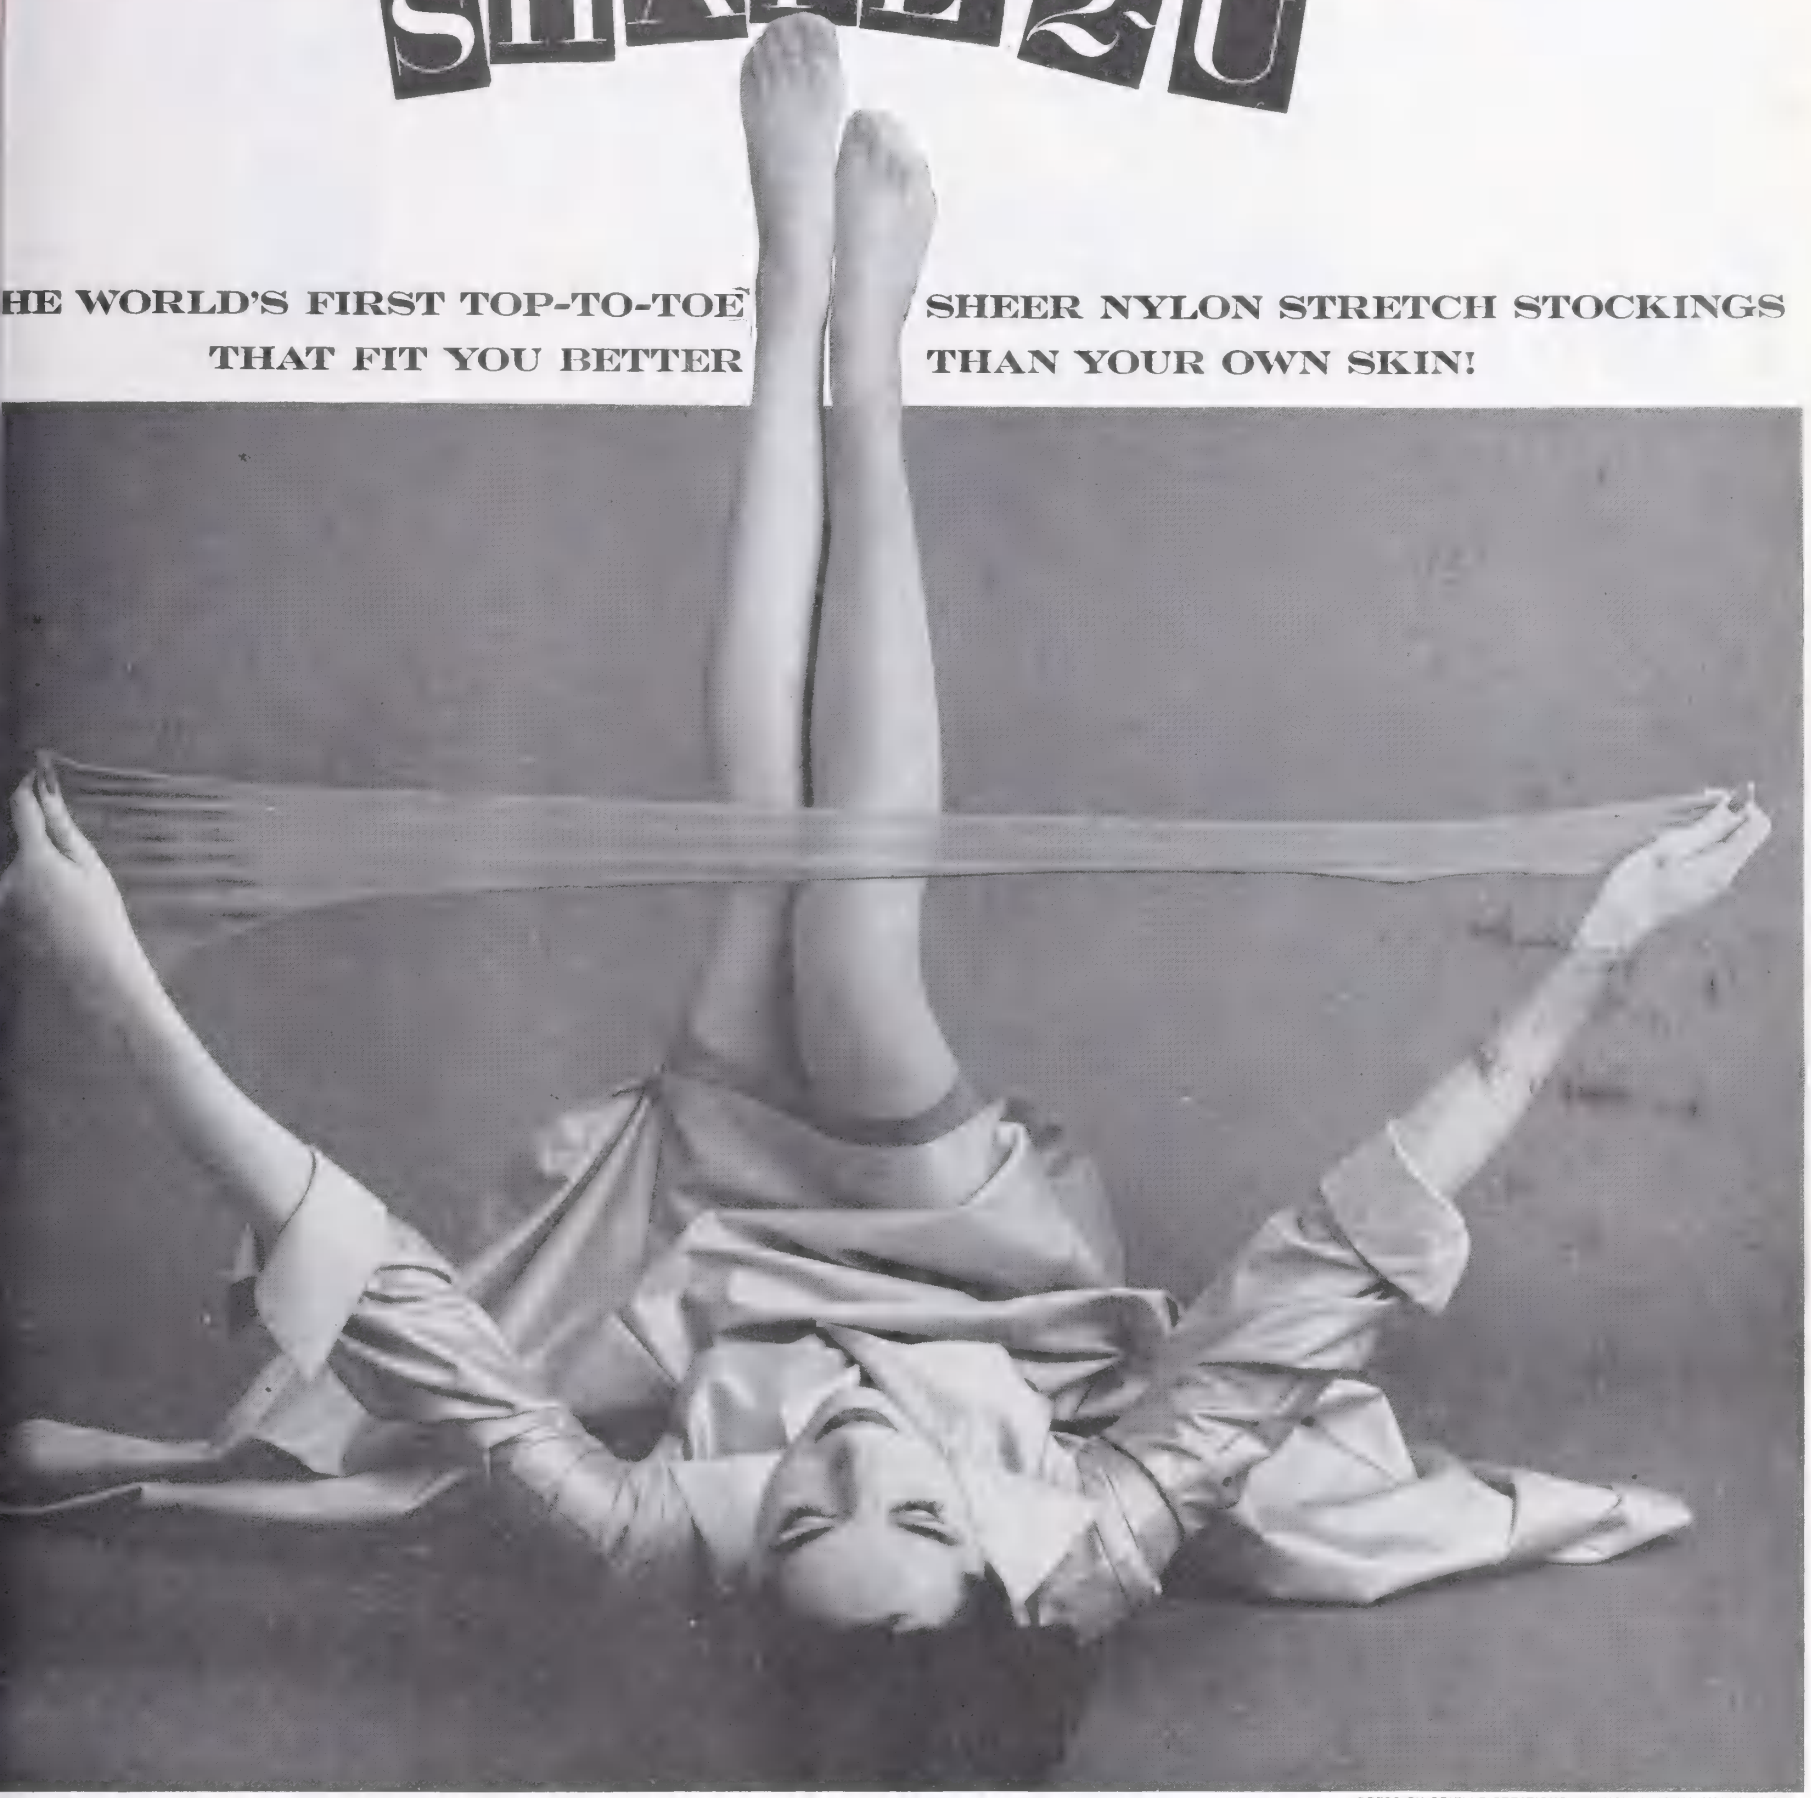
Graziano, as everyone knows, is now a reformed character.

TOWARD THE PREVENTION OF JUVENILE CRIME, by Herbert C. Mayer, is a pamphlet, published by American Viewpoint (122 E. 42nd St., N.Y. 17, 25c), which tells exactly what is being done in that direction.

•

Two young parents who wanted their children to enjoy books more

CONTINUED ON PAGE 38



COLLIER'S KATE OSANN

"Now remember, your strength is as the strength of ten, because your heart is pure."

BUR-MIL Cameo SHAPE-2-U

HE WORLD'S FIRST TOP-TO-TOE SHEER NYLON STRETCH STOCKINGS THAT FIT YOU BETTER THAN YOUR OWN SKIN!

DRESS BY BRIELLE CREATIONS IN BURLINGTON'S "SLIKALENE"

urlington, first with the best, again pioneers. New Bur-Mil Cameo HAPE-2-U perfected sheer nylon stockings stretch comfortably from e toe to the top of the welt—never lose their shape when you walk, and or sit—and banish stocking wrinkles and crooked seams forever.

ever have there been stockings like Bur-Mil Cameo SHAPE-2-U! ney look better and feel more comfortable than any stockings you've ever worn. Three personally proportioned sizes . . . one to fit you perfectly. With exclusive misty "Face Powder Finish" and flattering "Skin Tone" colors to complement your complexion. $1.95 a pair.

Also at your favorite stocking counter: Bur-Mil Cameo Regular Nylon Stockings in seamless and full-fashioned styles. In "Skin Tone" colors, with "Face Powder Finish" . . . $1.15 to $1.65.

"BUR-MIL"® "CAMEO"® "FACE POWDER"® "SKIN TONES" "SHAPE-2-U" AND "SLIKALENE" ARE TRADEMARKS OF THE BURLINGTON MILLS CORPORATION
COPYRIGHT 1955 BURLINGTON MILLS CORP. • PATENT APPLICATIONS FOR THIS PRODUCT AND ITS METHODS OF MANUFACTURE HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE U.S. PATENT OFFICE AND THE PATENT OFFICES OF THE PRINCIPAL FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Presto
Fiftieth Anniversary
Bonus Values

• Now! It's easy to pressure cook!
NEW PRESTO® COOKER
Simple as boiling water! Automatic Air Venting. New Cooking Guide on handle. New Pressure-Tru Indicator. Presto cookers . . . . . from $11.45 (Fair Trade Price)

• Perfect Coffee! Twice as fast!
PRESTO COFFEE MAKER
It's fully automatic! Perks coffee to your favorite flavor-strength twice as fast! Silversmith finish.....$29.95*

• Beautiful . . . and what a cook!
PRESTO COOKER/FRYER
New 2-in-1 automatic electric appliance! Cooks, deep fries, roasts, steams, braises, bakes. Silversmith finish.....$28.95*
Complete with cover and fry-basket.

Presto means quick...
Presto®
means quality!

• Presto—the only tap water vapor steam iron with Scorch Preventer!
VAPOR STEAM AND DRY IRON
Scorch Preventer indicates when heat and steam are perfect for the fabric. And only Presto has it!....$17.95*

*Fair Trade Prices, Fed. Tax incl.

Presto
AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC SKILLET

Presto
AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC FRY-PAN CASSEROLE

FREE!
50th Anniversary Bonus
Heat Resistant Glass Cover!
$2.00 Value.

For 1000 and 1 Dishes!
PRESTO AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC
FRY-PAN CASSEROLE
Perform cooking miracles! Fry, cook, braise everything from bacon and eggs to tempting casserole dishes and serve on the spot. Just set the Exclusive "Sweep" Heat Selector and Presto! . . . Uniform heat automatically. ■ Safe for any table surface ■ Cool, twin-handles ● Stickproof interior ends dunking in water. Cleans in seconds ● Silversmith finish. . . . $21.95
Fair Trade Price, Federal Tax Incl.
Heat Resistant Glass Cover, $2.00. Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00.

4 Automatic Appliances in 1
PRESTO AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC
SKILLET
Here's the Queen of all appliances! An automatic electric frypan, saucepan, casserole and chafing dish—all in one. Plug in anywhere, set Exclusive "Sweep" Heat Selector for uniform heat automatically. No cool corners. Everything "just right" every time! ■ Safe for any table surface ● Stickproof interior ● Award winning design ■ Silversmith finish.
Fair Trade Price, Federal Tax Incl. $24.95
Matching Silversmith Cover, $3.00

50th Anniversary BONUS OFFER!
WITH EVERY PRESTO PRODUCT
NEW PRESTO ELECTRIC TRIVET
Large, de luxe size. A table-top beauty for serving . . . warming food. Black antique finish. Complete with cord. $4.95 Value. Only $2.50. Save $2.45. Ask your dealer.
(This offer good in continental United States only.)

Presto PRODUCTS
Over 21 Million Satisfied Presto Users

Copyright N. P. I. I. 1955

NATIONAL PRESTO INDUSTRIES, INC. ■ EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 36

than television have created a new-type book. This is a children's book with stories and color illustrations to which sound is added by playing the book (yes, the whole book!) on the phonograph. There are four books so far: The Singing Mother Goose Book, The Singing Happy Birthday Book, The Speedy Little Taxi and Noah's Ark (this one with actual wild-animal sound effects). (John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia. 39c.)

Another way to circumvent TV is to gather round the piano and sing. THE FIRESIDE BOOK OF LOVE SONGS is the latest collection of Margaret Bradford Boni, and a fine singable one it is.

Negro parents of teen-agers will be glad to know about the new book on Toussaint L'Ouverture. THE SLAVE WHO FREED HAITI, by Katharine Scherman, is the touching story of that fine, brave, intelligent and capable man. (A Landmark History Book.)

●

"Never underestimate the influence of a" . . . LADIES' HOME JOURNAL editor. In THE TASTEMAKERS, the history of taste in the United States, Russell Lynes says that the man who had the greatest influence on domestic architecture at the turn of the century was the JOURNAL's first editor, Edward Bok.

A long way from that turn-of-the-century taste is THE NATURAL HOUSE, by Frank Lloyd Wright, the man who gave us three-sided houses, perhaps, but who also contributed radiant heating, eliminated cellars and attics, and conceived the "concrete slab." This latest book of his gives a good résumé of his lifework. Actually there is only a difference of six years in the ages of Bok and Wright.

●

And speaking of old-timers, the Hotel Astor in New York is considering a plaque for its lobby: "Presidents Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson, Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge, Herbert Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower Slept Here!"

●

It may confound the experts—the graphologists who tell character from handwriting—but this writer hopes shortly to appear more gracious, more precise and more alluring. This will be when she has studied BETTER HANDWRITING, by George L. Thomson, a concise little book of lessons in italic handwriting, which is a clear and very attractive penmanship, apparently easy to learn. (Penguin Books, 3300 Clipper Mill Road, Baltimore 11, Md. 50c.)

●

On the day that The Silver Chalice was launched as a movie, Virginia Mayo, who plays Helena, the siren, was presented with the three-millionth copy of the Thomas B. Costain book!

●

Storm Jameson's twenty-sixth novel is now out: THE HIDDEN RIVER, the story of an ex-English officer returning to France after the war, and facing the problems of war-crime responsibility and collaboration. It is romance, and nostalgia for the houses, the river, the mists of a day just gone.

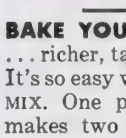
●

"Marriage is many bonds," writes Anne Morrow Lindbergh speculatively. "Many strands, making up a

CONTINUED ON PAGE 43

WHAT'S NEW in Baking Mixes

. . . by PY-O-MY the young company that is always making news with mixes that are original, new and completely different.



HERE'S A NEW DESSERT IDEA . . .
It's PY-O-MY's new PUDDIN' CAKE. Just mix one minute, pour water over the batter (that's right!) and pop it in the oven for just 20 minutes. Out comes a wonderful surprise—on top, a light tender cake . . . below, a rich creamy pudding-sauce. 3 flavors: Vanilla, Chocolate and Caramel Pecan.

EVERYBODY LOVES BROWNIES
You can bake delicious brownies quicker and easier with PY-O-MY Brownie Mix—now packed in the new one-use foil baking pan (at the same price as ever). Makes either chewy, fudgy brownies or cake type (both directions included). Just add water! Bakes perfectly in the foil pan—and no pan to clean! Kids love to bake them (and eat them).

IT'S A WONDERFUL THRILL . . . to bake old fashioned blueberry muffins with PY-O-MY Blueberry Muffin Mix. So easy—everything you need in one package, including a can of juicy blueberries . . . PY-O-MY's delicious muffin mix . . . even paper baking cups! Serve these light textured blueberry muffins often. They'll make your meal tonight something special.

BAKE YOUR OWN COFFEE CAKE
. . . richer, tastier, than you could buy. It's so easy with PY-O-MY COFFEE CAKE MIX. One package makes two big 9-inch coffee cakes for about 15 cents each! With PY-O-MY Coffee Cake Mix you can also make cinnamon rolls, raised doughnuts, pecan rolls . . . even Danish pastries!

ALSO ENJOY PY-O-MY . . .
Pineapple Upside Down Cake Mix—A can of pineapple topping blended with brown sugar is included!

Write for money saving offer
Dept. L, Kitchen Arts Foods, Inc., Chicago 47, Ill.

MARSHMALLOW fluff

Makes Over 100 Delicious Desserts

Ready to use: for toppings, fillings, sauces — for tastier cakes, puddings, salads, gelatine, frozen desserts and sandwiches. Write for "Yummy Book" of recipes, Durkee-Mower, Inc., Dept L3, Lynn, Mass.

JOLLY TIME POP CORN ALWAYS POPS CRISP'N TENDER

Rinses clean under tap -

TUFFY®

Never smells never sours

Cleans off sticky foods, easily, quickly...never scratches

Faster than a dishrag or mop . . . TUFFY whisks off stickiest foods from fine china, yet TUFFY never scratches.

Easier than a brush . . . TUFFY cleans out crusted food, yet never clogs with food scraps. TUFFY rinses clean.

Better than a sponge . . . TUFFY gets between fork tines, cleans out stubborn foods. Yet won't scratch finest silver.

TUFFY is unique... made of plastic loops loosely interlocked. Hand compressible, self-restoring, non-matting, self-cleaning.

©1955, The S.O.S. Co., Chicago . . . U. S. Pat. No. 2,601,771 • • • • • • TUFFY of Canada, Ltd., Toronto . . . Patented 1952, Canada

Cheese

Sea Food Scallop—To 3 tablespoons melted butter add ½ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons chopped green pepper, 2 tablespoons chopped onion. Cook until tender. Stir in 2 tablespoons flour. Add slowly 1¼ cups milk, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, stirring until thickened. Mix in bowl 2 cups of grated Cheddar Cheese, 2 cups of soft bread crumbs. Measure 1 cup flaked, home-cooked fish or use 1, 7-oz. can fish flakes. Slice 2 hard-cooked eggs. Place fish, cheese-crumbs, sliced eggs, sauce in layers in buttered quart casserole. Top with cheese-crumbs. Bake in 375° F. oven 20 minutes. Serves 4.

Tomato-Cheese Soufflé—Over low heat stir 1 can condensed tomato soup with 1 cup grated sharp Cheddar Cheese until cheese melts. Add 1 tablespoon sugar, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ¼ cup finely diced pimiento olives. Separate yolks and whites of 4 eggs. Beat yolks. Stir a little warm soup into them. Slowly add this to cheese-soup mixture. Cool partially. Beat egg whites until stiff but not dry. Fold into soup mixture. Pour into ungreased 1½-qt. casserole. Top with paprika. Bake 40 minutes slow oven—325° F. Do not open oven during baking. Serve at once. Serves 4.

Golden Macaroni Treat—Cook 1½ cup elbow macaroni in boiling salted water until tende —about 10 minutes. Drain. Melt 3 tablespoon butter in 2-quart saucepan. Add 1 sliced mediu onion, 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper, 1 tea spoon Worcestershire sauce. Simmer 5 minute Add 1 can condensed tomato soup, ½ teaspoo salt, dash black pepper. Add macaroni and mi well. Place in buttered 1-quart casserole. Sprin kle 1 cup shredded cheese on top. Bake at 400° F 20 minutes or until cheese melts. Serves 4.

it !

6 one-dish meals you can make in minutes!

Here are six favorite cheese recipes you'll use over and over again . . . recipes that star the tangy, golden goodness of versatile Cheddar. Remember, cheese gives recipes a wholesomeness and nutritive value . . . makes recipes easy to fix and delicious. Keep Cheddar and other wonderful cheeses on hand at all times for snacking and easy meal making.

This message is paid for by dairy farmers across the nation as part of their program to show you how you can live better with foods made from milk.

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

20 NORTH WACKER DRIVE • CHICAGO 6, ILLINOIS

Watch Disneyland (ABC) and Bob Crosby (CBS) on TV
Listen to Bob Hope
on NBC Radio

paragus and Ham with Cheese— 3 tablespoons butter in heavy saucepan over heat. Stir in 3 tablespoons flour, ¼ teaspoon dash red pepper. Add slowly 1½ cups milk, ing until thickened. Stir in 1 cup shredded ddar Cheese until melted. Cut 1 lb. slice smoked in ½ inch strips. Brown in skillet. Place in h baking dish. Over this place 8 stalks cooked nned asparagus cut in half and cheese sauce. with asparagus. Bake in 375° F. oven 15 min- until cheese browns. Serves 4.

Rabbit Sandwich Dinner—Combine 1 can condensed Cream of Mushroom Soup with 1 cup shredded sharp Cheddar Cheese and ¼ cup milk. Stir over low heat until cheese melts; keep warm. Brown 4 slices luncheon meat in 1 tablespoon butter. Remove meat. Beat 6 eggs slightly. Add ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ½ cup milk. Beat. Stir into 2 more tablespoons butter melted in skillet. Cook slowly, gently scraping from bottom and sides. Place scrambled eggs and slices of meat between 8 slices buttered toast. Serve with Cheese-Mushroom Sauce. Serves 4.

Western Franks with Cheese—Split 2 frankfurters end to end and across into 8 pieces. Place 1, 16-oz. can baked beans in shallow 8-inch baking dish. Top with cut frankfurter. Pour ⅔ cup sharp cheese sauce over or top with ½ cup of quick melting cheese. Bake in 375° F. oven for 15 minutes until cheese becomes bubbly and browns slightly. If cheese sauce is used, follow this easy recipe: Sharp Cheese Sauce—Place ¼ cup milk in saucepan with 2 cups of shredded sharp cheese. Cook over low heat, stirring until cheese melts and sauce is smooth and well blended. Serves 4.

Volume control telephone enables user to increase listening volume by simply turning a button. Helpful for people with impaired hearing. Note spring cord, available for all sets at modest one-time charge.

Telephone with a light-up dial that is illuminated as soon as the handset is picked up. Perfect for dark or dimly lit rooms—bedroom, sickroom, television room.

Portable extension telephone plugs into telephone outlets wherever you occasionally need an additional telephone—guest room, dining room, sewing room.

Wall telephone comes in ivory or black. Because it takes up no work space, it's the ideal additional telephone for kitchen, workshop, rumpus room.

UPSTAIRS...DOWNSTAIRS... all around the house

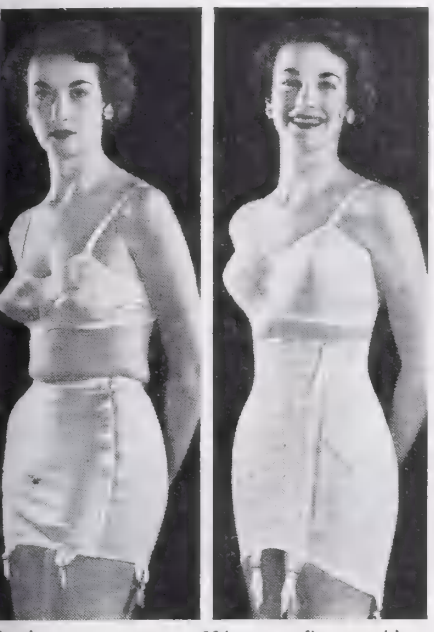
These things made by Western Electric can add to your satisfaction in using Bell telephone service

Shown here are just a few of the items now being made by Western Electric for your Bell telephone company. They're a sample of our continuing effort to make equipment that adds convenience and satisfaction in use of Bell telephone service.

Naturally, as the manufacturing unit of the Bell System, we work hand-in-hand with Bell Laboratories people who design the equipment and Bell telephone people who operate it. It's Western's job in the Bell System to make the things that make good telephone service better. We've been at it for more than 73 years.

For information about availability and moderate charges, call or visit your Bell telephone office.

Western Electric



MANUFACTURING AND SUPPLY UNIT OF THE BELL SYSTEM

Test of color telephones at our Indianapolis pla

Spencer "Prescription" Care brings new solution to figure problems!

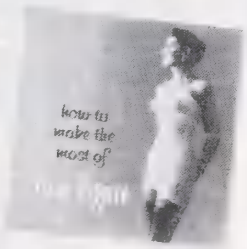
Nearly every woman over 30 has some figure problem.

Read why a Spencer individually designed for you will solve your figure problem



Millions of women have found the happy solution to their individual figure problems in Spencer's famous "prescription" method of individual designing. To assure an ideal-for-you Foundation and Brassiere, the Spencer Corsetiere takes a minimum of 26 measurements!

Only then can your Spencers be individually designed, cut and made for you alone – to bring you unbelievable comfort – younger, firmer figure lines. Spencers are not sold in stores.

ASK YOUR DOCTOR

Thousands of doctors prescribe Spencer Supports to aid treatment of various conditions of the back, breasts and abdomen. If you have troublesome or persistent symptoms, see your doctor.

MAIL COUPON below for valuable Free Spencer Booklet. Or Phone your local Spencer Corsetiere for FREE Figure Analysis. Look in Yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop." Be sure to ask about Spencer Figure-perfect Slips – an exciting new exclusive!

Please send FREE 12-page booklet.
I have marked my figure problem.
I would like to make money as a Spencer Corsetiere ☐

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

3-55

Mrs.
Miss _____
(Print name and address)

Address _____

City _____ State _____

MAIL to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. (In Canada—Rock Island, Que.)

SPENCER®

individually designed foundations and brassieres

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38

web that is taut and firm. The web is fashioned of love. Yes, but many kinds of love: romantic love first, then a slow-growing devotion, and playing through these a constantly rippling companionship. It is made up of loyalties, and interdependencies, and shared experiences. It is woven of memories of meetings and conflicts; of triumphs and disappointments. It is a web of communication, a common language, and the acceptance of lack of language, too; a knowledge of likes and dislikes, of habits and reactions, both physical and mental. It is a web of instincts and intuitions, and known and unknown exchanges. It is woven in space and in time of the substance of life itself."

Anne Morrow Lindbergh, suddenly finding herself on the threshold of her middle years, took a little house near the sea and for a short time gave herself up to contemplation. It was only a brief respite from family and household and friends, but it cleared her mind.

"Perhaps middle age is a period of shedding shells," she thought, walking along the beach. "Perhaps one can at last in middle age, if not earlier, be completely oneself. And what a liberation that would be!"

It might be a good thing for all of us to stand aside from life for a week or a day or even an hour, and try to think things through. In lieu of that we have her little book, GIFT FROM THE SEA, hardly longer than an essay, but the essence of truth. •

ANDRÉ DE DIENES

California's rocky coast.

Seven tall trees still stand on the grounds of Monticello, planted there by Jefferson himself—two tulip poplars, two American lindens, a sugar maple, a European larch and a copper beech. Jefferson used Monticello for experimental planting, and, as someone said, "if he hadn't been famous as a statesman, philosopher and writer, he would have been remembered as one of America's great pioneer biologists and horticulturalists."

That the American aristocrats of Jefferson's day lived graciously is clearly indicated in Howard Swiggett's THE FORGOTTEN LEADERS OF THE REVOLUTION. The ones he writes of are not necessarily forgotten—Livingston, Randolph, Jay, Robert Morris, Aaron Burr, Wadsworth, the Pinckneys—but they were chiefly men of wealth and estates. To these estates they planned to retire as soon as the war was over (the Revolutionary War). Unlike so many of our best men nowadays, they felt no compulsion in the eighteenth century to continue to work for their country. They weren't going to drop dead on the streets, or have strokes from tension. They returned to the cultivation of the land and the enjoyment of their families. Husbands and wives, in that serene day, seem to have enjoyed each other thoroughly, and the only grievous trouble, as Robert Morris

NEW MUM MIST PROTECTS EVEN THE 2 IN 5 WHO PERSPIRE FREELY

Here's deodorant protection you never thought possible!

New Mum Mist spray deodorant stops perspiration instantly and for hours. Contains miracle hexachlorophene to prevent odor all day long—even if you are one of the 2 in 5 who perspire freely.

No more messy running or dripping!

Mum Mist sprays on, stays on. It dries fast—won't run, won't drip. Completely safe for normal skin—won't damage delicate fabrics. For protection that's fast, protection that lasts—get new Mum Mist!

At all toiletries counters 59c

with hexachlorophene

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

WE'LL PAY YOU 50¢ TO TRY*

jonny mop

TRADE MARK PATENT APPLIED FOR

DISPOSABLE TOILET MOP

Pay 98¢ Now, get 50¢ back. Here's how...

Cut out demonstration picture numbered "1" from "Jonny" Mop handle package. Mail this picture to Personal Products Corp., Dept. LH-35, Milltown, N.J. with your name and address. We mail you 50¢.

P.S. You'll throw away that germy, drippy toilet brush forever.*

PERSONAL PRODUCTS CORPORATION, MILLTOWN, N. J.

and others knew only too well, was debt—punishable in those days by imprisonment.

Swiggett gets his facts from the correspondence of the men themselves, which seems to be available in great quantities in historical museums, and he interprets them with exceptionally good sense and a sound knowledge of the period.

To see the influence of these cultivated early Americans on our country's later history, read POLITICS IN AMERICA, by D. W. Brogan. Englishman Brogan, with the advantages of perspective, sees American politics more clearly than most American political scientists, and gives an admirable clear analysis and summary of our various political institutions.

THE PUBLIC PHILOSOPHY, by Walter Lippmann, probes deeper. He is concerned with nothing less than the decline of Western democracy. He elucidates what he believes has brought on this state of decay, and intimates what radical changes in governing may be necessary to stem it. A profoundly serious study.

•

Sylvia Wayde, wife of Willis Wayde (SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE), is the most fascinating figure in all Marquand literature, to my way of thinking—a cool, objective, sharp-witted, literary-minded, thinking person, fresh out of a professor's casual family, married to a self-conscious, uncultivated, single-minded, unfeeling, unhumorous businessman. She gets every nuance of her husband's rationalizing and double talk, she sees through every lapse in ethics with absolute clarity, she shudders at his clichés. Yet she remains by his side. This novel is a merciless dissection of two people, and if by any chance you failed to read it as it appeared in the JOURNAL, I certainly recommend looking up the back numbers or buying the book, which is now out.

"And I say to you without fear of contradiction . . ."

•

A DICTIONARY OF LAST WORDS may sound like gruesome reading, but it is fascinating to see how a personality shines through. After all, death is drama, and one's last words may be a striking curtain. Here are a few of these final utterances collected by Edward S. Lecomte:

Mozart, speaking of his "Requiem": Did I not tell you that I was writing this for myself?

J. Pierpont Morgan: Don't baby me so!

Balzac, who wrote harder and worked longer than probably any other novelist: I can no longer read or write.

Pavlova, always to be remembered for her one famous dance: Get my Swan costume ready.

Henry James: So here it is at last, the distinguished thing!

Prince Albert, husband of Queen Victoria: Good little woman. END

Corns

CALLOUSES—BUNIONS—SORE TOES

Pain Stops in SECONDS!

Nothing ever before like it

1. Stops pain at its SOURCE . . .
2. Removes Corns, Callouses one of the FASTEST ways known to medical science . . .
3. Stops Corns, Callouses BEFORE they can develop . . .
4. Prevents Sore Toes, Blisters . . .
5. Eases New or Tight Shoes

No wonder extra soft, soothing, cushioning, protective Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are the world's largest-selling foot reliefs—for no other method does all these things for you! Get a box today. At Drug, Shoe, Dept., and 5-10¢ Stores.

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

CROOKED TOES?

This highly effective device of soft, flexible rubber — Dr. Scholl's TOE-FLEX—tends to gradually straighten crooked or overlapping toes by exerting an even, outward pressure. Worn invisibly. Very comfortable. Sizes, Small, Medium, Large. Only 75¢ each

Get to feeling GOOD AGAIN!

Take Alka-Seltzer
BRAND
for
ACID INDIGESTION

ALKA-SELTZER relieves over-acid stomach with instant alkalizing action, soothes and settles an upset stomach. Feel better FAST with refreshing ALKA-SELTZER!

AT ALL DRUG COUNTE

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., ELKHART, IND.

SNUG AS A BUG...ON SOFT, WARM CARPET

any one, any time, any where, ever say "snug bug on a cold hard floor"? Of course not! gness goes with rugness – and where there's et, you find warmth, safety and cozy com- not only for baby but for all the family. arpet adds so much to family living. The quiet arpet makes your home a restful haven. The uty of carpet swells your heart with pride as you welcome in friends and neighbors. And carpet is so easy to keep clean with a whisk of your vacuum—no tiresome scrubbing, waxing or polishing.

Lovely long-wearing carpet costs far less than you think. And it's so easy to buy on convenient budget terms. Why wait? Ask your dealer to show you the exciting colors and textures of today's new rugs and carpets.

Buy carpets designed and made for the American way of life by these American manufacturers:

Artloom • Beattie • Bigelow • Downs • Firth
Gulistan • Hardwick & Magee • Hightstown • Holmes
Karastan • Leedom • Lees • Magee • Masland
Mohawk • Nye-Wait • Philadelphia Carpet
Roxbury • Sanford • Alexander Smith

CARPET INSTITUTE, INC. 350 Fifth Ave., N.Y. 1, N.Y.

HOME MEANS MORE — WITH CARPET ON THE FLOOR

MORE QUIET, MORE COMFORT, MORE BEAUTY, EASIER CARE

SALLY VICTOR HAT; CASTLECLIFF JEWELRY; AND UNDER THE SUIT, A SACONY GIRDLE

*PALM BEACH TRADEMARK REG. BY GOODALL-SANFORD, INC., MFR. OF

How to buy this $25 Sacony suit of Palm Beach* cloth

Look closely at this suit. Sacony makes it in non-wilting Palm Beach cloth, with removable underlays of speckless white piqué. It costs $25. And you can buy it right now in twelve colors and misses, petite and half sizes. Here's how to buy it. What store near you sells Sacony fashions? Make a bee-line for that store. But take this page along with you. It will help you locate the right department and the right suit. If you don't know what store to go to you can find out within the next five minutes. Just dial the telephone number of Western Union. Ask for Operator 25. Tell her you want to know where to buy a Sacony suit. She'll be back with the answer in a jiffy. Or you can write Sacony, College Point, New York and expect store names by return mail. (These Sacony suits are made and sold at $27.50 in Canada. For Canadian store names, write Sacony, 423 Mayor Street, Montreal.) Now the important thing is to act fast.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph.D.
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psychology

Making marriage work

When a quarrel ends the honeymoon, a quiet discussion may begin the real marriage.

That First Quarrel

THE emotionally mature husband and wife don't try to solve problems by pretending they don't exist. To do so leads to frustration and resentment. Instead, they admit differences frankly, then try to adjust them. Their relationship is based, not on make-believe but on mutual understanding. For differences of opinion, taste and habit are the essence of personality. Trying to suppress or ignore them denies the individual his right to be himself.

Unfortunately, many young couples begin life together with the romantic notion that marriage magically erased all sources of friction between them. Then the first quarrel comes as a complete shock. Hurt and bewildered, they wonder uneasily if their marriage was a mistake.

During the honeymoon, absorbed in their love, they were undisturbed by the commonplace necessities of earning a living and running a house. For the first weeks or months at home, each is more concerned with pleasing the other than with personal needs or wants.

But as the novelty wears off, little problems and irritations gradually intrude. Instead of smiling at Bill's small-boy habits as she picks up his pajamas and mops the bathroom floor after his shower, Mary finds these extra chores an irritating evidence of his thoughtlessness. At first Bill was indulgent about her garbled accounts, but he's less patient when she confesses she hasn't money enough for the grocery bill.

As grievances pile up, tension mounts until something sets off the explosion. The difficulty may be serious; more often, it is merely an irritating trifle. In either case, the incident was the excuse for the quarrel, but not the basic cause.

The real trouble lies in their failure to find a realistic method of resolving differences. The first quarrel will be followed by others more serious unless something is done to improve mutual understanding. The wife will gladly take the lead, if she wants to avoid quarrels and to foster the happiness of her marriage.

Come down to earth. Perhaps you expect too much of your husband and of marriage. It isn't practical or healthy to remain wrapped up in each other to the exclusion of family, friends and community, let alone job demands. When he brings work home at night, don't complain that he no longer loves you, or make childish attempts to get his attention. Be resourceful enough to occupy yourself when he is busy.

Accept him as he is. Basic character traits can be modified only gradually if at all. Give up any idea of reforming him overnight. Nor is it worth while to make an issue of annoying personal habits like faulty table manners or his use of tiresome slang. With love, patience and good humor, perhaps you can help him overcome any weakness that seriously disturbs you. Meanwhile, accept what you can't change, and ignore trifles.

Go more than halfway. The person you can most easily change is yourself. If you have habits that irk your husband and aren't important to you, give them up. If your smoking disturbs him, ask yourself whether a cigarette is worth the argument it will provoke. He is more likely to profit by the example of your behavior than by lectures about his.

Encourage discussion. The time to settle quarrels is before they start. Be alert to his needs, wants and preferences, and ask him to explain his point of view when differences arise. If you listen with an open mind, you may find you agree with him after all. If not, tell him calmly and reasonably how you feel. Talk it over until each understands (though does not necessarily share) the other's attitude.

Learn to compromise. By talking it over you can find an acceptable compromise. To be workable, the settlement must meet three criteria: it must be one that both will try to abide by, it must bring satisfaction to one without unpleasantness to the other, and it must reduce tension.

Painful as it is, the first quarrel can serve a useful purpose if correctly interpreted. It does not mean that the marriage is doomed to failure. It may mark the end of the honeymoon, but if it leads to better understanding and more mature perspective, it marks the beginning of real marriage.

Ask Yourself:
"Do I Spoil Him Too Much?"

A loving wife wants to do more for her husband than take care of his actual needs; she gladly provides little extras of comfort and service as well. Husbands thrive on pampering in moderation, but a mature relationship is impossible if either partner does all the giving. Answer the questions below to see if you are overdoing it.

Do you generally or always

1. Accept his opinions without question?
2. Do all his shopping for him?
3. Keep quiet about your own wishes?
4. Take over any chores he dislikes?
5. Take the blame for his mistakes?
6. Seek favors from others for him?
7. Accept his unwarranted criticism without protest?
8. Perform personal services like polishing his shoes?
9. Accept his choice of radio and television shows?
10. Stint home needs so he can spend more?
11. Let him dictate your entire wardrobe?
12. Assume he's always right?
13. Run errands he could do more easily?
14. Humor his whims, however inconvenient?

With more than eight "yes" answers, you are probably spoiling him more than is good for him—or you. But with four or fewer, you may be too insistent on your "rights" to be a co-operative partner. Try to find the happy medium between unhealthy spoiling and affectionate indulgence.

What the Counselor is Not

MANY marriage problems could be relieved or prevented if more people sought counsel at the right time, and about the right things. The counselor is not a magician, an accountant, nor Santa Claus, as some of my mail might indicate. Recently, letters from strangers have asked me to:

Analyze a couple's spending and recommend a budget.

Relieve financial problems with an unsecured loan or outright gift. (Many of these.)

Endorse an unfamiliar community project as benefiting marriage and family life.

Donate to projects as above.

Write a mother-in-law advising her to stop interfering in her son's (daughter's) marriage.

Ask a third party unknown to me to arbitrate a dispute between an unknown husband and wife.

While it's reasonable for a distressed couple to discuss their financial problems with the counselor, his role is to help them find a solution, not to prescribe it. Further, he needs detailed knowledge of the circumstances and personalities involved if his comments are to be useful. As for the other requests, he has neither reason, inclination nor resources to fulfill them.

What the counselor can do is help people consider their problems objectively. He reassures them that their difficulties are not unique, and describes solutions that have worked in similar cases. With their co-operation, he can help them achieve better understanding of each other and themselves. Above all, he encourages them to try.

Many couples blessed with insight and wisdom intuitively adopt a similar approach. In effect, they are their own counselors. But others, less perceptive and less emotionally mature, get into progressively worse trouble until they seek professional counsel.

Throughout marriage, it is the wife's responsibility to take the initiative in fostering understanding and preventing friction. If her efforts are inadequate, she will be wise to seek impartial guidance from a qualified outsider (not a relative), whether he be a counselor, minister, family physician or attorney.

The sooner she acts, the better. Emotional difficulties, like physical ailments, respond most favorably when treated early. But no matter when or to whom she turns for help, counsel can accomplish little without the wholehearted co-operation of both husband and wife. It is they alone who can make their marriage work. If more couples observed this principle, counselors would be less burdened—and divorce courts less crowded.

Do You Agree?

Are marriages today happier than those fifty years ago?

I think so. The much higher divorce rate probably reflects less willingness to tolerate an unhappy state.

Air Step's MAGIC SOL

Hat by Mr. John

see them at your retaile

55 rings you fashion with a bonus of comfort

...press lightly and feel it...

What kind of shoe fashion do you want this spring? A feminine sandal? A graceful Easter suit shoe? A proud pump? Whatever you want, you'll find it, done with taste and thought in the newest styles in Air Step's Fashion Fair. And, with its styled beauty comes Air Step's Magic Sole comfort. You can prove it by pressing lightly with two fingers.

BANDERO

VARIETY

EDEN

art of Air Step's fashion is ort of the Magic Sole . . .
t, airy cushion skillfully to pillow your every step.

Division, Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis

Shoes illustrated

10^{95} to 12^{95}

Other styles $8.95 to $12.95

Higher Denver West

Air Step®

SHION FAIR, February 25 to March 26

THE SUB-DEB edited by

Ruth Imler

He thinks she's smooth;
she thinks he's sophisticated;
neither can guess
the other's prom-night jitters.

TANA HOBAN

Who isn't Shy?

EVERYBODY'S shy—especially where a dream's concerned. John'll say . . . and then I'll say . . . and he'll decide I'm the most interesting girl he's ever met; I'll walk into the party, smile, tell a funny story and the gang'll be at my feet; I'll stand up and make a brilliant suggestion and the club treasury'll be saved. . . .

Unhappily, the lucky girl with the imagination for such dreams can have nightmares too: Of course I'll say the wrong thing to John; I'll tell my story and nobody'll laugh; I'll make the motion and nobody'll listen. Isn't it so?

It needn't be. There are many other ways to use your imagination: to dream even bigger dreams . . . and to make some of these everyday-type dreams come true—if not tomorrow or next week, eventually.

With those V. I. P.'s. Very Important People—a new date, your steady's mother, or a visiting author, for instance—are just like other people: extremely pleased when you go to a little extra imagination to find out what they're like and what their interests are or might be.

If you give it—them, not you—some advance thought, you'll always have something to say to them. If it's an athletic boy, take a glance at the sports page before your date. If it's a boy with a sense of humor and a dog, that funny feature about the dog show that you read in yesterday's newspaper will fit into the conversation. Get the idea?

Your steady's mother is interested in church work? Then she'll be interested in hearing about the last bazaar your church gave and how they solved the entertainment problem.

As for visiting authors, or any "celebrities," do make the effort to bone up on their accomplishments; don't be afraid to confess that you're so thrilled to meet them you can hardly hold a pencil. They'll love you for your youth and candor.

At That Very Important Party. When you start feeling scared and shy, remind yourself that shyness doesn't have to show. It won't if you: 1—do everything a little more slowly than you usually would, so you won't awkwardly bump into someone or trip over the corner of the rug; 2—if you help the hostess change the records, pass the sandwiches; 3—if you go up and talk to someone else who is standing alone or who has been sitting too long in one corner; 4—if you pause every once in a while and tell yourself that "I'm Jane Drake and I have pretty eyes and I'm a good ice skater," and so on.

A Very Important Project. Do you ever use any of these excuses for not trying to make friends or for not joining a group?

"I'm just not interested."

"I haven't the time."

"I'm sorry, but I just can't—I'm too bashful."

"Our living room is too small for parties."

"My mother and father are shy too."

You do? That's a calamity. Because true or, more probably, not, such reason-excuses aren't—by themselves—strong enough to tie you up in knots of self-consciousness. There is something you can do for and about yourself.

You can:

Jump to positive conclusions. Often shy people—afraid to trust their own judgment—turn to others for reassurance. Q.: "Honestly, Peggy, how do you like my new dress?" A.: "It's pretty, but one with a full skirt would do more for you." Such criticism may sting—but in this case it was asked for. If you can't take it, keep some of those doubts to yourself. Remember that the honest critic is only expressing an opinion of a dress—not of you or your taste. Learn from such criticisms, then forget them. Instead, make a mental scrapbook of every nice thing that's ever been said about you. If this doesn't make you feel better, write them down and read them over before every crucial date!

Be a little bit independent. A girl with an air of independence usually seems sure of herself—a most engaging quality to any boy who is a little bit shy himself. (Nearly all of them!) Earning, saving and spending your own money is one form of independence. Another is to break any childish bonds of dependence on mom. Does she still have to nag you about getting your homework done? About cleaning your room? About the condition of your clothes? M'm-m-m—enough said? Finally, dare to go to a club meeting or a mixer dance alone occasionally. Why depend on a best friend—as a prop?

Play the part. It's been said that there's an actress in every woman. How much is there in you? Why not look the part of the trim, freshly scrubbed and vital teen-ager? (Daily good grooming is even more important than being "all dressed up" for a party. Just suppose you met the man of your dreams—unexpectedly—in the grocery store. How do you know you won't?) And why not act the role? Brush up on your etiquette; learn how to dance and to play one sport; practice telling little stories about school happenings to your family. Superficial poise? Maybe. But an awful lot of shyness is superficial too—especially at your age. Use as your script, still theatrically speaking, Sub-Deb Booklet No. 2583, How to Overcome Shyness, 10c from Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania. It'll clue you to some minor magic which we've tried—with success.

That Ivory Look

oung America has it...

You can have it in 7 days!

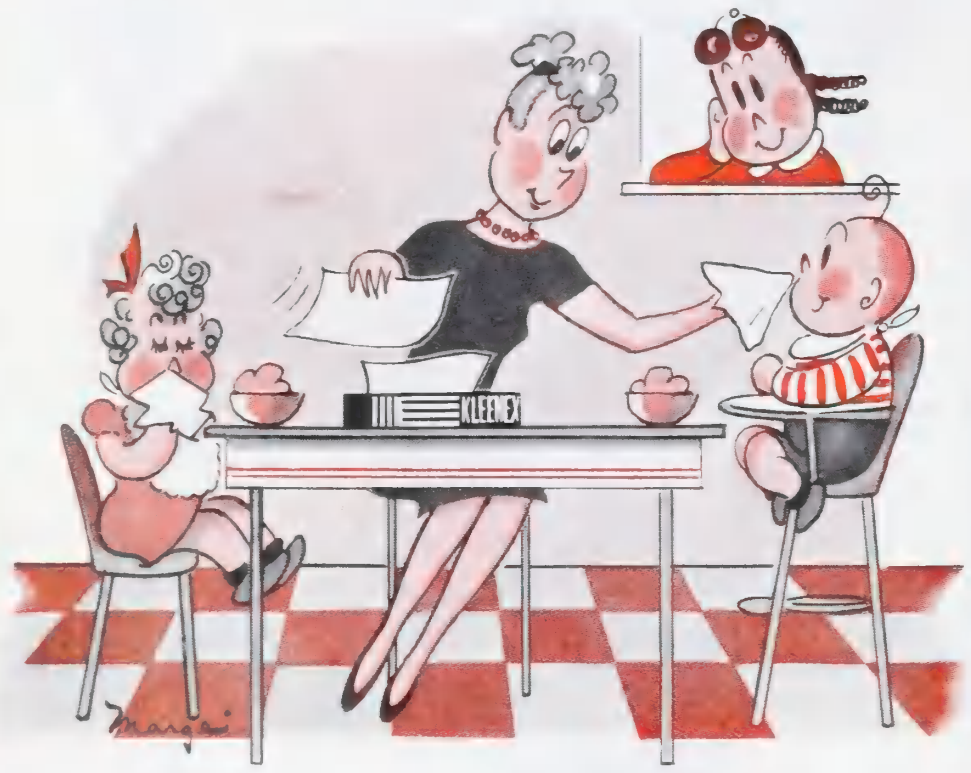
Babies have That Ivory Look . . . why shouldn't you?

The milder the beauty soap, the prettier your complexion. And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin. Why, more doctors advise Ivory for baby's skin—and yours—than any other soap.

You can have That Ivory Look 7 days from now!

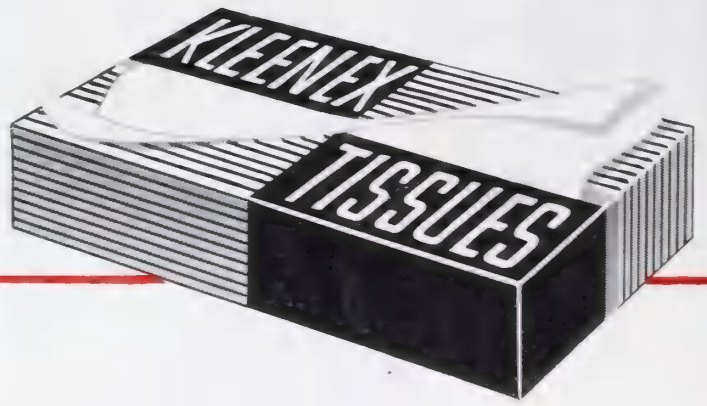
Picture your complexion looking fresher, clearer, younger. Picture you with That Ivory Look! It happens in only 7 days, when you start cleansing your skin regularly and use pure, mild Ivory Soap.

99 44/100% pure... it floats



More doctors advise Ivory than any other soap

Did you ever?



By LITTLE LULU

A tissue box can cause such waste it really is a crime!
Why not use the handy box that serves one at a time?

For Kleenex "pops up"—sturdy, soft,
and nimble as a bunny!
By serving only what you need this box saves tissues, money!

Be thrifty–Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

For extra softness–extra strength

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. © INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

My friend insists that she knows a nan who had a baby after the change ife. Is this possible?"

SCARCELY need tell you that I am very ntened, Doctor," the patient added as she ched him setting down on the history l answers to questions he had asked.

I wouldn't be alarmed until we know that e is really something to worry over. Now," aid, "let's see if I have the facts correctly. forty-seven. Two children, twenty- e and twenty-one respectively. No abor- s. Usual diseases of childhood, but no sequent illnesses or operations. Menses at rteen. Regular menstrual periods, twenty- t-day cycle, four to five days. Moderate , no pain. Last menstruated June tenth, 3, as usual.

That is about eighteen months ago, and obably signified the onset of the meno- se. Tell me this: Have you had any nerv- or circulatory symptoms during the last and a half? Any hot flashes?"

No, Doctor."

You seem to have been unusually fortu- e. What is it that has really disturbed —I mean why did you come to see me?"

Because I'm so frightened, Doctor. You I know that I'm growing a tumor—I can it with my hands. I first noticed it two or e weeks ago, but then I thought it was ention due to faulty elimination. Now I see that it has increased in size and I w that I am getting a cancer."

I wouldn't be so sure of that." The doctor ok his head. "In fact, I have a presenti- t that you are wrong. There are many ors other than cancers—if indeed you e a tumor at all. And a cancer does not ally develop in the way you have de- bed. However, we shall soon find out— re, at least, than we know now. Will you se follow the nurse to the examining m?"

he examination was thoroughgoing and gthy but, as he worked, not once did the tor lower the barrier he had set against patient's continuing barrage of questions. I'll tell you all about it later," he assured "Nurse, will you bring the patient into office when she is ready?"

A little later, seated across the desk from worried woman, the doctor faced her di- ly. "I can assure you now that you do not e cancer."

"But there is a tumor of some sort?"

"My dear lady, the only reason for the symptoms which you have noticed is that you are pregnant."

"Doctor! You are ——"

"If you are on the point of calling me a fool, I will forgive you, for I know this news comes as a great surprise. But it is true just the same. There is no chance at all of doubt."

"But I just can't be pregnant, Doctor! I'm already past the change of life—you said so yourself. I told you I haven't menstruated for nearly two years."

"Nevertheless, you are pregnant."

"But how could that possibly be?"

"It isn't common, but it is entirely possible."

"I can't believe it. Why, I've never heard anything so fantastic!"

"I'll try to explain it to you. Tell me, do you understand the mechanics of the menstrual cycle?"

"I think so because I heard you when you explained it to my daughter. An ovum is produced at regular intervals, and along with it there are hormones which develop to stimulate the lining of the womb to grow and prepare for its reception. And if the fertilized ovum doesn't reach the womb the old lining is cast off and that makes the menstrual flow."

"Yes, that's right. I might add that when the change of life approaches there are certain retrograde changes in the womb's lining which cause the menstrual flow to diminish and eventually cease entirely. But it is entirely possible in certain cases for the ovulation to go on taking place even after the retrograde uterine changes have occurred. And in the very rare case such an ovum is capable of becoming fertilized, finding its way into the womb and going on to development. Of course it has to fight for its existence in a medium not properly prepared for its advent, but it is entirely possible that it can do so successfully."

"And such cases have happened?"

"Oh, yes indeed. Authentic so-called 'change-of-life babies' are reported occasionally."

"How long after menstruation stops can this occur? Two or three years?"

"It is certainly more likely to happen then. However, medical literature lists some very remarkable exceptions. One of the older authorities reports a woman who delivered a living child twelve years after the menopause. And another described the case of a woman who had five labors and one abortion after her fiftieth year."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 55

tor Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of nen, containing several chapters which have not eared in the Journal, has been published by Haw- n Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Never put make-up on a "bare" skin ——

First— this satinizing base!

Sheer, greaseless—it protects as it flatters!

You've surely noticed . . . on others . . . how heavy make-up, or sometimes even face powder, spotlights skin flaws, instead of hiding them! Powder may catch in drifts on flaky patches . . . and emphasize tiny lines. Heavier make-up "fills in" pores, magnifies them.

Yes . . . without this satinizing base, the flaws of a "bare" skin just will catch—and hold—tinted make-ups. And instead of the fresh, young look you want, your skin appears coarsened, older.

Always—before you make-up or powder, film on an invisible veil of greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream . . .

Instantly it protects a freshly-cleansed skin

Helps powder cling hours longer

Keeps heavy make-up from "puddling" in pores

Discourages make-up from streaking—because Pond's Vanishing Cream is greaseless

See how a filmy base of Pond's Vanishing Cream makes make-up behave . . . see the smooth, fine-textured look it gives your skin. Now your skin has a delightful, young freshness so lovely to see!

Mrs. Anthony A. Bliss

To protect her delicate blonde complexion, this beautiful young social leader always smooths on Pond's Vanishing Cream. "I love the way Pond's Vanishing Cream makes my skin feel and look," Mrs. Bliss says. "It's a divinely sheer base . . . yet it keeps my powder new-looking for hours!"

Bring back your skin's fresh sparkle tonight—with this quick 1-Minute Mask!

Before dressing to go out, cover your face with a snowy-cool mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream. The Cream's "keratolytic" action dissolves away flaky dead skin . . . "tones up" your complexion. After one refreshing minute, tissue off the Cream. Your skin feels satiny-smooth . . . looks so much finer-textured, younger!

Saratoga Group, as shown, Sofa $160. Chair $99.50. Also available: Twin Sectional Sofa, with or without arms, right or left, each $115. Quarter Curved Sectional $145 (prices slightly higher in some areas)

A lighter, brighter fashion in furniture... set off so perfectly with colorful textured tweeds!

In this bright new world of ours, everybody's looking at color! And now is a wonderful time to bring exciting new color into your home . . . with this superbly styled, incredibly comfortable new Kroehler Furniture.

Happiest thought of all: here is furniture with an assured future! It's Cushionized* to stay young and beautiful for years and years of good living. Treat yourself to an "in person" look at the new Saratoga Group . . . so easy to own with the liberal terms offered by most Kroehler Dealers.

World's Largest Furniture Manufacturer

KROEHLER

Say (KRAY-ler)

General offices: Chicago 11, Illinois In Canada: Stratford, Ontario

ombine Style istinction with Real Foot Freedom

ou'll quickly discover what real walking ase is like when you step out in your first air of supremely comfortable, foot-flattering r. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. Scholl's ientifically designed lasts, their glove-like, ot-cradling fit makes them ever so kind your feet. No "breaking-in" discomfort.

r. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for l types of feet — Women's, some styles 2½ 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Men's, 5½ 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly fitted at r. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe nd Department Stores in principal cities. If ot obtainable locally, write for catalog, Dept. 3, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 53

"And you're really positive that this is pregnancy and not a tumor?"

"I am as certain of it as I am that I am talking to you this minute."

"Aren't there tests that could make us absolutely sure?"

"I see no reason for putting you to the trouble and expense of such tests. I would be willing to go before a court of law and make a deposition under oath that you are at least five months pregnant."

There was a period of silence while the patient frowned and twisted a wisp of handkerchief nervously. Suddenly her mood seemed to change. "I owe you an apology, Doctor," she said with a show of embarrassment. "In all the years you've taken care of my family you have never misinformed us."

"And you may be sure I don't intend to start now."

"Of course not. I hope you can understand that this news is quite upsetting. At my time of life! Imagine how everyone will laugh!"

"I wouldn't worry about that if I were you. The probability is that your friends will be very happy for you and I imagine there will be many who will envy you."

"If I'd only had the slightest bit of warning it wouldn't be such a shock. So it is ovulation that governs pregnancy and not menstruation."

Nothing is impossible. We merely don't know yet how to do it.
—THOMAS A. EDISON

"That would seem to be the case, although you must not rule out menstruation completely as a factor."

"Of course, even if I had known about that, there would have been no means of knowing that I was still ovulating."

"On the contrary, it is quite possible. I might even have told you how to ascertain it for yourself. Did I ever explain to you about basal body temperatures?"

"I don't think so."

"Well, here's the way they work. The normal temperature of the human body is considered to be 98.6 degrees. But it has been proved that there are slight variations at different times during the monthly cycle of a healthy woman—lower during the first half of the cycle than later. Also, it has been shown that the transition from a lower to a higher level comes at about the time when ovulation occurs, which is just about midway between two menstrual periods. The variation is possibly about one half a degree, but owing to other causes there may be a further slight variation from day to day.

"It is necessary, therefore, to take the temperature with great accuracy and regularity each day, a rectal reading lasting a full five minutes by the clock immediately after waking—and before getting out of bed—in the morning. A definite rise occurring between two menstrual periods, particularly just after the lowest level of the month has been reached, is considered by many doctors to be evidence that ovulation has taken place."

"It doesn't sound difficult to do."

"No, it isn't. It only requires a little care and you could have tried it. I do not know that there are statistics on the accuracy of the method after the menopause when there is no menstrual period to complete the cycle, but I don't see why the reaction should not occur if there is ovulation."

"I wish you had told me about this sooner—although I suppose the only benefit would have been that it might have saved me this sudden surprise. It couldn't have made any real difference."

"I am glad to hear you say that. And I'm glad, too, to see that you are smiling."

"Yes. I was thinking about the expression on my little granddaughter's face when I tell her that her new uncle will put in his appearance in a few months."

"Better hedge on that. Maybe it's her new aunt whom you will be introducing." END

ASK Mary Gordon OF TWA

HOW TO SEE 17 CITIES

FOR THE FARE TO ONE!

TWA WHISKS YOU to the cities of your dreams... yes, to 17 of them... for the price to one! What a bargain... what a money stretcher! For example, buy a round-trip ticket to Rome. Stop off in London, Paris, Geneva and any or all of 13 other romantic cities. Think of it... all that for $648.40.* the price of a round-trip ticket from New York to Rome.

$65.40 STARTS YOU on your way to a dream vacation when you use TWA's TIME PAY PLAN. It's your down payment on your 17-city trip. You can pay the balance in easy monthly installments spread over as many as 20 months. This is the easy way to travel.

ASK MARY GORDON for her secrets in getting the most out of a trip...ask her about traveling light... packing in a third the usual space. For more information see your local TWA office, favorite travel agent, or mail the coupon below for Mary Gordon's helpful booklets and start planning your dream trip.

Here's what TWA's TIME PAY PLAN means to you

DESTINATION	ROUND TRIP	DOWN PAYMENT
NEW YORK to LONDON and return	$522.00*	$53.00
NEW YORK to PARIS and return	$558.00*	$56.00
NEW YORK to ROME and return	$648.40*	$65.40
COAST to COAST	$ 99.00 (one way plus tax)	$10.90

*Sky Tourist fares to Europe effective during "On Season," April 1 through October 31.

FILL OUT AND MAIL

Mary Gordon of TWA, Dept. J35
Trans World Airlines, 380 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Please send me information on...
☐ Basic Wardrobe and Packing Tips
☐ Skyliner Tours to Europe
☐ Time Pay Plan

Name _____ PLEASE PRINT
Address _____
City _____
State _____

Now...

INSTANT OATMEAL

WITH NEW QUICK QUAKER OR MOTHER'S OATS

cooks creamy in 50-60 seconds

Something wonderful has happened to Quick Quaker Oats and to Quick Mother's Oats.

Now—in just moments you have fully cooked oatmeal. Smoother oatmeal. Creamier. With the same full flavor—the same bountiful nourishment—of oatmeal that used to take hours of cooking.

Yes, these New Quick oat flakes—cut in tiny pieces—are rolled to a new tissue thinness. They cook in just 50-60 seconds in boiling water.

So isn't it smart to eat a good hot oatmeal breakfast—when it's quick as coffee? New Quick Quaker Oats and New Quick Mother's Oats are in stores now. Look for the Yellow Ribbon on the label.

All the protein nourishment of old fashioned oatmeal is present in this new, quick product. It helps keep adults fit—not fat, because it is so high in protein.

Best cereal for growing children. High-protein Quaker or Mother's Oats helps children grow strong, healthy bodies. Gives them stamina for school and play.

QUAKER OATS

America's most popular cereal . . . hot or cold

Mother's Oats and Quaker Oats are exactly the same

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

SOL LIBSOHN

The circus ushers in spring at Madison Square Garden, but for real fans there's nothing like the canvas big top.

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN March, 1905, the Florodora girls, back from their triumphant tour across the U.S.A., were again tantalizing Broadway. George M. Cohan wrote Mary's a Grand Old Name. Battle flags captured from the Confederacy were finally returned to the South, the rancor and passions which had been stirred by the Civil War forty years earlier having sufficiently died down. Stage actor Maurice Barrymore, father of Ethel, John and Lionel, died.

"Resist any tendency you may feel to serve as valet to your husband," advises the March, 1905, JOURNAL, with a beautiful bride by Howard Chandler Christy on its cover. "Rather let him play the role of ladies' maid to you."

"A Man's Part in a Wedding: In some states, a marriage license is required. . . . After the ceremony, the kiss is deferred nowadays."

"I am eighteen. Is that too young to wear a black silk dress? Should I wait a few years?" asks an anxious reader. Answer: "Make it up at once, as by another year perhaps black silk will be entirely out of style."

"Are little white aprons still worn by children over dark woolen dresses?" Answer: "Yes. On afternoons and Sundays."

Kitchen hints: "When jelly-making time comes, a discarded bird-cage hook is excellent for suspending the bag in which the fruit juice is draining."

"The wandering ice pick will stray no more if tacked to the side of the refrigerator."

"For luncheon souvenirs, pen-wipers are always liked," remarks the Lady from Philadelphia.

Beauty: "This is the season when freckles are encouraged by the high spring winds. Protect your face with a chiffon veil."

"When planning a week's menus, consider that on washing and ironing days there will be a steady fire and select some dish that takes long slow cooking."

THIS is the month when the circus moves north from Sarasota, Florida, into Madison Square Garden, spelling spring to Manhattan, and bringing picturesque visitors in to say hello to Henrietta Murdock because of her wide acquaintance among the performers. It's the month in which our favorite photographer of the circus always comes in with a new crop of pictures: this time with the one above, taken right across the river, and more like the circus we remember than Madison Square Garden can ever be. Real connoisseurs of the circus, he claims, wait until it moves into Jersey, Long Island, Westchester, where they can see it under canvas. So when we saw Ed Knoblaugh, the new Ringling herald, we asked him who were some of these connoisseurs. "Burt Lancaster is likely to turn up most anywhere," he told us. "He used to be a horizontal-bar performer. Harry James, too, and Red Skelton and Van Heflin: they're always around. Two old-timers are James A. Farley and Herbert Hoover."

According to Richard Pratt, whose regional series has been running in the JOURNAL since 1946, resulting already in two Treasuries of Early American Homes, well over 20,000,000 people this year will be visiting our heritage houses and other historic shrines. The season is now at its height in Natchez. Next month it will be Charleston.

At least five JOURNAL editors besides Laura Date live on Philadelphia's famous colonial Clinton Street, and recently all in turn heard Laura's voice on the phone telling them to look out their windows quick. What they saw in the twilight—or thought they saw—was a troop of cavalry, all in full Revolutionary regalia, lined up in front of one of the fine old houses down the street. After a smart salute with drawn swords the horsemen dismounted, filed into the house, leaving a costumed orderly in charge, who assured the girls they weren't seeing ghosts. It's been an annual affair, he said, since long before the First City Troop served as Washington's guard of honor. They come each year to salute their colonel. It just happens he lives on Clinton Street too.

Girl Scout camp counselors are needed this summer . . . ask your local Girl Scout office for information.

Editors here in the Workshop have food problems, just like readers; and like a lot of JOURNAL readers, they take them right to Louella Shouer. Some are luckier than others. As when Peter Briggs, a bachelor, went in to Louella to ask what she'd suggest for him to prepare at his apartment for dinner that evening, with three special guests arriving at seven-thirty. "Well, we've just this minute finished photographing the March food picture," Louella told him. "How would you like to take the whole thing home with you?"

It's a problem what to do about your pets or your plants if you live alone in a New York apartment and have to go away on a trip. Or at least it was with her, photographer Halley Erskine told us, until she heard about Dorothy Wilde Browne. Now Halley's pair of Siamese cats don't have to be left any more at the kennels—Mrs. Browne stops in twice a day to take care of them when she's away. She also waters Halley's African violets. She's been doing this plant and pet sitting for less than a year, but already she's got fifty people helping her, and women from as far away as Portland, Maine, and Spokane, Washington, have been inspired by her to start up in business. And they're doing fine.

One fourth of all bicycle accidents involve improperly cared-for bicycles. In a recent inspection, only 17 per cent of the bicycles passed the safety test: 1 in 8 had bad brakes, 4 in 7 lacked horns or bells, 1 in 6 had loose handle bars, 1 in 4 had a loose chain.

We thought nothing of it when we saw Mary Lea Page looking at a piece of African sculpture that Barbara Benson had just bought from the University of Pennsylvania Museum—a begging bowl that is placed hopefully on the threshold of expectant mothers in the Belgian Congo. But when the next day she brought us a picture of her first grandchild, with an itemized account of the birthing expenses—prenatal, hospital and postnatal care coming to $5.25—we saw there was no connection between the bowl and the eight-pound-seven-ounce baby. It was just that the father's in the Navy, stationed at Newport. "And I know what you're going to say," said Grandmother Page, looking younger than ever: "she cost less per pound than a good steak."

When Hugh Kahler got back from the coast with the Ethel Barrymore manuscript, he discovered on his desk an advance notice of the big Ethel Barrymore exhibition at the Museum of the City of New York, which by pure coincidence opened on the day the Memories opened in the magazine. May Davenport Seymour, curator of the Theater and Music Collection there, took Hugh behind the scenes to show him the gown Miss Barrymore had worn in Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines. Talk about memories! "When I was a freshman at Princeton," Hugh told Mrs. Seymour, "I walked half the way to Trenton to see Miss Barrymore in Captain Jinks, and I've never forgotten either the play or that dress."

FRANK LERNER

Hugh Kahler at the Ethel Barrymore exhibition, before Ivanowski's painting of Miss B

Mary Lea Page (right) and her granddaughter: "cheaper per pound than good steak."

ROBERT CAPA

Fifteenth-century royal palace, Soestdijk, is "not really a palace; it's a family's home."

ybody looks up to the queen to do the thing always, just as a child looks her mother." Trix, the Netherlands' e queen, chewed a caramel thought- "That's a frightful responsibility."

Born to be Queen

"Our child will not be raised in tissue paper," Juliana said of first baby, heir to Dutch throne. "She is to be called Trix, even by the servants. We do not want her even to hear the word princess."

IN SIX PARTS; PART I — By BETTY HOFFMAN and A.N.P.* (Netherlands News Agency)

ONCE more Jonkheer Feith opened the square envelope and unfolded the thick white note sheet inside with its engraved crown in the upper left-hand corner. Everyone in his household had read the letter not once but many times; he himself knew every word by heart. Yet he scrutinized it again as if its few crisp typewritten sentences must offer some clue to royal motives behind its astounding proposal.

"It must be your hospital experience," he remarked with finality, slipping his damask dinner napkin through a heavy silver ring. "Princess Juliana's physicians must have recommended you because of that."

He glanced up at the pretty blond girl in the white nurse's uniform sitting at the dining table. She looked cheerful and composed, but her cheeks were paler than usual. Her father noticed that the food on her plate had hardly been touched.

"What I cannot understand is why Princess Juliana would entrust the new princess to someone as young as you!" he burst out, not for the first time.

Copyright, 1955, A.N.P. (Netherlands News Agency)

'ZANDVOORT

Only two royal children in sixty years had been born to the House of Orange until Juliana's daughters.

His daughter Sophia threw him a dazzling white smile that crinkled the corners of her warm hazel eyes. "Most of my friends have children of their own," she reminded her parent. "After all, I'm twenty-six. But no doubt Princess Juliana has already changed her mind about me and hired some white-haired nanny from a royal household. Now, I must go. I'm due at the palace at eight-thirty."

Half an hour later, wrapped in a thick mackintosh to keep out the raw March wind and with a silk scarf tied over her blond head, Sophia Feith left her parents' big brick house and plodded through the black spongy earth to the shed at the end of the garden. From a stack of family bicycles she picked her own, adjusted the headlight dynamo against the front wheel and swung herself up on the high English saddle.

A drizzle of rain was falling as she turned in the direction of Soestdijk Palace, about five miles from her home in Hilversum in the central part of Holland. Few cars were abroad, but the brick-paved bicycle path which skirted both sides of the highway was astir with motorcycles and bikes even at this late hour of the

*This series was written by Mrs. Hoffman, working in collaboration with A.N.P. (Netherlands News Agency) and with full co-operation from Queen Juliana and Prince Bernhard. Mrs. Hoffman, a former JOURNAL editor, spent months in Holland (where she had free access to the palace), and in Belgium and Canada.

ANPFOTO

The golden sleigh was like something from fairyland, but young Juliana "didn't look as if she was having much fun."

Born to be Queen

evening. Once outside the limits of the town, the highway entered royal preserve, a dense forest of thickets and sand dunes, scrub pines and ancient oaks which extended for miles. It was known as Soestdijk Park, a favorite recreation spot on Sundays and holidays for picnicking families and strolling lovers and small boys wrestling. Here Sophia Feith had often gone with her friends to gather mushrooms. And it was here that she had first seen Juliana. She had been about six at the time and the Dutch crown princess in her ninth year.

That unforgettable episode had occurred on a dazzling blue winter's day when a radiant blanket of snow lay over the fields and frozen canals. She had gone with her father and mother for a Sunday hike. Suddenly they heard the jingling of bells and around a bend in the bridle path burst a sleigh drawn by two spirited chestnuts. As it drew near, Sophia could see that the sleigh's prow was a huge serpent's head. The sun struck gold from its extended fangs and blinding rays of silver from the bell-decked harness. Seated in the back, wrapped in billowing white fur rugs, sat two women in immense hats, and a small girl. Behind them stood a coachman wearing a high polished silk hat and gray frock coat holding the horses' reins, while a footman kept a precarious balance on a single sled runner.

The two elder Feiths came to a halt and bowed as the sleigh swept past. Sophia followed their example, but straightened hurriedly as the sled splashed wet snow into her face. One of the women in the sleigh smiled at her. The other, a stout woman with a ruler-straight spine, shot her a glance both compelling and austere; then she, too, smiled. The little girl gave Sophia a quick, shy glance and then shrank back against the Juliana's name was linked with most of the royal bachelors of Europe before she met Prince Bernhard (above) at a skiing resort.

ANPFOTO

"My granny is a queen," little Princess Beatrix told a classmate, who replied, "My grandfather has a bakery.
I get cakes every day."
Said Trix, "You win."

severe-looking woman, raising a white muff to her face.

Sophia felt as though her eyes were popping from her head like tulip bulbs. She stood rooted to the spot, watching the glittering troupe sway out of sight around a bend in the path. Then both her father and mother began to talk excitedly.

"That was our queen!" her father announced, his voice bursting with pride and with something else which profoundly puzzled his daughter at the time, a kind of possessiveness and familiarity, almost as though he were speaking of a member of the family.

Sophia did not have to ask which woman was her monarch. Even dressed in rags and in a crowd of a hundred thousand people, she felt, the adamantine Queen of the Netherlands would be instantly recognizable. But it was the little princess who interested her the most, the grave-looking child in black velvet racing over the snow in a golden sleigh.

I must say, Sophia thought to herself, she didn't look as though she was having much fun!

Often, in later years, her feeling of awe toward the royal family was punctuated with fleeting moments of sympathy for the Dutch crown princess, brotherless and sisterless, whose closest playmates seemed to be dolls. Did Juliana ever escape the scraping footmen, the aides and couriers and ladies in waiting, the bowing silk-hatted burgomasters and saluting coachmen? Was she ever allowed to wear old clothes and get them good and muddy and cadge cookies from the palace kitchens and climb trees?

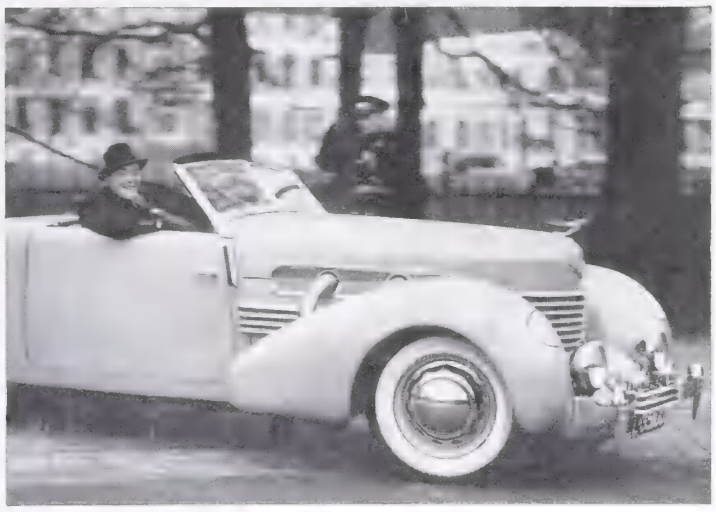
Sometimes the crown princess was allowed to go skating on the frozen canals in a black coat and black stockings, supported on each side by ladies in waiting in great floppy hats. Queen Wilhelmina was determined her only child should not be spoiled. She instructed the ladies not to pick up the princess if she tumbled and under no circumstances to help Juliana tie on her skates!

I would not take her place for a hundred thousand florins, vowed the young Sophia, flying over the ice like a sea gull in her homespun coat and stocking cap.

Continued on Page 133

ANPFOTO

In spite of royal responsibilities, Queen Juliana watches for sales of soap and towels, takes active part in running her home. Juliana and Bernhard in their library at Soestdijk.



Announcing to crowd at palace gate her daughter's approaching marriage, Queen Wilhelmina smilingly raised her arm and led three loud cheers for the young couple. They were married in Jan., 1937, honeymooned in Poland.

ROBERT CAPA

ch people, dubious about Bernhard of his German ancestry, were d by his pledge, "All my life rive to help Juliana of Orange."

ANPFOTO

Skilled racing driver, Bernhard has survived crashes of planes and cars, has "more lives than a cat," according to Juliana. Car was engagement gift of Wilhelmina.

ANPFOTO

"Oh, my darling,"
she thought.
"Don't you see?
She doesn't love you!"

Midnight of a Bridesmaid

By VIÑA DELMAR

It was evil, and men are stupid.
Otherwise they'd see that the girl in the plunging neckline is simply shopping for a washing machine.

THE pale pink gown, the delicate, blossomlike hat she had worn lay on the floor where she had thrown them. They looked to her rather like rich confections melting repulsively upon the carpet.

I must pick them up, she thought. But she did not move from the chair in which she had been sitting for hours. It was getting late. She considered the matter of sleep. Could she sleep? Or would she simply lie in the darkness going over it all again? Would she lie there remembering that once—before he had known Barbi—there had been a chance for her? What was the use of remembering? He was Barbi's now. She glanced at the clock. For many hours he had been Barbi's.

And I was a bridesmaid at his wedding. I guess that's funny. Maybe I'll laugh like mad—say in a hundred years or so.

She stared at the pink puddle of lace and chiffon and remembered that she had kept her chin high and her smile bright throughout the ceremony and reception. She had earned the right to cry now if she wished. There was no one watching her. No one to pity her or to bother her with foolish reasons why she should not cry.

If I could only hate him ——

But how could you hate a man who had promised nothing, who had been all laughter and good nature and who was not responsible for the dreams you had spun? What was a kiss, a sweet word, a thoughtful present? He had never said, "I love you." There had been nothing except her wild hopes, her foolish plans. She thought of his smile, the touch of his hand, and she thought of the time they had danced on an empty beach like pagans in the starlight and it had been the happiest night of her life. The warm wind, the crashing sea and his arms around her had cast a spell that had made her so sure, so —— But why think of that now? It was gone, finished. Forget it. Think of the present. The now. All right. The present. At this very moment Barbi was in his arms and so the present was no good to think about either. It was more painful than the past.

She sighed and got to her feet. She picked up the hat and the gown and stuffed them away in the closet. What did you do with things like that? Especially the hat? The dress you could have dyed. What color? Green, of course. Wouldn't that be the most appropriate? Green for envy—envy of Barbi who was in his arms tonight and would be there every night forever and ever.

As she closed the closet its mirrored door caught her in its flashing gaze. She looked carefully at the girl in the white satin dressing gown. A tall girl with shining black hair and a pair of lovely red eyes. I could bathe my eyes. Yes, but what does it matter? Who's going to see them? And besides, I'm not through crying. Maybe I'll never be through.

Oh, my darling, she won't love you as I do. She's still the same girl you used to call Scatterbrain back in high-school days. I love you so. I love you so.

And you couldn't stand in the dressing room crying out your heart forever. If there was only something that had to be done.

I'm good at facing up to whatever has to be done. I could stop crying. I could be strong if there was something I had to do.

She glanced around the small apartment. It didn't need dusting. And how would dusting relieve heartbreak? It wouldn't help her to forget the things that were torment to remember. Perhaps nothing would help her forget.

Well, if you can't forget, then remember. Talk about it. Fine. To whom? To whom can I say that I am in love with Barbi's husband? You could say it to him. To him? Of course. Maybe if you said it all very openly, very clearly, you would feel better. That's a silly idea. But you can't sleep, can you? What can you lose by trying a silly idea? Go ahead. Well, all right. Maybe.

She went to her desk and opened a drawer. There were a pad and a pen. For a time she eyed them suspiciously. Was this the first step toward being a little eccentric, a little nuts? She felt self-conscious and CONTINUED ON PAGE 194

Ethel Barrymore

MEMORIES

She went from the convent to the stage. . . .
"Nobody ever told me anything about acting.
I was expected to know."

CULVER SERVICE

"Father always stayed in terrible hotels.
They were the only ones that would take his menagerie—a mongoose, a raccoon, some monkeys and birds."

BARRYMORE COLLECTIO

"That year in New York I lived in an apartment—the first place I had ever been able to call my own. I had a lot of book and a considerable collection of music."

Maurice and Georgie Barrymore's busy lives in the theater left little time for their children, so Ethel, Lionel and John lived with their Grandmother Drew in Philadelphia. "Mummum" managed her Arch Street Theatre and her grandchildren with the same firm hand—in presence of grownups they were never allowed "to utter." But they were a healthy, mischievous set and, as Miss Barrymore remembers, they "uttered" almost constantly. High moments came when mamma and papa returned from stage tours, and a magic time when they took Ethel and Lionel on tour with Madame Modjeska. Ethel went to school at a convent in Philadelphia, where she studied piano and planned to be a concert pianist. Suddenly one day she was taken from the convent and sent off to California with her mother, who was ill and hoped to regain her strength there. But her mother died. Ethel ordered a black dress and put her hair up; she did not weep until she had completed all the arrangements to accompany her mother's body on the long journey back to Philadelphia. She was thirteen years old.

II I WENT back to the convent in September. The two important things I remember about that year were, first, that I discovered Jack had not been baptized a Catholic when Lionel and I were. I found a boy at Sister Vincent's school who looked quite old. He was, I think, twelve, and his name was Sam McGargle. He assented after much agonized pressure to be Jack's godfather and I was his godmother. The ceremony was at St. Patrick's near the convent and must have presented a fantastic picture.

The other important thing was when the superior sent for me and gave me a cutting from a newspaper. My father was married again, and she had not wanted me to hear of it from one of the day scholars. I do not want to dwell too much on this, but it was years, really years, before I could take it in stride.

There were beginning to be quite a lot of things to be taken in stride. In June I was sent for CONTINUED ON PAGE 148

Copyright, 1955, by Ethel Barrymore; all rights reserved under the International and Pan American Conventions.

CULVER SERVICE

...nt comedy is the most tiring of all to play, ...t difficult to keep up. You have ...e natural—much harder than doing ...ional parts." Above in "Cousin Kate."

BARRYMORE COLLECTION

"I was spending the weekend with Uncle Jack at East Hampton when I met Russell Colt . . . I don't remember that I even tried to escape."

DORIS RICH STUART COLLECTION

At parties in London she met Winston Churchill, Dame May Whitty, James Barrie, the Duchess of Sutherland. . . . "As I look back on it now, they were wonderful to me—so wonderful that I didn't realize at the time my good fortune in being allowed to know them so well."

CULVER SERVICE

"I didn't have a tiara, so I put oak leaves in my hair and everybody in London called me Daphne. I loved it, and Gerald du Maurier (right) named his daughter after me."

FROM THE CHESTER DALE COLLECTION

MLLE. MALO

EDGAR DEGAS (1834–1917)

DEGAS used to say that in all art, "from Italy to Spain, from Greece to Japan, there is not very much difference in technique; everywhere it is a question of summing up life in its essential gestures." But to discover the essential gesture, to hold the fleeting immediacy of the subject and find its expressive aspect, requires visual memory of a high order and perfect conjuncture between eye and hand. This Degas achieved by rigid, almost inhuman, self-discipline. He copied and recopied in the museums of Italy and France. He told Vollard that only after an artist had "given CONTINUED ON PAGE 190

The Child Nobody Cares About

In our great country there are thousands of small children who are almost always frightened or lonely, and frequently hurt.

So accustomed are we to the thought that little children need loving care that we tend to think of all American babies nowadays as secure and clean in their cradles, fed when they are hungry, picked up and fondled now and then, played with and laughed at, proudly taught to walk, caressed and comforted when they are hurt or lonely or frightened.

So well do we know that these are the needs of infancy, like milk and sunshine (if infants are to grow into contributing members of the society which nursed them), that we cannot bear to think that there are, in our great country, small children who are almost always frightened or lonely, and frequently hurt. From such children we turn our faces away because of the tenderness of our hearts.

We read in Dickens of children chimney sweeps many of whom died at eleven or twelve, of children taught to steal. We hear in other societies, comfortably far away, of children maimed to become more successful beggars. We refuse to consider the fact that in our own society some children are treated with equal cruelty.

In our country last year it is estimated that more than 100,000 fathers deserted their families. There were 410,000 divorces. Drunkenness and mental illness increased. Who cares for the children when such homes break up? Are our institutions adequate to give them kindly shelter? Read in the next pages of children sent back to abusive homes because there is no other place for them; of innocent small children confined in cages in jails because of lack of suitable institutions; of children who in one year pass through ten or twenty foster homes, growing more ill adjusted, more resentful with each change.

In a simpler society with stronger village or community ties children from homes broken by illness, disaster or abandonment were sheltered by a loving grandma, or aunt, or kindly neighbor. But in our increasingly urban migratory society, many of the moral and religious standards shattered by wars, such children become wards of an impersonal "society." Society has not made an adequate place for them.

Our nation is shocked nowadays at its delinquency rate. But as one studies the problem of our troubled youth, as one looks at the pitiful, shabby, sordid and cruel stories of children who flare into tragedy and crime, one finds that many of them are the children who were abandoned by our society. They are cruel—we taught them cruelty sometimes in the cradle. They hate society and their hatred flares into killing, beating, wanton destruction. These are often the children who went from one unloving, uncaring, unsuitable detention home to another, where lack of love and care taught them not to love and not to care. Such children never learn faith, consideration, kindness or decency because they never in all their pitiful unwanted lives really experience consideration and kindness.

We often speak of the influence of the home, but fail to acknowledge that many of these children have, in a sense, no home at all, but come from unfit or broken homes. When they mature they tend to establish similar homes, knowing no other kind, and to produce in turn more neglected or abandoned children. Often potentially good homes are broken by illness or death. For lack of adequate, prompt and kindly intervention, children who could be salvaged join the army of derelict young.

Read backward the stories of delinquent youth. Observe how frequently they become the record of a delinquent society.

Better care for all young children who need society's help is the only answer to cases like these. It would cost less to salvage these children than to pay, later, for their delinquency or crime. Better care means far better care. It means more assistance to the potentially good home that has been broken by ill health, death or mental breakdown—medical, counseling, nursing as well as financial aid. It means better emergency care for children who are temporarily the wards of society. It means that we must provide dependent children with a decent substitute for the home when the parental home cannot be reinforced by outside counsel or assistance. If any child is to become a good citizen, he must be properly guided in the early years, before it is too late. This is not to say that all present institutions are bad—many are excellent, but of these there are not enough. And many children who are wards of the state grow up splendidly. But thousands every year are damaged beyond repair in childhood.

Juvenile delinquency doesn't just happen. There are reasons behind every delinquent act. Too often our troubled children are the children nobody has ever cared about—enough.

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

BRUCE GOULD

"So many so-called 'homes' aren't homes at all, they are broken by drink, broken by illness, by desertions. How can we expect such homes to have standards?"

MARGARET HICKEY

"Even the potentially bad home can render a service if it is propped up and saved. The community has a responsibility to do that before the child gets into serious trouble."

ROBERT TABER

"To force a child back by the iron fist will accomplish nothing. A child has to be helped to find himself."

MARY BASS

"Among a large number of women working at jobs, no provisions are made to provide for the children while the mothers are at work."

HELEN CHAPMAN

"Women can do anything they want to do if they want to badly."

GEORGE SMYTH

"We will never control delinquency and crime until we abolish the terrible conditions we expose children to in our cities."

Children in

PARTICIPANTS IN THE FOURTH JOURNAL FORUM

MRS. THEODORE S. CHAPMAN, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, is a trustee of Monticello and Blackburn colleges. A former schoolteacher, she now owns and directs the operation of a 270-acre farm near Jerseyville, Illinois.

MR. RICHARD CLENDENEN, executive director of the Senate Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency, worked in a state school for boys in Indiana, was a probation officer in Cleveland, and directed a treatment center for disturbed children in Milwaukee. For five years he was with the U. S. Children's Bureau. He has spent 14 years working with youth and their problems.

MRS. AGNES E. MEYER, noted lecturer and writer on community problems and defense of civil liberties, is the author of a sociological autobiography called Out of These Roots (Little, Brown and Co., 1953),urging men and women into public service.

THE HON. GEORGE W. SMYTH, judge of the Children's Court for Westchester County, New York, is president and chairman of the board of the National Probation and Parole Association. He is a civic and church leader in White Plains and he has served on the bench in the state of New York for 25 years.

MR. ROBERT C. TABER, director, Division of Pupil Personnel and Counseling for the School District of Philadelphia, is a member of the Governor's Committee on Children and Youth (Pennsylvania) and on the board of trustees of the National Child Labor Committee. He has worked in public schools for 12 years.

MRS. BETTY WOODWARD is director of the Presbyterian Child Placement Agency in Dallas, Texas. She was employed by the Spence-Chapin Adoption Service in New York as a case worker and by the Texas State Division of Child Welfare as consultant on adoptions and foster care.

BRUCE GOULD, BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, MARY BASS, MARGARET HICKEY, moderator, and G. M. WHITE, writer, of the JOURNAL editorial staff.

MR. GOULD: We are here today to consider some of the causes of juvenile delinquency—and what can be done to correct them. That is our whole purpose in having this panel dicussion. The JOURNAL is devoted not to "viewing with alarm" but to suggesting what can be done. So often when people think of juvenile delinquency, they think of something that flares up suddenly when children are twelve or thirteen years old. Today we hope to direct our spotlight on the causes in the early years of a child's life.

In so much of our thinking we speak as though these children who get into trouble came from homes where the parents would listen to reason if someone would speak to them, but actually so many of these "homes" can only be put in quotation marks. They are not real homes. They are broken homes, broken by drink, by illness, by desertion.

Now, Mrs. Meyer, you have done a great deal of work in this field ——

MRS. MEYER: To be sure, the influence of the home upon the very young child is the prime source of moral training. By the time the schools get the child much of its character is fixed for good or ill. But the home is affected by the environment of which it is a part. People today suffer from what I can only describe as civilian battle fatigue. Delinquency and crime among the young are rampant today because the moral standards of adults have been broken down. There is, in fact, no unanimity among us as to what constitutes morality, integrity or honor.

Time to Stop Pretending

JUDGE SMYTH: The early years of a child's life are the most important. If the child lacks the habit training and the parental discipline—gentle, kindly, consistent discipline—the love of his parents and of his parents for each other—if a child misses out on those things during the early years, I think the most promising time in his life has been lost.

MRS. MEYER: When I go about the country, as I have been doing constantly in the last ten years, and see what is happening to our children, I feel as if a great fire is raging in our social foundations which threatens the whole structure. It is high time, I think, that we stopped pretending that it doesn't exist, or hoping that if we pay no attention it will burn itself out.

Life has become meaningless to many youngsters because it offers them few visible avenues for genuine satisfaction, and if they get into the hands of the law, God help them. First offenders, or even inno-

DI PIETRO

AGNES MEYER

"Cruelty to children has ly become more widespread but ss noticed in this period of neral unrest."

GLENN WHITE

"Helping people help themselves is working religion."

BETTY WOODWARD

"All children separated from their parents are troubled children; they are problems."

RICHARD CLENDENEN

"Any first-grade teacher can point out youngsters she knows may be headed toward trouble. So often there is no agency to which she can turn."

BEATRICE GOULD

"Society must evolve some safety valve for the very hard-pressed young mother who has no one to help her."

Trouble

t little children who are dependents, t around in overcrowded receiving nes with young gangsters or criminals l the Juvenile Court can get around to r cases. Mild offenders are sent to train- schools so lacking in staff and space they learn more and greater evils. Or judge, knowing that the training school ns further degradation, sends them k to school on probation. There they ome heroes, bully the other children, disrupt the discipline of the classroom. he teacher complains to the probation cer, he shouts, "What is the matter n you? Haven't you got a heart? This d needs to lead a normal life." The re- is that neither the teacher nor the forty sixty other youngsters in the over- wded classroom lead a normal life.

Miss Hickey: Mr. Clendenen, why is enile delinquency such an extra-big blem today? Is it the seriousness of it, amount of it, or what?

Mr. Clendenen: Actually, the number of children who become involved in difficulties with the police constitute somewhat less than five per cent of the youth population of this country between the ages of ten and seventeen, which is the usual age jurisdiction of the juvenile courts. On the other hand, although this is a small proportion, it is a large number of the nation's youth and appears to be steadily increasing. The number of children in trouble has increased roughly about forty-two per cent in the last five years. Another factor that is disturbing to me are reports from various parts of the United States that a somewhat larger number of boys and girls are becoming involved in the more-serious types of offenses.

Miss Hickey: Do we know enough to do anything about it?

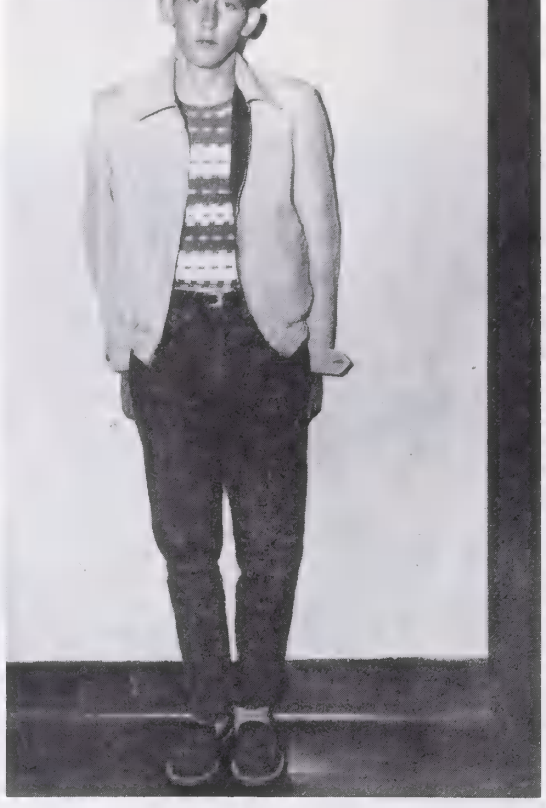
Mr. Clendenen: I think that we certainly do have the knowledge. It seems to me that there are two very common errors made in approaching the problem of children in trouble. One of these is to assume there is some kind of simple panacea that we can apply—for example, the panacea of punishing parents—that will cure it all. The other common error is the feeling that the problem is somehow so complex as to baffle all efforts to come to grips with it. Actually we do know enough to do something about it if we only have the will to apply what we know and dedicate more of our resources to the job.

When is a Home "Suitable"?

Mrs. Gould: Is there more that could be done to help the home which breaks down because of illness of the mother or temporary absence of the father? What concrete things could be done to help salvage homes which now break down?

Mr. Clendenen: I think there are many things that we can do. For example, few communities in the United States have proper mental-health resources or the services of the right kind of social agencies to get into that home at the early signs of breakdown and give assistance.

Judge Smyth: When those early signs of breakdown are observed, where do you think is the point of contact or entrance into the family?

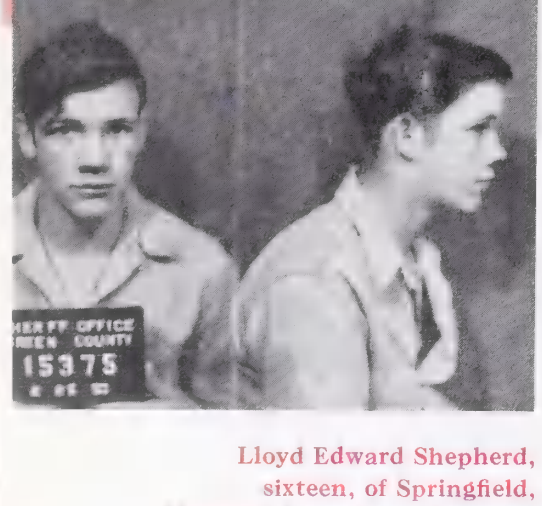


Mr. Clendenen: I think, for example, judge—and this would certainly be borne out in the investigations of the Senate subcommittee—that in all communities we really have no agency that is doing protective work. In other words, we have no agency to which the schools, the church or police can turn and say, "I think this is a family in difficulty."

Mrs. Meyer: Even in communities that have a great array of agencies, there isn't enough co-ordination between those agencies to do an effective job. There has to be some clearinghouse. A hub where all these agencies are represented and where the family can go for particular kinds of help.

Mrs. Woodward: I work with many communities that have practically no social agencies. We have rural areas with practically no agencies at all, but we have two agencies that can get at the point where early symptoms are beginning. One is the school, and the other is the public-welfare worker who works with the family that already has faced some sort of breakdown or it wouldn't be on the agency roll. But we aren't getting to the children in such families even when we know that there are problems. At my agency in Dallas we had a twelve-year-old girl referred to us a couple

CONTINUED ON PAGE 204



Babies in institutions, innocent boys locked in jails, fourteen-year-old rls selling themselves to hitchhike across country . . . Their crime?
They have no home and nobody cares what happens to them.

Billy Eugene Manley, of Oklahoma City, shot and killed Trooper Johnny Whittle, who was taking him to headquarters for questioning. He was convicted of first-degree manslaughter and sentenced to sixty-five years in the Oklahoma State Prison at McAlester.

Who Are the Killers?

Usually outcasts from society at a very early age, they become outlaws when they are big enough to steal. Rejected, hunted, desperate, they strike anyone in their path.

Lloyd Edward Shepherd, sixteen, of Springfield, Missouri, has a juvenile record starting at the age of ten, including theft, shoplifting, burglary and car theft.

"I'VE been stopped cold by artillery, nearly nicked by sniper fire, strafed by aircraft and pinned down by mortar fire. But I've never been as scared as I was when that drunken little punk held that twenty-two pistol on me. His eyes bugged out. His jaw sagged. His tongue was thick when he talked. The gun wobbled in his hand. I was scared. I knew that kid with the gun was capable of killing me."

This was Wilton L. Greer, owner of a liquor store in Houston, Texas, describing how it felt to be held up by a fourteen-year-old boy. Though hardly more than a child, "that punk" was a strapping six-footer. His accomplice was a sixteen-year-old youth. The police quickly caught both of them by tracing the license number of the automobile they were driving. It belonged to the older boy's father.

Serious crimes committed by the very young are reported with appalling regularity in every city and town in the nation. Police officials in many cities repeatedly have called public attention to the increase in the number of crimes of violence—armed robbery, assault, rape and murder—committed by teen-age youngsters. Who are these kids with guns who are "capable of killing" and often do kill?

To show the range and seriousness of crimes committed by youth and in an effort toward understanding of the problems involved, members of the JOURNAL staff, with the help of the Special News Service of the United Press Association, compiled records of the most serious offenses across the nation in the past three years. The number proved to be too great to summarize individually, even when limited to non-psychotic youth under eighteen and those that occurred in a single year, 1954. A selected cross section of such cases, therefore, is presented here with the background of each youth given in bare reporter's outline with no attempt to draw final conclusions.

The overgrown fourteen-year-old who terrified a combat veteran of two wars in Houston, Texas, is now free on probation even though his victim in the holdup was sure at the time the boy was capable of murder. His young accomplice is also free, in the custody of his parents.

The father of the boy with the gun died when he was three. His mother, a part-time housemaid, has shown little concern in the past over George's whereabouts, his behavior or his friends. He has an older brother and sister, both working to support the family, who pay no attention to him. He has a police record of minor offenses to which was added the theft of the gun used in the holdup. He had stolen it a few days before from a sporting-goods store when the proprietor had his back turned.

"I didn't steal it for any special reason," he said. "I just thought it was a good idea at the time, like the holdup. I'd had a few drinks, I guess."

The boy who got the holdup car has both a father and a mother, but his father has been a periodic hospital patient with tuberculosis and too much out of touch with his son to maintain normal parental control. The boy quit school after the tenth grade. His mother explains that "he just got tired of it and I couldn't make him continue." He got a job as an office boy.

His mother said, "We gave him a good Christian upbringing. Maybe we were too good to him. You see, he's been desperately ill twice in his life. We've been afraid of losing him so maybe we gave in to him too much. We're not doing that with our two younger children. His father took him to the police station several times to talk to police officers, but after the police scandals here he wouldn't go any more. He said, 'See, they're not perfect, either.'" (There was a grand-jury probe in Houston of alleged police mishandling of narcotics cases, and taking bribes.)

Both mothers implored the police and Probation Judge J. W. Mills to give the boys another chance. The fourteen-year-old promised to return to junior high school and go to church regularly. Probation officers acceded to the wishes of the parents, and on their recommendation Judge Mills placed both boys on probation. He believes they are going to "straighten out."

But Greer, the man who faced the gun, is not so sure. "I hope it straightens them out," he said. "But it looks to me like they just slapped their wrists and told them to go home and be good."

Leniency does not always produce good results. One hot August day last summer in Memphis, Tennessee, a girl who will be nameless here (although newspapers published her name) was shot in the abdomen with a .22-caliber rifle. She accused James Edward Shaffer, sixteen, and Benny Pruitt, fifteen, of the shooting. She said Shaffer, whom she had met the night before, took her to his home to meet his family. His parents were not there, but Benny Pruitt was.

"We sat around for a while and then they started getting smart with me," the girl said. "Jimmy told me to start stripping or they'd shoot me." She tried to run out the back door, but Pruitt stopped her. Then she ran back down the hall to the bathroom and shut herself in. According to her story, the boys forced the door open. As she stepped out, Pruitt said, "Get her, Jimmy." Then, the girl said, "He shot me!"

SHE screamed, but the radio was on loud and nobody heard. She went into the living room and collapsed in a chair. She said that Shaffer came over and hit her twice with the gun. The boys ran out the back door. Screaming, she staggered out the front door and neighbors took her to the hospital.

When arrested, Shaffer told police that he just "meant to scare her" and didn't know that the safety on the rifle was off. The girl was seriously wounded, but recovered.

Shaffer has been sentenced to ten years in the state training school. Pruitt was ordered to a psychiatric hospital for observation and treatment, and will be tried later.

Juvenile Court records show that Shaffer and Pruitt were arrested in October, 1952, for stealing an auto. Juvenile Court Judge Elizabeth McCain released them to the custody of their parents. Three months later, Shaffer was arrested for housebreaking, larceny and stealing another auto. He was committed to the State Training and Industrial School at Nashville, but the commitment was suspended because he was ill and under the care of a doctor. He as released to his mother. In April, 1953, haffer and Pruitt were arrested again—uto theft, housebreaking, burglary. They ere committed to the training school for n "indefinite period," but Pruitt's com-itment was suspended and he was re-ased to his parents.

In November, he was taken into custody gain after a girl complained he had tried o snatch her purse, but he was probated o his parents once more. In February of 954, he was picked up for truancy and unning away from home and sent to the raining school. Memphis teachers and thers pleaded for him and he was allowed o return home in July.

Shaffer was let out of the Nashville chool in December, 1953, but in Febru-ry, 1954, he was again before the Juvenile Court, accused of stealing a motor scooter. He was again committed to the training chool for two years, but this was later uspended when his grandfather in Illinois romised to take him under his wing. He eturned to Memphis about three weeks efore the attack on the girl.

SHAFFER'S father is a stockyard worker and his mother works in a bakery. Judge McCain said the family had been broken up for many months, but just before the shooting the parents had reconciled and authorities hoped it would have a stabiliz-ng influence on Shaffer.

Pruitt's father is a barber and his mother does not work outside home. "Benny just seems to want to run around with boys who are no good for him," Mrs. Pruitt said. She said the father had whipped Pruitt a week before the shooting "for being with that Shaffer boy."

At a hearing in the Nashville Juvenile Court, Judge Elizabeth McCain ruled the boys "incorrigibles," meaning they would be treated as "over seventeen." Referring to their previous records, she said, "We are often wrong in our judgments. We may be too lax with one and learn later that punishment might have been beneficial; again we mete out punishment to one which would ruin another in a similar case.

"The thing that concerns me now is that the girl was a victim of these two boys with whom the court had worked and evidently failed. Here are two boys who have wrecked their lives in spite of the combined efforts of their families, the Juvenile Court and the state training school to which they were committed." Judge McCain added that the public must view the case as "an extreme case and remember that many other boys for whom similar programs were worked out have returned to their communities as good and responsible citizens."

In Kansas City, Missouri, the chief probation officer, James B. H. Reefer, says 60 per cent of the children probated to him come from broken homes. "The forty per cent who do not is deceptively large," he said, "as many homes are so unhappy a divorce would be more satisfactory for the child's sake."

Take Tommy. That's not his real name, but his parole officer insists that he be anonymous because right now he's "hot." He just escaped from the boys' state prison at Boonville, Missouri. He was in for having wrecked a stolen car, almost killing a fifteen-year-old girl companion. Tommy is not the sallow, garishly dressed zoot-suiter of the war years. He is today's toughie—neatly dressed, rather well mannered, neither sullen nor stupid.

In a fit of anger because he was not allowed to use the family car one night, sixteen-year-old John Schulz took a .410-gauge shotgun from the closet and blasted the life from his mother and his younger brother and sister.

Tommy was first booked when he was eight. He and three friends were caught with stolen goods from an apartment break-in. The common routine followed—petty thefts, wanton vandalism, truancy, runaways, burglary, larceny and detention homes. According to Capt. Doral Dennison, of the Kansas City Juvenile Court, Tommy's mother was too busy with her personal life and frequent marriages to see what was happening to her son. At fourteen he was booked for drunkenness and insisted on a drunkometer test. It showed he had been drinking beer. Then he stoutly denied it. That same year and after several other arrests his record was stamped "incorrigible." He and his friends—boy and girl—readily admit they frequently attend "sex parties."

At seventeen, Tommy is a freckle-faced, nice-looking kid. Dennison said, "To meet him, you'd think he was a perfect gentleman. He could sell you a bill of goods any time." No one encouraged Tommy to go to school, so he gave up any semblance of regular attendance early. Hooky led to restlessness, and lack of spending money to crime. He was restless and rootless. As far as any of his friends know, he has never been inside a church in his life.

Not all youth guilty of serious crimes come from broken or unstable homes; nevertheless, from all available evidence and special studies it is apparent that a large proportion of them do and the shadows of serious offenses to come are cast early, almost always before the age of twelve. Two examples involving the ultimate crime, murder, are the cases of Billy Eugene Manley in Oklahoma City and Ronald Abersold of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Ronald Abersold, sixteen years old, killed David F. Jenkins, fifty-one, the father of six children, by kicking Jenkins in the head with his heel plates while the dazed man was lying on the ground. Abersold and several companions, returning from a beer-drinking party, had asked Jenkins for cigarettes when they happened to meet him on a dark, deserted street in Pittsburgh's north side.

RONALD, one of five children, lived with his parents in two rooms on the heavily populated north side. In five years, the Abersold family moved eleven times within this area. Ronald's mother said she and her husband were separated for a time in 1949 after he had beaten her.

His home conditions could be most mildly described as "poor." School records note: "Co-operation from home very poor. Mother keeps boy at home." Vice-principal E. I. Shannon, of Latimer Junior High School, said Ronald was "a nasty boy—one of the meanest kids I've ever handled. He twice threatened to hit teachers." During Ronald's last five semesters at Latimer he played hooky 332 days out of 500—or 66 per cent of the time. He received E's (failure) six consecutive times on his citizenship reports. At the time of his arrest on the murder charge, his father was unemployed and his mother worked in a restaurant.

Abersold pleaded innocent when he was brought to trial on March 15, 1954, in the Allegheny Criminal Court. After four days of testimony, however, he switched his plea to guilty to murder generally and threw himself on the mercy of the court. Judge Harry M. Montgomery sentenced him to six to twelve years in the Allegheny County Workhouse.

In Oklahoma City, Billy Eugene Manley shot and killed Johnny Whittle, a state trooper who was taking him in for questioning. He told police he killed him because he didn't want to go back to the reformatory.

"I didn't want to shoot him," he cried. "It's the truth, so help me God. He grabbed my hand and twisted it so hard the gun went off." The trooper had not handcuffed Billy, nor had he made any attempt to draw his own gun to protect himself.

This is Billy's background: When he was nine years old, his mother and father separated. His mother was left with nine children and no means of support. She took in washing. Later she got a job as a café waitress that paid $24 a week. She was rarely able to pay any attention to her children because of having to work long hours. During his early years Billy lived in the poorest of surroundings with barely enough to eat and with no adult supervision at all. He quit school in the seventh grade.

When he was fourteen he was charged with grand larceny and sent to the Missouri training school at Boonville. He was paroled in 1950; he promptly stole another car and was returned to the school. He was paroled again in the fall of 1952. He spent a total of four years in the training school.

Fifteen-year-old Benny Pruitt, of Memphis, Tennessee, is taken into custody by police for the fifth time after attacking a young girl. He was previously arrested for larceny, housebreaking and stealing an auto.

Ronald Abersold, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was sixteen years old when he pleaded guilty to the murder of David F. Jenkins, fifty-one, the father of six children. He is pictured here with his mother after the sentence—six to twelve years' imprisonment—had been passed.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 216

A feeling of

"Don't," he begged, "have this sudden attack of women's intuition! Please!"

Responsibility

By MARJORIE CARTER

THE Hills sat in the living room of their apartment on an evening in spring. They were having after-dinner coffee, and as John leaned forward to replenish their cups he saw that his wife was literally lost in thought. And quite obviously it was not happy thought. She looked distressed. Almost haunted. He could not quite put a finger on it, but there was no question about it: something was wrong.

"Coffee?" he asked. She nodded abstractedly. "How are you feeling these days, Dee?" he inquired, with what he considered elaborate tact.

She smiled—too brightly, he thought—and said she was feeling very well. After she had said that, she sighed.

"Is there something on your mind?" Mr. Hill went on. "Something bothering you?"

"I—no, it's nothing. Nothing at all, really. It is too ridiculous for words."

He took a firm tone. "If it is bothering you, it is not ridiculous," he told her. "And I can see for myself that something is bothering you. Now, what is it?"

"You'll think it's silly." She made a little mouth, half amused, half rueful. "I think it is a little silly myself, but I can't help feeling the way I feel." He said nothing, just regarded her expectantly, and after a moment she went on. "It's about Plush."

Well, he thought, she was right; it is silly. He felt impatient, but at the same time he felt glad that it was something so trivial. Plush was one of the cats they had owned when they lived on their farm, before they came to Chicago. Months earlier, the young man who was their tenant had written to say that the cat had vanished. Had Edith been fussing about that fool animal all this time? I asked for it, he reminded himself, and he fought down his natural reaction and suggested in a mild voice that Plush was perfectly able to take care of himself, and he added something to the effect that worrying about Plush all the time did no earthly good.

She looked surprised. "Goodness, I haven't been worrying about Plush," she said. "I don't think I have thought of the cat in weeks. Months, perhaps. Why, perhaps that is the reason this came as such a shock ——"

There was a magazine on the coffee table, one of those little magazines which are as sedate as a man's three-button single-breasted dark brown CONTINUED ON PAGE 191

Perhaps you'll say this is only the story of a cat. But then, WHAT A CAT!

PICTURE OF

SLIM

as the stem of a flower is the shadow you cast in the spring sunshine. Even pleats look slim, breaking into motion from the waistline or the hipline. Back-swept fullness, a figure walking in the wind, is another silhouette. The overblouse fashion has an assured future. Blue is the first color—the blue of a cornflower, or of a deep azure sky. The palest beige is the beige of fashion, with white at the neckline and the whitest gloves. Gray is a color to live in, especially gray flannel and gray-and-white prints. Coin-gold silk looks fresh. New red is poppy red. Pink is for a coat or a blouse or a nosegay.

Costume in gray—this tweedy wool coat, straight from the shoulder, is lined with the print of a silk dress for now and later, by Adele Simpson. Rough straw hat by Irene and leather bag carry out the one-color fashion.

Poppy-red silk rajah suit by Matty Talmack, accented with biscuit beige and black. Rough straw hat, Mr. John.

SPRING

Cornflower-blue tweed suit with draped pockets by Ben Reig, worn with tweed beret, sapphire-blue and rhinestone jewelry.

SUITS

grow more colorful, more becoming. Blue weed, beige jersey, gray flannel are all-day affairs. The silk suit—silk tweed or silk linen in beautiful colors—has new importance. Suit skirts are slim or pleated, jackets any length, easy at the waistline or straight and boxy. This year suit fashions cover many daytime or evening occasions.

COATS

are inseparably a part of a costume or have important identity in themselves. A gray coat combines with a gray printed silk, a short pink tweed with a pale wool dress, a greige twill with a matching skirt. A stalk-straight beige tweed has the adaptability to go with everything. A sky-blue or poppy-red coat is a fashion of great significance, and deserves clothes planned around it.

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

WILHELA CUSHMAN

Return of gray flannel with wide box pleats, by Ben Reig, worn with burnt-straw beret, chamois gloves. Young son in gray flannel too.

PICTURE OF SPRING

Most feminine coat of spacious sky-blue fleece with a big soft collar by Jacques Fath is a fashion to wear with blues and beiges. Overarm bag in golden-tan leather.

Printed silk-surah jacket dress by M
Talmack. Big straw hat, John Freder

Golden fashion, head to foot: silk-surah afternoon dress and double-breasted jacket, with a burnt-leghorn hat, all by Christian Dior—New York. The bamboo bag for spring and summer is by Mr. John.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE VIZCAYA
DADE COUNTY ART MUSEUM

WILHELA CUSHMAN

This blue block-plaid wool suit has rightness for many occasions, worn with a white straw sailor. By Hattie Carnegie.

Spring-length finger-tip coat in gray-and-pink tweed makes a costume with pink or gray wool dress. by Hattie Carnegie. Red calfskin overarm bag.

Gray tweed suit with pink chiffon scarf, flowers at the neck. by Ben Zuckerman.

The universal silk-tweed suit by Ben Zuckerman. a straw sailor hat by Irene.

DRESSES

of printed silk—blue, green, lilac—stay through summer. The coat-dress is wool or taffeta. Sophisticated jumpers are serge or surah with organdy. The beltless overblouse is for slim figures. the dress-with-jacket for everybody.

NECKLINES

are pointedly flattering. made so with lace-trimmed white collars, pink or blue chiffon scarves. Silk blouses in flower colors, crystal beads in violet shades. Handsomest bags are red or beige Italian leather.

By Wilhela Cushman
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Polka-dot surah cloche by Lilly Dache has a drawstring band, goes with red, white or blue.

The fashion of the shoulder-width picture hat goes with silk suits or prints. White straw cart wheel edged with organdy by Hattie Carnegie, worn with flower-blue jewelry and a blue silk-linen suit.

A suède shoe blue as a cornflower combines well with shiny black, other shades of blue. The patent-leather pump has a heel for an active life: the polka-dot patent-leather pump is young and gay. The bag is black straw with bamboo.

The Perfect

IS THE PRETTY HAT, THE RIGHT SHOE, THE SPARK OF COLO

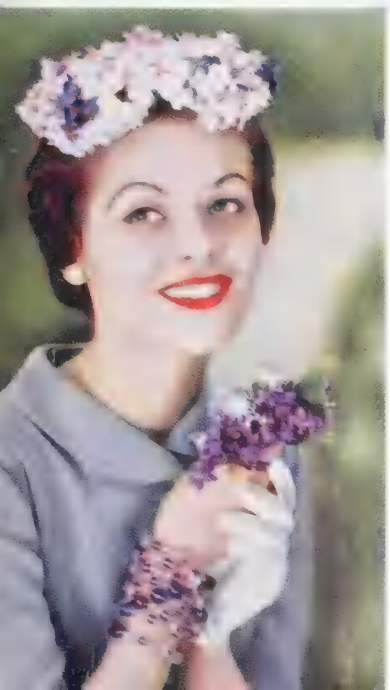
Gypsy turban of coin-dot silk surah by Irene of New York, linen dress by Ann Fogarty.

New honey-brown leathers for spring—a bag by Nettie Rosenstein, a pump with piping and a bow, a belt with the proper curve. Pale beige step-in shoe has a grained wooden heel. The jewelry is amber-toned.

The fashion of palest beige in a bag with cork texture by Nettie Rosenstein. A pump with stitching and a pump with a bow are shoes with news. Jewelry is topaz crystal; geraniums for accent.

Spring blue—this simple toyo hat with rhinestone clip worn with a surah afternoon dress by Hattie Carnegie.

WILHELA CUSHMAN



A wreath of cherries on red milan by Hattie Carnegie is for a red costume, or for navy blue. Cherry red is an accent color this spring, or a color for a coat or suit.

Compliment

A SCARF, A NECKLACE, A FLOWER

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

The lilac hat, essence of spring, for a silk suit, a wool dress, by Hattie Carnegie.

Polished red pigskin bag with a bamboo handle by Gucci, combines with black, red or gray. A red sandal or a patent-leather pump is a gay compliment to any costume.

ACCESSORY PHOTOGRAPHS, I. J. BECKER

A HUNDRED DOLLARS

This spring-and-summer wardrobe gives you the beige tweed new dressmaker blouse. Color scheme—beige, bla

$100 includes hats, bags, shoes, jewelry, tw

Beige tweed suit——the skirt, $9.95, jacket, $17.95, by Harold Rubinger; piqué blouse, $2.98; jersey turban, $1.98; calfskin shoes, $6.99; short rayon gloves, $1.00; earrings, $1.00.

The suit skirt is perfect for sweaters and blouses. Worn here with an Orlon sweater, $2.98; cowhide belt by Frank Speyer, $2.00; gold bracelets, $1.00; plastic-leather bag, $1.98; cotton-string gloves, $1.00.

WORTH OF FASHION

shion, the dress-and-coat ensemble, the silk sheath jumper with d white plus any bright accents. The happily stretched ouses, a sweater and a belt. · By RUTH MARY PACKARD

WILHELA CUSHMAN

Carrying out the beige-and-black color idea, a beige-and-black printed-rayon dress is for any time of day, with coat, $25.00, by Jerry Gilden. Worn with white gloves, black patent-leather sandals, $4.99.

Black silk-shantung jumper by Henry Rosenfeld, $10.95, is worn with a tucked, white nylon blouse, $3.95, pearl-and-gilded bracelet, 59c.

The black rayon-faille coat goes over print or jumper, serves also as a coat dress: priced with printed dress, $25.00, by Jerry Gilden. Plastic patent-leather bag, $1.98; veil and bandeau, 79c; pearl earrings, 50c.

the Feminine Touch

It's like a breath of spring . . . a touch of sheer white organdy, a linen-and-lace collar or a wreath of silvery-green leaves. The dress you will wear these touches with might be a print in the most delectable colors, a stripe in an unusual width, a paper-weight polka-dot taffeta or the sheerest wool imaginable. The effect is the prettiest in years . . . just the way you will want to look this spring.

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Paper-weight taffeta and wool jersey combine in the loveliest shade of lavender. The sleeveless dress has a pleated skirt. Vogue Design No. 8501. Coat lined in dot, No. 8549.

WREATH BY MME. DARIA

Delft-blue peau d'ange makes a charming dress with a bouffant skirt, a simple bodice. Add a sprig of lilac to your sleeve, white organdy hat. Vogue Design No. 8535.

HATS BY JOHN FREDERICS

A classic design in a feminine fabric can change the mood of a dress. Ours, in a warp-printed silk in the most delectable colors. Vogue Design No. 8565.

Mauve and turquoise predominate in this unusual silk foulard. Separates take advantage of the stripe. Blouse, Vogue Design No. 8494. Skirt No. 7694.

RICHARD AVEDON

Lovely raspberry wool accented by a frill of organdy and lace in a completely feminine suit. Vogue Design No. 8479.

Spring wouldn't be spring without a navy-blue dress. Tucked hipline, white linen collar with lace. Vogue Design No. 8560.

BOW CLIP BY THERESE AHRENS

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on page 187. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

© VOGUE

SNIMATIV for two

By LENORE GOLDSTEIN

YOU have to understand first about the way I look. I mean, I think it's important and basic, and partly the reason for the way things happened. I'm twenty-two, and I have nice brown hair, and dark eyes, and generally average features. It's not my face, really. The only unusual thing about me is that I'm so tall.

I can always remember being the tallest girl around. In school, I was way at the end of the line all the time. The boys in my classes never caught up to me, either, until we all got into high school, and by that time I was five feet eleven inches. I was always good at games like tennis and basketball, and I was lucky there were a lot of boy athletes who grew over six feet high. Mother says I'm luckier than I know. She ought to know, because she's five feet ten inches, and from the way she tells it, she had quite a time till she met up with daddy, who's six-four.

Anyway, the way I look has something to do with the way I got my job. I work for Snimativ. I guess everybody in the whole world knows about Snimativ. You know, "Snimativ MEANS Vitamins!" They spell it backward. I don't think much of it, but everybody buys the stuff, so who am I to pass judgment?

Mr. Kelcey, who is the big boss at Snimativ, personally supervises the hiring of everybody in the place, and he likes strong, healthy-looking people who look like one of the Snimativ ads. It's sort of funny, when you consider that he himself is only about five-six, and as thin as a rail. But anyway, I was a natural, because I'm the type that looks like a poster for National Health Week.

"Nancy Matthews? M-m-m-m," he murmured, when I was being interviewed. He looked me over thoroughly, as though I was going to be auctioned off a slave. Finally he said, "All right. You can start in Advertising. They're short a girl right now."

It was really a very nice job. At first I was sort of a relief girl. I got to know a lot about Snimativ's advertising, which is really something, as you very well know. I remember when they started CONTINUED ON PAGE 179

A man like Brogan could change a girl's whole life... that's what this urbane, sophisticated fellow aimed to do with Nancy gan loved me this way,

Fred was less encouraging.
ou look like you're sting away from some ful disease," he said. rittle-looking."

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

Before I was ten I got the impression that when somebody in our town held "open house," anybody could come who cared to. I wangled cake and ice cream at three golden weddings before I found out different.

Everybody in our neighborhood goes faintly Irish on St. Patrick's Day. Alfonso Bisignano puts on a green necktie, Heinie Weitz wears his Irish-tweed sports coat, and Al Cohen tries to give the Riley tots each a ha'penny he brought home from Dublin.

For a year or so the mothers-in-law of the newlyweds down the street didn't blend any too well; different backgrounds and all that. But you should hear 'em talk a blue streak with each other now, since they became grandmothers of the same baby!

Junior's thin-clad fraternity brother with the runny nose refused to wear a hat till he had to consult a doctor about his persistent cold. "Keep your chest and throat warm and wear a hat," said Doc, charged him $5 and prescribed medicine which cost a little more than a velours.

"Some of the wittiest and most devastating girls in our crowd," reveals Betty Comfort, leaning the old crutch by her husband's skis, "get furious at playing second fiddle to a girl who mostly looks sweet, and smiles, and mostly listens."

By a horrid coincidence, in the fortnight after Federal income-tax day our local tax collector slugs us with our real-estate taxes. Yet there's one slim consolation: he does all the arithmetic.

One of the young bucks in our gulch spent a cozy evening before his fiancée's fireplace, burning all his love letters from other girls. I'm afraid he'll regret this impetuous act; someday he'll need a few to read to her aloud.

Our town, often called "an overgrown country village" by envious neighbors, had a Turk, a German and a Panamanian visitor all in one week, plus a local traveler who'd been in Bangkok three days before. I guess any town nowadays is almost mathematically the center of the universe.

They're opening a branch bank in our shopping center, but it may have an uphill fight for business; we've all got used to cashing our checks at the supermarket.

My stubborn neighbor broiling under a sun lamp at home instead of in Florida reports complications. "I spread papers on the bed," he says, "anoint myself with sun-tan oil, don goggles, turn on the timer, unplug the phone and finish up with lotion and a soapy shower!"

I've heard the 1955 version of campus romance: he (in bathrobe and pajamas) picks her up twice a week for eight-o'clock classes when he hasn't any; she does his laundry in the sorority-house automatic washer.

I caught my Dream Girl tossing together a delicious chicken-and-broccoli dish plucked from these very pages and involving nine cans in all. When I opened the nine cans for her I caught a whiff of the frontiersman's triumphant sense of foraging for nourishment.

My bridge partner in our monthly interfamily tussle claims she observes traces of snobbery in her husband. "For most parties he argues an electric shave is close enough," she reveals, "but for certain hosts he always shaves skintight with a new blade."

"Happy birthday, the sales slip is inside, the exchange department is on the third floor."

Since boyhood I've eaten the yolks of my fried eggs at home with a spoon. But I never quite dared it in public until I saw columnist Joe Alsop ("country club's voice of doom") do it boldly in Hotel Willard's main dining room.

I've tried (perhaps too successfully) to obey my grandmother's advice on table manners: to pretend a surface indifference to food but always to take two helpings.

The girl next door with the new baby confides that she never really understood male psychology until she noticed her infant's change of behavior before and after feeding. "After all," she says, "men are just babies!"

One of the new mothers in Enchanted Acres, where we visit occasionally, was bragging about her brilliant eight-week-old son.

"When I put the nipple in his mouth," she reports proudly, "he throws his hands over his head as if to say 'Look, ma, no hands!'"

Secretly I feel when I'm teaching our fifteen-year-old to drive that he'll be a better driver than I am. But that doesn't reduce my nervous tension, nor muffle my wrath when he makes occasionally a blunder which I make frequently.

What shocked our little circle was not that Betty MacDonald said teen-age children don't hate their parents, "just feel absolute contempt for them"; it was that she still remembered it against them long after they were married.

Our club's deepest thinker at the luncheon round table is worried again about spinsters and bachelors. "If the Government wants to run everything," he demands, "why doesn't it help the lonely ten million men and women who'd like to get married, but don't know how to capture a victim?"

On the way to catch our bus my mild neighbor with the three-car garage tells me he's puzzled about his weight. "Why do I usually gain weight when I go on a diet alone," he asks, "but invariably lose ten pounds when my wife diets?"

In the boom days of the 1920's some of our town's sportsmen built the hilliest eighteen-hole golf course in this region. Lately some of their sons prefer to play only nine holes on a more level course, with motorized scooters.

I was touched to find all my overseas Army letters to my daughter tucked away in a box of her mementos. . . . I wrote to her as if I were wooing her, and those letters contain some of the most hair-raising tales of my adventures I've yet encountered. She was just a credulous tot.

. . . When our daughter changes to slacks from blue jeans just to please me,

. . . Or our youngest asks me why I don't retire [egad] instead of working so hard,

. . . And Junior begins sentences frequently "You've got a point, dad, but ——"

. . . Or my Dream Woman, after a quarrel, just as I'm opening my mouth to say the same thing, beats me to the draw with "Maybe I was mistaken,"

It all adds up to a sort of vote of confidence, and my self-esteem, often in eclipse, blooms again amid the flexible safeguards of family life.

EZRA STOLLER

3 bedrooms now . . . 5 bedrooms later . . . our

MORE-for-the-MONEY House

City.

the luxury look at economy cost created by JOURNAL *experts to meet the home-building needs of America's middle-income family

HERE is the house whose appearance won JOURNAL editors' hearts, its practicality their hard-to-win approval. All of which appears in the nine pages of this portfolio—price, planning, livability, looks. We like the price because we think it will be hard to match in cost this combination of space and charm; the plan because it grows economically to fit the changing needs of many million families. We like the luxury of its three to five bedrooms, and two to three baths, because we like the luxury of low-cost livability. We like the three-bedroom building estimate of $14,900 from the lower-cost Southeastern states and the five-bedroom estimate of $20,750 from the higher-cost Northeastern states, because these estimates tie in so well with our title. And you will like it, too, when more house for the money is more than a name, no matter where you want to build it.

* RICHARD PRATT, Architectural and Garden Editor;
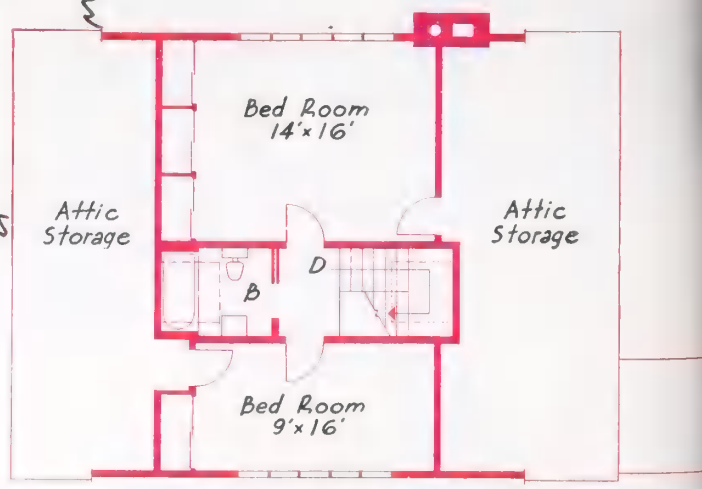
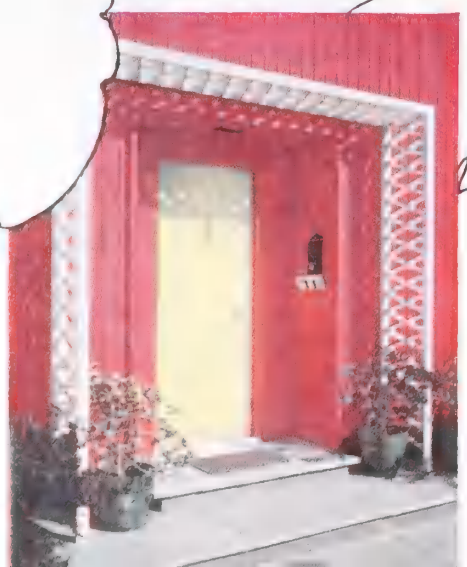
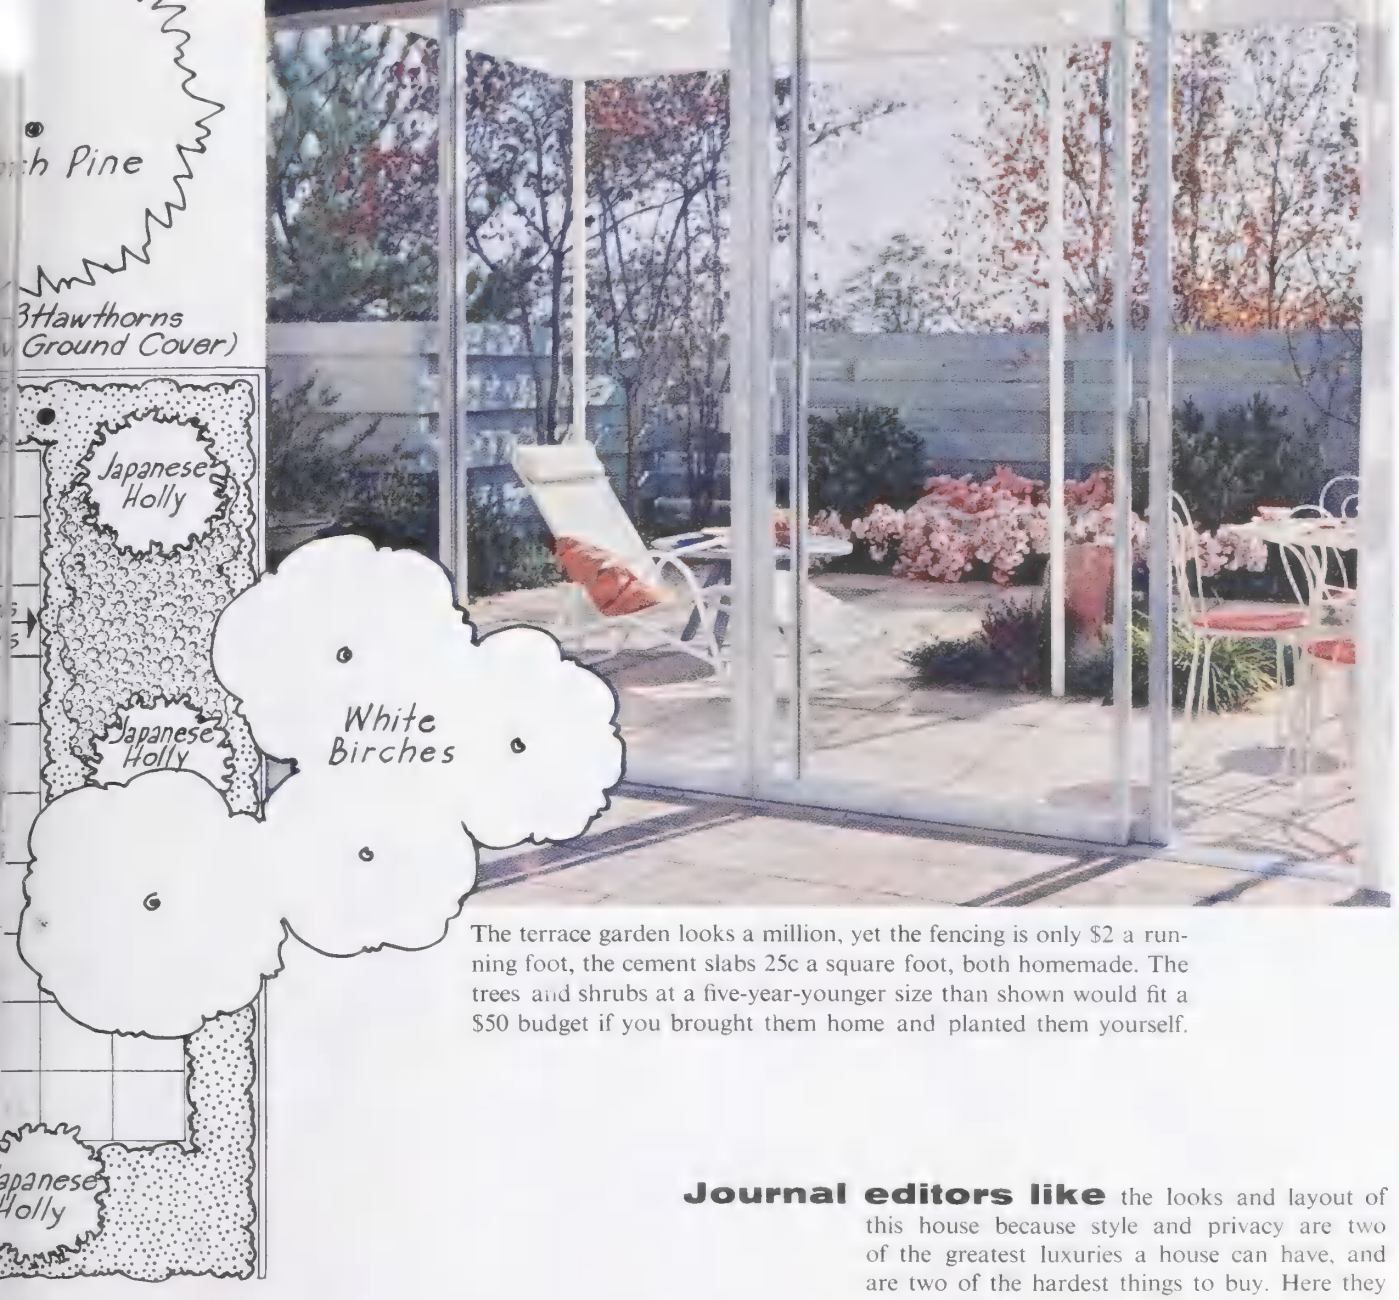
WILLIAMS and WELLS, designers;
MARGARET DAVIDSON, Homemaking Editor;
CYNTHIA McADOO WHEATLAND, Decorating Associate.



The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

The PLAN is Spacious





✳ For alternate bathroom plan, see page 108. For wiring and air-conditioning details see pages 102 and 106.

SECOND-FLOOR EXPANSION PLAN

White-painted trellis casts shadow patterns on the recessed door, sparkles against red-stained walls, potted evergreens and gray concrete steps.

The terrace garden looks a million, yet the fencing is only $2 a running foot, the cement slabs 25c a square foot, both homemade. The trees and shrubs at a five-year-younger size than shown would fit a $50 budget if you brought them home and planted them yourself.

Journal editors like the looks and layout of this house because style and privacy are two of the greatest luxuries a house can have, and are two of the hardest things to buy. Here they cost nothing extra—they are part of the design. Look at the plan, and you will see the living room is left for living, undisturbed. This is one house in which the hallway, as little as it is, takes all the traffic. Entering by the front door, you are led to every part of the house without invading any other part. You get directly to the kitchen, to the living room, to the first-floor bedrooms, upstairs to the expanded second floor, and downstairs to the partial basement beneath the living room. And the kitchen, with its protective laundry entry, has its privacy too. You will also find it on the terrace, which has the seclusion of a four-walled room, yet has open-air freedom right to the sky. Here the JOURNAL's alternate-board fencing lets in light and air, but insures complete protection from unwanted views, and viewers, not only for the terrace itself, but for the living room too. . . . As for the style, that is less easy to spell out. But you feel it in the contrasts of materials and colors, the lightness of line, outside and in, inside and out.

EZRA STOLLER

The egg-crate trellis, supported by slender pipe posts, gives luminous shade to the terrace and window wall, style and beauty to dining and living areas.

Building news:

Textured Plywood Panels
for the outside walls—pleasing to look at, pleasingly priced!—eliminate two full construction steps: no sheathing or diagonal bracing required . . . all the advantages of a panel material—easily handled, cut and cover fast; none of the disadvantages—lapped panel edges conceal joints, eliminate extra joining members . . . take well to high-color, low-maintenance shingle stain.

King-Size Roof Shingles with built-in color—no painting, ever!—textured surface for high style . . . white for handsome looks, a cooler house in summer.

Aluminum Casement Windows
packaged for easy handling, shipping and installation . . . no warping, shrinking or swelling . . . and again, no painting!

Sliding Window Wall to capture the view . . . lets in fair weather as well . . . glides quietly and efficiently on its built-in tracks . . . framed in aluminum for easy upkeep.

Convertible Warm-Air Heating system switches painlessly to year-round air conditioning using the same duct work . . . inconspicuous vents don't interfere with furniture arrangements.

Minimum Basement
beneath living room ample for heater, hot-water equipment, bulk storage . . . crawl space keeps rest of the house dry and draft-free . . . cuts excavation and foundation costs.

Plans and Working Drawings can be obtained for $10 the set from the designers, Williams and Wells, 32 East 57th St., New York City.

Concrete Paving Blocks
for entry, paths, terrace flooring . . . the JOURNAL tells you how to make them yourself . . . Send 15c to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Phila. 5, Pa., for Pattern No. 2575.

Alternate-Board Fencing
lets in sunlight and breezes . . . protects privacy. For do-it-yourself instructions, send 25c to Journal Reference Library for Pattern No. 2546.

. both Indoors and Out

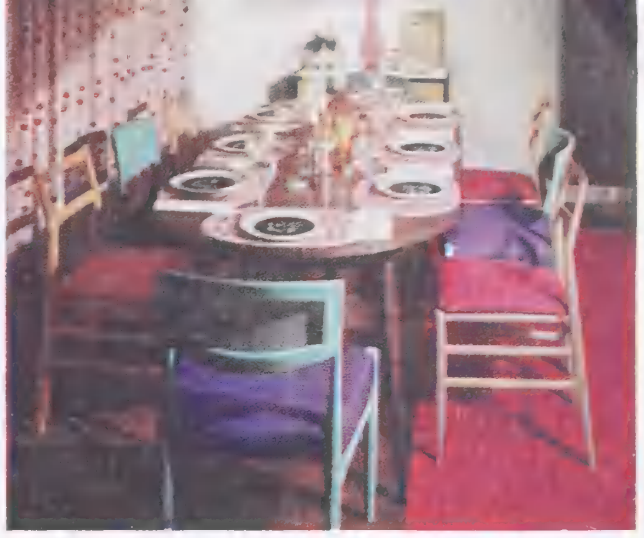
Two more bedrooms, an extra bath to grow into! Second-floor plumbing and heating are roughed in when the house is built; rooms are finished when needed. Both bedrooms have a ten-foot band of casement windows; skylights admit sunshine to stair hall and bath. Attic space, accessible through bedrooms, stores off-season clothing.

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

Conversation grouping creates congenial atmosphere. Game table at terrace window extends to make a dining table or a buffet for special entertaining.

Journal editors like this living room. They like it because it is keyed to family life. Yet eleven people can sit here and talk in comfort; ten can be seated for a dinner party; and you can entertain twenty or more at a time whenever you want.

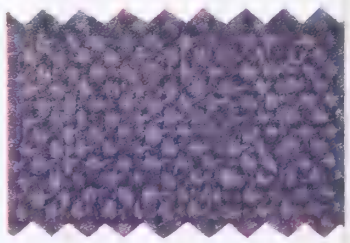
Color is a joy in this room. The new materials keep their color, are easy to clean; an important point, because resistance to stains, scars and scuffs is a big news feature in these furnishings. From the glamorous glass-fiber curtains to the cabinets with their baked-on enamel surfaces, ease of upkeep and durability prevail. The curtains need no ironing, wash and dry in a trice; fabrics are treated to be dirt-resistant, longer lived; fireplace paneling is permanently polished wood.



Best of all, perhaps, the days of the drab, neutral, "practical" colors are gone. Get rid of your color inhibitions with these beautiful light, bright shades that don't fade, don't soil readily, and you can have a color scheme as gay and carefree as this one.

The LIVING ROOM

is Carefree and



By lamplight, dinner for a party of eight. By day, draperies and sliding glass wall open, terrace extends view and space. Fabrics won't fade.

Living-Room news:

- Look for new fabrics tagged as being treated by a new chemical process to make them resist stain, dirt, wear, tear and abrasion. The new process is cousin to the one that weatherproofed and strengthened outerwear in the past.
- Glass-fiber draperies don't need pressing, are impervious to strong sun or sudden rain.
- Quick-drying streakproof rubber-base wall paint (dries in ½ hour) insures year-round freshness for any householder who can wield a brush.
- Sew-in drapery headings pleat automatically—fabrics wear longer, tubbing is easier.
- Cushions that can double outdoors are foam rubber: weatherproof, sagproof, lightweight and hygienic.
- Plastic fabrics surfaced to look like linen, tweed and herringbone weaves, look like cloth, clean by sponging, wear longer.

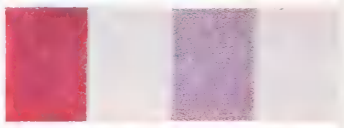
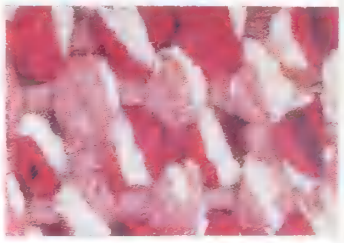
You might prefer these as alternate fabric choices:



Sofa:
violet burlap in upholstery weight, 58″ wide.



Draperies:
petal-printed dress goods of fine cotton, tubfast and shrinkproof.

Lounge Chair:
aqua gabardine, washable and colorfast.

Pull-up Chairs:
red-and-heliotrope-striped white sailcloth, crease-resistant and sunfast.

Floor:
coral rug of fiber and yarnlike rayon, reversible and cleanable with foam detergent.

OLD FOWLER

Cabinet under hanging bookshelves holds TV, radio and phonograph and clears floor for easy cleanability. Chair covers zip off for laundering. Luxury note: Sofa in heather antique satin, but you might prefer alternate suggested at right.

Beautiful

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONE
Portfolio #1

Above:
Convenient line-up in cooking center: First, a six-burner range with two ovens, not likely to be outgrown by even a big family. Next, a dishwasher in color to match the cabinets, followed by a sink and more storage space. Then a mixing counter, and below it a pull-out shelf handy for sit-down work of all kinds.

In this KITCHEN NO Traffic Jams!

Journal editors like: a large, airy kitchen where practicality and convenience go hand in hand with beauty. That's why they dressed up this kitchen in colors, finishes and materials that are easy to care for, and fresh as a flower garden to look at . . . sea-green cabinets with a baked-on enamel paint, turquoise vinyl-asbestos floor tiles accented with a white grid pattern, fadeproof trellised wallpaper, painted split-bamboo blinds.

Let's step into the floor plan and see how it keeps congestion to a minimum. There's a place for preparing food and serving meals, a place for planning menus, sorting bills, telephoning grocery orders. There's a convenient laundry a few short steps from the cooking zone, and a work center with an expansive garden view for supervising indoor work and outdoor play at the same time.

Coat hooks and cupboards installed in the utility wing furnish a mudproof corner where children can hang up jackets, put away toys as they come in from play. Utility-service entry detours market-delivery traffic from the kitchen work areas.

Right:
Giving storage in narrow space are two banks of matching wall cabinets. Open end of counter shelters a step-up stool and a useful wheeled cart.

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE OR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

Kitchen news:

- Sound-deadening ceiling is new glass-fiber tile with surface of plastic film—doesn't need painting, is fireproof, can be washed with sudsy water.
- Light fixtures flush with ceiling have wide-angle lenses that diffuse light. Frames are hinged so new bulbs can easily be put in.
- Cabinets are a newly available stock color in wood with durable oven-dried paint finish.
- Floor, greaseproof, with custom look, is vinyl-asbestos tile separated by white stripping 1½" wide. Tile colors are brighter and clearer than ever, and strips make it possible to carry out a personalized design.
- White surface behind the work counters is a prefinished paneling which provides a greaseproof and waterproof expanse of wall.
- Another practical white surface, the table top of hard plastic that resists scratches and stains under heavy family use.

Tall cupboard is 21″ wide. Three used in kitchen (one for cleaning gear) free walls for window space.

Table at terrace window can be lunch, homework or entertaining center. Drop leaves down, table measures 40″x22″. Leaves up, spread is 40″x72″ and eight people dine handsomely and with elbow-room. For terrace dinners, the open window is a pass-through. Table serves handily as a buffet-server.

Plan shows main kitchen area, with dining at one end. Laundry is in a separate wing. Layout of rooms provides good view and ventilation.

Built-in Convenience PLUS

STUART-FOWLER

Large refrigerator has freezer below for 122 pounds of frozen food, daily foods handy above.

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

A junior hide-out in minimum dimensions

Ice-cream colors are gay against the pale gray, washable, fabric-covered walls in the children's bedroom. Double-decker bed is painted deeper pink than the vinyl floor, rayon rug picks up the turquoise blue in cotton-chenille bedspreads. The window shade is covered with same adhesive plastic as bathroom walls.

Children's Room news:

In double-decker beds:
designs are getting prettier. This one sells for around $110 complete with mattresses. A space saver as shown, it can be taken apart to form twin beds.

In washable wall coverings:
rubber-treated fabrics and plastics imitate woods, bamboo, leathers, are resistant to cracking, scuffing; are available in easy-to-install squares.

In nylon carpeting:
prices are lower, advantages are long wear, soil resistance, mothproof, easy to clean.

In storage-space gadgets and gimmicks:
metal racks for the insides of cupboards and closets to hold shoes, belts, hats, ties, etc. Accordion doors for closets are available in a variety of colors and materials. Ready-built storage walls can be finished or painted to your fancy.

In drapery hardware:
a wood or aluminum track with its own slider tape. Simply install track, sew tape to draperies, insert sliders in track.

Small Spaces with

Journal editors like these three little rooms because they show that lack of space does not necessarily mean lack of comfort. They are the smallest rooms in the JOURNAL's compact house. You don't have to go much further than the vital necessities of a room: a bed, bureau and chair for a bedroom; standard equipment for a bathroom. After that, imagination and taste go to work to create convenience and charm. Bright harmonizing colors, materials that are long wearing, surfaces that are easy to care for are emphasized here. Hanging racks, shelves, bookcases, lighting fixtures adequately provide essential equipment. Furniture that is scaled small or that serves more than one purpose is ideal for the children's bedroom; some kitchen accessories fit well into a bathroom; pegboard is useful most anywhere for display and hanging surfaces. Pattern and color, rather than "things," give these rooms their individuality, their uncluttered look.

The bureau-desk arrangement has a hinged top on the center compartment that swings up, rests against wall, and presto, turns into a mirror. Top is painted with liquid rubber which hardens to a tough finish.

Lots of white plus wallpaper on ceiling as well as walls enlarges and enlivens this 5′x7′ space. High cabinet has mirror surface, sliding doors. Pegboard cabinet under basin provides storage; washcloths can hang on hooks outside.

Two bathrooms in the space of one

BIG IDEAS

Bathroom news:

In nylon bath rugs: small sizes are available in beautiful colors that are fast, lint-free, long-wearing, can be laundered frequently since they dry quickly.

In shower curtains: plastic or soft-surfaced rubber is mildew-resistant. You can find wallpaper and curtains to match.

In accessories: unbreakable plastic "squeeze bottles" now come prettily decorated, matching tumblers and wastebaskets to co-ordinate with your colors.

In towel hanging: triple racks seen in the photograph (top right) have three adjustable positions, fold flat against wall. A single bar has ends that pull out for more hanging space. A 4" telescoping rod can be extended to 14".

In washbasins: those that fit into differently styled counters and standing cabinets; a wide variety of colors, sizes and finishes to fit your color schemes and room dimensions; or you can purchase the lavatory singly to be put into a cabinet of your own design.

In bathroom cabinets: sliding-door medicine chests, or cabinets with doors that swing in such a way as to permit two people to use mirror or cabinet at the same time.

In adhesive-backed items: a plastic hook that will stick to tile. Installed around the tub, these will hold lightweight things such as washcloths, brushes, and so on. A wall mounting for towel bars, soap dishes and other fittings will hold eight to ten pounds.

The fresh, pretty look of this bathroom belies its practicality. Carnation-sprinkled wallpaper is waterproofed with a plastic coating. Orlon curtains need little care, are almost indestructible. A grocery shelf is used under the mirror to store bath salts, dusting powder, and so on. The hamper is most versatile, has a shelf top, drawer, extra shelves in a narrow side cabinet.

The children are encouraged to keep this trim-looking bathroom neat. Their towels hang next to the shower on a ladder rack (lower left), washcloths next to the basin on swinging bars, toothbrushes on hooks under cabinet. Striped wall covering is self-adhesive, plastic, washable; floor, counter top and doors of wall cabinet are surfaced in vinyl tiles. A tilt-out hamper utilizes space under basin.

The children's shower bathroom doubles as powder room for guests. Very small, 4′x6′, there's ample storage space on the walls; there could be more if needed. High shelves hold towels for overnight guests, sliding-door cabinet stores tissues, paper, soap, long, narrow counter shelf keeps sets of towels easily available.

HAROLD FOWLER

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said. He could not see her face and at first he thought she was laughing, but he was not sure.
"You don't have to say it with jewelry, darling.
You know you only have to say it."

by John P. Marquand

WILLIS was not a believer in elation, because elation was an emotional state which clouded judgment. He was not elated when he returned home to Orange after the Production Liners' Convocation. There had been time to sort facts and to file them in the back of his mind so that he could face the immediate decisions which he naturally found waiting for him after a few days' absence from the New York office. In fact, he went through the whole business day exactly as though there were no prospects of a merger between Harcourt Associates and Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting. Still, in back of his thoughts, resting like a handsome balance in the bank, lay the final impressions of his conversations with P. L. Nagel. He could not blame himself for being very happy when he got out of the taxicab at Waydeholm.

Al and Paul, who were playing catch out on the lawn, dropped their mitts and ran to meet him.

"Hello," he said. "How about helping me wrassle with this luggage, fellers, and let's see if we can find mommy and Louise."

The whole house never had looked better. There were dogwood and paper-white narcissus in the hall. The really beautiful claw-and-ball-foot table he had bought to stand under the Chippendale mirror was freshly waxed, and the tall clock at the end of the hall, which he had bought at the Parke-Bernet Gallery after very brisk bidding, gave balance to everything around it. After all, acquiring good pieces of antique furniture really was the same as putting money in the bank, provided you could keep the children from doing damage. Right at that moment Paul was leaning on the arm of the end chair that flanked the claw-and-ball-foot table.

"Remember what I said, son," Willis told him. "You mustn't do that with good furniture. You've got to learn to respect good furniture."

"O.K.," Paul said. "Sorry." There was no doubt they were both fine boys with very good manners.

"Besides, boys," Willis said, "you've always got the rumpus room downstairs."

Then Sylvia came out of the dining room and kissed him, and Carl, the colored houseman, came to get his bags, and Louise and Miss Farquahr appeared on the stair landing.

"Daddy," Louise called, "daddy!"

The whole scene in the hallway added up to something that was greater than any good news, because without a happy home everything else was pretty hollow.

"Did you have a good time at Pinehurst, dear?" Sylvia asked him. Somehow wives always thought that conventions were only intended to supply a good time.

"There was a fine crowd, honey, and fine papers and discussions," Willis said, "but frankly I'm a little tired, and now if you'll all forgive me I think I'll go up and shower and get into a pair of slacks."

"The boys want to show you their garden," Sylvia said, "and Louise has a garden, too, with radishes."

"Well, well," Willis said, "yum, yum, radishes."

"Maybe you'd like to have Carl bring us cocktails on the terrace, dear," Sylvia said. "It's such a nice warm day." CONTINUED ON PAGE 102

Copyright, 1955, by John P. Marquand The complete novel was recently published by Little, Brown & Co.

Sincerely—Willis Wayde

Conclusion

Menu

Sea-Food Cocktail Caribbee

Melba Toast

Fried or Broiled Chicken with Mexican Mole Sauce

Saffron Rice Buttered Asparagus

Avocado and Palm-Heart Salad

Florida Sherbet Ambrosia

Coffee

(Planned for Six)

Tropical Flavor

I DON'T know where you are wandering or have wandered, or will wander, but I go for warm and sunny climes, for two excellent reasons. One, I want to get warm without resorting to red flannels. And two, I want to find out and actually eat the food my warm-blooded neighbors eat—"Good Neighbors," as F.D.R. called them. And what do you think I'm hankering for? Don't tell a soul, will you? I don't want it talked about as coming from me, you understand. But it's chicken. Chicken with a tropical flavor.

I don't mean that chicken is all. Our tropical neighbors have as great a variety of wonderful things to eat as there are places, and before I tell you about the chicken dish, I'll give you a receipt that goes like this: it is the rarely delicious sauce that is served on a mixed-sea-food cocktail, served as a first course at luncheon or dinner. It is known as

Sea-Food Cocktail Caribbee

You must have a variety of sea foods, just one isn't enough. If you could get the little rock-lobster tails from South Africa or Australia and clams and crab and shrimp, serving them in a shell and pouring over a wonderful sauce, you'd be going "Caribbee" like crazy. So collect as many different kinds as you can, fresh or frozen, and serve a sauce made like this:

Mix 1 cup mayonnaise with ½ cup thick commercial sour cream and ¼ cup chopped water cress. Season with 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1 teaspoon anchovy paste,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 176

Sea-blue pottery, gleaming silver and a basket centerpiece of vines and fruit provide the atmosphere for this dinner with a tropical flavor

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER

LINE A DAY

1 Song for Spring

Your voice, beloved, is to me
As strains of sweetest melody.
The whispering winds, the pipes o' Pan,
Midsummer sounds aeolian.
The song of birds at break of day,
The skylark's tireless roundelay,
All blended into harmony,
And sung by cherubim to me!

2 As welcome as the first crocus: new frozen soups to grace the dinner table. The oyster stew and fish chowder are true to the homemade conventions. But the queen of them all is the shrimp.

3 Speaking of fish chowder, one of the editors reports that a pinch of thyme much improves it.

4 Now it can be told—a new hors-d'oeuvre spread. Aromatic bitters—the secret. Mix one 3-ounce package cream cheese with 2 tablespoons crumbled blue cheese, 1 tablespoon light cream and 3 drops bitters, or more to taste.

5 The maple sap's going to be running soon up here in Vermont, and I know one way I'm going to use the sirup. Read on for particulars.

6 Bring to a boil ¾ cup maple sirup, ¼ cup water, ¼ cup seedless raisins and ⅛ teaspoon each cinnamon and nutmeg, stirring constantly. Reduce heat and simmer 3 minutes. Drain 8 firm canned-pear halves and add to sirup. Simmer 3 minutes. Put pears in shallow baking dish. Add 2 teaspoons lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon grated lemon rind to sirup and pour over pears. Serve warm or cold with sour cream.

7 Now it's cheese croutons that take the stage—afloat on soups and for tossing into a green salad. Toss 1½ cups bite-size shredded-wheat biscuits in 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine over low heat 5 minutes. Sprinkle with ½ cup grated Parmesan cheese and spread out to cool. Good to nibble on just as they are.

8 Canto I: While oysters are still with us, try this. Melt 1 tablespoon butter or margarine with 1 teaspoon anchovy paste. Beat up 6 eggs with a dash of Tabasco.

9 Canto II: Pour into hot anchovy butter or margarine and scramble as usual. When eggs are just beginning to set, toss in 12 oysters, chopped and drained, and finish scrambling. Salt to taste, but go easy, as anchovy paste is salty. Serve on toast with a spoonful of chili sauce.

10 Don't look so bored when I mention stuffed eggs. Mash the hard-boiled yolks and make a paste with tomato catchup. Season with salt, pepper, marjoram, mint and sage and stuff the whites. Not usual—what?

11 Another stuffing is done with the mashed yolks set up with curry, lemon juice and mayonnaise.

12 Come Sunday night and sure as shootin' some cronies will show up for supper. Keep some canned salmon on the pantry shelf. It's always a good bet in the chafing dish, creamed, with maybe sliced ripe olives and hard-cooked eggs.

13 Rhubarb, the shocking-pink fruit, has a short season and this is it. Drain some cooked rhubarb, purée it and combine with whipped cream. Serve as a sauce for warm orange cake—the newest cake in a package.

14 Cream soups are more delicate made with quick-cooking tapioca than with flour. Concoct a cream-of-pea soup using puréed cooked or canned peas—using part chicken stock for liquid, tapioca to thicken and curry to flavor. Lace with shreds of cooked chicken.

The Journal, first magazine to war on patent medicines and medical quackery, was in 1907 deep in its campaign which brought about legal abolishment of the public drinking cup.

Harrison Fisher, famous portrait artist and illustrator, painted dozens of Journal covers. His drawings of The American Girl set standards for fashion and beauty which lasted for years.

15 Or make an old-fashioned homemade tomato soup and season with fresh or dried dill. First rate.

16 I've been reminded of a superb way with lobster. Take the meat of several lobsters. Cut into pieces not too small. Sauté gently (don't brown) in butter or margarine with a crushed clove of garlic. Add a few spoonfuls of canned tomato sauce, some Worcestershire sauce, and plenty of chopped parsley. Serve on toast.

17 Thinking of a smart beginner for a stylish dinner? How about this one before the soup? Take off the stems and peel large mushroom caps. Grill them in butter or margarine, fill with flaked cooked fresh or frozen or canned crab meat in cream, cover with buttered crumbs and grated cheese and brown under the broiler.

18 Rice accompanies chicken often these days. Here's a new way: Toss cooked rice with melted butter and canned toasted chopped almonds. Flavor with curry.

19 While I'm at it, I might as well throw in a new trick with chicken. When chickens are all seasoned and buttered and ready to broil, roll them lightly in sesame seeds.

20 Chapter I: Belonging in the realm of soup, lobster chowder is out in front with some other de luxe potages. Get the lobster out of the shells (2 medium lobsters) and chop it into coarse pieces with the tomalley and coral.

BY ANN BATCHELDER

21 Chapter II: Pound or roll 3 Boston crackers very fine. Mix the lobster with butter the size of an egg, season with salt and pepper. Work this all together with a fork. Heat 3 cups rich milk with 1 cup cream and the lobster, seasonings and crackers. Stir it every minute. Serve piping hot in a tureen and soup plates. With small brown-bread sandwiches.

22 Along with all his fame and glory, Daniel Webster gave his name to a chowder. Yes, my dears, there is a Daniel Webster Chowder. With pounds of white and blue fish, 25 oysters, a bottle of port, one of claret, spices and herbs "ad lib," it's something! (The result of research.)

23 Broiled chicken, fried chicken, chicken croquettes are as American as Valley Forge or Stephen Foster's songs, so a good gravy to serve with them should be without a suspicion of alien cooking. One such is set down here:

24 Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, blend in 2 of flour and add 1 cup chicken broth. Cook, stirring it every minute until bubbling. Add seasonings and ½ cup cream. When smooth, beat it like all get out.

25 From an old cookbook: "Doughnuts eaten as soon as fried are a sure guarantee of stomach-ache. A result of indigestion. Especially in young children. A freshly fried doughnut has no place in pocket or lunch box prepared for man or child." Better cut out the whole thing, no?

26 What a sandwich some dreamer dreamed up! Brown bread buttered and spread with cheese, buttered white bread with chicken and ham covered with chutney, the two put together and cut on the bias.

27 Whoever said "The apple is an excellent thing until you have tried a peach" perhaps didn't know how well these two get along. For an easy dessert add some sliced canned cling peaches and canned apple slices to the new apple-flavored gelatin dessert, slightly thickened. Serve with sweetened whipped cream, flavored with cinnamon or nutmeg.

28 "Supper's ready in the dining room, everybody gather round." Do you remember that old mammy song? Great to sing on a sleigh ride out to Downers'. One thing all the boys liked for supper was a great dish of hot baked beans with plenty of piccalilli right in the bean dish. And next to the beans, platters of fish cakes, fried in deep fat. I'll stop, for I'm homesick right now.

29 Lamb chops cause no palpitation, but there's a sauce for them makes up for any lack. Put ½ tumbler red-currant jelly, mixed with ¼ cup chutney, the juice of ½ lemon and a little salt and pepper, into a saucepan. Heat well, very well, and pass separately.

30 "Ballads for sale," the minstrels strolling through the English countryside used to yodel amidst the bluebells and hedges. But how many know of the balladeers of our own New England? Lest the old tales in verse be forever lost and forgotten, an intrepid "collector," with the help of another, has sought, discovered and put in a book many of these old treasures and called the fascinating volume: Ballads Migrant of New England.

31 The "collector" is Helen Hartness Flanders, wife of Vermont's U. S. Senator; Marguerite Olney has helped and Robert Frost has contributed a notable introduction. Each New England state is represented. Words and music and commentary, format and all make an unforgettable contribution to the folklore of our countryside. This is a book you should all own. No, my copy is not for sale.

Your Annie.

Each time you wash your face

— your skin "Dies" a little

There are 1 to 3 hour periods every day, doctors say, when your skin is in danger—open to such serious troubles as stretched pores . . . coarsened texture . . . cracking, "shriveling." These danger periods of skin "un-balance" are immediately after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Nature takes 1 to 3 hours to restore these vital protectors. Meanwhile, your defenseless skin "dies" a little . . .

After each washing— "re-balance" your skin

No complexion, however young, can escape this problem of skin "un-balance." You've noticed these first danger signals—right after washing:

A pulled-tight feeling . . . a "burning" redness
Flaky roughnesses that snag your powder puff

Must you avoid washing your face? "No," skin specialists say, "but after each washing 're-balance' your skin instantly. . . ."

Never leave your skin unprotected a single moment after washing. Re-establish its defenses at once with a smoothing application of Pond's Cold Cream. At least 60 times faster than Nature, Pond's combats dryness, "shriveling." Restores elasticity. Keeps skin texture fine and smooth.

Always at bedtime—a deep clearing

Besides daytime "re-balancing," your skin needs thorough clearing with Pond's Cold Cream each night. A deep Pond's Creaming dislodges water-resistant dirt, keeps your skin looking fresh, radiant! Start now to give your skin perfect care, with a perfect cream. Reap the quick rewards of a noticeably lovelier complexion!

The world's most-famous beauty formula—never duplicated, never equaled. Today—get a large jar of this superb cream. More women use Pond's Cold Cream than any face cream ever made.

Mrs. Michael H. McCormick

Mrs. McCormick, photographed in Paris during her honeymoon, is a member of the distinguished Chicago family. Although in her earliest twenties, she has worked out a skin care program effective yet simple enough to fit easily into her active life. She says, "My skin just doesn't agree with frequent washing, unless I give it a quick smoothing with Pond's Cold Cream right away. The improvements these daytime creamings make are astonishing. And, of course, for thorough cleansing, I always use Pond's Cold Cream each night."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 102

"But we didn't," Sylvia said, "and we aren't going to, so let's enjoy it the way it is."

Willis nodded gravely. "Honey," he said, "just supposing—I'm only thinking out loud—but just supposing we did have a chance to build a home of our own, wouldn't you sort of enjoy it, honey?"

Sylvia sighed. "Oh, I don't know, dear," she said. "There would be all the details and arguing with an architect, and a new house always looks so new. No, frankly, I'm awfully glad that we don't have to build a house."

"But, honey," Willis said, "wouldn't you look forward to the adventure in it?"

Sylvia looked at him in a way that made him slightly uneasy. "Willis," she said, "you aren't thinking of building a new house or anything like that, are you?"

"Well, only indirectly, dear," Willis said, "but still that might be part of the fun if everything I've been mulling over in the last few days comes true."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said, "what under the sun are you talking about?" and instead of looking at him with pleased anticipation, she seemed almost apprehensive.

"Sweetness," he said, "it's been a real strain on me to have waited so long before telling you what has happened. Frankly, here it is in a nutshell, and I want you to hold tight to your chair, because it's really 'sumpin'—as they say. If things work out right, I honestly think we can start relaxing a little and take that trip abroad, honey, and all sorts of things, and build a whole new house, if we want to, and landscape it just the way we want. You're following me, aren't you?"

He had asked the question because she still looked apprehensive, and unconvinced.

"Yes," Sylvia said, "I follow you, but I wish you'd tell me what's it all about, Willis. Don't make me sit here being frightened."

That last remark really broke the tension, and without intending to, Willis shook with convulsive laughter. "You know, that's one of the funniest things you've ever said, honey," he told her. "Frightened? Now hold onto your chair and listen to this. In a nutshell, sweetness, I've been offered the first vice-presidency of the biggest belting company in existence, the Simcoe Company, with the assurance that I will be president inside of three years. Aside from the salary, there's a very intelligent common stock setup going with it."

"But, Willis," Sylvia began and then stopped, and she still did not seem to get it.

"Now, honey," Willis said, "there are no ifs and buts about this. This is a firm and clear cut offer—not that I can blame you for being the least bit incredulous, considering what Simcoe stands tradewise."

As Willis watched her, Sylvia shifted her position, and her worried look, instead of evaporating into relief, grew more pronounced.

"But, Willis," she said, "I know your mind is very quick about these things and that mine isn't, and so I hope you won't be impatient with me. I don't see how you can leave Harcourt Associates, especially when so many people depend on you as much as they do. It doesn't seem to me exactly fair."

It irritated Willis that Sylvia should think for an instant that he would have done something that was not fair—but then he remembered that he had not yet presented the whole picture.

"I'd rather you'd let me make my point," he said, "before you jump to conclusions, Sylvia. You haven't heard the whole of the offer, and the best part is coming, honey." He laughed lightly. "It just so happens that the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company is offering to merge with Harcourt Associates, and the figure, honey—now hold onto your seat again—is in the neighborhood of twenty-five million dollars. Now how do you like that one, Mrs. Wayde? And before you answer just remember that you and I own several shares in Harcourt Associates. You're beginning to see, aren't you," Willis asked her gently, "why I feel so happy about this whole picture? Not so much for myself as for you and the children, sweetness. It's mighty hard to accumulate property today with things the way they are taxwise."

It did seem to him it was about time for Sylvia to share at least a little in his own spirit of euphoria, but then Sylvia was always slow on the uptake. "But, Willis," she said, "you can't sell Harcourt Associates yourself. The Harcourts and other people will have to agree to it, won't they?"

"Right, sweetness," Willis said. "The offer must be accepted by a majority of voting stock, and I think that's the way it will happen when the offer is presented, because in its essence it's a very generous offer."

"I suppose it is," Sylvia said, and she sighed and the line was deep again between her eyebrows, "but there's one thing I don't like about it, Willis. I know I don't understand these things, but it does seem to me that what they want most is Harcourt Associates, and that they are offering you a position in their company so that you can help them get what they want. It seems something like a bribe, Willis."

He wished that Sylvia had not hit upon that final word because it sounded like an echo of his own conscience, but he knew Sylvia would be right with him as soon as she got the whole picture.

"I'm glad you brought up that point, honey," he said, "because it was one that disturbed me, and in fact I went right to the mat with P. L. about it. The two offers aren't tied together in any sort of a package deal, sweetness. P. L. really wants me at Simcoe. He's reaching retirement age, you know, and he said I was the best man there is for the job. There it is in a nutshell, and I hope it makes you as proud as it makes me, Mrs. Wayde."

He had told Sylvia everything frankly and sincerely, but the furrow between her eyebrows was still as deep as ever.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "did you ask Mr. Nagel whether he wants you in his company if he can't get Harcourt Associates?"

He must have looked startled. "No, honey," he said, "I didn't. Very frankly, the thought

...are you really lovely to love?

Whenever you are together—you can be certain of an air of freshness when you use Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Perspiration troubles vanish. No worry about stains that spoil clothes. No worry of offensive odor. Underarms are dry! Fresh has the most effective perspiration-checking ingredient known to science.

When you open the Fresh jar you'll discover... its delicate fragrance... its whiteness... its whipped cream smoothness. Not a trace of stickiness, of greasiness. Gentle to skin, too.

For an air of freshness, use Fresh Cream Deodorant daily. Be lovely to love, always!

FRESH is a registered trademark of Pharma-Craft Corp. Also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

a "FRESH" girl is always lovely to love occur to me. It would have been very g to P. L. Nagel, sweetness. I know he ne, no matter what—but of course I with him and leave the Harcourts in

h. You see my point, don't you, dear?"
lt relaxed and happy now that Sylvia true picture. Anyone could see that he ot leave the Harcourts in the lurch.
, Willis," Sylvia said, "I shouldn't he Harcourts would like it, I mean the Harcourts and Bill and Bess. I mean selling their business that's been in the so long. You know they have a sense of ion to everyone who works there. Of it's old-fashioned but that's the way el."

is examined the intricate pattern of the nshah rug before he answered Sylvia.
don't have to tell me how the Harcourts out the Harcourt Mill. It's like a sort of home to me, too, honey." He had not ed that there would be a tremor in his ut there was, and he paused and cleared
oat. "But here's the point, sweetness,"
l. "We are living in a world of change, am as sure as I can be, morally, that g physical is going to happen to the Har-Mill. In the final integration with Sim-
I have anything to do with it, it won't se its name. I always will be loyal to the urt interests. They're the same as my mily, honey. But look at the present ofventy-five million dollars. Very frankly, ouldn't be getting one fifth of that if it been for me."
know you've worked day and night,
Sylvia said, and she nodded her head
.
nd nobody knows better than you that en quite a strain, sweetness," Willis said y because he did not want Sylvia to int him. "When a chance like this comes u and me and the children, we've both of to take it, if it doesn't involve integrity, this doesn't. You've got to keep on movnd growing. That's the American way, ness."
ut, Willis dear," Sylvia said, "we're al-changing. First there was that time when esigned from Beakney-Graham because acoby wanted you at Rahway. Then after re all getting on comfortably at Rahway g, you started Harcourt Associates, and ust when we're all happy, this new thing s along. Willis, can't we forget about it t things stay the way they are?"
s was the last question Willis would have ted.
ow do you mean, sweetness," he asked,
e things the way they are?" His voice ed an undercurrent of irritation which d not intended.
mean why do it?" Sylvia said. "Just let go on the way they are, as though this never happened."
ile Willis was trying to pull his thoughts er he was conscious of the silence that unded them, as though an unseen audiwere waiting for his reply.
can't believe that you're serious about uggestion," Willis said. "When this is a e for everything we want—leisure, trips rope. We're going to be in the big league,
."
n, dear," Sylvia said, "I suppose men are nt from women."
lis laughed briefly. "That's the way you s are, sweetness," he said, "objecting I bring home a new antique, saying that pphire-and-diamond clip is ostentatious, know you. You like them in the end, and bout admitting it and giving me a kiss?" crossed the room and kissed her and held and for a moment.
n, darling," Sylvia said, "I suppose e right. I do like money, and maybe I'm beginning to like ostentation, but I'm g tired of change. For instance, if you do ne the president of this new company, we be able to live here, will we?"
o, honey," Willis said, and he laughed
, "we'll have to move west, honey, out to go. That's where their main offices are."
illis," Sylvia said, "I suppose this sounds
o you, but we've got all our roots here, r friends and the children's friends. I re-ate the prospect, darling."

Willis put his hands in his pockets and walked slowly three times back and forth across the rug.

"I don't know why you haven't got any sense of adventure, sweetness," he said. "It's going to be something new. We're going to build a home of our own, and Lake Forest, where we'll look for a building site, is a much more lovely and more gracious suburb than any I can think of around New York. We'll have new friends, honey, but we'll be coming to New York frequently." He bent down again and kissed Sylvia. Then he patted her head gently, just as he patted Louise's. "And besides, I'll make you a little promise. The boys will go to school in New England, some fine school with high ideals like Middlesex, and then of course they'll go to Harvard."

He gave Sylvia's back a friendly slap.

"And I can promise you we're going to have one whale of a fine time, honey," he said, "from now on in. Europe, Claridge's in London, the Paris Ritz. Believe me, honey, you're going to love every minute of it—and now how about our going upstairs to bed? I'm feeling pretty tired, what with one thing and another."

Willis was rapidly learning that if you had to do a thing, no matter how difficult, delay only made it more so. Consequently the day after he arrived in Orange he took the Merchants up to Boston.

He was relieved when he showed up at the Boston office the next morning to observe no trace of undue curiosity or restlessness. As a matter of fact, some new orders had come in and there was a prospect of still more in the near future. When he smiled at the people working at the central desks and shook hands with Sol Bradley of Promotion and Dana Britchbury of Sales, and Hank Knowlton, the general manager, Willis felt a warm spot in his heart for everyone.

"Hank," Willis asked when greetings were over, "what's the latest about Mr. Harcourt?"

Make his world a happy comfortable place to be

Remember—his skin really is thinner than yours

Nestled in the softness of his own little blanket he feels warm and snug. He will like the softness of the new ScotTissue, too

Everything that touches his tender skin must be gentle as your own caress. Your baby will like the softness of the new ScotTissue. It is unfailingly gentle to his thinner baby skin . . . yet strong to resist tearing and shredding "ScotTissue." Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Only you can give him the warm affection he needs to feel safe and secure.

He depends on you too for the wise and practical care that means so much to his physical comfort.

You can contribute much to your baby's daily comfort by choosing a bathroom tissue that is truly "tender skin" soft. The new ScotTissue is softer than ever for his thinner baby skin. Yet it is strong and absorbent for quick, neat cleansing.

Get several rolls today. The big 1,000-sheet roll goes further, lasts longer, gives you real family-use economy. Another great Scott value.

1000 sheets—over ½ more than the 650 sheets you get from most other tissues

2 rolls of ScotTissue equal more than 3 rolls of most other tissues

He spoke in a low solicitous voice, and Hank Knowlton answered in the same manner.

"The picture, as we got it yesterday afternoon," Hank said, "is about the same. His left side and his speech are still affected. We called up Mrs. Ewing instead of bothering Mrs. Harcourt."

"You're right, I think," Willis said, "to make inquiries through Mrs. Ewing. I'll call this afternoon. By the way, whose idea was it to have fresh flowers on his desk?"

"Oh, that was Miss Bailey's idea," Hank said. "It takes a gal to think of a thing like that."

"Well, it's a nice idea," Willis said. "You might tell Nellie Bailey to get fresh flowers every day. Hank, it might be a good idea if you were to get the department heads together in the conference room for a general briefing, say in half an hour. I'll be making a couple of telephone calls, but interrupt me right away when you're ready."

The windows of Willis' office looked over the Charles River toward Cambridge. The surface of his desk was clear, except for his group photograph of Sylvia and the children, and Willis sat down in the special posture chair he had ordered, not a thing of beauty, he had to admit, but effective for the purpose intended.

Until the telephone rang, he sat looking over the roofs of Commonwealth and Beacon Street, planning what he would say to Bess.

"Hello, Bess," he said. "I hope I haven't waked you up or anything."

"Oh," she said, "is that you, Willis?" He would have known the slightly husky quality of her voice anywhere. "Where are you? I hope you're somewhere where we can see you."

"Why, Bess dear," Willis said, and he laughed reassuringly, "of course I am. I'm right up here at the Boston office. Can you tell me how everything's going at Beacon Street?"

"I just finished talking to mother a minute before you called," Bess answered. "He's able to sit up for two hours in the afternoon now. He can get downstairs to the library, and he was asking for you only yesterday."

"Well, that's the best news I've heard in a dog's age," Willis said. "Maybe you wouldn't mind finding out whether I ought to see him not. It would be good to see him if it would make him overtired."

"I know he'd love to see you," Bess sa "The doctor said only the family, but we'll you in on the ground floor."

"I've never felt more like family," Wi said, "than I do right this minute, Bess. I do suppose I could have a little visit with y sometime later this afternoon myself."

"Why, Willis," Bess said, "alone?" and laughed.

He was glad that he was still able to keep a friendly bantering basis with Bess.

"Yes," he said, "alone, if you can stand Bess, but then we've been without chaperc before, haven't we?"

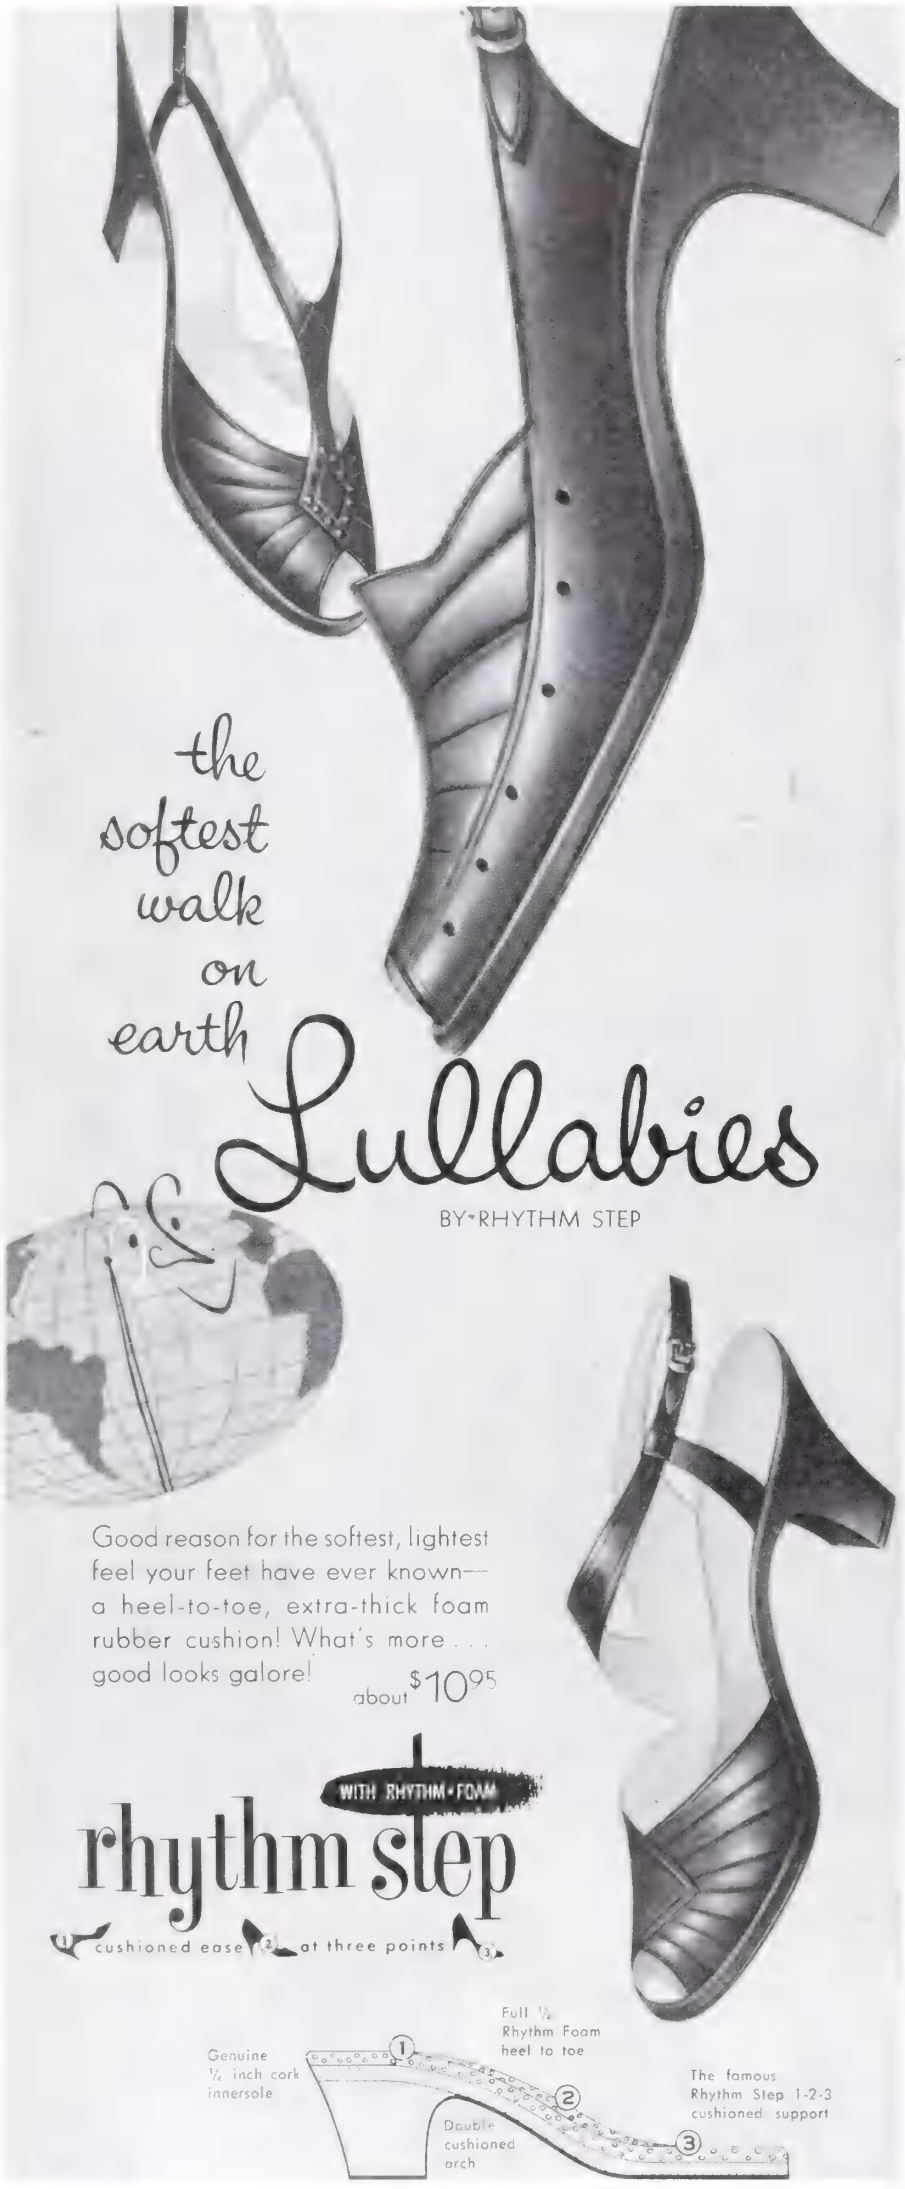
When she laughed, he could not help join in with her. "Why, Willis," she said, "have y something special and private to say to me

Willis waited a moment before he answer "Well, to be serious for just a minute, Bes he said, "I frankly want to ask your adv about something that's been on my mind cently involving a decision I have to make. dinarily, of course, I'd ask your father, but any case I'd value your reaction, Bess."

"Oh, dear," said Bess, "is it something abc business? It isn't bad news, is it?"

"Oh, now come," Willis said, "I would be joshing with you over the telephone if I h bad news. Why, frankly, I think it's pre good news. After I've seen your father, w don't we meet up here in the office?"

"In the office?" Bess said. "Why the offi Willis?"



"Only because it's a place where we can quiet and undisturbed," Willis said. "May on second thought you'd better ask Bill come up with you, Bess."

"But what under the sun is it about, Willis she asked.

"Now, Bess," he answered, "I can't expla it over the telephone, but as I say, I think i pretty good news for all of us. Don't wor about anything, Bess dear."

Willis stood still for nearly half a minu after he had put down the telephone. H

CONTINUED ON PAGE 108

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

Air Cooling

Our modern JOURNAL home starts with big advantages for future coolness. Item: the white roof reflects heat. Item: the trellis shades the glass living-room wall to allow view but keep direct sun rays out. But you may want to install air-conditioning facilities as well. Even if the cooling unit itself may not be added until later, it is a good idea to plan toward it during the building stage. Doing so now saves on later costs, and almost certainly increases the resale value of the house in these days when air-cooled homes are growing in popularity.

If you plan air conditioning, consult your builder for preparations the house will require in your climate—insulation, weather stripping, attic-ventilation facilities, barriers against ground moisture, double glass in skylight (if second floor is to be cooled too).

A heating system of the forced-air type is indicated for the JOURNAL house. The same ducts and registers can be used for cooling, but extra ducts will be needed in most parts of the country. All such plans depend specifically on location. But as a sure rule, you save by putting in those extra ducts as you build. They will cost between $50 and $150 serving a single floor of the house, $80 to $170 if you plan to cool the entire house. To put in the same ducts as an afterthought would be much higher—$150 to $450 for the first floor, $340 to $660 for the whole house.

The cooling unit would logically go beside the furnace in the small basement. Once again: to save, put in locally needed connections for electricity, water and water drainage as the house is built.

Finally comes the actual cooling unit—about the size of a small furnace. The cost of the unit, including installation, in a house of this kind properly prepared will be between $1200 and $1500 if you cool a single floor, or $1545 to $1850 if you plan to cool the whole house—and those prices include water-saving facilities required in most areas.

In summary, then, air-cooling preparations put in at the building stage can cut down later expenses considerably, from at least 10 per cent to probably 25 per cent. Well-equipped for air cooling, your house will take less running cost during hot weather. And it will be easier to heat in winter too.

Figures Show

the modern taste is for light refreshment

ONE look at this modern hostess's silhouette and you can just about guess the kind of thing she keeps in that refrigerator.

You'd know it must be stocked with the lighter, less filling foods that make up the diet of the world's most attractive people today.

That's how they keep those slender waistlines. How they stay so young-looking year after year. Why they feel so good, so fit for all the activities, all the fun modern living has to offer.

And it is to suit their modern taste that today's Pepsi-Cola is reduced in calories. Never heavy, never too sweet, it refreshes without filling.

Have a Pepsi, the modern, the light refreshment.

Pepsi-Cola

The Light refreshment

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 106

thoughts kept running off on tangents as they frequently did when he talked to Bess Ewing. They had known each other too long and sometimes too well, and long familiarity made impersonality impossible, but he had achieved his purpose. He would see Bess at half past four, and her brother Bill would be with her, if he knew Bess.

Willis pulled his wits together. In fifteen minutes he would have to be in the conference room going over sales and production figures, and he had another call to make.

Roger Harcourt was in his office. Everything that day had run very smoothly.

"Hello, Roger," Willis said, "it's good to hear your voice. . . . Yes, I'm up here for the day and just parenthetically, Roger, before I forget it, while I was down in Carolina at the Production Liners' Convocation, who should I meet there but P. L. Nagel, but that's a point, Roger, that I wish to take up with you later. What I wanted to say over the telephone is that I told that story of yours about the Chinese ambassador. I wish you had been there to see how well it was received."

Willis waited a moment for some comment, but there was only silence.

"Are you there, Roger?" Willis asked at last.

"Yes, I am, unfortunately," Roger Harcourt said. "What else is it you want?"

Willis laughed. "I was only hoping that I might have a bite of lunch with you, Roger," Willis said. "Over a little matter that Gil Bakeliss and I were talking about yesterday, and Gil concurs with my views. You'd be pleased if you knew how highly Gil thinks of you, Roger."

"And I'd be pleased if I knew what you were talking about," Roger Harcourt said. "What have you and Nagel been cooking up together there at the Hotel Carolina?"

It had never been wise to discount Roger Harcourt's perspicacity. Willis found himself speaking more tersely. "I'll tell you that at lunch. I suggest we have it here at the office at twelve-thirty sharp. I'll add that it's an important-enough appointment to break any others that you may have, Roger. I have a piece of news that I think will please you, and I have one more suggestion."

Willis paused. There was nothing like a slight wait over the telephone.

"Hello," Roger said, "are you there?"

"Yes," Willis said, "I'm right here, Roger. I said I had one suggestion. See if you can make an appointment to see Mrs. Henry Harcourt's trustee for later in the afternoon. And now I must bid you good-by because I'm going into a conference."

GUESTS or not, Willis had always made it a point to have lunch in the office with the executive staff whenever he came to Boston. He could not help it if Roger was annoyed by having to eat clear consommé, cold tongue and coleslaw in the conference room with Sol Bradley, Dana Britchbury, Hank Knowlton and two juniors from the Sales Department. He was sure that he only needed half an hour with Roger after lunch, and as matters turned out his foreshadowing had been correct almost to the minute.

"Roger," Willis said, "suppose you and I go into Mr. Bryson's office for our coffee. You can have sugar if you like, but I find saccharin keeps my weight down, and saccharin is thoughtfully supplied by the management."

It was one of those office jokes that never grew stale, but Roger Harcourt did not join in the communal laughter.

"I'd like a digestive tablet instead of saccharin," Roger said. "I never could stand raw cabbage, but I would indeed appreciate a minute alone with you, Willis, since you asked me up here for a talk."

Once Willis would have been alarmed by this display of temper, but basically he knew that Roger Harcourt respected him. It was even barely possible that Roger Harcourt was fond of him.

Willis closed the door of Mr. Bryson's office. "Have a cigar, Roger," Willis said, "and settle down in a comfortable chair. I know you don't approve of the captain's chairs, but there's a soft leather one over by the window."

Willis poured the coffee, and Roger Harcourt grunted painfully as he sat down.

"All right," he said, "now that you've got me placed with the light on my face and the office door closed, perhaps you'll pull the rabbit out of your hat, Willis. I don't unde your ability for a single minute, but I wis didn't always find it necessary to set the st Willis laughed affectionately. "I think agree with me in just a minute," he said, this moment needs a little setting, Roge sorry you were bored at lunch. I wanted look as though you dropped in casually cause, very frankly, our meeting mustn underlined at all. But before we start, you tell me what the doctors say about Bryson's condition?"

"I DON'T think I can bear it, Willis," H Harcourt said, "if you tell me again tha have a warm spot in your heart for Brys he had worked harder and hadn't indulg violent exercise, he wouldn't be in his pr unhappy condi From everything gather, he will recover sufficient participate furth Harcourt Assoc matters—not tha will be a loss to one."

Willis put dow coffee cup care and looked stern Roger Harcourt.

"I hope you'll give me, Roger," said, "if I say I re your attitude. Sir because our busi has been expand this does not mea a minute that my alty to Mr. Bryson his family has alt in any way."

"I don't care loyal you are," R Harcourt said, long as this firm k on making mo Just as soon as stock gets up to a dred, I'll sell out. let's get down to b tacks. What is it yo been talking ab with Mr. P. L. Nag Although Willis not sure that he li Roger's attitude, could always tak hint. "I often think best thing about turing," Willis said being able to colle fine assortment pleasant memories have a lot of them, cluding a few ab you, Roger. We b remember, don't when old P. L. ca down and offered buy the mill from H Five million dollars was the price, and y wanted to sell, as I remember."

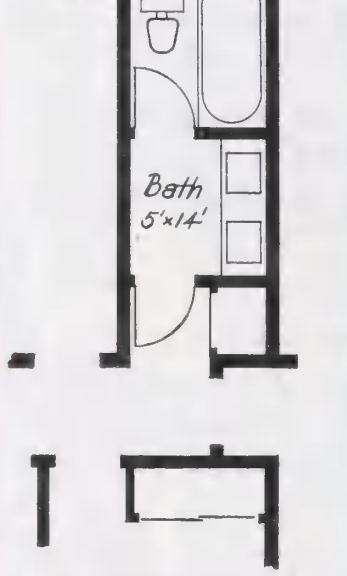
Roger scowled. "I was basically right th and I still think the property ought to be sol he said.

Willis nodded slowly. "I agree with yo Roger," he said. "One hundred per cent."

Roger Harcourt gave a clumsy jerk and h pushed himself from his chair. "What's th again?" he asked.

It was a pleasure to be able to surpr Roger, and now that he was surprised the ne would be more effective.

"It hurts me, very frankly, to say that we in agreement, Roger," Willis said, "because a way this contradicts a number of my pub statements regarding the future of our co pany, but privately I've been thinking for long while that we must expand or sell ou



Willis waited, but not too long. There w no need to be overdramatic.

"P. L. Nagel could naturally put the ca more strongly than I," he said. "Briefly, Si coe wants to absorb us for a figure in the neig borhood of twenty-five million dollars. I thi we ought to accept, Roger."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 111

The Journal's
MORE HOUSE
FOR THE MONEY
Portfolio #1

Alternate Bath Plan

One-bathroom scheme could also be used in Journal's portfolio house instead of two small baths. This one shows two basins, separate tub and toilet, large linen closet.

Sensational Discovery!

NOW... an exciting new kind of "Perfume that Clings"

Chantilly
LIQUID
SKIN SACHET*

If perfume doesn't "stay" with you . . . or if you're looking for a luxurious fragrance to use everyday . . . this new creamy-pink perfume is the answer! Made with a revolutionary, slowly diffusing sachet base—it keeps the lovely fragrance of Chantilly on your skin for hours!

HOW TO APPLY...

Every morning, smooth a few drops over your skin . . . particularly at wrist, the bend of your arm, behind the ear, under the neckline . . .

With every pulse-beat, the deep warmth of your body awakens the perfume held in each precious drop . . .

And the romantic fragrance of Chantilly comes to life . . . becomes a part of you . . . clings to you . . . all day long, far into the evening!

YOU OWE IT TO YOURSELF to try "The Perfume That Clings" $1.85 plus tax

*Trademark — Originated by — Comp'd in U.S.

HOUBIGANT

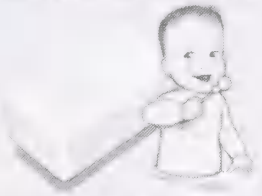
9500 Skin Tests Prove

Palmolive Soap Is Mildest! Better for Complexion Care!

BETTER THAN ANY LEADING TOILET SOAP... FLOATING SOAP... EVEN COLD CREAM

Palmolive's gentle complexion care cleans thoroughly without irritation!

ere's nothing women envy more . . . or men admire so ch . . . as that lovely "schoolgirl complexion look." And too, can have a younger looking, far lovelier complexion by changing to proper care with gentle Palmolive. It so much to help you have a softer, smoother skin!



Skin specialists agree that a really mild soap means less irritation . . . more gentle cleansing. And now, milder Palmolive brings you these benefits—so important for a softer, smoother, brighter skin. For Palmolive is not only mild—Palmolive has been proved mildest of them all!

See how regular care with Palmolive Soap really improves your complexion. How it leaves skin feeling so wonderfully clean and soft . . . how it cleans without irritation. Try mild Palmolive Soap. You'll find no other leading soap or cold cream gets skin thoroughly clean as gently as Palmolive!

Skin Specialists Say: "MILDER CLEANSING IS BETTER FOR YOUR COMPLEXION!"

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Any Other Leading Beauty Soap or Castile Soap!

Palmolive Is Proved Milder than Leading White Floating Soaps or Deodorant Soaps!

Palmolive Is Proved Even Milder than America's Leading Cold Creams!

PALMOLIVE SOAP HELPS YOU GUARD THAT SCHOOLGIRL COMPLEXION LOOK!

The Big News in Corn Meal!

Fresh Corn Flavor

Be sure it's Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal

Pass the Fresh Corn F to your folks tonight!
a wonderful, easy
Meal Biscuit Ring lik
Recipe's on the next

Quaker
CORN MEAL
. . . HOMINY GRITS AND QUICK GRITS, TOO

Look for either of these famous faces and you get the Fresh Corn Flavor of choice corn, new milling methods, new packaging.

Aunt Jemima
CORN MEAL
. . . HOMINY GRITS, TOO

Young Idea for Lent
Hot and hearty
1-dish meal

Corn Meal Biscuit Ring

with Tuna Supreme

…ple, easy . . . and every flaky
…thful says "Fresh Corn Flavor."

- Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal (white or yellow)
- 2 cups sifted flour
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ⅓ cup shortening
- 3 tablespoons chopped pimiento
- 1 cup milk
- ½ cup grated sharp cheese

…ft together corn meal, flour, baking …owder, salt. Cut in shortening until …ixture resembles coarse crumbs. …dd pimiento, milk; mix lightly only …ntil dampened. (Add more milk if …eeded to make soft dough.)

…nead gently a few seconds on …ghtly floured board. Roll out to ⅜-…ch thickness; brush with melted …utter. Cut with floured biscuit cut-…r (small size). Dip buttered side of …iscuit in grated cheese. In a well-…reased 8-inch ring mold stand bis-…uits on end with flat sides together. …prinkle with remaining cheese. …ake in hot oven (400°F.) 20 to 25 …inutes.

…ake creamed tuna, adding chopped …reen pepper, chopped hard-cooked …ggs, chopped pimiento. Take biscuit …ng from oven; let stand 2 or 3 min-…tes. Invert mold; turn right side up …n serving dish. Brush with melted …utter. Set dish of creamed tuna in …enter; serve. (For delicious quick …read, omit creamed tuna.)

Short-Cut Method for Biscuit Ring

…repare biscuit dough as above. …hape into 10 or 12 balls. Brush each …ll with melted butter and roll in …rated cheese. Arrange balls in …reased ring mold. Sprinkle with re-…aining cheese. Bake as above.

"Fresh Corn Flavor"
…is the big news today in corn meal. Try Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal in your next corn bread.

Send today for your valuable
…OOR-OUTDOOR THERMOMETER
$4.00 Value—Only $2.00

…with trademark from …uaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal or Grits.

…is handsome inside …ermometer tells in-…or and outdoor tem-…ratures. Exclusive …agnifying case gives …sy reading. To get your thermom-…er, postpaid, send …ly $2.00 and trade-…ark from 1 bag or …ckage of Quaker or …unt Jemima Corn Meal …Grits to: Thermom-…er, Box 1721, Chicago …, Illinois.

…ote: Offer limited to continental U.S. and Alaska. …oid where prohibited, regulated or taxed. Good …ly while supplies last.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 108

"Good heavens!" Roger Harcourt said. "Twenty-five million?"

Willis was glad that he had gone so far beyond Roger that he was no longer bemused by high figures.

"In cash and in an exchange of stock, Roger," he said. "I don't know how Mr. Bryson will like it, or Bill and Bess, but I'm going to talk to them this afternoon. You see, there's another angle I haven't mentioned—a personal angle."

"Oh?" Roger Harcourt said. "Well, what's the personal angle?"

"I hate to bring it up, Roger," Willis said, "since it involves a question of divided loyalty and one that I have not entirely worked out as yet to my own satisfaction. I like to think I deserve the trust you've all put in me during the last eight years, but I also have another loyalty—my obligation to my family. I've been offered the first vice-presidency of Simcoe, which means the presidency when P. L. Nagel retires—but don't think for a minute these two offers are contingent."

ROGER's smallish mouth creased into an unpleasant smile. "Oh, no," he said, "not for a single minute, Willis."

It was not a time to be angry, but it was a time for sincerity and for the display of one's innermost convictions.

"It's only fair to tell you," Willis said, "that I don't like your tone of sarcasm, and I resent your implication. If there had not been this offer to buy, I would not dream of going to Simcoe, no matter how alluring the future. I would never leave this organization in the lurch. I have my stake in Harcourt, too, if you want to think from a mercenary angle. Everything aside, I think we'd better sell, but I won't have you or anyone else casting a reflection on my motives."

Candour: what a woman thinks about another woman's gown. Tact is what she says about it.
—THE CYNIC'S DICTIONARY

Roger Harcourt had stopped smiling. "Don't get excited, Willis," he said. "I don't care a bit about your motives. I'm completely with you about selling, and I see what you mean now about my seeing Mrs. Henry Harcourt's trustee."

"I'm glad you get my point," Willis answered. "It seems to me only fair that he should know of my personal intentions."

"I'll see he knows," Roger Harcourt said, and he laughed briefly. "He'll vote Mrs. Harcourt's stock with ours. I'll call you up as soon as I've seen him." Roger pushed himself up from his chair. "I always enjoy it when you and I think alike," he said. "Thank you for the luncheon, Willis, and as I exit may I add that I feel I've been in the presence of true greatness? It is a pleasure to see an artist working."

"I wouldn't say that I'm an artist, Roger," Willis said, "but I am grateful for our little talk and relieved that we have reached an area of agreement."

In later days Willis often wondered if there were any way in which he could have made a better presentation. On the whole he was reasonably sure that he had done the best he could. At least he had stated the facts candidly, and in a difficult negotiation it was always best to choose candor.

The worst part of the day was his visit to the Bryson Harcourt house on Beacon Street. Willis always hoped that he had not shown his consternation when he saw Mr. Bryson Harcourt seated in a wheel chair with Mrs. Harcourt standing in the background. He managed to smile in spite of the sagging appearance of half of Mr. Bryson's face.

"It's so good to see you, Willis," Mrs. Harcourt said, and she shook hands with him in her old vigorous way. "This is Willis, dear."

But Mr. Bryson recognized him, though he spoke so thickly that Willis could distinguish only half the words.

"He's asking if there's anything new at the office," Mrs. Harcourt said.

"Nothing that isn't first-rate news," Willis answered. "Everything is under control until you get back with us."

Then Mr. Bryson's speech grew clearer, or perhaps Willis had become accustomed to it. "How was the golf at Pinehurst?"

The question made a lump rise in Willis' throat. "Pretty good, considering," Willis answered.

He could not follow Mr. Bryson's next question, but Mrs. Harcourt did.

"He wants to know what you went around in," Mrs. Harcourt said.

"Well," Willis said, "I got a ninety-one on Course Two but I took three strokes getting out of the trap on the tenth. That's a very tricky hole, the tenth."

Half of Mr. Bryson's face was like a mask, but the other half followed every word. "Which trap?"

"The first on the right, sir," Willis answered. "The deep one." He laughed. "It was like being in the crater of a volcano, taking those three strokes."

Mrs. Harcourt nodded meaningly to Willis.

"It's great to see you, sir," Willis said, "and I'll be looking in again sometime very shortly. Now don't worry about the office. Everything's all right."

Mrs. Harcourt walked with him to the door. "Oh, Willis," she said, "we all thank God that you're here looking after everything."

"Believe me," Willis told her, "I'll always do the best I can, the very best for everyone."

He was always glad that he had made this promise to Mrs. Harcourt, and he believed that he had kept it. All anyone could do was do one's best.

There were fifteen minutes to spare when he reached the office before Bill and Bess could possibly arrive, plenty of time to compose his thoughts.

"Hank," he said to Hank Knowlton, "when Mrs. Ewing and Mr. Bill Harcourt are here, keep me off the telephone. And I wish you'd find out where I can reach Mr. P. L. Nagel in Chicago; I may want to speak to him after they are gone. If it gets to be after five send everybody home except Nancy at the switchboard, and I wish you'd stay, too, Hank. There may be something I want to take up with you."

Actually the meeting with Bill and Bess had not been nearly as difficult as Willis had anticipated. Although of course there had been the emotional strain and the sentiment about the Harcourt Mill, it had been a warm and friendly meeting with kindness and sympathy on every side, a sympathy which was intensified by his call on Mr. Bryson, because Willis was still distressed when he saw Bill and Bess.

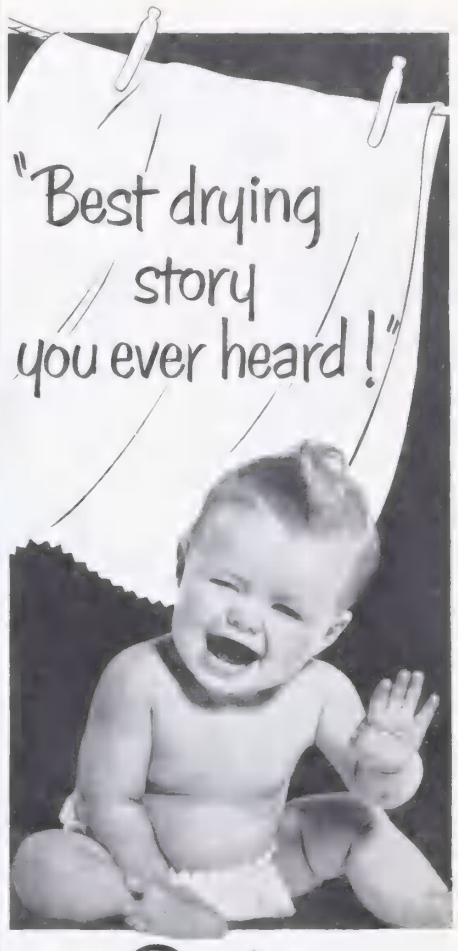
"Well, well, Bess," he said, "how lovely you look this afternoon."

THERE was always something fresh and out-of-doors about her, although she never had the taste for clothes that Sylvia had, and Bess was not careful of her weight like Sylvia.

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, and she kissed him and clung to him for a moment and he was as touched as he was surprised, "isn't it dreadfully sad?"

"Yes, Bess dear, it is," Willis said, "but your mother's wonderful."

"She is wonderful," Bill said, "and so is father. He shows a lot of sportsmanship, I think."



"That's very true, Bill," Willis said. "You know, your mother said a very sweet thing to me just as I was leaving, something I shall never forget. 'We all thank God,' she said, 'that you're looking out for everything.'"

"We do, Willis," Bess said. "We really do."

It was the real Bess speaking, without mockery that afternoon. In fact, they all of them were at their very best.

Willis said, "You know, I'm glad I called at Beacon Street before I saw you, because now I'm pretty sure that what I have to say will relieve you, Bill, and you, too, Bess, of a lot of worry. I may as well be terse about it. One of the largest belting companies in the country wants to buy Harcourt Associates—the Simcoe Company, to be exact. It's located in the Midwest, in case you don't remember. The offer's in the neighborhood of twenty-five million dollars. I know what you're thinking, Bess, but don't interrupt me. I think we ought to sell to them and I want to tell you why."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 113

Curity®
DIAPERS

Curity Diapers dry in a twinkling . . . resist raveling and wrinkling no matter how they're laundered! They are soft as a sigh, too, with exclusive woven-in Foldlines to make folding easier for you. But that's just half the story. Curity Diapers . . .

Wash Easier—Their open weave gives quick-cleaning ease in Ivory Snow or Ivory Flakes.

Absorb Fully—Their thirsty surgical weave soaks up moisture like a sponge.

Wear Better—Curity Diapers are made of full-weight gauze for longer wear, easier care, lasting good shape.

You'll find Curity Diapers at your favorite infant's department . . . leading diaper laundries also have them. Don't forget—Curity has wonderful gift diapers, too.

NOW—NEW COMPANION TO CURITY DIAPERS—

PATENTED

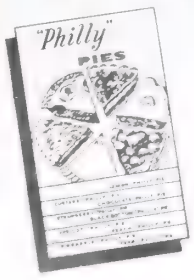
Curity DIAPER LINERS

Send 25c (coins only) for a sample Curity Diaper with Curity Diaper Liners to: Kendall Mills — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J 35. (Only one set of samples to a family.)

Again!...thrilling new recipes from Kraf

"Philly" pies!

The 6 most wonderful fillings you've ever mad
. . . with a fresh creaminess that's new.
comes from the world's finest cream chees



When you want to bowl 'em over, make a "Philly" pie.

Take this Lemon "Philly" pie, for example. It has a creaminess that you've never before tasted in lemon pie. A light, fresh flavor, too. And all this new goodness comes from Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese.

Every "Philly" pie is just as terrific! They're company-best desserts, but there's nothing hard or tricky about the recipes. Just be sure the cream cheese you use is marked Philadelphia Brand.

Lemon "Philly" Pie: beat 3 eggs in top of double boiler until thick and fluffy. Continue beating while gradually adding ¾ c. sugar, ½ c. lemon juice and 2 tsp. grated lemon rind. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until thick and smooth. Cool slightly. Gradually add to a ½-lb. pkg. Philadelphia Brand Cream Cheese; blend smooth. Pour into 9" baked pastry shell. Chill. Garnish with whipped cream just before serving.

FREE!

6 NEW RECIPES AT YOUR GROCER'S NOW
or write for recipe booklet

Right now most grocers have the recipes for the 6 wonderful "Philly" pies printed on tear-off pads. Or you can fill in the coupon and get the recipes in booklet form. Free, of course.

Kraft "Philly" Pies
Dept. J-3, Box 748,
Chicago 77, Illinois

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Use genuine PHILADELPHIA Brand Cream Cheese. The brand that tastes richer, fresher, better than all the rest.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 111

rt of persuasion, Willis believed, was keystone of American business and s of American industrial prestige; as never more convinced of its impor- an when he talked to Bill and Bess.

ength of his approach lay in his sin- npathy. No one knew better than he nuinely the Harcourts had regarded the of the Harcourt Mill as a family obli- He knew that Bess and Bill looked upon kers of the Harcourt Mill almost as 's of the family, and why not? There zens he could name—because he never regard labor as a commodity—whose had worked there for three genera- This was a proud record and Willis in the Harcourts' pride—just a little. red this fine tradition, having been t up in it like Bess and Bill, and he was l to it as any Harcourt. And yet they old enough now to see how times were g, and even traditions had to be re- ed—sometimes.

day of family hip in business disappearing. a radius of fifty f where they were there were hun- of factories that been in family for over a century eing merged into groups. There was g to be ashamed his situation, for g, very frankly, w blood and new ion coursing h fine old arteries. tunately at the nt Harcourt As- s was in a fine n. They had many which would be so good again, explained why P. gel had made this ous offer. All e was painful, but very conceivably never be such a e again. Willis was tant, being hu- proud of Har- 's achievement, o encapsulate all hought he must mend that the holders should t this offer, and new that Bill and when they thought er, would stand there with him to be counted.

l was the first one to speak. "That was a speech," he said. "I never knew you d lay it on the line like that."

ss was the one, of course, whom Willis watching. It had never struck Willis that lower lip was so nearly a replica of Mr. y Harcourt's, or that her eyes, though of ferent color, had the same qualities of emplation he remembered in old H. H. s was happy to observe that Bess looked isely serious.

'm glad you've been so frank, Willis," she "And I'm glad you feel the way father all the rest of us do about the mill. I know old-fashioned, and I suppose we'll have to the inevitable, but there is one thing I'm we will all want to know. That offer will e us quite rich, but I'd like to know, if e bought out, what assurance there is that e people won't close the mill. There is still obligation to the people working there."

Bess, dear," Willis said, "of course I knew d bring that matter up, and it is the sixty- -dollar question, isn't it, as they say? Be- e me, I've been right to the mat with P. L. his subject, and in that connection I think n deliver some reassuring news; not, mind that anyone can ever promise anything al- s—you know that, don't you, Bess?"

e never forgot that he had made this pro- and he saw Bess nod her assent to it.

Willis said, "I hesitate to obtrude my personal problems at this time, but here's the news I was speaking of. It seems they've been looking for a new president at Simcoe and, well, to make matters brief, they've offered it to me—first vice-president to start with, and president when Mr. Nagel becomes chairman of the board. It's a pretty hard matter to turn down when I remember Sylvia and the kids."

He raised his hand quickly when he saw that Bess was about to speak.

"Please, Bess," he said, "just let me make my point." He leaned slightly forward. "If we should sell out to them and if I should take that position, you know and I know, Bess, that the Harcourt Mill and all your feelings about it will be one of my first cares. In fact, Bess, P. L. Nagel and I have had some discussion about integrating Harcourt Associates and we've pretty well decided to leave it where it is and call it the Harcourt Division, so the name will still be there."

He should have realized long ago that the very fact that he would be the president of that larger company was a favorable argument.

"Why, Willis," Bess said, and she smiled and not at all in a mocking way, "that makes everything sound much better. Why didn't you tell us that before? I'm awfully glad for your sake. In fact, if things happen that way I guess I'm pretty glad for all of us."

Then Willis had the most glorious feeling that anyone can have, a conviction that everything was resolved, and this was due to Bess. There was no one in the world quite like Bess Harcourt. She had made him feel happy and at peace with himself for the first time since P. L. Nagel had passed the word. It had not been necessary at all to bring up the subject of Roger Harcourt or Mrs. Henry Harcourt's trustee. After all, there was nothing like old friendships.

Yet Willis had learned long ago to conceal blatant feelings of triumph and elation. It was a part of office discipline always to be measured and controlled.

"Good-by, Bill," he said, when he escorted them to the reception room. "Aside from everything else, it's been swell seeing you and I hope we can repeat the process soon. Good-by, Bess, dear," he said. "May I?"

"Well," Bess said, and she laughed, just as she had in the old days, "it wouldn't be the first time, Willis."

She turned her cheek to him and he kissed it, in the most formal possible way, since Bill was there.

"And it won't be the first time I've thought you were a very wonderful person, Bess," Willis said, "and I know furthermore that it won't be the last."

It was a quarter before six when Bill and Bess left and the office was deserted except for Nancy Sullivan at the switchboard and Hank Knowlton.

"THANKS a lot for staying, Nancy," Willis said. "Before you go will you see if you can get me Mr. P. L. Nagel, please, in Chicago? And, Hank, will you come back with me to Mr. Bryson Harcourt's office for a moment?"

Willis rested his hand affectionately on Hank's shoulder. There was nothing like loyalty, and when loyalty was obtained it should be nourished by appreciation.

"Hank," he said, "if Elly wouldn't mind at this short notice, you might call her up and say

CONTINUED ON PAGE 115

SUNDOWN

By HERBERT MERRILL

Of horizontal light, of long blue shade,
Of children singing is the evening made,
Of sunshine gathered in lace curtains barred
With shadows of the frame, and in the yard
Brown earth gilt over with a tawny crust,
And in the air bright particles of dust.

Of this is evening made, and of the dark
That rises from the ground and climbs the bark
Up shaggy hickories to quench the light
Flaming in leaves above the lifting night,
And always children singing home from play,
Golden in the sun's last level ray.

Bouquet of Spring Salads

with delicious cling peaches and cottage cheese

Just look at the showy salads you can fix fast with cottage cheese and golden cling peaches!

Clings are the well-shaped, beautiful peaches. Tender. Summer-sweet. Thrifty too—your best fruit buy. Serve these tempting salads with crunchy Ry-Krisp soon!

Peach Iris Salad

Cut a slice from each side of a cling peach half. Place round section on cottage cheese. Set slices, flaring outward, at base. Garnish with a cherry and green pepper stem and leaves.

Peach Tulip Salad

Split a cling peach half down the center, leaving about an inch uncut for flower base. Place on cottage cheese. Set a cherry between petals. Add green pepper stem and leaves.

Peach Marigold Salad

Spoon a mound of cottage cheese onto lettuce-lined plates. Center with a cherry. Press golden cling peach slices into cheese, radiating out from cherry.

Cling Peach Advisory Board

Your best fruit buy—

CLING PEACHES FROM CALIFORNIA

AMERICA'S FUN HOUS

Saturday night means fun on NBC Television

One after another, these glittering stars make Saturday night the merriest night of the week for the whole family. Music and laughter go on all evening long on NBC television.

First a fanfare: Swift Show Wagon with Horace Heidt rolls in with music and up-and-coming new talent. Then it's time for the Mickey Rooney Show, with the mighty mite as a broadcasting company page trying to break into TV. Next Mitzi Green and Virginia Gibson bring you the hilarity of the mad-cap movie capitol in This Is Hollywood.

On the Imogene Coca Show, impish Imogene tickles your funny-bone one minute and plucks at your heartstrings the next. Then a dazzling variety show, starring alternately Jimmy Durante and Donald O'Connor and spangled with music, dancing, and assorted shenanigans. Next a change of pace with disarming George Gobel, a fresh new face and a fresh comedy style . . . the winner of award after award as the TV find of the year. This comes as no surprise to anyone with a television set.

Your Hit Parade brings the evening to a close on a festive note, presenting the nation's top tunes in lavish song and dance numbers. You have a date Saturday night—a date right at home for the greatest evening of fun anywhere.

EXCITING THINGS ARE HAPPENING ON

NBC TELEVISION

a service of RCA

and every fourth Saturday a 90-minute "live" NBC COLOR SPECTACULAR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 113

you to dine with me at the Ritz. You y confidentially, Simcoe Rubber has n offer to buy Associates, Hank, and if s through I'll want you to be the head Harcourt Division—temporarily, at any til we solve the problem of integration. rse operationwise the Harcourt Mill something of a headache in the fu- ot that I haven't got my fingers crossed ope that it won't."

E, like any self-sufficient New England had a long if inaccurate memory. In e better one came to know Clyde the ne grew impressed with the town's in- ever wholly to forget anyone who had velt within its limits. When Willis be- rst vice-president of Simcoe, and when rcourt Mill became the Harcourt Di- of that corporation, nearly everyone in reacted with great pleasure to the news; eant that the small-town boy had risen Simcoe, as everyone knew, was a multi- -dollar corporation, or a billion-dollar ation, now that a billion dollars had to be an ordinary unit of financial re. There could not be the slightest that Willis Wayde had acquired a great million dollars through the deal.

. Willis Wayde had seldom appeared in but a number of readers in the periodi- om of the Clyde Public Library had seen cture in the Willis Wayde family group ad appeared in For- nagazine. When the e family moved to go, and an article ap- d in Town and Coun- ndsomely illustrated, bing the new Wayde at Lake Forest, the of Willis Wayde as- d greater stature. In a this was a proof of d adage that absence the heart grow fonder, her reasons also could cribed to the rise of interest.

ward Twining, the dent of Willis' high- ol class, who ran ing's Real Estate and ance, had the energy ision to make a business gamble. He had to Chicago, and had personally called on s Wayde at the offices of Simcoe Rubber. Twining version of the whole meeting may become garbled but it was, at least, based ct.

seemed that Willis had a very large pri- office that looked out over Lake Michi- and, believe it or not, Mazie Minton, a e girl, was his head private secretary, right here wearing a gold slave bracelet, with of other private secretaries under her. e herself had received Howard Twining in uter waiting room. It took almost no time re he was led right up to Willis Wayde's te office, and Willis was very glad to see too. Willis had remembered Howard ing very well, although he started in by ng him Harold. As Howard said at the et, he did not want to take up too much of is' time, but he had dropped in to have a talk about life insurance. No matter how h insurance a man had, he could always do some more, and how about remembering good times they used to have together at old Clyde High?

othing could have been more gratifying the reaction of Willis Wayde to these re- ks. Willis said of course he remembered good times they once had at the old Clyde h; and then he began asking about people, ing them all by name. He asked for Steve Winnie Decker. He asked for any news ut Miss Minnie Wilson, whom he remem- ed very well as their room teacher back in de High. Seriously, those had been great s at school; and he wished he were not so away from Clyde. Unfortunately, the re- nsibilities of running an organization the of Simcoe contrived to keep him chained he Chicago office. For the last few years, kly, he was able to keep in touch with the rcourt Division in New England only through correspondence, the telephone and through memory, but he did know that Hank Knowlton was doing as fine a job as he could under the circumstances.

At this point Mazie Minton came back. It seemed that they had the display of Simfom cushions set up now in the conference room, and that Mr. Gregorian from the agency wanted Mr. Wade's reaction. Willis was dreadfully sorry, but if Howard wouldn't mind waiting they could go on with their talk. Then Willis asked Miss Minton for his engagement calendar and looked at it. After a moment's debate Willis had extended a very gracious invitation. He asked Howard if he wouldn't come out to Lake Forest and take potluck at family supper, since just the family would be at home. They could talk business going out in the Cadillac. Howard would not have dreamed of accepting this invitation if Willis had not urged him warmly.

Howard Twining wished he had the powers of description to paint a real word picture of the Wayde home at Lake Forest. He could only say that even in that suburb of magnificent homes the Wayde home took its place with the best of them. He could only say that the whole place had a welcoming, outgoing quality—and Howard was sure that he was not influenced in his judgment simply because he had made a hundred-thousand-dollar sale. Curiously enough, the estate reminded him in a way of the old Harcourt place. The rhododendrons on the drive were like the Harcourt rhododendrons; and believe it or not, there was an artificial pond with a swan on it.

One of the saddest and most foolish superstitions of the modern world is that people can arrive at righteousness without will power, that we can build good characters without effort. If we are to change, it will have ta be by resolving upon it.

—A. POWELL DAVIES
From The Temptation to be Good
Copyright 1952
Farrar, Straus & Young, Inc., Publishers

The house was made of gray stone like the Harcourt house and it had a gray slate roof; but the whole thing was modern with picture windows and things like that. To Howard's regret he never did get upstairs. He washed up in a very commodious downstairs lavatory that had a cloakroom, evidently designed for large parties. His main impression was of gracious hallways, large rooms with oil pictures, and very lovely furniture.

Mrs. Wayde, Howard Twining said, was a lovely, gracious hostess. You could see at once that there was a lovely relationship between her and Willis, that she was a real wife and mother, and very handsome too. She was wearing a lovely tailored linen dress, and everything about her was spick-and-span. Incidentally, she wore almost no jewelry except for a diamond bracelet and a very handsome solitaire diamond ring.

"And now, Howard," Willis said, "let's all go down and see the kids. This is one of their sport afternoons. They have tennis and swimming instructions three times a week. Are they down at the court now, honey?"

"Yes, dear," Mrs. Wayde answered. "Mr. Crock is finishing up with Paul. And Mr. Crock is very anxious for you to see how much Al has improved with his forehand."

"Has Louise picked up any on her serve?" Willis asked.

"Mr. Crock said he was very happy with her serving, darling," Mrs. Wayde said. "But you must hurry if you want to see Paul."

THE tennis court was very beautiful, and when Howard mentioned it, Willis confessed he had constructed it mostly from his memories of the court on the Harcourt place.

The children had lovely manners. One of the boys was playing tennis with a muscular young man, and another boy, Al, about twelve, with a sweater around his shoulders, was sitting beside a very cute little blond girl, aged eight.

"It looks to me," Willis Wayde said, "as though you were having a happy time, kids."

You could see that there was a real and deep affection between Willis and his children. They all gave a big shout when they saw him, and the little girl, whose name was Louise, jumped right up into his arms.

"How's daddy's darling?" Willis said. "And now I want you all to meet Mr. Twining. Believe it or not, Mr. Twining went to school with daddy."

There was no doubt at all that the Wayde children were good at tennis, and when it came to swimming Howard Twining was frankly a little embarrassed to put on a pair of trunks and get into the pool with the Wayde family. He did not mean that the pool was small. It was oversized and beautifully landscaped, with dressing rooms, and showers, and foam-rubber chairs and everything. Howard Twining only meant that he was embarrassed because he could merely do the side and breast strokes, whereas Willis and all the Wayde children swam the Australian crawl.

But Mrs. Wayde put him at his ease. "I think Willis overdoes the Australian crawl. It's always been an obsession with him. He even took crawl lessons on our honeymoon."

"Oh, now," Howard said facetiously, "not on your honeymoon, Mrs. Wayde?"

She laughed. She had a lovely sense of humor.

What Howard Twining always tried to emphasize when he told of his visit was its homey informality. You could see that there was lots of money around—swimming pools, old silver, butlers, chauffeurs, Cadillacs, tennis instructors and things like that; but none of this made you self-conscious. It was a "Everyone's thinking of you"

TO SAY "GET WELL QUICK"
Say it with Flowers-By-Wire

Encouragement . . . cheer . . . devotion . . . these are the priceless healers that accompany your Flowers-By-Wire. Telegraph-fast, you can flash Flowers-By-Wire anywhere in the world. Delivery is guaranteed by your F.T.D. Florist . . . the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit
Your F.T.D. Florist

TRADEMARK

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
Send Flowers Wherever
INTERFLORA

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

privilege to be taken into the bosom of such a family.

Howard Twining had made his trip to visit Willis Wayde the summer of 1950, just at the beginning of the Korean difficulties. The signs on the Harcourt Mill had been changed almost a year before to read "Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting," and underneath in smaller but highly legible lettering "Harcourt Division." There were no rumors then or undercurrents of uneasiness in Clyde regarding the future of the Harcourt Mill.

It was, obviously, a shock to Clyde when the disaster finally struck. The news first took the form of a brief notice placed on all the bulletin boards at the Harcourt Mill, almost two months to the day after Willis had been made president of Simcoe. The next morning the news was spread across the front page of The Clyde Herald: "Simcoe Closes Harcourt Mill—Property for Sale."

There was, of course, an official explanation carefully prepared by the management of the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company. It said that this step was taken only after long deliberation and with deep regret, due to the necessity for integrating the Simcoe processes more closely, thus achieving greater economy and efficiency. Positions would be made available as far as possible to employees who might want to work in the Simcoe Ohio or Illinois plants. And out of consideration to all employees, operations at the Harcourt Mill would not be discontinued for two full months. The announcement was signed by Willis Wayde as president of Simcoe.

This last was very hard to believe, because the announcement was completely devoid of his well-known warmth and sympathy. In Dreams are as true today as they were a hundred years ago.

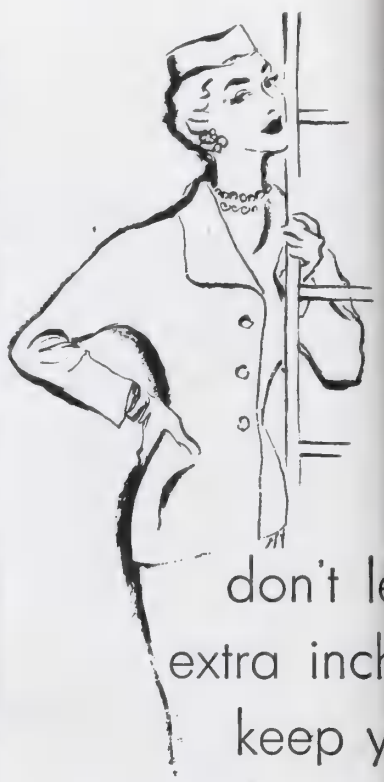
—DUTCH PROVERB

fact, after the few stunned days, when no one could talk of anything else, a group of diehards of Clyde, who still had faith in Willis Wayde, banded together, including many Harcourt laborers. They knew that if the Harcourt Mill had closed it was because Willis Wayde could not help it. He was sick about it, he had fought against it every inch of the way. It was a ring of Wall Street bankers who had secretly gained control of the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company and who had forced this humiliation upon Willis Wayde.

There were times when Willis occasionally wondered whether he should not have hopped a plane and gone straight to Boston to tell the Harcourts personally, particularly Bess, the exact and compelling reasons that made the closing of the Harcourt Mill necessary—and the genuine grief and concern he felt personally for having to take such a seemingly drastic step. Sylvia, he admitted very frankly, had advised him to do so as soon as he had told her about the unpleasant step that he had been obliged to suggest to the Simcoe directors. Willis had been surprised, in fact, at how seriously Sylvia took the news because Sylvia, what with the children and her many social and community activities at Lake Forest, had not of late taken much interest in business matters.



"But, Willis," she said, "you don't seem to think at all about what this will do to the Harcourts."

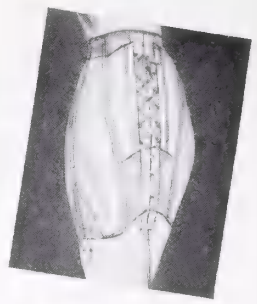
Of course Willis had thought of it, as he told Sylvia very distinctly.

"It's just as painful to me, sweetness," he said, "as it is to the Harcourts themselves. But really, honey, I wish you would try to see that I'm not my own agent in this. I have to do what is best for Simcoe. You wouldn't want me to be disloyal to my trust, would you?"

"No, Willis, of course not," Sylvia said, "but it seems so—so cold-blooded after all the years you worked there."

Willis sighed. Although he knew he was absolutely right, it was an unhappy conversation.

don't let extra inche keep yo from the new fashions.



P.N. Practical Front

will slim you in minutes

Leading stylists agree:
you can bring your figure into fashion in minutes with a P.N. Practical Front garment.

P.N. Practical Front makes you as much as 3 inches slimmer, makes unwanted curves disappear, gives you day-long comfort—and a perfect fitting every time you wear it.

You'll look and feel up to fashions in a P.N. Practical Front.
And you'll discover it carries a down-to-earth price tag.
Starting at $5.95

P.N. perfectly natural to look your slender bes
Practical Front

A product of Sarong Inc.
200 Madison Avenue, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

ve told you I feel as badly as anyone," he
"but you've got to realize these things times can't help but happen. Frankly, the very beginning I think both P. L. and re a little afraid that it would be even-impossible to integrate the Harcourt into the bigger picture. I've tried for al years to do my level best to maintain tus quo. The result has been some very uraging sheets of figures, and the situa-simply can't continue. Sometimes one has cruel in order to be kind."

Willis," Sylvia said, "I know you're kind.
n't see why you don't think about what's g to happen to everyone working in the
You know that will bother the Harcourts bly."

was difficult for Willis to listen patiently ylvia's remarks, which were tangential had no bearing on reality. Her attitude only another proof of the old adage, that e and business do not mix.

know, honey," he said. "I've given a lot ought to these workers. I realize as well e Harcourts that there will be very con-able distress, but I wish you'd try to see main point. Frankly, the Harcourt Mill eventually be abandoned because it isn't odern plant, and it's too far away from centers of production. You must realize all sorts of small plants are closing every and you and I cannot change the trend."

ritating as it was to be obliged to repeat obvious facts, it was more irritating to Sylvia dismiss them and turn to someg else.

But, Willis," she said, "did I understand to say that you knew from the beginning this was going to happen to the Harcourt if Mr. Nagel bought it?"

rankly, Willis had to admit that he was t by the question. "Now wait a minute," is said. "Let's get this perfectly straight. I t let you or anyone make such implica-
s. In the first place, I said I thought it ht be impossible to keep that plant. I only mised the Harcourts to do the best I could,
I have. In the second place, I was per-y right in advising them to sell when I and my own personal interest had nothing tsoever to do with that advice."

hen Willis stopped he realized his voice risen.

Willis," Sylvia said, "please don't get ted. Of course you did the right thing. I only making a comment."

I'm not excited in the least," Willis said.
n only dealing with plain fact. They sold twenty-five million dollars, as you very l remember."

Yes, dear," Sylvia said, "yes, I remember."

And while we're on the remembering e," Willis said, "you might remember, too, t they never would have got any such e if it had not been for my management r a period of years. I have nothing to logize for, sweetness, when I can't stop the vitable. I can be sorry, but that doesn't p it."

was a very painful conversation, but llis could finally see from Sylvia's expres-n that she had followed his line of logic.

I understand what you mean, dear," she d, "and I can see how hard it must be to to do what is right for everyone. I do hope u're going to see the Harcourts and explain ngs to them, just the way you have to me."

Instead of answering directly Willis bent er Sylvia and kissed her forehead. "I'm tty busy right now, sweetness," he said, ut I'll mull over that suggestion. I'm not re how this should be presented, yet, but n't you bother your head about it. And by e way, I think I'm going to have a nice rprise for you tomorrow."

Sylvia looked up at him, and the line tween her eyebrows deepened. "What sort surprise, Willis?" she asked.

"Nothing to bother you a bit, honey," he id, "but something I think will give you a al thrill—something we've often talked out, and dreamed about together, for many ars. Now don't try to guess, because guess-g will spoil it. Just wait until tomorrow."

It might actually have been better if he had ken Sylvia's suggestion and had gone to oston to see the Harcourts, but at the time this seemed impossible. A tight schedule of meetings had been arranged in Chicago, the disruption of which would have been embarrassing and difficult. Besides, though 1953 had been the greatest year that Simcoe had ever known, Willis was quite frankly feeling tired, and not in the mood for the emotional upset which he knew would face him if he were to see Mrs. Bryson Harcourt and Bess and Bill. It seemed far more sensible to set aside several hours in which to write a series of warm personal letters to the large stockholders of the old Harcourt Mill.

Willis reached this decision on his way from Lake Forest to the city the very next morning after he had taken the matter up with Sylvia, and he activated this decision immediately after his arrival in the office. He even dismissed the idea of dictating the letters. This could be done for the final drafts, but he wished to formulate the first drafts entirely alone and undisturbed.

It was a much harder assignment than he thought it would be. He started with a letter to Bess Harcourt, in the belief that it might serve as a model for others. On the whole, Willis was satisfied that his letter to Bess said everything completely but concisely, with the spirit of old friendship in every line. He was never surprised that Bess did not acknowledge it, for after all, no acknowledgment was necessary.

Dear Bess: I can't help wishing as I write these lines—and believe me I'm writing the first draft by hand—that I were physically nearer to you, your mother and Bill, so that I might tell you what I have to say here personally. However, due to distance, and due to business pressures here, this letter must act as a substitute—an adequate one, I hope.

Believe me, Bess dear, I have signed the enclosed notice, which will appear within a few days on the bulletin boards at the Harcourt Mill, with the utmost pain and regret. The business seamless stockings

CONTINUED ON PAGE 119

by Hanes

Fine and firm and soft like Kleenex tissues

Only 2-ply Delsey is clean cut to tear evenly at a touch. There's no shredding, no waste with this new, finer toilet tissue.

Now buy Delsey in your favorite towel colors

Now, in addition to white, Delsey comes in lovely light shades of pink, yellow, blue and green to contrast, match or blend with your bath towels or tile. Delsey, too, is the only toilet tissue that gives you that wonderful Kleenex* tissue quality. With Delsey* you get Kleenex softness and absorbent double-ply strength.

Be thrifty—buy quality—buy Delsey

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 117

om of this step is, I am afraid, irrefutable, his does not assuage my personal reluctance. pe you will remember, Bess, dear, that when vised the selling of Harcourt Associates—ce which I trust you have never regretted—I nised you that the old Harcourt Mill would ys receive my fullest and sincerest interest. proud to say that I believe I have kept this nise to the letter. Not our wishes, but eco-ic forces, have been against us, Bess. Tender y memories are that cling to the Harcourt , its integration into our broader picture here never been successful. Its plant is obsolescent its day, quite frankly, is over, and I honestly eve would have been over long ago had it not n for the earlier combination with Rahway ing.

ut, Bess dear, agonizing though this whole cision is, I know that you and Bill, who now substantial blocks of Simcoe stock, will in end come to my way of thinking. In the final lysis, deeply though our affections may be ted in the past, you and I and all of us, who e homes and families to care for, must look n the road ahead. As a fine, old New England acher (was it Ralph Waldo Emerson?) once cinctly put it: "Look up, not down. Look for-rd not back, and lend a hand."

f I may, Bess dear, I'd like to close my letter that final note. In the midst of the very heavy den of responsibility that this very active npany has placed upon my shoulders, one of things that make the work worth while is the ief that I am in a position to lend a hand. If re is ever anything I can do for you, please l on me in that spirit.

Sylvia has asked me particularly to extend her st affectionate greetings to you and Edward; d she adds—and in this I heartily concur—that y time your journeying may lead you to Chi-go, don't forget the Waydes are always waiting Lake Forest.

Sincerely as always and devotedly,

WILLIS WAYDE.

It seemed to Willis that it was a good letter. never had any valid reason to revise his inion of it, and the other ters he wrote appeared him equally satisfactory. hat with the series of afts, and then luncheon, d finally some absolutely sential afternoon ap-intments, the business y was almost over by e time he signed the let-rs.

"Mazie," Willis asked, when Mazie Minton ally placed them on his desk ready for his gnature, "do you think those letters were dequate under the circumstances?"

"I think they are all just wonderful, Mr. Wayde," she said, "especially the one to Mrs. wing. That one, I think, is especially lovely."

"Thanks, Mazie," Willis said. "At any rate, one can say I didn't try." And then he anged the subject. "I wonder if you'd slip e travel folder and our itinerary for May nd June into my briefcase so I can take it ome with me," Willis said. "Now that this larcourt matter is settled, I believe we can eep the schedule. Mazie, would you see if Mrs. Wayde can be reached at home?"

By the time that Sylvia was on the telephone Willis was deep in the travel file.

"Sylvia," he said half playfully, but still eriously, "how would it be if you and I took trip to Europe? Not immediately, but next May and June. . . . No, I'm serious about this ne, honey. I have everything arranged al-eady. We have a suite on the veranda deck f the Elizabeth, and a car and chauffeur to neet us at Cherbourg, and reservations at the Ritz in Paris. I'll bring the full details back with me tonight, sweetness. All the things ve've talked about for so long being brought o pass. So beginning now, we've got to be making our plans, Mrs. Wayde."

IT was not fair to say that Stephen Decker was unfriendly to Willis Wayde, because the word "unfriendly" was too definite, and in-definiteness had come to be one of Steve's outstanding weaknesses, when he had been able to retire after his father's death. It was not fair, either, to say that Steve disliked Willis, because he was too tolerant to dislike anyone. But then, as he always said when he described the time he and May met the Waydes at a sidewalk café on the Champs Élysées, he had never liked Willis very much.

The Deckers ran into the Waydes in Paris late one June afternoon. There was no place like Paris, Steve pointed out, to create cleavages of taste between men and women. Just when you had an opportunity to participate mildly in a Continental way of life, women became seized with a thirst for culture. That very morning his wife May had expressed a wish to motor through the château country.

"I don't see any use in coming here," May said, "and then playing dominoes with an old man in a brasserie, and don't make a joke and call it a brassière."

She went on to say that all Steve wanted to do was to look in the shopwindows of the rue de Rivoli, and read off-color jokes embroidered on ladies' handkerchiefs—in English, of course, for American trade. She added that if Steve called her desire to see worthwhile things schoolgirlish, he might at least try not to be an adolescent himself. There was no reason for Steve to be so utterly American.

"We haven't even seen Sainte-Chapelle," she said.

HE had compromised that morning by going with May to Sainte-Chapelle. She, in turn, had compromised that afternoon by attending the races at Longchamps in a car which she knew cost them twice too much, but there was not much room for argument because he had won ten thousand francs.

It must have been close to six when they returned from Longchamps. The sun was low and made the Champs Élysées, in spots, a golden street.

"Let's pay off the driver," Steve said, "and stop at the café over there and have a bottle of champagne."

"Oh, Steve," May said, "at least we might stop at some interesting place. There used to be a lovely little place near the Luxembourg Gardens that only the French knew about. This one will be full of Americans."

He could see that May was right. It was exactly the sort of café that would attract American tourists.

"How would it be," he asked, "if we pretended we were Americans for an hour?"

May was amused, in a cosmopolitan way. "You don't have to pretend," May said, "and please don't try to ask for the wine card in French."

They sat down in wicker chairs beneath the café awning, and the babble of voices around them was very cosmopolitan.

"Garçon," Steve said, "la carte de vin, s'il vous plait."

"Well," May said, 'at least the children aren't here to hear you. . . . I told you that this place would be full of Americans."

May was right as usual. There were several middle-aged American groups around them, all identified beyond any chance of error. The men wore expressions of confused discomfort, and each of the women seemed to be living in her own small world of fantasy.

"I don't see why American men invariably look undistinguished," May said.

Instinctively Steve sat up straighter. "Maybe they're tired," he said, "at the end of a long hard day."

"They might try not to look tired," May said. "They all might just as well have stayed at home. None of them is getting anything out of being here. . . . Steve, look directly behind you."

"Why?" he asked.

"There's a very nice distinguished-looking couple directly behind you, and I think we've seen them somewhere."

"How do you mean, they're distinguished?" Steve asked.

"Well, she's exquisitely dressed," May said, "and he looks interested in everything, and he has a nice profile, and I like the way he smiles—and a gray flannel suit that's really well cut, and blond-gray hair, and he sits up straight."

Steve pushed his chair sideways, turning his head slowly, and there, four tables away, was Willis Wayde.

"Well, well," Steve said.

"You know him, do you?" May asked.

He nodded and picked up his glass. "Yes, I know him," he said. "He's Willis Wayde."

"Oh," May said, "of course he is. Steve, aren't you going to speak to them? Ask them to come and join us."

"Now, listen, May," Steve said, "where would it get us?"

"You always have an inferiority complex about anyone interesting," May said.

"Now, listen, May," he said, "I don't like to push myself on people."

"I wish you wouldn't be small-town," May said. "Can't you be natural for once, in a perfectly friendly way? Can't you walk over to that table and say ——"

"Say what?" Steve asked.

"Just say, 'You're Willis Wayde, aren't you? I'm Steve Decker. We used to know each other back in Clyde.'"

Steve sighed. "And then I'd say, 'I remember your wife too. Don't you remember me, Sylvia? I used to know you in Cambridge, Massachusetts.'"

"You never told me you knew her," May said.

"You never asked me," Steve answered. "She was Sylvia Hodges. It doesn't matter, May."

"Steve, I'm tired of seeing you acting scared," May said.

The steps of faith fall on the seeming void and find rock beneath.

—JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER

At all nice stores. For name of one nearest you, write P.O. Box 7242, New Orleans 19, La.

"Who?" Steve asked. "Me? Of the Waydes?"

"Then go ahead and speak to them," May said.

"All right," Steve said, "all right."

Steve had seen Sylvia only once since she had married, and Sylvia was no longer dressed in a tweedy shirtwaist way. Once she had told him she did not like jewelry, but now she wore a diamond-and-sapphire clip that looked inconspicuous but expensive against the scarf around her throat. Steve had never thought of her as being particularly pretty, but now her features seemed delicate, without being sharp or haggard, and her mouth was no longer stubborn.

He would have known Sylvia anywhere and also he would have known Willis, but Willis, too, looked more distinguished. He still looked young but no longer naïve or hesitant or impelled to make nervous efforts to be agreeable. Everything about him was under control, and after all, why not? Steve Decker was living years as he walked toward them.

"Hello," he said.

The Waydes both gazed up at him. "Why, hello," Willis said. There was the faintest beat of hesitation, but everything was streamlined. "Why, hello, Bill. Sylvia, I don't believe you have ever met my old friend, Bill Jerrod. How's everything in Toledo, Bill?"

Willis Wayde was half out of his chair, half holding out his hand, when his gaze faltered, and then before he could speak Sylvia interrupted.

"Willis," she said, "don't you remember Steve Decker?"

Willis knew when the joke was at his expense, and he gave way to disarming mirth. "Why, of course, it's Steve," Willis said. "Fancy meeting you in Paris. Forgive me, will you? Faces out of the past get blurred occasionally. Say, Steve, it's wonderful to see you. It's like being back in high school, isn't it?"

Coleridge holds that a man cannot have a pure mind who refuses apple dumplings. —LAMB

"Well, not exactly," Steve said.

"Miss Wilson's room," Willis said.

"That's right," Steve said.

"Then Cambridge," Willis said. "Say, Steve, you were there the first night I came to the Hodgeses'. Bill Harcourt brought me. Remember?"

"That's right," Steve said. "Bill Harcourt."

"How is old Bill?" Willis asked, and he spoke more quickly. "It's just wonderful to see someone from the old town. Let's see, when did I see you last, Steve?"

"About ten years ago," Steve said. "You were up for a directors' meeting or something. We just met for a minute."

"That's right," Willis said. "I was staying at the Harcourt place. It's a beautiful old home, isn't it? Is Bill living there now?"

"No," Steve answered. "Bess has it now. She stays there every summer, and Ed comes down for weekends."

"Well, well," Willis said. "How's Bess?"

"She's fine as far as I know," Steve said.

"Willis," Sylvia said, "aren't you going to ask Steve to sit down?"

"Of course," Willis said. "I've been so interested I forgot completely. But let's not get off the beam, Steve. What are you doing with yourself?"

"Why, nothing much," Steve said, "since my father died. He left quite a lot more money than I ever guessed he would. That's why I'm not doing much."

"Well, well," Willis said, "good for Mr. Decker."

"And then I got married," Steve said, "and May had a little something. I never was much good at working anyway."

"May?" Sylvia said. "Is she your wife?"

A WAITER had brought a chair and when Steve saw it he realized that he could not sit down. "Oh, yes," he said. "I guess I've been married so long that I take it for granted that everyone knows May."

"I wish you two would sit down," Sylvia said.

"Well, thanks just as much," Steve said, "but I can't stop, really. I just came over to say hello. You see, May's waiting."

"Do you mean she's here?" Sylvia said. "Why didn't you say so?"

"I was just about to suggest," Steve answered, "that you come over and join us. We've just come from the races and I came out ten thousand francs ahead, and we're having a little champagne."

"Well, well," Willis said, "that sounds like a real party. I wish we had time but I'm afraid ——" He looked at Sylvia. "Sweetness, aren't we having dinner with friends somewhere near Neuilly?" He did not pronounce the name correctly.

"Neuilly," Sylvia said. "But that isn't until nine, dear. We'd love to, Steve. I think it would be awfully nice."

"It's always great to see someone from home," Willis said. "Yes, this is a swell idea of yours, Steve. I'll call our waiter."

As it turned out, nothing was awkward about the meeting because May and Sylvia each could show the other that she was at home in Paris.

"I can't tell you what fun it is to see you," May said to Sylvia. "Steve has told me so much about you."

"It's so nice to hear a Boston accent again, after the Middle West," Sylvia answered.

"Well, almost Boston," May said. "Brookline."

"It's queer we never met at dances or somewhere," Sylvia said. "But then I always used to be afraid of Brookline girls. I suppose you must have gone to Miss Windsor's?"

"Yes," May said. "I played center forward on the field-hockey team."

It was at least moderately funny, and they all laughed in unison.

"Well, now we're here," Steve said, "we'd better have some more champagne. Where's the waiter? Garçon!"

"Don't, dear," May said. "I'll order it. You know, Steve is wonderful in many ways but not in French."

"It's just the same with Willis," Sylvia said. "Men never seem to feel at home in Paris."

As a matter of fact they were all feeling more at home by this time.

"I've got an idea, Steve," Willis said. "We ought to turn the girls loose together someday and you and I do the town by ourselves. How about it, girls?"

But the girls no longer wanted to hear what the men were saying.

"From my observation," Willis said, "there's always something queer about women when they get to Paris."

"American husbands don't understand women," Steve said. "They aren't good lovers. Did you ever hear that one?"

"That's absolutely true," Willis said, "but I like a lot of things about Paris."

"And I like Paris," Steve said. "I understand it in my own way. For instance, I was here in the war and May wasn't."

"Oh," Willis said, "what were you doing in the war, Steve?"

"I was in the Chemical Warfare Service," Steve said. "Nobody our age can do anything much."

"Don't say that, boy," Willis said. "You've always had a lot on the ball."

It made Steve Decker laugh. "I guess you're confusing me again with that Mr. Jerrod in Toledo," he said.

Willis shook his head and his expression was almost serious. He looked at Steve Decker steadily for a moment with a bright and slightly glassy alertness. "I'm not confusing you with anyone," he said. "Frankly, I always used to envy you, and you're the same old Steve Decker still."

He made it sound sincere. Willis had learned how to make people listen to everything he said.

"Well," Steve said, "times have certainly changed since then."

Willis was silent for a minute, as though he were thinking of changing times, comparing them with now.

"If you mean I'm not what I used to be," he said, "you're right, but partly everyone

CONTINUED ON PAGE 123

Avon brings you cosmetics and toiletries for every need . . . for everyone.

Is it loving care through creams and lotions you need, for a younger-looking complexion? Or a fragrance that's right for you? Perhaps you'd like bath preparations that keep you fragrant all day all over. Or grooming necessities for the man in your life.

Avon brings you all these, and more, for every member of your family. Besides, these fine, moderately priced cosmetics are brought to your home by your Avon Representative, who guides you in your selection.

IF YOU WISH AN AVON REPRESENTATIVE TO CALL PLEASE CONSULT YOUR LOCAL PHONE DIRECTORY OR CALL WESTERN UNION OPERATOR 25.

AVON...such lovely ways to beauty

HAND LOTION •• CREAM DEODORANT • BRIGHT NIGHT COLOGNE • COLOR-LAST LIPSTICK • LIQUID ROUGE • QUAINTANCE BEAUTY DUST

Your Avon Representative will help you choose Avon cosmetics in the convenience of your home.

Mrs. Robert Archer Wilson, of Richmond, Virginia, delights in using Avon cosmetics, and enjoys the convenience of selecting them in the privacy of her home. She suggests that you will find high-quality Avon cosmetics rewarding to use, and a joy to select, with the help of your Avon Representative. Yes, Avon's enormous popularity is evidence that women everywhere use Avon cosmetics.

Your Avon Representative will be calling soon . . . Welcome her.

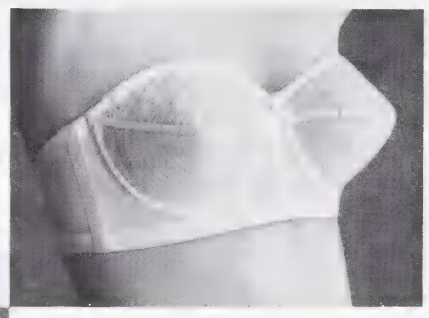
© AVON cosmetics

RADIO CITY, NEW YORK

Mrs. Robert Archer Wilson, wife of a prominent leader in business, civic and charitable organizations in Richmond, Virginia, is shown selecting Avon cosmetics with the help of her Avon Representative, Mrs. Martha B. Houseman.

Daytime... Gaytime...

Anytime



every change calls for

Life Romance by Formfit

Think of your many roles! You star in the kitchen and at your bridge club. Or you're a golfer in the morning . . . a glamour girl in the evening. And, of course, wherever you go, whatever you do, you dress the part. That means quick changes—maybe several a day—so depend on Formfit to keep up with your busy way of living! For Formfit brings you bras and girdles styled for your daytime, playtime and gaytime . . . to "go with" everything from tweeds to taffetas—cottons to cashmeres. See how every dress, suit and "separate" in your wardrobe takes on custom fit and flair, worn with its complementary Life Bra and Girdle. Choose a Formfit wardrobe to meet all your fashion needs—all through the day.

For Playtime .....

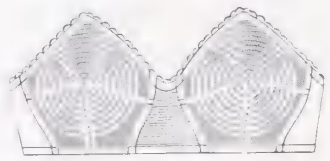
Life Romance No. 566 in cool cotton broadcloth—your sports-going favorite. Will not wilt. Nylo-Braid molds and holds you to youthful beauty. Elasticized band for freedom. 32A to 38C. Only $2.00

For Gaytime .....

Life Romance Strapless No. 390 . . . perfect with your bare-shouldered and low-cut fashions. Cups underscored with wire for really secure allure . . . Nylo-Braid for a glamorous uplift. Nylon taffeta lavished with embroidered sheer. Black and White. 32A to 38C. $5.00

For Daytime .....

Life Romance No. 582 . . . wonderful with sweaters, blouses, suits. Luxurious nylon taffeta with sheer, embroidery-frosted top. Nylo-Braid for an uplift of lasting beauty. Washes beautifully. 32A to 38C. $3.50



Free! "Your Figure Type—What to Do About It." Send for this informative Formfit booklet today. Mailed in plain envelope. Write to The Formfit Company, Dept. F-55, 400 S. Peoria Street, Chicago, Ill.

Prices slightly higher in Canada

Life Romance By Formfit

Here's the "Inside Story" of Life Romance

See how deftly stitched concentric circles of exclusive Formfit Nylo-Braid support and hold the cup. This is why the Life Romance molds to lovely, accented, rounded contours . . . uplifts you naturally, beautifully and lastingly!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 120

what he used to be. There were two I used to envy—you and Bill Har-and Bill?" Steve said. He looked at right hand, beating on the marble top café table, and Steve was sure that nails were manicured.

put it simply," Willis said, "I envied wo boys because you never had to Me, I always had to."

on't see you have to worry now," Steve ot about myself now," Willis said, "but a lot of other people. One thing always to another. How's Bill Harcourt, ccurred to Steve that it was the second hat Willis had asked the question.

"

ll's pretty well," he said. "He's living rion, you know. He likes the sailing and lf."

ow's his game?"

ot much," Steve told him. "Somewhere nineties."

hat means I could beat him," Willis said. got to look up old Bill sometime. The person in the world, with all the right cts, and generosity and integrity, and a sense of humor, but Bill never had what es in a business way."

Well, he doesn't have to," Steve said.

That's right," Willis answered. "Other e have done it for him. Why, I'm work- or Bill right now."

es," Steve said, "and I own a few shares mcoe myself."

Well, that's fine," Willis said. "I'm glad e a member of the Simcoe family. I wish d come out sometime and see what we're g."

Why, thanks," Steve said, "I'd like to time."

illis was looking across the table at Sylvia, but Sylvia paid no attention to his al.

'm always loyal to the Harcourt family," is said. "I guess you know what I owe th. They don't make families like that any me. How does the old house look now?"

t looks pretty well," Steve said. "Bess s a lot of thought to it, keeping up the nds and everything."

WILLIS moved his hand and drummed his ers on the table. "I'm deeply sorry about Harcourt Mill decision," he said. "It was cutting off my arm to close that plant."

teve Decker did not answer, and Willis ked at him for a moment in a bright im- sonal way.

Naturally there were repercussions," he l. "There always are, but things like that happening all the time. There was no ure in the plant—only past—not the slight- chance of its getting out of the red."

If you live there," Steve said, "it's harder ake an objective view."

Willis coughed. "We had a dog awhile a)," he said, "a retriever. He almost brought the children. Then he got blind and we l to call the vet to put him out of the way. u have to do things like that."

"Yes," said Steve, "I suppose so."

"Of course," Willis said, "I can't blame ne people for not sharing my point of view. ll, it's great to have had a glimpse of you, ve. Sylvia, sweet, I'm afraid we ought to be ing now."

"Oh dear," Sylvia said. "Must we? I'm so rry." She pushed back her chair and looked estioningly at Willis, obviously asking tely whether he wanted her to do anything out the Deckers.

"I hope we can have a chance to return your ndness," Willis said. "We really ought to art right in where we left off. Sylvia, sweet, hat are we doing tomorrow?"

Sylvia raised her eyebrows slightly. "Why, ou're having lunch with those textile people, Willis, and there's a dinner for you in the vening."

"That's right," Willis said. "I'd completely orgotten about that. And we're off for Swit- erland and I haven't had a chance to say a ord to Mrs. Decker."

He pushed back his chair and stood up, miling, looking like someone who had been asked by the toastmaster to say a few words. For a second Willis dominated the scene, modestly and sincerely. His ease was the best thing about him. You could not tell, Steve was thinking, how much of his cordiality was real. Success had smoothed down all his rough edges, turning him into a type interchangeable with any photograph on the financial page of the New York Times.

"Well," Willis said, "good-by, and many thanks. This has been perfectly wonderful."

If that was all there had been to the incident, it never would have been worth repeating. It was what happened next that gave it value and suspense. They were all standing up when Steve Decker felt May's hand on his arm.

"Steve," she said, "look who's coming."

There was an aisle between the closely grouped tables and there, moving straight toward them, were Bess Harcourt and her husband, Edward Ewing. To anyone who knew her she would always be Bess Harcourt and you thought of her still as young Bess Harcourt, although her yellow hair was much darker and her face more florid, and even in Paris she seemed to bring something of the Harcourts with her. There was something arrogantly provincial in the way she walked. At least she was not trying to be a Continental woman. They must have been shopping, because Edward was carrying an armful of packages.

Willis Wayde stepped forward immediately. He had put on his gray felt hat, and now he took it off in a quick courtly way which was not like him, and all his measured reserve had left him. He was obviously perfectly delighted to see Bess Harcourt there.

"Well, if this isn't like Old Home Week," he said. "Why, Bess, fancy seeing you in Paris! And Edward. Hello, Ed."

Willis held out his hand and for a moment you could not tell what might happen. Bess had a pleasant way of looking at people and Women who love nice things choose Soft-Weve

People Notice
—when you provide this new kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. You and your family—your guests, too—will like the special gentleness of Soft-Weve. It's soft as facial tissue because it's made the same way.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong . . . that's the luxury of it. That's the reason Soft-Weve is so gentle, yet so practical. Soft-Weve is a luxury everyone can afford to enjoy . . . another great Scott value.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

the upward tilt of her mouth was always good-natured, and when she spoke her voice was good-natured too. She said:

"You're in my way, Willis. Get out."

"Now, Bess," Willis said, "please. I haven't the least idea ——"

He could not have looked more completely shaken than if Bess had slapped him across the face. They gazed at each other for a moment before Bess answered, and hurt and amazement were written all over Willis Wayde.

"You can't fool me," Bess said. "You always planned to sell that mill, and you know it."

SHE moved a little closer to him and they still gazed hard at each other.

"You're in my way," Bess said again, and then she laughed in that bright malicious way of hers. "Get out, Uriah Heep."

Steve Decker said that you could not help but admire Willis Wayde. Willis had gone a long way since he had lived at the Harcourt place. It was plain that that gibe of Bess' about the Dickensian crook had made a very deep impression on Willis, because his face flushed darkly. Nevertheless, his manner was composed and his voice was polite, gentle and considerate.

"Certainly, if that's the way you want it," he said, "but I'm truly very sorry, Bess. Come, sweetness, or we'll be late for dinner." Then the Waydes walked slowly to the street.

That was all there was to it but, if you knew something about the personalities of the individuals involved, it made quite a story, and one that could have happened only in America. Steve Decker often wondered what Willis Wayde had thought about it, and how much or how little that brief encounter had affected him. It was the ending of a story Steve had witnessed, which made no particular sense without knowing the beginning.

Willis, whenever he had occasion to exchange ideas with acquaintances about life in Paris, always said he had fallen in love with the Ritz at first sight. It was exactly what he had dreamed it would be, and none of the theatrical magnificence of his suite overlooking the Place Vendôme had ever made him ill at ease. From the very first minute in their suite, Willis had loved looking out on the Place Vendôme, and he knew that he would never tire of the prospect. There was no security in France any longer, and yet the Place Vendôme epitomized security. The whole thing was in order. There were balance and reason in the expansive façades surrounding that fine square, all paying constant tribute to the victory column of Napoleon in its center.

The atmosphere of the Place Vendôme was reassuring to Willis when he and Sylvia arrived at the Ritz after his painful adventure at the Champs Elysées café. The sight of the column reminded Willis that there had been a good many people who had not liked Napoleon, and Napoleon himself had been obliged to make decisions.

He was grateful that Sylvia had not once alluded to his meeting with Bess during their taxi ride. He still felt sick and utterly defeated. He was still thinking that it was inconceivable that Bess Harcourt could retain such power to give him pain; but it would pass. He was sure of this now that he saw the Place Vendôme again. In fact, he could come close to imagining that nothing untoward had happened, once they were inside the Ritz. T smiling doorman and the prodigious c cierge, who knew everything there was know about anything, were not unlike personnel of his own office—efficiencyw The Ritz literally was a home away fr home. The long Paris twilight was still enou illumination for the suite, more peaceful th the glitter of the Louis XVI chandeliers.

"Well, sweetness," Willis said, "I'm go to ring for a couple of cocktails, becaus feel a little tired, what with one thing a another. It's nice to be back here, isn't it only wish you and I could be alone here night, just looking at the Place Vendôme.'

"Why can't we, dear?" Sylvia asked.

It still surprised him when Sylvia could conquer absent-mindedness. "Don't you member, honey, we have to go out to din with those people at that place whose na you don't like me to pronounce?"

"I do like you to pronounce it," Sylvia sa "Go ahead and say it. I really think you doing very well w your French, dear."

"Sweetness," Wi told her, "you do have to be as loyal me as that, but I s wish you and I co sit here and not go that place to dinner."

Sylvia stood up a kissed the top of head. It was a gestu that he could not rec her having made befo

"I really don't see w we have to go, dea she said. "They're or some of those peop you met at the conve tion, and if a coup drops out they can ways rearrange the tab If you'll give me yo notebook I'll get t concierge to call the for us. Here come t cocktails, dear. Y take yours while I call

"Well, if you don mind, sweetness, I thi perhaps I will start mine right away."

He was glad to alone for the minut while Sylvia was tel phoning, and his gra tude toward her i creased, now that s was getting them out that dinner.

Willis did not want face a crowd at th moment, let alone a foreign crowd. He wante to be alone, but at the same time he did n want to think. He wanted to push the ceas less repetition of the scene at that café fro his mind, and stop imagining how he migh have acted differently, and what he could ha said but did not say. The strange truth, th inescapable fact, was that there was nothin different he could have said. The encounte was one of those things one simply had t take on the chin and absorb the way or absorbed any punishment.

HE finished his cocktail, but it did n appreciably relax the tensions within him. he were to order another and another, a many people he knew frequently did in time of distress, he had sense enough to know tha another would not relieve his troubles. Th buildings of the Place Vendôme, designed b architects for noblemen, of whose lives Will knew nothing save for a few facts from th pages of Nagel's Paris, were a greater consola tion than alcohol. Those façades reflected point of view that got through to Willis. They as sured him that the men who designed and thos who had lived behind those cornices had bee as aware as Napoleon that there was no such thing as perfect justice. Something alway went by the board. There was a real meetin of minds between Willis and the Place Ven dôme.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 126

TO GROWNUPS BEARING GIFTS

By MARION LINEAWEAVER

The children will have none of them.
They want their own.
The doll, defaced,
The rickety train,
That soiled, uncertain scrawl
Tacked on the nursery wall
Are not the outworn toys they seem—Behold the beauty of the dream!

For how to dream, and yet possess?
By cautious care?
Careful caress?
The children know,
Inflicting year by year
On all they hold most dear
The scars of use that glorify,
Even as you and I.

I dreamed I was a designing woman in my maidenform® bra

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's Chansonette* in nylon taffeta, acetate satin, cotton broadcloth, dacron cotton batiste . . . from 2.00

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1955 MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC. COSTUME: ARNOLD SCAASI SATINS BY SKINNER

Meds tampons are so absorbent . . . so completely protective . . . and, what's more, so comfortable you never know you're using them. Meds are the modern form of sanitary protection—and Meds are the only tampons with the exclusive, disposable applicator that can't fall apart.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 124

"Sylvia," Willis said, "that was a very lovely idea of yours, getting us out of that dinner, and just across there near Morgan and Cie. in a jeweler's window is something I'm going to get you tomorrow just for thinking of it."

"Oh, Willis," Sylvia said. He could not see her face, and at first he thought she was laughing, but he was not exactly sure. "You don't have to say it with jewelry, darling. You know you only have to say it."

"That's a very sweet thing for you to say," Willis said. "Somehow you've always been kind of allergic to jewelry."

"Oh, darling," Sylvia said, and she sat down in the gold-and-rose armchair near him, "don't you see it's only an act? Don't you know I always love everything you give me?"

Willis turned toward her, but the dusk made it hard for him to see her face. "You don't have to be as kind to me as all that, sweetness," he said. "I'm dreadfully sorry about that scene this afternoon, and particularly that you should have been present."

She put her hand over his again. "There's nothing to be sorry about," Sylvia said. "If someone acts in a hysterical and unreasonable manner it isn't your fault, Willis."

"I know it, sweetness," Willis said, and he did not look at her when he spoke, but out across the square, "but a thing like that sort of pulls the rug out from under you. After what Bess said, I can't help sort of wondering if anything I've done has been worth while."

"Why, darling," Sylvia said, "you don't have to wonder anything like that because you've always been wonderful. No one knows better than I do how wonderful you've been."

Willis cleared his throat. Even though he liked what she said, it was a time to face facts. "That's very sweet of you to say so, honey," he said, "but occasionally it's seemed to me you've had a few reservations. God knows I've tried to do a lot of things the right way, and God knows I'm not perfect."

"Why, darling," Sylvia said, "no one's perfect. It's what I've been telling you, dear. No one knows how wonderful you are as well as I do. I'm an authority."

Willis heard what she said, but he was so involved in his own thoughts that he did not answer her directly.

"I've tried to be sincere, sweetness," he said. "I really have, in all my dealings, but sometimes it's a problem—how to be sincere."

"I know you've always tried, dear," Sylvia said. "Let's ring for the waiter and have some supper. We can think this all through tomorrow, Willis."

But Willis was very sure that the time to think of it was now. "Of course you were right, sweetness," he said. "I should have go to Boston and seen them personally at t time. I would have if I'd had the remotest id that Bess would react like this."

"Of course you would have, dear," Syl said, "but you were awfully busy right the if you remember."

Willis sighed and crossed his right kn over his left, and rotated his foot nervous "What hurts me especially," he said, "is th I don't think they've been very loyal to m They don't seem to look on both sides of t ledger. They forget the years I've worke They forget, sweetness, that I've worn m fingers to the bone for them. All they harp is my closing up that mill."

"I know," Sylvia said. "It isn't fair, b then I don't suppose anybody ever looks both sides of a ledger—even you or I—ar they'd always lived with the mill."

Willis turned his head toward her. "Yo don't mean," he said, "that you're takin their side in this? You can't be, Sylvia."

He knew the minute that he said it that was a petulant remark and he was sorry.

"I was just saying, dear," Sylvia sai "that none of us can see both sides of an thing. I'm on your side always, dear, but let not go on about it now. How would it be if rang for the waiter? And you have some eg and some of those croissants you love so muc and some chocolate, and then I'm going t give you a sleeping pill. You'll see everythin much more clearly after a good sleep."

"I'd like that," Willis said, "becaus frankly, I do feel tired, and I'm sorry t elaborate on this subject, precious. You hear her say, didn't you, that I always knew I wa going to close the mill? Maybe I'd better te you something frankly, darling, because you'v been very sweet to me, and I would like to b frank: Sweetness, I don't know whether sh was right about that or not. I honestly can remember."

"Why, darling," Sylvia said, "of course yo couldn't tell what you were going to do at future time, and you've always done every thing for the Harcourts, darling. Please don think about it any more." And then she kisse him on the back of the head again, just as sh had before. "Let's think about what we'r going to do tomorrow."

"That's right," Willis said. "You're dea right. Let's look forward, sweetness, and no back. You know, come to think of it, that exactly what I wrote to Bess."

"Darling," Sylvia said, "it's all right. I really is all right. Let's not worry about any more. And when you've had you pill I'll tell you what we'll do, we'll call u the children's camps and talk to them. It' funny. It's early afternoon back there." EN

"Look, we're late—yes, I like the pins the way you're wearing them—of course I'm not just saying it. Let's get going!"

La Marquise de Lèvis Mirepoix

one of the great beauties of France says,

Angel Face—the softest possible flattery for the Marquise's delicate complexion

"It's the loveliest make-up I've ever used!"

The young Marquise de Lèvis Mirepoix fairly sparkles. Her spontaneity, her clear amber eyes, her flawless complexion make her one of France's noted beauties. Like so many lovely women everywhere, the Marquise adores the sheer flattery of Pond's Angel Face. "I'm sure, after using Angel Face, I could never go back to other make-ups," she says. "Angel Face clings so much longer, is never 'artificial,' smooths on so easily. It's the loveliest make-up I've ever used."

No greasy fingers or wet sponge!

No spilly powder!

The Mirror Case, polished "ivory" with golden tracery! Perfect to use everywhere. With puff, mirror, choice of 8 skin tones, just $1*

The secret of this remarkable flattery

—Vaporized Beauty Oils

"The one perfect make-up!" This is how today's most attractive women feel about Angel Face by Pond's. So easy to use—it's powder and foundation in one! So kind to your skin—Angel Face is permeated through and through with vaporized beauty oils that have an affinity for your skin's own softeners.

You'll see, the moment you smooth it on, that Angel Face seems to become one with your skin! No chalky, "made-up" look. No greasy streaking. Never drying to your skin. Angel Face is all flattery!

No matter your skin type, no matter your age—in just 5 seconds Angel Face by Pond's can make you suddenly very pleased with the way you look! This is why recent surveys show, more women use Angel Face than use any other make-up!

For your dressing table—the blue-and-gold box, with puff, 89¢, 59¢*

For your handbag—the Mirror Case, $1*

*plus tax

Angel Face
by POND'S

, only ring the dard test.

WHICH WAY TODAY'S YOUTH?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

that represented workers. But in the Ruhr they were dismantling industries under the hands of the workers, reducing the industrial potential so Germany could never again make war. But how would the Germans and the millions more from the agricultural east earn their bread? Germany had had democracy once—democracy and hunger.

The country was divided. Your brothers were dead and your only sister lived in Leipzig—in a different country, a communist country, to which you could not go. We partitioned Poland, you thought, and France, and now we are partitioned.

The Americans were kind, especially to children, but many were drunk and disorderly, and others conducted a flourishing black market in the midst of misery. There was hardly an intact house in the city, whole families were living in one room, but the "occupation" had rooms to spare, and overflowing garbage cans. And did not the French say the Americans behaved like a super race? Had they not atomized two Japanese cities? If the Germans had discovered and used the atom bomb first, would it not have been a gigantic war crime?

What could one do? Well, one could work. Work, work, work. Rebuild. Never mind why. It wasn't race or blood and soil that had helped Germany survive before, but her industriousness and capacity for organization. Let us rebuild what we destroyed in Holland, Norway, France. The proposal awakened your enthusiasm and you volunteered. But it couldn't be allowed. Voluntary labor? It would interfere with the economic system.

Anyhow, you had to earn money. Your father had been "de-Nazified." Another had his job who had really been a Nazi! Everyone was denouncing everyone else. No loyalty, not even decency. Anyhow, it didn't matter much, for your father died.

The Allies, now, were falling out. They were looking for Germans to spy on each other—the Russians for spies against the Westerners, the Westerners for spies against the Russians. Well, you wouldn't do that, though there was money to be had. Why not? Because it was too risky? You shrugged to yourself: What's risk? What's not a risk? But something in you revolted, while affirming, "We did that too. And how we despised our tools!"

There was never going to be another German army. That's one thing the Allies agreed on, anyhow, and "re-education" had dinned it in. German militarism must never revive. Well, it was all right with you. Better no armies, none at all, and why not begin here? But what about the Russians, 200,000,000 of them, and 100,000,000 more of the satellites? What was needed, you heard, was to unite what was left of free Europe—no national armies at all, or national states, but reconciliation of old quarrels in a European Federation. That made sense, you thought—free trade, one currency, and a European army purely for mutual defense. You could belong, then, to a civilization—"Western civilization." But the Russians said if it happened Germany would never be united, and then, when your first enthusiasm had already abated, the French wouldn't have it either. The French wouldn't agree to anything. You shrugged your shoulders; maybe they were right—who knows?

The idea that a baby doesn't amount to anything! Why, one baby is just a house and a front yard full by itself. One baby can furnish more business than you and your whole Interior Department can attend to. He is enterprising, irrepressible, brimful of lawless activities. Do what you please, you can't make him stay on the reservation. Sufficient unto the day is one baby. As long as you are in your right mind don't you ever pray for twins. Twins amount to a permanent riot. And there ain't any real difference between triplets and an insurrection.

—MARK TWAIN

YOUR mother was dying—not yet sixty and from a long-lived family—exhausted by grief, anxiety, hunger, work and cold. She'd developed pleurisy during the two winters when the blasted windows were patched with paper and coal rationed by the shovelful; she'd barely survived pneumonia, but her heart was finished. You sat by her bedside, she looking as old as eternity, but somehow serene. "God bless you," she whispered, and bitterly you asked, "What is God?"

"Gott ist die Liebe," she mumbled. "God is Love. His mercy endureth forever," and that was the last word she spoke.

She had faith, you thought, as the coffin went down the stairs. But she was born in a different time. Her generation had something to pin to—to go back to, to remember—a golden age. Besides, she was a simple soul.

You have experienced everything, you German of thirty. Democrats and Fascists, Nazis and commissars, war and revolution, victory and defeat, disarmament and rearmament—everything but peace, justice, goodness.

Where is there any moral authority? In what can one possibly believe?

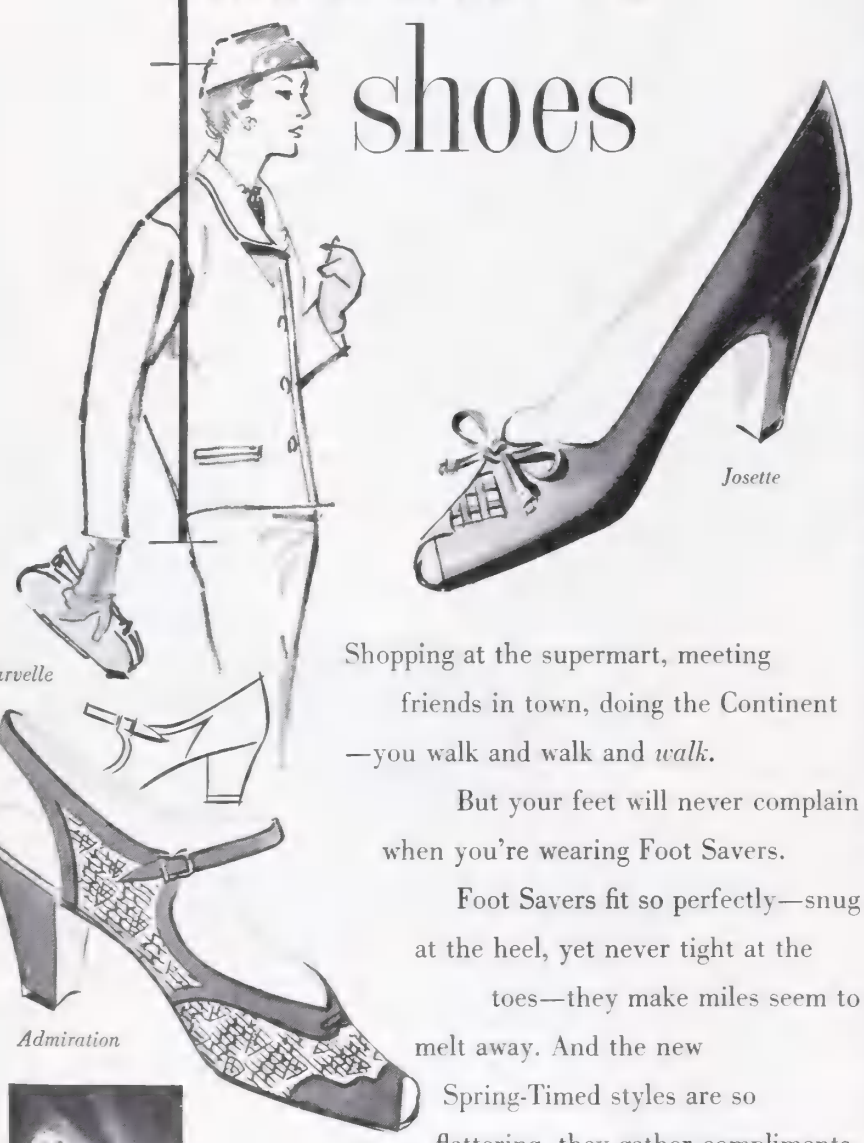
"I exist," you can say to yourself. "I exist, and out of purely biologic urges I want to survive, by hook or by crook, because it is better to be alive than dead. That's a reality—the only reality. I have no talent for being a criminal, but if I had I'd use it, for who could better survive in a criminal world than a criminal? I have four senses that give me pleasure and I indulge them. Eat, drink, fornicate, be merry, for tomorrow we die, no one knows how or for what purpose, but anyway one's life long time dead. Love? Love is what you feel for your family, a strictly private affair, necessary, I guess, as part of our biological nature that says life must go on, even if it is fated to end in wholesale slaughter. I repudiate everything—everything but the courage to live. But don't look for sense in this world. There isn't any. Nor in any other."

THAT is the attitude of nihilism. According to training and temperament it can be positively destructive, expressive of determination to co-operate with destruction, or it can be simply a passive and negative rejection of everything. One or the other nihilistic tendency characterizes much of the generation which reached maturity during the war and postwar years. If I have taken a young German as an illustration it is because no other youth passes through such a cycle of various and contradictory hopes and experiences, each culminating in disillusionment. It is the embodiment of the "anti" spirit.

But it is not confined to Germany. Maria Bohlen found it in Russia, and one can observe it in France, England, Italy, and certainly in America. One concomitant of it is the wave of juvenile crime of violence that afflicts all nations in varying degrees, including the Soviet Union.

But there is another, directly contradictory attitude. Our imaginary young German (or Frenchman, Englishman, Russian or American) may say, "Nothing that I see makes sense. I perceive in the behavior of states, and the leaders of states, no moral imperatives or intelligent reasons impelling their actions, yet I do see, even in this moral chaos, the operation of certain laws: that violence begets violence and evil begets evil, for instance. Therefore, the contrary must be true. There is certainly some order in the universe, as there is an observable order in nature, not created by us humans, though we are part of it, or I would not even have the idea of order. I must predicate the existence of a creative Mind whose purposes I can, to some extent, penetrate if my search be fervent and pure. And I shall make that search the central striving of my life, for I cannot endure a meaningless existence."

That is the turn toward religion. One should be careful not to associate it too closely with the statistics of growing church attendance, though they have significance. But many do not find what they search for in formalized religion, its rituals, rigid credos and "vain repetitions," and count the churches, also, among the institutions that have failed them in their quest. A single noble life, like that of Albert Schweitzer, may translate Christianity into reality as sermonizing does not. Youth searches for the meaning of existence in music and in art, in philosophy and science. And sometimes he finds the first clue in simple human love, embracing, as it does, possessiveness, protectiveness, joy, sacrifice, fulfillment, loyalty. Never, I think, have young men and women cared more for their homes and families than now—despite scandals, divorces and Kinsey reports.



The two developments—cynical wantonness and personal responsibility, loyalty and love—exist alongside each other, each a symptom of rejection of the gods that have failed, each to a certain extent "escapist," neither of them "reformist" in the sense of the twenties, thirties and early forties of this century, but the latter directed to the creation of one loving community, however small, and to the reforming, if not of the world, at least of oneself.

Which of the two faces of this generation will eventually be remembered as the image of this age?

I do not know. But I believe, and pray. END for every walking moment... comfortable, spring-timed foot saver shoes

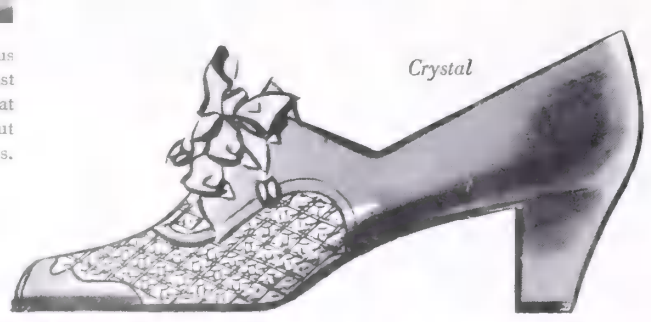
Josette

Marvelle

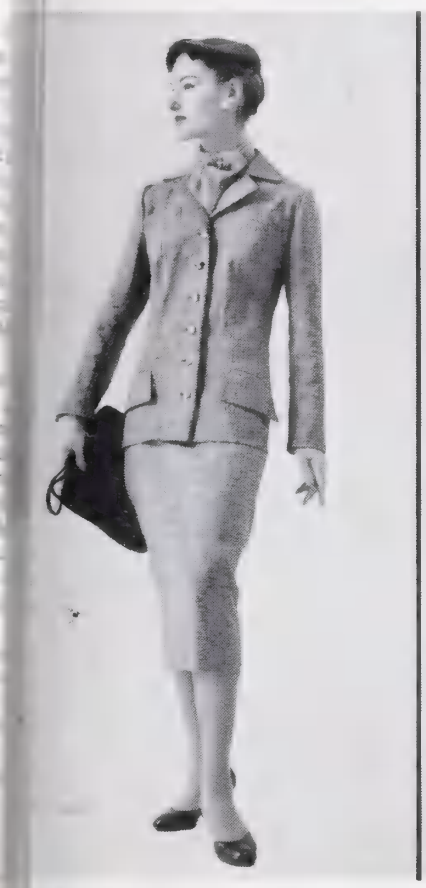
Admiration



Shopping at the supermart, meeting friends in town, doing the Continent —you walk and walk and walk.

But your feet will never complain when you're wearing Foot Savers.

Foot Savers fit so perfectly—snug at the heel, yet never tight at the toes—they make miles seem to melt away. And the new Spring-Timed styles are so flattering, they gather compliments along the way. See them all at your Foot Saver dealer's—soon!



Foot Saver's famous Shortback® Last prevents looseness at heel without pinching toes.

Crystal

g style booklet and name of nearest Foot Saver dealer, write: & Kokenge Company, 254 South Front Street, Columbus 15, Ohio t's spring! Turn his head by keeping yours . . .

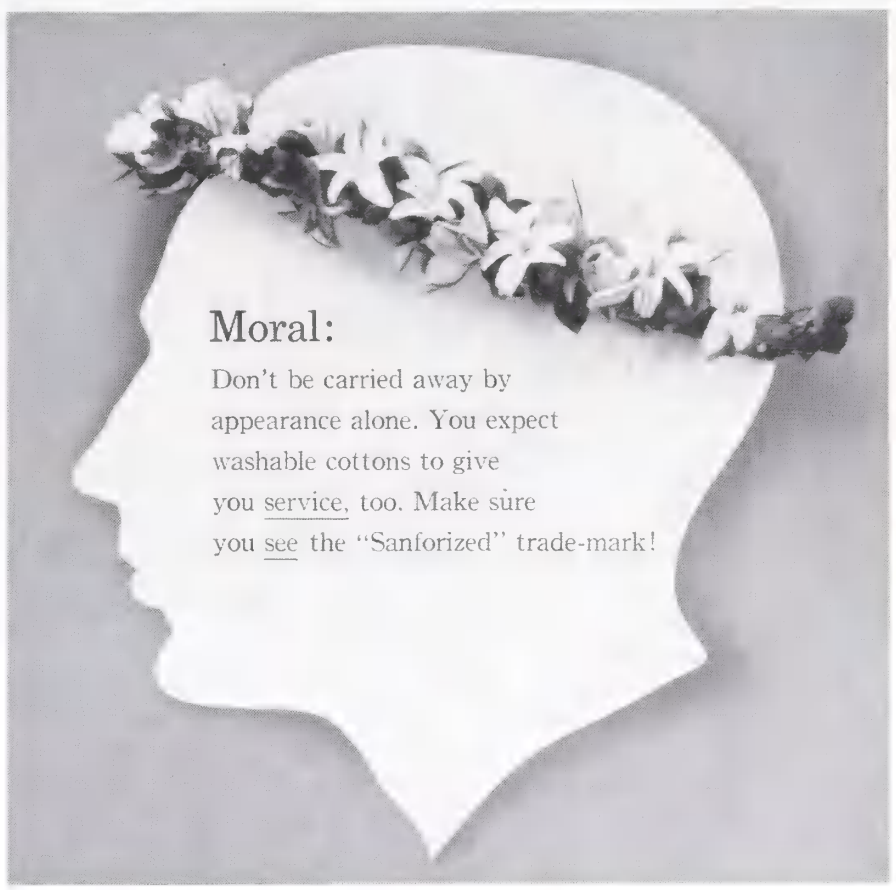
S ts him to a "T"—spring's new l g line in the slim skirt, the jacket t t fits close but not too close. Ask f it in cotton tweed—it spans the s sons.

Suits him not at all—if it spans you! When fit is style, as it is here, shrinkage is Enemy No. 1. Save yourself needless doubts—look for the "Sanforized" label.

To a man's taste—the new look in blouses. Patterned after Paris, overblouses are lithe and lovely. Patterned after silk, cottons shine, sport foulard prints.



To a man's horror—the tight look in blouses. Stop struggling, honey. Listen: some cottons can shrink out of fit in a few washings—insist on seeing "Sanforized"!

He'll go for the poured-into-it effect his beltless charmer gives you. You'll ke it, too . . . and wear it two ways: as dress, as a lightweight coat.

He'll run from the spilled-over look caused by shrinkage. Don't take chances. Why even wonder? The "Sanforized" label says "permanent fit"!

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

These are Beth Anderson's hands. They were soaked in detergents. Her right hand alone was treated with Jergens Lotion. Look at the dramatic difference! This photograph is unretouched.

Positive proof: "Detergent Hands" can be stopped

A national research laboratory* proves Jergens Lotion more effective than any other lotion tested for stopping detergent damage.

Hands are a key to your personality. If your hands look as if they suffer from overwork, take heart – there's wonderful news for you!

Recently 447 women volunteers soaked both hands in household detergents, three times a day. Right after each soaking, Jergens Lotion was smoothed on their right hands. Left hands were untreated.

In 3 or 4 days, the untreated hands were in trouble. They were roughened and reddened – in some cases, even cracked and bleeding. The Jergens Lotion hands were soft, smooth, and lovely!

The women (and the scientists, too!) were frankly amazed to see the difference in their hands. No other lotion tested proved as effective as Jergens Lotion – and they all agreed it was delightful to use; not the least bit sticky or greasy.

The famous Jergens formula has been steadily perfected for 50 years. It never lets wind or weather disgrace your hands – and there's just nothing like it for stopping detergent damage. You can use it daily, it takes just seconds to apply.

The Jergens Lotion you buy today will delight you. It's a rich, creamier lotion with a pleasing new fragrance. You pay only 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

*Notice to doctors and dermatologists. For a summary of this report, write to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

Mommy you look like a witch!

Frizzy hairdo, frowning heart, frumpy clothes. Here, Marcella does resemble the Halloween heroine of broomstick fame.

My husband said, "Honey, you look ten years younger!"
Michael said, "Mommy, that's the look I like!"
Everybody says, "Marcella, you look like a debutante!"

ROGER PRIGENT

Dear Mrs. Norman: This morning my little redhead, Michael, remarked, innocently, "Mommy, you look like the witch on my cereal box!" Well, I know I look a bit less than I did as of yore, but really! When the little ones—Michael, five, Jay, three, and Harvey, four months—were dined and put out in the fresh air, I took a look at Marcella—that's me. I'm just thirty years old, but I look as if life had washed me up on its shore.

Come to think of it, Johnny, my husband, has been eying attractive women recently. No wonder! Of late I've had the feeling in mixed company that I wasn't really there, if you know what I mean. Thinking back, I can't remember receiving a wholehearted compliment in the past several years. Sometimes I buy a lot of cosmetics and experiment, but the wherefores of application have escaped me of late. Styles in make-up and hairdos have changed, I'm afraid, while I wasn't looking.

I've seen the wonders you've done with other women. I'm sure you can work one more miracle if you will.

Please for me—and other "witch mothers."

MARCELLA LEVENDUSKY

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

HAPPILY, not all youngsters are quite so explicit in proclaiming the less-than-lovely vision they have of "mommy." We know one little girl who questions what she considers a dull choice of clothes her mother has made by asking, "Mommy, is that a pretty dress?" And still another tot, not quite two, who manages to shake her mother out of her unconsciously grim expressions by piping up, "Mommy's mad!"

Perhaps you are fortunate enough to appear ideal from where Junior stands. Through the busy years of marriage and motherhood you have kept a beauty eye on changing trends in hairdos and hemlines, knowing that keeping pace means keeping young and pretty. The only way you want to be "dated" is on your engagement pad. By polishing the qualities that made you attractive and lovable before the babies arrived, you continue to delight your husband, and at the same time provide the nourishment needed for building pride in the hearts of your children.

All mothers can be beauties in the eyes of their youthful beholders. If you have reason to suspect you are not, then Marcella's little miracle should give you hope and help.

"Mike meant it!" Marcella Levendusky exclaimed, telling us about the time her five-year-old cherub compared her to a witch. "It wasn't just an offhand remark. I was stunned and hurt.

"I used to be passably pretty," she went on wistfully, "but with a husband, three children and the never-ending household routine I've lost the knack of keeping up my appearance. I find myself buying somber clothes in women's departments. My own contemporaries talk to and about me as though I were a member of our parents' generation. I adore to dance—in fact, I was a dancing instructor before we were married—yet I can't remember the last time I've bothered humming a tune, much less dancing to it. With the children growing up, I'm anxious to take part in community and civic affairs. But I'm too ashamed of the way I look."

Marcella's miserable preoccupation with the sum total of her CONTINUED ON PAGE 133

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

BRECK CREME RINSE IS OFFERED I COMBINATION WITH A BRECK SHAMPO

Breck Creme Rinse is used after the shampoo to add softness, lustre and manageability to your hai
It also makes combing and arranging easy. Breck Creme Rinse is helpful in the care of permaner waves and in the prevention of dry, brittle hair. There are Three Breck Shampoos. One Brec Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is fo normal hair. A Breck Shampoo is not drying to the hair, yet it cleans thoroughly. Enjoy th Breck Shampoo for your individual hair condition and follow with fragrant Breck Creme Rins

Special Combination Offer – A 60¢ bottle of Breck Creme Rinse with a $1.75 bottle of one of the Three Breck Shampoos – for dry, oily or normal hair. A $2.35 value for $1.75 plus 4¢ tax.

Copyright 1955 by John H. Breck Inc.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETT
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO OTTAWA CANAD

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 131

omings left no time to tackle the indi- problems that added up to it. When she l to single them out and cope with them a time, she was thrilled to discover each r of her beauty biography could have a ending. Here are the highlights:

Trouble: "As I grow older, my face thinner, sharper-featured."

Trick: Soften the effect with a more ng hairdo and make-up. Marcella's rangement boasts pixy bangs to flage a too-high ad. The ends curl d forward, bring- th them a youth- sion of roundness. crown is smooth he back ends just feather-turned. pkeep? Pin curls e ends two or three each week, a home nent twice a year. ight, freshly glow- ake-up gives Mar- a gentle-lady look she had never ged to achieve with arsh, dark lipsticks obvious-looking lations. First, the est film of a creamy e-up base tinted a hint of pink to ten the color of her color" skin. Next a of powder in a clear , and for her lips ght, pinky-red lip- Her pale blue- eyes—"I think I nice eyes, but no- seems to notice or ment"—needed e-up to accentuate color, make them larger. For special sions Marcella now hes mascara on the er lashes, smooths merest amount of shadow on her eye- She keeps her eye- s prettily arched and well defined by king away the stray hairs from under- h.

ractice will enable Marcella to do her ning make-up in less than five minutes, the effect will please the eyes and cheer the rts of every member of her family!

The Trouble: "I look solemn and long-faced, matter how I feel."

The Trick: Marcella's constant concern over appearance had tensed the expression in face, producing an almost habitual frown. ercoming this homely habit will take time conscious effort, on her part, to r-e-l-a-x, emember—even when she's alone—to turn corners of her mouth up instead of down. nning a day's work which is more than she can possibly manage is another tension builder. By fitting into a reasonable schedule of household chores a specific time (even if it's only five minutes in the afternoon) to stretch out and rest Marcella will acquire fresh strength as well as fresh beauty. Practice your smiles—it won't be long before you feel them.

The Trouble: "I'm 5′6½″ tall, weigh 115 pounds, waist 24″. But instead of looking chic and pretty in my clothes, I look like a scarecrow—or a witch, as Michael put it."

The Trick: Try perfecting your approach to food as well as your approach to fashion. No breakfast, a sketchy, grab-it-while-you-can lunch, and dinner eaten in exhaustion are responsible for Marcella's too-sharp expressions and her too-thin figure. It may take a little extra time to sit down, relax and enjoy three well-balanced, nourishing meals each day. But the rewards of improved health for Marcella and happiness for the whole family are more than worth it!

Marcella can put on five or ten pounds and still have the kind of fashion-model figure most girls would envy. A more flattering choice of clothes will round out the pretty picture. Leave the straight skirts and dark dresses to the fatties who have no other choice. Emphasize your tiny waist with full-skirted dresses chosen from the junior or misses' departments. Make yourself some gingham kitchen aprons to billow out from a grosgrain waistband. See that your simplest house dresses are in your most becoming colors—sunshine yellow, turquoise blue (to bring out the color of your eyes), pink-and-white checks or stripes. Tie back your hair with a matching ribbon. Be selective about your date dresses, looking for low necklines that are still high enough to hide bony shoulder blades. Or—with low necklines that do make known a prominent collarbone, wear strands and strands of pastel crystal beads in your prettiest shades of green or blue or mauve.

Add a sure and pretty touch to your clothes by having on hand some always-in-fashion accessories: immaculate, short white gloves; classic pumps (polished and heeled!); freshly pressed silk squares to tuck in a neckline, pocket or belt; a single strand of pearls; a stiffly starched petticoat that gives a party look to a full skirt.

SONNET

By MARY WRIGHT LAMB

I'm well aware that we are not the first to suffer rapture; she is not our bride;
more saintly folk than we have lain beside her through the night—and more accursed have taken what small favors
she disbursed;
while bolder folk have feared her smile, and tried escaping, far more prudent men have died for her. She'd scarcely call us best or worst.

Our fire will one day darken and be dead;
our hearth will cool and, with it, this poor clay.
But let us make for rapture such a bed that when, at last, she has fulfilled her stay, she'll think with pleasure on this berth she fled—and leave an indentation where she lay.

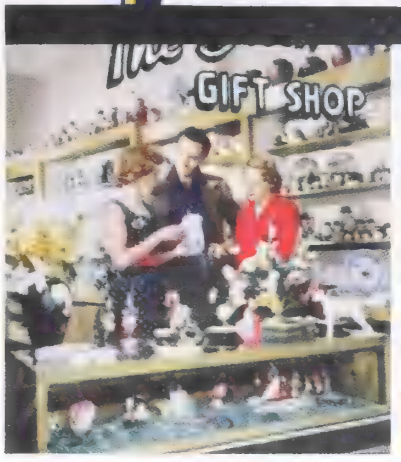
BORN TO BE QUEEN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 61

There was no doubt, however, that the queen l her best to give her daughter a most demo- tic upbringing. And when the princess did ything remotely resembling what other girls r age were doing, it was broadcast from one d of the Netherlands to the other. Princess liana was attending a girls' summer camp. incess Juliana was riding third-class on the lway.

Finally, the announcement that Princess liana would attend Leiden University created great stir, as heretofore Dutch princesses had ways been educated by private tutors behind lace walls. Many of Sophia Feith's friends new the princess as a student at Leiden, here she joined several campus organizations d begged to be called Jula. With three other udents the princess had lived in a small brick villa near the university with a lady in waiting and several palace chambermaids. The house next door was occupied by her secretary and his family. Everyone kept up the pretense that the princess was being treated just like everyone else. Like all the other students, she waited for her professors to leave their classrooms first. Then, carrying her own books, she sauntered out of the building, seemingly unaware of the curious stares upon her.

Sophia Feith was extremely curious to meet the man who had married the college-bred, bicycle-riding Dutch crown princess. Few people in the Netherlands had ever heard of Prince Bernhard zur Lippe-Biesterfeld before he came racing into The Hague one afternoon in the fall of 1936 in a gray Ford convertible with the top down. Princess Juliana was beside



There's room to relax in uncrowded

Canada

VACATIONS UNLIMITED...

Whatever the dimensions of your holiday dream, there's a sun-site in Canada that will make you say, "this is it!" Whether your choice is the charm of "foreign" cities... the fun of mountain resort or seaside colony...sports, or the luxury of utter leisure, you'll find it in uncrowded Canada. No passport needed. See your travel or your transportation agent soon; send the coupon now.

Unusual "take-home" gifts are to be found in Canada's friendly shops.

Unspoiled beauty-spots are easy to reach in Canada's National Parks and roomy lakelands.

01-1-16-55-02

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL BUREAU,
OTTAWA, CANADA

Send your NEW 48-page, full-colour book on vacation attractions in all parts of Canada . . . . . ☐

Tell me where 16 mm sound films on Canadian travel subjects are available in the U.S.A. . . ☐

Check ✓ as required

*Name*_____
(PLEASE PRINT)

*Address*_____

*Town*_____ *State*_____

him in the two-seater. The wind had whipped her blond hair out of its low bun and she kept pushing it back and laughing.

The young German prince in horn-rimmed glasses was wearing a sport shirt and looked gay as a schoolboy on a holiday, according to reports of those who saw him for the first time that day.

As soon as the crowds in the street recognized Princess Juliana they began yelling and cheering and pushing their way toward the car, but the princess didn't seem to mind. Prince Bernhard called to them good-naturedly to clear away until he managed to turn into the courtyard of Noordeinde Palace. There by the front entrance stood Queen Wilhelmina, a stout figure in a severely tailored gray suit.

At the sight of their monarch, the excited crowds cheered. Queen Wilhelmina offered her cheek to her daughter, her hand to the prince. She looked radiantly happy as she welcomed into her home for the first time her daughter's black-haired, debonair-looking beau.

Princess Juliana was twenty-seven when her engagement was announced on that September day in 1936. Many times before her name had been linked romantically with eligible royal bachelors, such as Prince Charles of Sweden, the Prince of Wales and his handsome brother, the Duke of Kent. She was a bridesmaid when the latter married Princess Marina of Greece.

"At least she's picked a young one," remarked a male patient with satisfaction as Miss Feith changed his bed the day Juliana's engagement was announced. The nurse blushed, tugging at a sheet. She was well aware that the thought of most Hollanders had already rushed past the marriage ceremony to motherhood. "Only two royal children in almost sixty years," grumbled the patient. "I'd say it was high time the House of Orange-Nassau got some new blood. Don't like the idea he's German, though. Too many Nazis here already."

"He's not a Nazi," put in another patient from another bed. "They say he left Germany because of Hitler. He's been earning his own living in Paris."

"What else do you know about him?" inquired the first patient.

"Well, he's twenty-five. He likes fast cars, the faster the better, and he wins prizes at horse shows. He likes to hunt and he's a pretty good skier—that's how he met Princess Juliana, at a skiing party."

"But what can he do?" growled the first Dutchman, who obviously put no great store in sporting accomplishments.

"He holds a degree in law from the University of Berlin."

"Well, now!" exclaimed the first patient, looking impressed for the first time. "Then maybe he can accomplish the almost impossible, being happily married to a queen."

Later that day Miss Feith heard Queen Wilhelmina discussing her daughter's engagement over the radio. "I cannot tell you how thankful I am that this engagement is one which is founded solely on mutual affection, the best guarantee for a happy future," she announced.

As she listened to her words, Miss Feith was thinking that Queen Wilhelmina had also married a member of the German nobility—the Duke of Mecklenburg. But that was back in 1901, when relations between Germany and Holland were exceedingly cordial. Now it was different. Each day new hordes of refugees poured over the borders to tell their tales of persecution and horror under the Reichsführer. In spite of their warnings, the anti-Semitic, antiliberal philosophy of the National Socialists was spreading even across Germany's borders.

Sophia Feith and her friends and family had watched in disbelief and apprehension as even some of their own countrymen boldly lifted the swastika flag and swaggeringly paraded past the quiet canals and flower carts of Amsterdam, the busy quays of Rotterdam, the exotic East Indian shops and tearooms of The Hague.

But on this engagement day all seemed sunny. "I fully approve my daughter's choice," continued Queen Wilhelmina, her voice unusually warm and vibrant, "and consider it a wise one, seeing the excellent qualities which my future son-in-law possesses."

She spoke with such sincerity that Miss Feith felt some of her own doubts dissolve. Prince Bernhard must be a person of unusual attainments to merit such praise from the outspoken monarch.

In contrast to the lovely formal cadences of her mother's speech, Princess Juliana's sounded colloquial and somewhat breathless. "How can I describe to you what a happy moment it is for me to introduce my fiancé?" Juliana was saying. "We met during winter sports in Austria and then here again in this country and little by little we found each other and have come to an understanding. I am very, very happy."

Then, to the surprise of the group gathered in her parents' home, Prince Bernhard stepped to the microphone. He spoke with a strong German accent, but Miss Feith was impressed to hear him use the Dutch tongue. "I understand that your wonderful reception was not for me, since I am of course a complete stranger to you," he told the listening Dutch people. "I am anxious to learn everything there is to know about my new fatherland, the Netherlands, and I will strive to help Juliana of Orange all my life. We hope to be married in two or three months."

Busy as she was with her nursing du Miss Feith managed to follow every deta the wedding preparations in the newspape three-month honeymoon was planned, fir a ski resort in Poland, run by the tenor Kiepura, then on to Vienna, Budapest, Tyrol, Rome, the South of France, and P The palace of Soestdijk, near Baarn, which been used as a summer palace by Prin Juliana's grandmother, Queen Emma, being completely done over for the ne weds. ("Why, that's only five miles down road, mother!" Miss Feith had excla when she heard about it.) As a wedding the nation planned to present the pair w and suddenly . . .

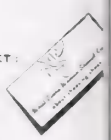
your hair looks young again!

Ever notice the radiance of young hair? Its sheen says, "young." This safe, simple-to-use color rinse gleams hair in about 3 minutes. And you needn't worry about changing your hair so much it causes talk. Noreen just brings out the best in your own hair, color so right for your skin and eyes. It blends streaks, tones in grays, evens up color! Among the 14 lively but subtle colors is one to coax gold lights into tan hair, put a glow in brown, make black blacker, brighten silver, and whiten white. There's one for you too. So nice, because it's so natural! Now...even easier to use with new applicator.

Noreen COLOR HAIR RINSE

At cosmetic counters everywhere. Also professionally applied in beauty salons. Available in Canada.

8 rinses 60¢ plus tax
Color applicator 40¢



Velvet step

695 to 1095
(A few styles slightly highe

Sleek...slim...trim little shoe... fit for the Easter parade and YOU! Black patent, pastel blue or shell pink kid, blue or natural shantung.

WRITE TODAY FOR FREE BOOKLET: "What Every Woman Should Know About Choosing Shoes."

For the store nearest you, write:
PETERS SHOE COMPANY, SAINT LO

ALSO MAKERS OF CITY CLUB SHOES FOR M AND WEATHER-BIRD SHOES FOR BOYS AND G

yacht, as it was said that Prince Bern- was very fond of boating.

Now on this raw March evening, Sophia Fei , who had been pedaling steadily through the in, was almost at her destination. A nar- oat of water and a few strands of barbed wi were all that separated the actual palace grounds from the popular Soestdijk Park. No cars were in sight except for two uniformed sentries at the main palace gates facing the Amsterdam-Amersfoort highway.

Above the bars of the three-hundred-yard- long black iron fence which borders the front lawns, Miss Feith could see the lights of the mai low white palace. Approaching the sentry at the east gate, the young nurse told him that she had an appointment with Princess Juliana. He saluted and disappeared into the sentry box, where she could hear him telephoning. Presently he came out, saluted again, and waved her impressively on.

Visitors to Holland had often remarked to Miss Feith that Soestdijk does not look like a castle at all. It has no towers, no dungeons with their slit windows, no ancient cannon, no centuries-old ivy trailing up its walls. And of course, since the wooded countryside for miles around stretches flat as a plate, it does not dominate a hill.

The palace has the rough shape of a letter C, with two low symmetrical wings curving out from the four-storied main section. No adornment breaks the smooth white stone façade except for immense gray louvered shutters framing the big French windows. These were all dark except for those blazing in the west wing, where Miss Feith was expected.

Over near the west-wing steps she could see the handle bars of several bicycles protruding from behind the rhododendrons. Wheeling her own bicycle behind a bush, she was aware that a curtain moved slightly in a darkened basement window and for an instant a white face stared at her.

Disconcerted, the nurse regarded the curtained window uncertainly, then started up the long flight of gray stone steps lined with empty flowerpots. At the top she was surprised to find a plain black doorbell. After some hesitation, she pushed it. Presently a footman in Nassau-blue livery opened the door, bowed, and accepted her dripping coat and scarf. These he laid over an antique gold-and-red chair, handling them, she thought, as if they were silk and sable.

The nurse was standing in a long corridor carpeted in robin's-egg blue, the same color repeated in the carved ceiling with large pale gold stars. She was immediately conscious of the all-pervading warmth as in a hospital. Her clothes felt suddenly heavy. At home she was accustomed to the drafts circulated by icy stone walls and iron stoves or fireplaces and she had dressed accordingly.

THE footman in knee breeches was leading her down a long corridor. On the way they passed another footman padding silently along the thick blue carpet, leading a white-haired terrier on a leash. "You may wait in the Yellow Room," announced the first lackey, bowing her into a small chamber furnished in gilt French Empire pieces upholstered in mustard-yellow velvet.

Miss Feith sat stiffly on a velvet chair as a golden clock under a glass dome loudly ticked off the long minutes. Finally she arose and shuffled through the periodicals and papers on a small table. She selected an Amsterdam evening paper and had just begun to read about the civil war in Spain when the footman reappeared to announce that their Royal Highnesses were now ready to receive her.

Once more he led the way down the robin's-egg-blue corridor to a big corner room with picture windows and many bookcases. The furniture was a pleasant combination of modern pieces, in colorings of soft beige and green. All the armchairs and sofas were of the type designed for solid comfort and arranged in a casual group about the grate where a cheerful fire was burning.

The prince was standing with his back to the fire. He had a glass of whisky in his hand and looked at the visitor critically over a large cigar. Princess Juliana rose from her armchair and, putting her knitting on the floor, came forward with a slightly uncertain smile.

She looks different, Miss Feith thought. What is it? Her hair is short, that's it, and she's pounds thinner.

The nurse waited for the princess to speak.

"How do you do?" Her Royal Highness greeted the nurse in a very soft and lilting voice. "Did the chauffeur find your home without difficulty?"

The nurse was at a loss for an answer. Finally she said, "I'm afraid I don't know, Your Royal Highness. I came on my bicycle."

"Through all the rain?" asked the princess.

The prince smiled approvingly. "No wonder the Dutch are so healthy and live to such a ripe old age. So few ride automobiles."

The nurse laughed politely. Only recently, she knew, a sand truck had backed into the path of the prince's convertible as he sped down the Amsterdam highway, demolishing his car and almost finishing the prince.

The princess indicated with a small gesture of her hand that Miss Feith should sit on the sofa. She then returned to her seat by the fire.

She was wearing a plain wool dress of pastel blue-green which was most becoming to her fair skin and hair. About her wrist a small diamond bracelet rose and fell as she knitted a white baby sweater.

Miss Feith sat gazing about the warm inviting room, so different from the stiff formality she had expected to find in a royal palace. One table by the fireside was completely covered with autographed photographs of friends, including many family groups with small children. Bowls of early spring jonquils brought to the room a faint fragrance of the greenhouse; there was even a vase of purple heather.

"That is from Het Loo, my mother's summer place," the princess remarked in her lovely melodic voice. "I can remember so well picking it in the woods there as a child. It always seemed particularly lovely to me, although heather grows all about here, too, as you know."

Robins and Roses..

are just around the corner...
at the Cutex counter!

From Robin-Reds to Rosy Pinks—all the prettiest shades of spring are at your favorite toiletries counter! Select some sparkling new Cutex colors for YOUR lips and fingertips today. Spring will come a little sooner if you do!

Why Pay More? Tests prove new Cutex Chip-pruf nail polish, with Enamelon, wears best . . . absolutely defies chipping!

The Most Kissable Lips Wear Cutex Lipstick! So long-lasting, it stays on hours longer—after eating, smoking, even kissing. Much creamier, too, because Cutex Lipstick contains pure, SUPER LANOLIN. Keeps lips always soft as a rose!

Cutex model wears STRIKE ME PINK lipstick with ROSE PEARL polish.

CUTEX

The prince swooped down and picked up his dog sleeping by the fire. He was wearing his usual fresh white carnation in the buttonhole of a checked tweed sports jacket. The blue silk ascot knotted about his throat made his eyes look very blue and brought out the deep tan of his skin. He was really quite handsome, the nurse decided—almost six feet tall, his frame hard and muscular without a spare ounce anywhere.

The prince stepped out into the hall and handed the terrier to a footman.

"You have no idea," he told Miss Feith upon returning, "how hard it is to train a dog in a palace. There are so many rooms and doors that they never learn which door leads outside."

He smiled at her as he spoke, inviting her to join in the joke. He wants to put me at ease, she thought, delighted. He's telling me that living in a palace is not to be taken too seriously.

"My husband is a great believer in children's having pets at a very early age, and making them take care of them. It helps build character, he thinks," remarked Juliana.

Prince Bernhard nodded. "Trix will get a dog as soon as she can walk, and when she is a little older she will be responsible for all its care. Jula agrees with me, don't you, my dear?"

The princess smiled and nodded as she sat quietly knitting. Bernhard seemed to be in perpetual motion. Now he was puffing on his cigar and pacing up and down in front of the fire.

"Cold in here, isn't it?" he remarked. "Think I'll turn up the thermostat."

"Please, Bernilo, no!" begged his wife, laughing. "You will roast us all."

"How about something to drink?" he proposed next, striding over to a corner buffet and busying himself with a great clinking of glasses and tinkling of ice. "What will it be for you, Jula?"

"Some crème de cacao would be fine," she responded.

"I'll have a highball, I think. That herring for dinner made me thirsty. And you, Freule?"

He used for the first time the customary Dutch term for unmarried female members of the nobility. His Dutch, the nurse noted, was fluent but still marked by a strong German accent.

"Sherry, Your Royal Highness, thank you," she replied. She stole a glance at Princess Juliana, apparently engrossed in her knitting, and decided that here was one princess who had not acquired the blank heavy-lidded stare of royalty. All Juliana's gentleness and shyness and sensitivity were revealed in her face.

A small silence fell, broken only by the steady clicking of the princess' knitting needles and the spitting of the fire.

Then, like a thunderbolt, "Our child will not be raised in tissue paper!" the princess announced suddenly in an imperious tone.

Miss Feith was so startled that she was afraid she would spill the small crystal glass of sherry the prince was handing her. She was gratified to see that her hand did not betray her. What on earth had she said or done to provoke such a rebuke? She felt like one of the helpless gardeners painting roses in Alice in Wonderland when the Queen of Hearts screamed, "Off with his head!"

Princess Juliana's eyes dropped to her knitting again and the nurse thought that she blushed. "You quite understand, do you not, Miss Feith? Dogs are difficult to raise in a palace, ah yes, but children much more so!"

The prince intervened suavely. "Here is your drink, my dear," he said, handing a liqueur glass to Juliana. "My wife and I believe that any child, whether royalty or not, suffers from a secluded upbringing," he interpreted his wife's unexpected outburst. "Both of us want Trix to rub elbows with all kinds of children and to have as normal a childhood as possible."

PRINCESS JULIANA nodded approvingly and once more spoke in her usual soft tone of voice. "While she is still small she is to be called Trix. By everyone, even the servants. We don't want her to even hear the word princess."

"I understand, Your Royal Highness," responded the nurse, remembering suddenly the small lonely girl hiding behind her muff. Did this mean she was hired?

The prince took a sip of his highball and remarked in a pleasant conversational tone to Miss Feith, "Did you hear about the ruckus over Trix's birthday souvenirs?"

The nurse shook her head. He is really a master, she thought, of the awkward moment.

"Why, all the souvenir manufacturers went to town on the occasion," he continued. "They made thousands and thousands of mugs and ash trays and plates and so forth to commemorate the baby's birthday. They printed January, 1938, on them and left blank spa for the baby's birthday and name. Trix w due about the middle of January, you member."

"We were all anxious, especially when t whole weeks dragged past after that, and baby," put in the mother. "But Bernilo s the souvenir manufacturers were desperate the baby arrived in February, all their sou nirs would be worthless, since they all s January."

"Princess Beatrix was born the very last d of January, wasn't she?" recalled Miss Fei

"Yes, on the thirty-first. Just under t wire!"

"WE had ninety-six newspaper reporte hanging about the gates for weeks," remark the prince, "and thousands of people nig and day, dropping papers and acting as if th were on a big party."

He shook his head wonderingly in recolle tion.

"There is no doubt about it. All Dutchm have Orange hearts."

He set down his highball and slouched fa ther into the big chair, chin cupped in his han regarding Miss Feit The cool intelligen of that gaze was di concerting until smiled, and then sh was charmed by th warmth kindled i his eyes and the a tractiveness of h smile. He aske about her nurse training and whe she was from, an upon hearing tha she was born in Gro ningen, remarke that the Dutch fro that farming pro ince on the Nort Sea were well know for their tenacity an stubbornness. Mis Feith wondered if h were perhaps delib erately conductin the interview to spar his wife the strai and to give her chance to make u her mind about th prospective nurse.

EPG

"I feel sorry for the next prince consort," Prince Henry said when Juliana was born.

"I have learned a great deal about the Nether lands since I arrived," he told her. Then ver seriously he added, "Every day I find mysel becoming more of a Dutchman."

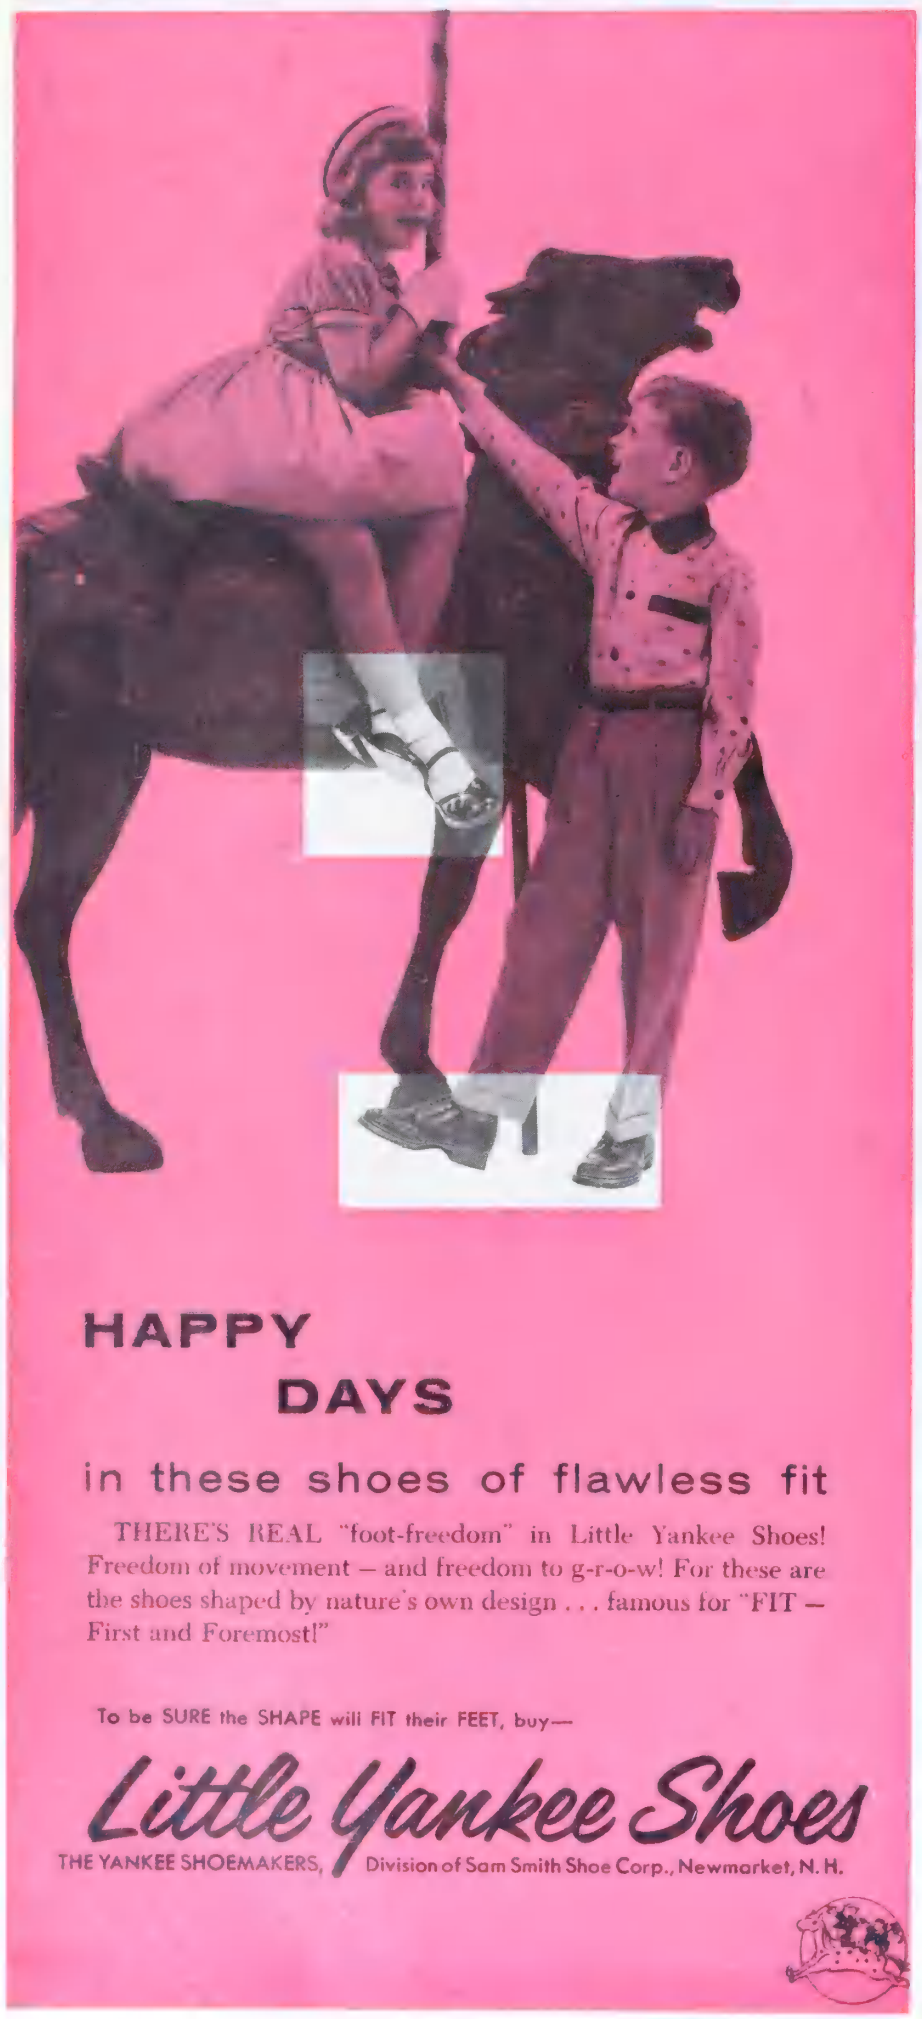
"Well, you don't look like one," teased hi wife. "You should sit up straight and take your hands out of your pockets."

An amused and affectionate look passe between them. The royal couple struck Mis Feith as very much of a team, and much in love.

Princess Juliana soon began to speak of the baby Beatrix and how she was thriving on her mother's milk, how soundly she slept and hardly ever cried. She remarked that she had read several books on modern child psychology and asked Miss Feith if she had done the same. Miss Feith said that she had not.

"How, then, do you believe in raising babies?" asked Juliana.

"Just the natural way."



There was a small silence, during which the prince looked amused.

"At least you could come for a few weeks and we'll see how things work out," Juliana finally decided. "Since your home is only a few miles from here you can spend your free time with your family."

This was agreed upon and the nurse was told that she could have a day and a half free each week. Since she was used to working long hours at the hospital, she thought that this arrangement was most reasonable.

"And now I will show you the baby, and your room," announced Juliana.

The nurse bade the prince good night and waited for the princess to precede her. Instead, Juliana came up behind her and gave her a friendly prod in the shoulders. Somewhat abashed, the nurse went first through the door.

moved down the long robin's-egg-blue or past several bowing footmen to a narhite stairway at the far end. The princess head to lead the way. "Part of my fa-collection," she remarked, indicating the er etchings of hunting scenes lining the all.

he top of the stair they came to a large ndicator which the nurse learned later onnected with a weather vane on the nd told the direction of the wind at a
. "My husband had this installed."

s Feith could not help being amused at eflections of the tastes of the two prince ts, the only prince consorts in Dutch history: Prince Henry, collector of German etchings; Prince Bernhard, lover of mechanical gadgets.

The princess turned to the left and led the way to the nursery in the west wing. A nurse in a navy-blue uniform and starched cap and apron rose from her chair as they entered.

The royal mother tiptoed over to a crib at one side of the large green-papered room and smilingly beckoned to Miss Feith.

"And here is Beatrix," she said. "The name means, 'She who brings happiness.'"

The plump little flaxen-haired princess was sleeping, her thumb doubled into her mouth. The crib in which she was cradled was fashioned of rosewood and bronze, ornately carved and obviously very old. High over the child's head soared a gilded lark with outstretched wings and a jewel in his beak. From the golden crown on which he rested fell thick folds of creamy white velvet.

"She is almost six weeks old," explained the mother proudly, "and she is smiling already. Your bedroom is here next to the nursery and your sitting room is down the hall. No doubt you can start soon?"

Sophia Feith hastily calculated all she had to do, including resigning from the hospital staff, and suggested diffidently, "Perhaps in a week?"

"Very well. Shall I call a car for you now?" the princess asked as they walked back down the hall together.

The nurse had a sudden uncomfortable picture of herself being saluted into a black palace Packard along with her dripping bicycle. She declined hastily. Princess Juliana took her elbow and guided her to the front door, chatting in an easy and friendly way. We are almost the same height and age and coloring, Miss Feith thought as they walked along. And it's very hard to keep remembering that she is royalty.

A footman held the nurse's coat while another bowed and opened the front door. The princess stood for a moment shaking the nurse's hand and saying good-by. Then once again Miss Feith found herself in the black and rainy night outside the palace walls.

Seven days later a chauffeur wearing a black uniform and black cap with a small crown above the visor drove up to the front of Miss Feith's Hilversum home. After he had carried out the nurse's suitcases, she waved good-by to her family and climbed into the back seat. It seemed as though dozens of towheaded children and curious adults were gaping at her from the sidewalk, and she tried not to notice the cook staring from the kitchen window.

THE chauffeur, separated from her by a glass partition, sat stiffly erect in the front seat as the big car turned away from her parents' home in the direction of Soestdijk Palace. She reminded herself that she would be back home for good in a few weeks or months, not knowing the unexpected and dramatic direction her life was soon to take.

Miss Feith arrived at the palace late in the afternoon. Their Royal Highnesses were dining out and were not expected home until time for Trix's ten-o'clock feeding. Sophia Feith was told that she would start her duties the following morning. She ate her supper on a tray in her room and retired early.

Her first day at the palace began at five A.M. when the six-week-old princess set up a lusty wailing. Miss Feith knew that the royal infant was to be kept precisely on a four-hour feeding schedule, commencing at six A.M. So Her Royal Highness had an hour to wait before she could be placed at her mother's breast.

Miss Feith rose and dressed quickly and went into the nursery. Baby Trix was quite purple with rage and frustration at being kept waiting. None of her rattles or Swiss music boxes served to distract her appetite. The nurse was vastly relieved when the clock's hands finally crawled to six and she could carry the freshly washed and dressed princess down the long upstairs corridors to Princess Juliana's bedroom.

After she had been fed, the little princess, warm and content, snuggled down to sleep in her ornate crib. Her mother had informed Miss Feith that Trix was not to be left unattended for a single moment, even when napping. So the nurse pulled a bell cord to summon a chambermaid to sit by the crib while she went down to breakfast. Only on Sundays, she was told, was breakfast served in the palace bedrooms.

Downstairs a footman directed her to the family dining room next to the library where she had first met the prince and princess. The dining room was a rather small room furnished very simply with a buffet of light-colored wood on which stood a small silver coffee service. Three places had been set at a matching oval table. A footman pulled out a chair and Miss Feith sat down.

Now for the first time she could see the rear grounds of the palace through the high French windows. Green lawns with informal flower beds, now bare under the March skies, sloped past gigantic beech trees to a small lake, bordered by wild reeds and rushes. As she watched, several mallards flew up crying from the water's surface. To the extreme right was an elaborate greenhouse which she supposed supplied the prince with his daily fresh carnation. In front of her a gravel bridle path led into the forest. She learned later that it led to the tennis courts and outdoor swimming pool and riding ring.

She turned in her chair and regarded a huge wall-hanging behind her, the only decoration in the room. It was made of bamboo-colored

Tie-side shirt, Sizes 1-6, about 39c. Double-thick panty with triple-thick crotch, about 29c Soft-combed gripper gown, in choice of 5 colors, about 69c.

Best Buy for Baby

Precious comfort for your baby is assured with Spencer's. Gentle, soft-spun or soft-combed fabrics are generously-sized and made shrink-resistant. Expertly tailored by folks who have made only baby undies for over 25 years. Cellophane packed and economically priced so you can buy a dozen at a time.

SOFT SPUN Spencer's BABY UNDIES

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

WHERE TO BUY SPENCER'S

J. W Woolworth Co.	W. W. Mac Co.	Eagle Stores
S. S. Kresge Co.	Neisner Brothers	Efird's
W. T. Grant Co.	C. M. S. Stores	Gorin's
H. L. Green Co.	Kobacker Stores	Coronet Stores
S. H. Kress Co.	Rose's 5-10-25 Stores	A. L. Duckwall Stores
M. H. Fishman Co.	V. J. Elmore Co.	Sprouse-Reitz
McLellan Stores	Belk Stores	T. G. Y. Stores
J. J. Newberry Co.	Perry Bros.	Raylass Stores
G. C. Murphy Co.	Morgan & Lindsey	Mack's 5 & 10 Stores
McCrory Stores	M. H. Lamston Co.	G. F. Wacker Stores
Charles Stores	Emery Stores	Hested Stores
S. E. Nichols Co.	Danner Bros.	Dodd's 5-10-25 Stores

MOUNT AIRY KNITTING CO.
Mount Airy • North Carolina

Join that parade April 10th

LOOKING FRESH AS AN EASTER LILY

Don't be upset even a little if your family's Easter wardrobe can't be 100% brand new. Nobody else will even guess what's new and what isn't if the latter has been Sanitone Dry Cleaned. That assures you colors, patterns and textures flower-fresh and clean—every garment as smartly pressed, as store-fresh and new looking as the first day you ever wore it.

But, don't delay. Call your Sanitone Dry Cleaner at once so that everything needed for Easter can be cleaned and returned to you before the annual last minute rush. Call today if possible.

BEAT THE RUSH... CALL YOUR SANITONE DRY CLEANER NOW AND BE READY FOR EASTER

HOW TO FIND YOUR LOCAL SANITONE DRY CLEANER
Just look in your telephone directory classified section, under cleaners, for "Sanitone Approved Service." There you will find listed the Sanitone Dry Cleaner in your town. If you cannot locate one, write to us at once.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Sanitone
DRY CLEANING SERVICE

A Division of Emery Industries, Inc., Carew Tower • Cincinnati 2, Ohio

silk embroidered with a seventeenth-century Dutch trading galleon surrounded by whimsical figures of brightly colored fish, lizards, antelopes and tropical birds and flowers. Along the bottom were sewed in flowing script the words "Dutch Antilles" and then the names of Bernhard and Juliana and their wedding date, January 7, 1937.

As she was admiring the tapestry, a footman placed in front of her thick pieces of white bread, butter, thinly sliced pale yellow cheese and a teapot.

It was precisely the breakfast she was accustomed to eating at home. At Hilversum, however, the teacups were all bone china, while the cup before her was colorfully decorated pottery, like the rest of the service.

Princess Juliana arrived in the dining room a few moments later, accompanied by the prince. She was wearing a pale-blue wool dress with her light blond hair brushed casually back behind her ears, a blue bead necklace about her neck. The prince was in his riding habit which fitted his slender figure like a second skin.

The royal couple greeted Miss Feith warmly. The prince sat at the head of the table, like all Dutch papas, and the princess facing him. Her breakfast was tea and bread; the prince had bacon and eggs sunny side up.

"That's a most unusual-looking tapestry," remarked the nurse over a small silence.

"Isn't it?" agreed the princess, glancing at the wall. "You must look at it closely—the figures are made of strips of colored leather and beads and buttons and all sorts of fascinating things. It's very gay, we think. It's from the women of the Dutch Antilles—one of our favorite wedding presents."

Miss Feith, who had read about the truckloads of gold and silver and cut crystal which had poured in from all corners of the earth as wedding gifts, thought how discriminatingly simple were the tastes of the royal couple. She had seen nothing so far which could not be duplicated in any upper-middle-class hom Holland; even to the plain silver coffee se on the fruit-wood buffet.

"Someday I hope to visit our territori the Caribbean and the Indies, but first I to improve my Dutch," remarked the pr "For a German, that's not easy."

"So many words are spelled the same pronounced quite differently," agreed wife. "But you are making wonderful progr

"Did you realize that Dutch is probabl only language in the world with a special meaning 'father, mother and children'?" a the prince. "I learned that yesterday."

When his wife looked puzzled, he explai "In other languages the word 'family' mean all the relatives—aunts, uncles, gr parents and so forth. But when I use the D word gezin it means just you, me and T

Princess Juliana smiled radiantly at her band. "I never thought of that," she mu "Perhaps it's because the Dutch are such voted family people. We are, you know."

"Look here," the prince announced denly. "There's a spot on this spoon!"

He rang for a footman, and when he peared his highness remarked, "Surely t are enough of you to keep the spoons ished." He was smiling, but from the ton his voice it was evident that he was not jok

"Yes, Your Royal Highness." Holding offending spoon as if it were a bomb abo explode, the footman hurried from the ro

The prince seemed in no mood for fur conversation. The silence lengthened as princess sipped her tea. Finally the nurse marked, "Have you quite recovered from recent automobile accident?"

"Oh, quite," he replied carelessly. "It nothing."

"Oh, Bernilo," chided his wife, "and spent so many weeks in the hospital! At the muscles in his left eye were almost c pletely paralyzed," she told the nurse. "Th where he hit the windshield. He also br several ribs and had a fractured skull an brain concussion. It's a wonder he survive all."

"A bad penny always shows up," laug the prince, once more in good humor.

"That's what he told his friends after plane he was in crashed into a lake in G many," Juliana remarked. "They though had sunk with the plane, but a couple of fis men happened to be near and fished him He has more lives than a cat."

"Well, Jula," announced the prince, sta ing up, "it's only eight o'clock. I think I'l out that new jumper before going to office."

MISS FEITH knew that before his marr the prince had worked for the great Ger combine, I. G. Farben, in Paris. Now he commuting every day to the Netherlands T ing Building in Amsterdam to study the c plicated problems of Dutch world trade. captain in the Dutch army, he was also tak courses from the General Staff.

"Do you think you should?" the prin asked anxiously. "I heard you coughing night."

"Nonsense, I feel fine," he retorted, kis her lightly on the forehead.

"My husband had pleurisy during his dent days in Germany," the princess infor Miss Feith after he had left. "He had e pieces of rib removed and for weeks co take no nourishment except soup throug straw. You'll discover we never have sou Soestdijk, for that reason!" she laugh "Bernilo can't tolerate the stuff now. At rate, he keeps going at such a terrific rate he is apt to come down with bronchitis at time of year, so his mother told me. Still, one can slow him down," she sighed.

She pushed back her chair, remarking to nurse, "I always like to give Trix her bath possible. This morning I have a meeting, I'll try to be there before her ten-o'clock fe ing, if possible."

Miss Feith finished her tea alone and w back upstairs where an elderly chamberm was sitting by the sleeping infant.

"Would you mind telling me?" the nu began. "I am not familiar with the houseke ing schedule here and I do not like to bot Princess Juliana with such details, but I sho Women love Pacific Contours...want Pacific Contours!

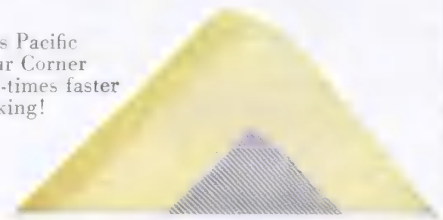
"they're best for comfort... for quality!"



Rated best—in national consumer survey! Housewives rated Pacific Contours highest of the five leading brands of sheets—on the all-important points of comfort and quality! And no wonder! Pacific created these—

- Perfection-fit Bottom sheets—Corners that slip on easily . . . tuck-unders tailored to stay put, never pull out!
- Roomiest Top sheets—No hemmed-down toes! Only the Pacific Contour Top* sheet has this expanding Kick-fold!
- More sizes, for more beds—All standard sizes from crib to king. Sanforized®.
- And now, new Miracale†—luxurious 210-thread percale mercerized—at less than the price of unmercerized percale.

There's only one genuine Contour—for Contour is the registered trademark for Pacific's mattress-fitting sheets. And all these Pacific "extras" are yours only in Pacific Contours!

*Pat. pend. †TM Pacific Mills

Famous Pacific Contour Corner gives 3-times faster bedmaking!

Pacific's heavenly colors! Rose Pink. Maize. Mint Green. Blue. Lilac

EVERYBODY'S CHANGING TO PACIFIC Contour® SHEETS

Write for booklet. Pacific Mills, Dept. D3, 1407 Broadway, New York 18. Pacific Contour Sheets. Crib-Fast® Sheets. Supersorb® Towels. Pacific Silver Cloth know about the kitchen and laundry forth."

chambermaid informed her that she I send a footman at once to summon the butler.

If an hour later a dignified old gentleman ck appeared at the nursery door.

am sorry to keep you waiting," he told urse. "I have been busy with the prince rincess, checking the daily menu."

aving the chambermaid by the baby's Miss Feith followed him down the long irs corridor.

ur staff director is called the Master of Royal Households," he told her, "with offices in The Hague. However, although he has the final responsibility for keeping the other royal households running smoothly, Princess Juliana runs her own home. She regards Soestdijk as a home, you see, not a palace. Only yesterday she called me in to discuss the color of new towels for her bathroom and asked if I had noticed in the paper a special sale of soap."

As the butler was talking, he pushed a small elevator button and they slowly descended to the ground floor. Though a dignified silence characterized the upper floors of the palace where chambermaids and footmen padded softly about on the thick carpeting, down below presented a pleasant scene of bustling activity. A white-hatted chef supervising several maids peeling vegetables glanced up curiously as the blue-uniformed nurse entered the big sunny kitchen.

"The staff is not large," the butler was telling her. "There are one, sometimes two chefs, two kitchenmaids and three chambermaids and the same number of footmen. When Princess Juliana was a child we had sixty-eight of these footmen who rotated between the royal residences, but there are fewer now. They speak English as well as Dutch and can wait on table and carry luggage and run errands and so forth. They also walk the prince's dogs."

"I see," said Miss Feith.

"They bring in the coffee trays at eleven in the morning and the tea trays at four o'clock and chill the wine properly and are very clever at removing spots from things," went on her informant.

The nurse stole a look to see if he were joking, but his face was perfectly serious.

"Now, then, here is the laundry. This is where you will send Princess Beatrix's things for washing and ironing unless they need mending first, in which case you will tell the chambermaid."

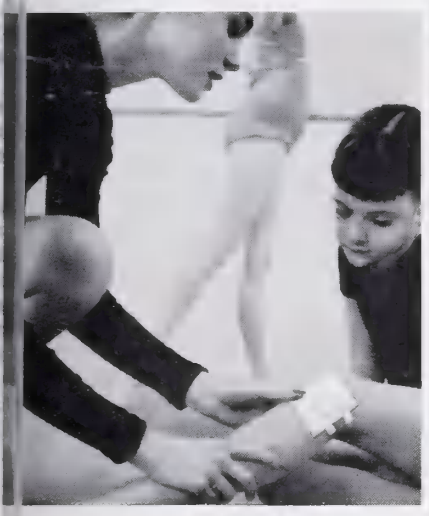
He held up a hand-loomed white damask dinner napkin large enough to cover a bridge table but so fine that Miss Feith believed it could easily be drawn through a woman's ring. A beautiful floral white-on-white pattern had been woven through it; and in one corner she could read the date: 1601.

"Can you see the patch?" asked the butler. When he held the napkin against the light, she could see a small square darker than the rest, but when he lowered it again the patch became invisible. "All the mending is done by hand. I understand it takes as long as three hours to darn a hole as big as your thumbnail.

"NATURALLY this linen requires the most exacting kind of care, since most of it is three hundred years old and quite irreplaceable. Princess Juliana was quite concerned about sending it to a commercial laundry. Most of the cloths are banquet size and far too large for our washing facilities here. However, the commercial laundry uses no chemicals or bleaches of any kind. The princess has been quite pleased with the results.

"See here." He held up a scrap of white linen which had been patched and repatched until it looked like a crossword puzzle. "This napkin was perhaps wiping the faces of princes of Orange at the time of Erasmus. Now it wipes the palace dogs' feet. The princess insists that nothing be ever thrown away."

In the next room a footman was using scraps of the same fine linen to polish a large silver tea service.



"I hope he is polishing the spoons, too," remarked the nurse impishly.

"Ah," remarked the head butler. "You heard about the trouble this morning, then. Most unfortunate. But it rarely happens that His Royal Highness finds fault with the silverware. If a piece of tableware will not take a perfect shine, it is replaced by another piece from the great silver room in The Hague. There are dozens and dozens of sets of sterling and gold plate there, some hundreds of years old, of every style and period. Quite a dazzling sight, I can tell you. It is all kept polished to perfection—and stacked in glass cases up to the ceiling of an immense steel vault. Some of the dinner sets are big enough to serve several hundred people."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 141

For larger cuts, burns, abrasions...

use the dressing your doctor uses...

sterile—sealed in individual envelopes

Johnson & Johnson

when you take this lipstick off at night—the color stays on!

Wake up with "alive" color glowing on your lips!

ENDS THAT PALE, WASHED-OUT, "MORNING" LOOK

Now—wash or cream your face before bed, and still get up next morning with wide-awake color on your lips. What's the secret? Coty "24"! When you take this new lipstick off, the color stays on. No more washed-out, "morning" look. No lipstick smear on pillows. No blotting—ever! For perfect lip make-up all through the day, just apply Coty "24" and let it set. It blots itself. Gives you brighter color and more lustrous sheen morning, noon and night!

NEW COTY "24"

KEEPS COLOR ON A FULL 24 HOURS

$1.25

Switch-Stick 85¢

Compounded and copyrighted by Coty, Inc., in U.S.A.

GORHAM "WILLOW" illustrates the new American Modern look in a sterling pattern that's a subtle blend of Far East and the West. 3 pieces shown, $16.50

GORHAM "THEME" is the trend-setting new American Modern pattern that derives cool beauty from the Scandinavian. 3 pieces shown, $16.50

Two brilliant new ways to look at American Modern in sterling: Gorham "Willow" and Gorham "Theme"

It takes two, yes, two new patterns to tell you the whole exciting story of this American Modern look. Because American Modern in furniture, in textiles, and now in sterling is no one rigidly stylized form. Rather, it's a timeless kind of good design that draws for inspiration on the whole wide world.

Lovely Gorham "Willow"* for example, borrows its fluid grace and sophisticated use of a simple nature form from the Far East; while Gorham "Theme"* owes much to Scandinavia for its calm reflective qualities and clean-swept look.

American Modern, you might say as you see it here, is modern grown up. There's a new kind of thinking in the way each piece is designed to do its own special job and also have more than one use. To give you an idea: the knife and fork are a new size and weight that are as elegantly correct for a formal dinner as for a casual family lunch. (The knife has Gorham's one-piece seamless handle that never rattles, resists dents.)

And there's the new spreader (or buffet knife) that teams up with the salad fork for buffet dining. But you must see these new Gorham* American Moderns to appreciate how easy they are to live with, how all the pieces are designed to complement each other and fit the different ways you like to serve.

Ask your dealer to show you new Gorham "Willow" and new Gorham "Theme." When you see them, you'll know it's Gorham Sterling, the finer sterling you want to own. Six-piece placesetting (consisting of teaspoon, new size place knife, f and spoon, hollow handle spreader and salad fo gives maximum use with minimum of pieces, c $32.50. 16 piece starter sets to serve four $88. Pri incl. Fed. Tax. Budget payment plans available.

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS SINCE 18

*TRADE MARKS © 1955 BY THE GORHAM CO., PROVIDENCE, R

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 139

...at happens to the silverware that's re- ...from Soestdijk?" asked the nurse.

...ry tiniest scratch is filed off by a spe- ...rained footman. He buffs and polishes ...ece until it looks brand-new. Then it is ...ck here again. Come, I will show you ... of the service rooms."

...he corridor leading from the kitchens ...me suddenly upon a bright red mail- ... You can post your letters here," the ... informed the nurse. "The postman col- ... several times a day. And here is the ... operator"—he nodded at a woman ...t a large switchboard—"and oh, yes, I ... like you to meet Captain Sesink."

...ocky man with blond hair and obsti- ...set shoulders came out of a side room. ... the door closed behind him the nurse ... quick impression of two shadowy figures ...g out a curtained window. She recalled ...ly the face in the basement window ... had given her such an eerie feeling the ...me she visited Soestdijk.

... Sesink's face looked grim as he left his ...nions, but lit up jovially when he saw ...o standing in the corridor.

..."ood day, Freule," he greeted the nurse ...ntinued down the hall.

... nurse's eyebrows shot up in surprise. ... did he know me?"

..."r. Sesink is head of security at Soestdijk," ...ned the butler. "Queen Wilhelmina ...o him personally to accompany the prince ...d rincess on their honeymoon. He is re- ...ible for their personal safety, and Prin- ...eatrix's as well. Naturally he must screen ... member of the palace staff. Would you ...o know what he said about you?"

..."hy, yes," replied the nurse, disconcerted ... idea of having been investigated.

..."e said 'Zij heeft ze niet achter de elleboog.' ...s got nothing under the elbows, that ..."

..."deed," said Miss Feith. "If you will ...e me now it is time for the baby's ..."

...ncess Juliana arrived at the nursery a ...before ten. "I'll be right back," she called ...the door. "One of the Red Cross Council ...bers who sat right next to me had the most frightful cold. I want to change my clothes and gargle my throat before coming near Trix."

The infant whose skin glowed with the clear pink-and-gold color of perfect health gurgled up at her nurse from her lark-crowned crib. Miss Feith adjusted her soft wool blanket, gently disengaged the busy fingers from the exquisite hand-drawn lace which edged the crib, and handed the baby a wooden rattle.

Soon the princess was back, wearing this time a brown tweed suit. She lifted her first-born from the crib and kissed her fat neck tenderly. "This was my crib as a child too," she told the nurse. "Mother always said the lark on top symbolized spring."

There was a knock on the door and the prince came in, still in his riding togs. He chucked his young daughter under the chin, strode a few times restlessly about the nursery and announced that he was off to Amsterdam.

"Very well, dear," said his wife affectionately. "Don't drive too fast."

She carried the baby into the bathroom where she had the nurse test the water in the tub with a thermometer to make sure it was precisely the right temperature. The baby dropped her rattle on the floor, but when the nurse went to hand it back, the princess—anxious like most new mothers to do everything just right—objected.

"Please, Miss Feith, clean it first."

The registered nurse smiled understandingly and thoroughly cleaned the toy with soapsuds.

When the princess had finished bathing and nursing her baby she remarked, "I shall not be home for luncheon, but of course I shall be back for the two-o'clock feeding. After that, I like to keep Trix by my desk in the study until teatime."

"Your Royal Highness," the nurse spoke up, "may I take the liberty of asking who takes my place in the nursery on my free days?"

"Why, I do," said the princess with some surprise. "Let's see, your free day is Thursday, isn't it? I believe I have a canal to open that day, and Friday there's a charity bazaar, and this weekend we have guests coming. Well, never mind, I'll look at my calendar and we'll arrange something."

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

DAUGHTER knitting: "If only men had the same size feet. Now before I get to the end of this foot I must decide which boy I like better!"

Many a woman finds it difficult to reconcile the fact that living with a romantic husband usually involves living with one who does the unexpected.

A wise woman says, "Experience has taught me that whenever anything is on the tip of my tongue I should keep it there."

It's the man who would freely shed his blood for a woman before marriage who practically needs a blood transfusion from her afterward if he even cuts his finger.

"I never worries," confesses the cleaning woman of our choice, "because long ago I found out it's impossible to worry at the right time; when you is worrying most that's when everything is fine, and when you 'laxes up that's when one of the children is out breaking a leg."

Thinking that boys and girls can be raised the same is like playing cards when you do not know a jack from a queen

Fathers always expect sons to pick up the tools exactly as they've never done.

A woman crying before a man is like a gambler betting on a horse: the animal must be known or all may be lost.

The reward for saving money is to be able to enjoy watching others spend it.

Boy, beginning his educational career, puts a direct question to his father: "Which would you like better, have me learn a lot or just enjoy school?"

"There's one thing wrong about her bringing up," commented a young girl to another. "She wasn't taught generosity."

When a woman has day help she shouldn't expect as much work done in eight hours as she herself does in sixteen.

One wife says, "I know beyond a doubt my husband loves me, even though on two mornings when I cried 'Help!' from the basement and kitchen he leisurely got out of bed and put on a dressing gown and slippers before coming to my rescue. At least he didn't stop to shave."

NOW! 3 wonderful features in

FRANCISCAN WARE

chip-resistant...oven-safe...color-fast

Many a smart woman cherishes a sentimental little vice—she hoards chipped, faded dishes. Don't clutter your table with has-beens—give them to your favorite charity—then buy this exciting new Franciscan Ware. It's smart on your table—safe in your oven—color-fast in your dishwasher because it is decorated by a patented process no other dinnerware has—Color-Seal.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

In the afternoon the princess kept the baby close by her desk while she did some paper work, and Miss Feith rested and wrote letters in her room. At three o'clock the princess rang her on the house phone.

"It is such a lovely afternoon," Juliana greeted her. "Not a bit of rain. Do you think we could give Trix an airing in her pram?"

"Of course," said the nurse, glancing at the winter skies, "if we bundle her up well."

The princess pushed the carriage along the garden paths by the barren flower beds as Miss Feith strolled alongside. Occasionally through the giant trees she thought she saw arboreal arcades and baroque statues and crumbling stone fountains. There was even an Egyptian obelisk.

"At one time Soestdijk had very formal French gardens, like Versailles, I imagine," the princess told her. "That was when Napoleon's brother Louis was King of Holland."

"Is the palace very old, then?" asked the nurse.

"Seventeenth century. It was built for Stadholder William III, who later became King of England and married a Stuart." The princess paused by an ancient wooden bench under a great oak facing the Amsterdam highway. "This is where Queen Anna Paulowna used to sit and wait for the king to come home. He had to make his official rounds on horseback and by the end of the day he was so anxious to return to Soestdijk and to Anna that he jumped his horse over every toll barrier on the way. She was a Russian, the daughter of a czar.

"It's strange to think of a Russian princess becoming a Dutch queen, isn't it?" mused Juliana. "But no stranger than all the black-eyed and black-haired Dutchmen you see on the streets today because of the Spaniards here at the time of the Inquisition, not to mention the French Huguenots and all the other persecuted peoples throughout the centuries. I couldn't begin to count all the blood strains in Trix—French, lots of German, probably Roman, even Russian. What rot when Hitler speaks of a hundred-per-cent-pure Aryan race! We are all brothers and sisters under the skin."

I really believe she means that, thought the nurse, somewhat startled. Before coming to Soestdijk, she had often heard members of the nobility complaining about the "commoners" entertained by the prince and princess. She began to understand why the princess was so passionately concerned about the upbringing of her child, wanting her to be raised as a normal person and not as some exalted being. The nobility might grumble (and there's no doubt that some of them are terrible snobs, thought Freule Feith) but it was small wonder that the rank and file of the highly individualistic Dutch people applauded their democratic princess.

After tea by the fire, Princess Juliana rang for the palace intendant, an elderly baron, to show Miss Feith the main section of Soestdijk Palace. "I will keep the baby with me. See, she is sleeping. Be sure and show Miss Feith the portraits of Anna Paulowna," she called out as they left.

The intendant led the nurse down the corridor past the prince's and princess' downstairs studies toward the central part of the C-shaped palace. "Soestdijk still belongs to Queen Wilhelmina," he informed the nurse. "Everything in the central section is kept just the way Her Majesty wants it. She has her own sleeping rooms and kitchen and brings her own cook and maid whenever she visits Soestdijk, unless she is specifically invited as a guest of the prince and princess. In that case, she takes her meals with them in the west wing."

"And what about the east wing of the palace—what's over there?" asked Miss Feith.

"At the moment it is closed up," the intendant remarked. "The space is not needed. Soestdijk has about sixty rooms. The prince and princess live in about fifteen of them. Here we are," he added, swinging open a huge paneled door. "You will find it cold in here. The queen considers central heat unhealthy."

NETHERLAND INFORMATION SERVICE

Juliana with first child, Princess Beatrix.

STEPPING from the modern, oil-heated, thick-carpeted west wing of Soestdijk into the middle section was like returning to the days of the early nineteenth century when a French king ruled the Low Countries. Icy drafts swept down innumerable chimneys through huge bare white stone fireplaces and along white marble floors, rippling the silken walls and the gilded tassels on spindly satin-covered chairs. In the room in which they were standing a row of shoulder-high alabaster vases on marble plinths lined a fifty-foot wall.

"This was Queen Emma's summer dining room," explained the intendant. "Sometimes the prince and princess use it for large receptions, especially in warm weather when we can open the French doors to the terrace and gardens. At a party here recently one of the guests made the mistake of leaning against a vase. It toppled to the floor with a treme crash and broke to smithereens. I saw Bernhard look up and my heart turned

"What did he say?" asked the nurse.

"He said, 'Heaven be thanked! That less of those!' The prince and princess care for this style of furnishings, whic Second Empire, and—shall we say, a b ornate for their tastes," he went on. "Als prince is extremely fond of central heat "And here is Queen Anna Paulowna said, indicating an oil portrait on the w the French painter David. "She was Pr Beatrix's great-great-grandmother. Her was a Russian czar."

MISS FEITH found herself gazing into th of a woman of surpassing beauty. R haired, with lustrous black eyes and sta white skin, the Russian princess looke witching in in a gown of flowing white ch caught up with pale blue satin ribbons her fashionably exposed young bosom.

"Queen Anna was the first Dutch que lend a woman's touch to Soestdijk," expl the intendant. "She brought priceless pie furniture with her from Russia, topp green malachite. She also brought fab jewels with h matched sets of monds and sapp and rubies and a of pearls as b grapes. Perhaps will see Princess ana wearing sometimes. But t the truth, she r does. She prefers tume jewelry, though not the which tries to in the real thing.

"After Q Anna," he contir "Juliana's gr mother, Queen Er used Soestdijk summer palace. it stood empty, l ing about as it d 1880, until the pr and princess m in last year. N rally, their apartm were done over modernized, but central section was left untouched.

"This is the Leuven Room," announce guide, and Miss Feith could see from its m baroque-framed paintings that it comme rated that famous Dutch victory. "And he something else of Anna Paulowna's." walked over to a round mahogany game t and, leaning over, released a catch underne A small square section of the top sprang o revealing a piece of petit point so exqu that the nurse caught her breath. "Q Anna made that," he announced proudly.

Miss Feith could just imagine the D queen in her lovely gown, her shiny black l piled high in Circe curls, bent over her w the picture of domestic tranquillity as stitched the petit point and waited for her k to come home.

"And here is the Waterloo Room," c mented the intendant, leading her rapidly "Makes you realize the Dutch were not alw so peace-loving, eh?"

He flung open the doors to a large rect gular reception hall which was flooded w light from fifteen-foot-high velvet-draped w dows. At the far end, a mural twenty feet l and almost as high portrayed a highly reali scene of dying men and speared horses on battlefield of Waterloo. Before a white mar fireplace were displayed two tattered brown-stained battle standards and a pair huge chased-silver swords. From the w opposite the windows several life-sized Prin of Orange gazed militantly down in blaz battle dress.

Sophia Feith recalled the leaning, batte homes of her birthplace, Groningen, still h boring in their ancient brick sides the musk balls of invaders. Since the time of Caesar, s thought, the Dutch had been resisting c quest, hurling back the greedy enemy like "Here—you put Drāno in the drains today! I'm due at the blood bank at four!"

Even on the day you go to the blood bank, remember: dangerous sewer germs lurk in every drain. And germs breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck—and keeps drains germ-free and free-running.

Make one day a week—Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Makes septic tanks work even better. Get Drāno at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like Drāno to keep drains free-running and sanitary!

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"And tell them I always use Windex Spray."

Who wants old-fashioned, window-cleaning drudgery when you can do the job in half the time with Windex Spray! Swish! Spray it on. Whish! Wipe it off. Windows, mirrors, all glass surfaces shine sparkling bright in a jiffy. They stay bright longer, too—no waxy film to attract dust later.

Windex Spray's so thrifty, too. Even more economical in the big 20-oz. refill size. Get Windex Spray today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also sold in Canada.

So fast, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

tides of the sea. And now once again mble of arms across Europe.
ere's Queen Anna Paulowna's husband, William II." He indicated a life-sized t of a slender and handsome young with fine-drawn features. "He used to butterflies," he volunteered. "He also defeat Napoleon at Waterloo. A musket ruck him and shattered his shoulder
We have a few pieces of his shoulder wrapped in a handkerchief, in the royal es at The Hague."
od heavens!" laughed the nurse.
was a very popular king," commented aron. "He's supposed to be buried in At least, his grave is there, but to this any people believe that he ended his life ussian monastery.
incess Juliana's study is right through oor at the end," remarked the intendant.
are back at the west wing."
e nurse thanked him for the tour and d upstairs, where she found the princess nursery with Trix. Juliana looked pale gitated.
e just heard that Hitler has taken over ia," she informed Miss Feith as she
ed. "He simply lined up all his soldiers anks and marched right in. It's frightful."
Austria gone, the nurse thought. Thousands oose-stepping Nazis with their blatant ikas and brutal faces and shouts for space marching into those radiantly ful mountain valleys. She felt a profound of shock.
at evening, when she hurried into the y for cocktails after Trix's six-o'clock ng ("Please be prompt! Bernhard likes thing to run on the minute," the princess warned her), Miss Feith found several s already congregated there. The prince dark pin-striped business suit was vigorexpounding some point to a group by replace. He broke off as the nurse entered introduced her to one of his aides-deand his wife, the palace treasurer Jonk-William Roell and his wife, and a Cabi-minister. Then he continued, addressing elf to the statesmen:
tell you this neutrality of the Western s is national suicide! Hitler will pick off country, one by one. After this, there be no containing him."
he palace treasurer, who appeared to be t the prince's own age, spoke up. "Look,
n see why Hitler wanted the Rhineland, Austria, too, for that matter. They are man countries anyway. Perhaps he will be satisfied."
Why do you suppose he is building up such rmy and air force?" retorted the prince.
wants all of Europe! According to him,
First Reich was the Roman Empire, the ond Reich was Charlemagne's Holy Ro-Empire of the West, now the Third ch—Hitler's Empire! I tell you, we must
, and arm fast, or we'll all be swallowed up."
If everyone builds up armies like Gerny's it's sure to lead to a general war," obed one of the others. "Perhaps Germany is t to object to the terms of the Treaty of sailles. We have the Hague Court here. We st arbitrate."
Hitler doesn't stop to arbitrate," replied prince. "He just grabs, and so far no one lifted a finger to stop him."

THE Cabinet minister regarded the earnest ng prince with a condescending smile. "For undred years Holland has been a little nd of peace, an asylum for the oppressed," said softly. "Thanks to the wise guidance of great queen we did not become entangled he last war. We shall not become involved this one, if there should be another war.
sonally, I very much doubt it."
The prince shook his head grimly. "A hand-of obsolete guns and planes. No tanks!
d help us if Hitler crosses the Maas."
All through dinner the talk of war contin-
d. Princess Juliana appeared pale and disught and tried to turn the talk to other annels. The stories of Hitler's torture ambers obviously quite sickened her. The es reminded Miss Feith of some Druid ics she had once seen in the dark forests ar the Rhine, relics of ancient human crificial rites. Looking at them, imagining the scenes of torture, she had felt the same shiver go down her spine.

Directly after dinner she excused herself to go back to the nursery.

The little princess was fast asleep, her thick fair lashes brushing her pink cheeks. A lamp threw the shadow of the gilded lark across her peaceful face.

All the strange and confused impressions of the day jumbled through the nurse's mind. Here, in the west wing, it was possible to imagine oneself a guest of a gracious and affectionate family which, although well to do, carefully avoided any show of wealth or influence which would set them apart from other people. She felt they wanted to be like other people.

But always, somehow, one was conscious of the obsequious footmen, the detectives in the basement, the priceless treasures from bygone years so carefully preserved, down to the last scrap of linen. And once through the great doors to the main section of the palace, all the glory of the past streamed in. All this seemed to build up a pressure until even the best-controlled nerves must occasionally feel it.

One cannot always be in a glass display box for posterity.

For a long time the nurse stood by the crib of the sleeping child. She thought of the first time she heard her father say, "That was our queen!" and the same note of pride and possessiveness in the intendant's voice as he remarked, "Queen Anna made that!"

Trix is the Netherlands, she thought, this tiny inert bundle of life, barely out of her mother's womb. Both slave and monarch to her people, her life will never really be her own. And meanwhile, she thought, she is mine to guard from all possible harm, every hour of the day and night. Sophia Feith felt as though the destiny of the five-hundred-year-old House of Orange lay in her hands.

(To be Continued)

When it's carpets you need twist, texture or tweed
you can use Lees Selector with ease.
Some folks say "Egad
you can even match plaid
in Those Heavenly Carpets by Lees."

...those heavenly carpets by LEES

Lees Carpets do so much toward making home life cozy and happy!
Their lovely, lush colors bid your friends a warm welcome.
Their sturdy, rich textures are so easy to clean.
Home means more with carpet on the floor.
Choose yours the modern way from the new Lees Selector.
Pay for them the modern way—
a-few-dimes-a-day will do it!
See Lees Carpets now.
Own them tomorrow!

See Lees Carpet Selector at your dealer. Match with samples of home draperies, wallpaper, slipcovers. No guesswork. Every lovely Lees color, texture, pattern within easy eye-range, at your fingertips!

JAMES LEES AND SONS COMPANY, BRIDGEPORT, PENNA. MAKERS OF QUALITY CARPETS AND RUGS

Curtains of Sun-Loving

HATHAWAY NYLON MARQUISETTE

Here's the nicest window-dressing your home could have—curtains of HATHAWAY NYLON Marquisette. These curtains change mere rooms into smart interiors. And you'll enjoy this curtain beauty for a long, long time because HATHAWAY NYLON is truly resistant to sunlight, and is so easy to keep fresh and lovely for years. It washes superbly without shrinking or stretching—with only touch-up pressing needed. HATHAWAY NYLON is the finest you can buy in nylon curtains—whether you prefer our luxurious Masterweave; sparkling Crystalweave; or diaphanous new Customweave. See them—at any fine curtain department near you.

HATHAWAY

NYLON • DACRON* • ORGANDY • DOTS

*Du Pont's polyester fiber

Ruffled

Tailored

Tiers

Free! ALL ABOUT CURTAINS

Hathaway Manufacturing Co.,
Dept. L35, New Bedford, Mass.

Send for this free booklet of decorating ideas. Shows how to use standard curtains to achieve beautiful effects.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

CITY.....STATE.....

EATING FOR BETTER HEALTH

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33

took a can of tomatoes and a can of Lima beans to an arithmetic class. Opening the cans, she dished out portions onto paper plates. The Limas cost 21 cents, she explained, provided three servings. "That's only seven cents a serving," she told the class. At ten cents a can, tomatoes provided three servings at three and one third cents each. "So you see," she concluded, "you can't afford not to have them." Especially, she reminded the children, when green vegetables—Limas included—help build up resistance to colds, tooth decay, earache, other infections. The vitamin C family, of which tomatoes are a member, build healthy gums, joints and blood vessels, she added.

Eighth-graders at Smith Mills sensed that something special was about to take place when Mrs. Vivian Wann entered the class carrying two small animal cages. Clustering around her, they squealed with delight when they saw four tiny rats. "Our new pets are going to teach us something about nutrition," she said. "Right now they're the same age, same weight—but we're going to feed them differently. Two will get whole-wheat bread and milk; the other two will have nothing but candy and soda pop. Then we'll see what happens." Taking turns, the children fed the rats each day, watching closely for signs of change. At the end of two weeks Mrs. Wann put the rats on a tiny scale—discovered that the two on bread and milk, now plump and lively, had increased in size and weight almost twice as much as the two fed soda pop and candy, that had become scrawny and nervous. "You can see for yourselves," she told the class, "how good food helps growth. It will do the same for you." All the children agreed they had learned something important that day.

Eddie Roberts could report one concrete result of the nutrition program—about herself. "Since I've been forcing myself to drink milk (which I've always hated) and sprinkling wheat germ on my cereal in the morning, I can go longer without getting tired." Several teachers, too, began to include in their own meals the basic foods—the cereals, vegetables, meats and fruits needed in a balanced diet. One popular teacher was amused when children began placing carrots and celery as well as apples on her desk.

In April, 1953, when the superintendent of schools announced that the program would be extended to all county schools in the fall, the county teachers' association put in a request for special formal training. Through the state board of health nutrition divisi Murray State College became interested in project and in August sent Dr. Tom Venabl staff member, to help Marjorie Murphy set three-week nutrition workshop. Doctor V able, anything but a professorial "type," his crew cut and large tweedy jacket, belie in the friendly, informal approach to teach "I really don't know many ways to get pe to eat breakfast," he confessed at the first sion. "Frankly, all I had this morning coffee. And I know it's going to be a hard getting me to change my habits."

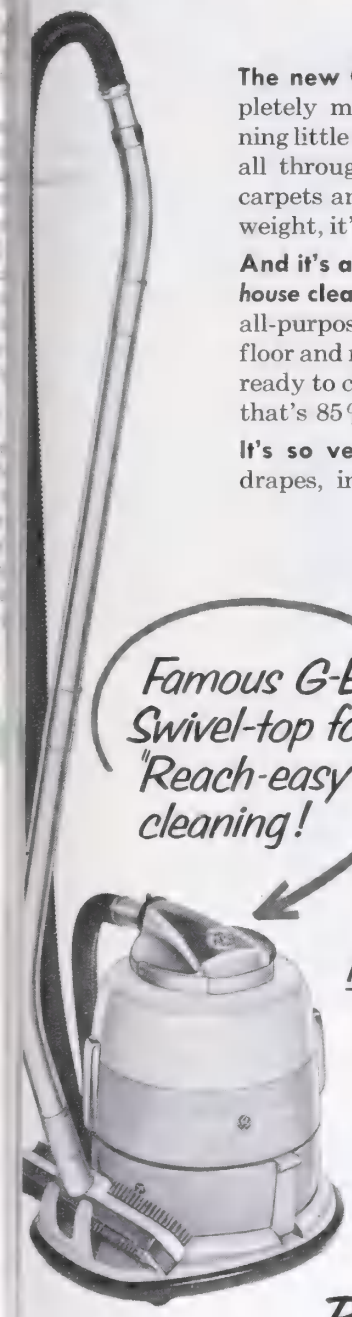
Under Doctor Venable's leadership teachers—working for three credit hours regular tuition rates—viewed nutrition fil studied scientific booklets prepared by state nutritionist, experimented by feed plants, rats and chicks, finally discussed w to help children develop good eating hab

In fall when classes resumed, several tea ers began eating lunch in the school cafete with their pupils. Mrs. Vincent, for wanted to make sure her second-graders came good "eater-uppers," as she called even to the cottage cheese and coleslaw t sometimes left untouched. Miss Geo Jones at Spottsville planned an aftern "tea" party with milk and oatmeal cook First the children washed their hands, t set the table, as they would in their own hor and sat down together. Several children as for chocolate milk—and this was Miss G gia's cue to explain that white milk was essary for building good bones and te healthy skin, nerves and muscles.

A sixth-grade teacher, aware that her pu were beginning to develop a new social se worked her nutrition lesson into a discuss of complexion care and weight proble "That way they didn't realize they were ting nutrition all over again," she said.

Last summer Doctor Venable returne Henderson for a second workshop, which cluded other phases of health as well as nu tion. By this time, many schools were ser milk or fruit juice at recess, holding b candy and ice cream until after lunch.

"There's so much left undone," E Roberts sometimes frets. "We do need a education, a co-ordinated classroom-lu room program, a syllabus for teaching heal Then, shaking her fist to punctuate her wo "If you have money, you can do a lot of thi In Henderson, we don't have money, but w not using that as an excuse. We've found can get a lot done if people are willing to p in and work together."



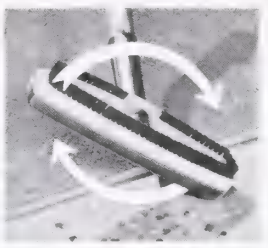
"She's feeling pretty bad, doc . . . hardly has strength to clean up for your visit."

Rolls from room to room with the greatest of ease!

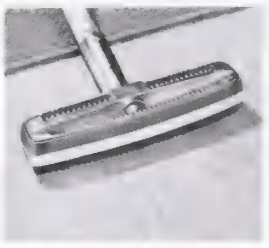
NEW Roll-around Cleaner... $69.95* COMPLETE!

The new G-E Roll-around Cleaner is completely mobile. Mounted on smooth-running little wheels, you can roll it effortlessly, all through the house—over rugs, floors, carpets and sills. And because it is light in weight, it's easy to take up and down stairs.

And it's always ready for action for whole-house cleaning! When you roll out this new all-purpose cleaner with its new 2-in-1 floor and rug cleaning unit attached, you're ready to clean rugs, carpets and floors (and that's 85% of the cleaning you do)!



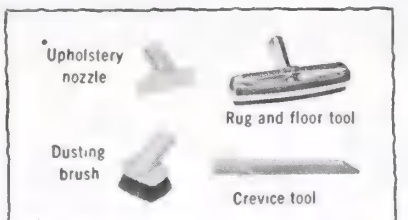
It's so versatile, too! Cleans upholstery, drapes, inside of drawers . . . there's an attachment for every purpose. And you get the famous G-E Swivel-top . . . strong, steady cleaning power . . . the largest "Throw-Away" Bag made . . . and a cleaner built to last because it's built by G.E.



It's easy to store—doesn't "eat up" valuable closet space. Its light, flexible hose drapes without bulging.

You'll love this "electric housekeeper"—"Reach-easy" cleaning on wheels. See your G-E dealer soon. General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

You never have to change attachments to clean rugs and floors!
G. E.'s exclusive 2-in-1 rug and floor cleaning unit does both!



IT CLEANS RUGS!

LIFT, IT TURNS ITSELF OVER!

IT CLEANS FLOORS!

New Roll-around CLEANER

It's the most beautiful cleaner in the world . . . color styled by Freda Diamond

Manufacturer's Fair Trade or suggested retail price. Complete with caddy and full set of attachments.*

1. Stores Easily—This new cleaner fits compactly into any corner or closet. Completely assembled—it's ready for action. Just roll it out . . .

2. Rolls Easily—glides from room to room, over scatter rugs and door sills. Cleaning wand acts as a convenient steering handle. And it . . .

3. Cleans Easily—Lift the cleaning unit from the built-in carrying cradle—clean rugs, carpets and floors without even changing attachments.

Progress Is Our Most Important Product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Shelf Magic for short-order cooks

JOURNAL readers have combined imagination and skill with foods right off the shelf to achieve these good, easy, budget-fitting main dishes.

STUART

California Casserole

Cook one 8-ounce package medium egg noodles in boiling salted water until just tender. Drain. Sauté ¾ cup chopped onion and ¾ cup chopped green pepper in ¼ cup shortening or salad oil in a large skillet. Add 1 pound ground beef and sauté until well browned. Add one 1-pound can cream-style corn, one 8-ounce can tomato sauce, one 10½-ounce can tomato soup, one 8-ounce can large pitted ripe olives, sliced, and one 4-ounce can pimientos, diced, to the meat mixture. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon chili powder, ⅛ teaspoon dry mustard and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Layer cooked noodles and meat sauce in a 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle top with 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 45 minutes. 8 servings.

Elaine Healey

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA

Tuna Chowder

Add 3 tablespoons chopped onion, 1½ cups cubed raw potatoes and ½ teaspoon salt to 1½ cups boiling water. Cook until potatoes are tender, about 15 minutes. Add 1 can condensed cream-of-mushroom soup, 1 cup milk, one 12-ounce can whole-kernel corn, 2 tablespoons butter or margarine or bacon drippings, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, and one 7-ounce can tuna, drained and flaked. Add salt to taste. Heat through. When ready to serve, add 4 slices cooked bacon, crumbled. 4 servings.

Betty Niles Gray

WESTFIELD, NEW JERSEY

Chili Special

Combine one 15½-ounce can chili con carne, one 1-pound can hominy, drained, ½ cup canned tomato sauce and 1 cup diced canned luncheon meat, or any cooked meat. Sauté ½ cup chopped onion in 1 tablespoon shortening or salad oil until tender, and add to meat mixture. Season with ¼ teaspoon salt and mix well. Bake, covered, in a 1½-quart greased casserole in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 30 minutes. 4–6 servings.

Marion M. Combs

MILWAUKIE, OREGON

Shrimp Fondue

Brown 3 cups bread cubes in 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a skillet. Thoroughly rinse and coarsely chop two 4½-ounce cans cleaned shrimp. Layer the toasted bread cubes and the chopped shrimp in a 1½-quart greased casserole with 1 cup grated Cheddar cheese. Beat well 3 eggs with ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 3 dashes Tabasco and ¾ teaspoon finely grated onion. Blend in 1½ cups scalded milk and pour over the shrimp and bread. Set casserole in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 1 hour. 4 servings.

Marjorie W Vansant

VALDOSTA, GEORGIA

Onion Pie

Toss 1 cup salted cracker crumbs with ¼ cup melted butter or margarine. Press against bottom and sides of a 10″ pie plate. Cook 1 quart thinly sliced onions over low heat in ¼ cup melted butter or margarine until tender. Spread over bottom of crumb crust. Slowly add 1½ cups milk to 4 slightly beaten eggs. Add 1½ teaspoons salt and a dash of pepper, and pour over onions. Sprinkle ½ cup grated sharp Cheddar cheese over top. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 25 minutes or until set. 4–6 servings.

Birge Ballaney
OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA

Baked Eggs and Asparagus

Cook, drain and arrange 1 package frozen asparagus or 1 can asparagus, drained, in bottom of shallow baking dish. Peel and slice 4 hard-cooked eggs and lay over the top. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and Tabasco sauce. Add ½ cup light cream—or 6 tablespoons cream and 2 tablespoons sherry, if you like—to 1 can condensed cream-of-chicken soup. Pour over eggs and asparagus. Sprinkle with ½ cup crushed cheese crackers. Dot with butter or margarine. Bake 20–25 minutes, until bubbly, in a moderate oven, 350° F. Nice for a supper with sliced canned tongue or ham and a green salad. 4 servings.

Helen G. Irwin
DES MOINES, IOWA

Baked Corned Beef and Sauerkraut

Place one 1-pound-4-ounce can sauerkraut in bottom of 11″ x 7″ x 1½″ baking dish. Combine two 1-pound cans corned-beef hash, 1½ cups tomato juice, ⅓ cup finely chopped onion, 1 tablespoon prepared horse-radish. Spread mixture over sauerkraut. Cut 2 strips bacon into ½″ lengths and arrange over top of hash. Bake in a very hot oven, 450° F., for 30 minutes. Serves 8.

Margaret Levy
WOODSIDE, NEW YORK

Party Squash

Thaw 2 packages frozen cooked squash in a greased casserole for an hour or so. When thawed, stir in 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine, ¼ cup pecans, coarsely cut, ⅓ cup honey, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg. Sprinkle the top with ¼ cup more chopped pecans and dot with 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 20 to 30 minutes. 6 servings.

Jeanne Edwards Rattray
EAST HAMPTON, NEW YORK

Baked Chicken Pork Chops

Season 4 loin pork chops with salt and pepper. Brown on both sides in hot skillet. Arrange chops in shallow baking dish and pour over them one 10½-ounce can chicken soup with rice. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., about 45 minutes until chops are tender. Turn chops once during baking and baste occasionally. 4 servings.

Molly Storck
NEW YORK, NEW YORK

Crab Rice Quickie

Sauté until tender ¾ cup finely chopped onion in 4 tablespoons butter or margarine. Then add 1 clove garlic, crushed, one 3-ounce can chopped mushrooms, ⅛ teaspoon thyme, ⅛ teaspoon basil, ½ bay leaf, crushed, ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Into this mixture blend one 1-pound-3-ounce can tomatoes, ½ pound grated Cheddar cheese, one 6½-ounce can crab meat and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Cover and simmer over low heat until the flavors are blended and the cheese melted, about 10 to 15 minutes. Combine with 4 cups hot cooked seasoned rice. Heat if necessary. 6 servings.

Virginia L. Jansen
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

GOURMET TURNS WITH A CAN OPENER

For chicken curry in a hurry, open two 14-ounce cans chicken fricassee. Season to taste with curry powder, grated onion and lemon juice. Heat and serve with rice and chutney.

News for the hors-d'oeuvre tray. Spread packaged Melba rounds with mustard butter. Top with drained canned smoked oysters. Dress with a little bottled cocktail sauce and minced parsley.

Sunday-breakfast omelet repertoire becoming static? Thin canned smoked turkey pâté with cream to a sauce consistency. Add a spoonful of minced chives and some canned chopped mushrooms. Heat and spoon over the omelet before folding.

Swedish meat balls have added flavor excitement when canned onion soup is used in place of consommé or water in the making.

A lift for the fruit compote! Chop fine some canned candied orange peel. Add to a combination of 3 canned fruits—pears, pineapple and apricots, perhaps. Heat to bring out flavor. Chill.

Wave a wand over a canned ham by cutting it into ¼″ slices, arranging in a baking pan and barely covering it with cream to which a little maple sirup and grated orange rind have been added. Bake. The cream thickens to a lovely sauce.

Cheese soufflé, the aristocrat of the light but elegant luncheon, will win more ribbons if you add a small can of deviled ham and 1 teaspoon prepared mustard to the base before folding in the beaten egg yolks and whites.

Dessert charmer: Add ½ cup currant jelly to 1 cup puréed thawed frozen strawberries or raspberries. Ladle over drained canned grapefruit sections chilled to the icy point.

Ideal accompaniment for baked ham or roast beef: Drain two 15½-ounce cans small whole onions and two 6-ounce cans whole mushroom crowns. Combine with an 8-ounce jar ready-to-use cheese sauce. Thin with a little milk. Bake under a blanket of buttered crumbs in a moderate oven, 350° F., until hot and bubbly.

MEMORIES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 64

by Mummum to join her and Uncle Sidney in Montreal to go on the stage. I had never known I was to go on the stage. I had thought I was going to be a great pianist, with fine dreams of Vienna and Leschetizky. But suddenly there was no money, no Arch Street Theatre, no house and I must earn my living. No one talked about it; no one talked about it at all, ever.

I was given a scene to learn in "The Rivals." It was a small scene in the first act, with Aunt Gladys, who was Lydia Languish, and it could be removed easily from the play the next night if I proved myself inadequate.

On the first night I had on more make-up than I have ever used in all the years since. Mummum looked at me and said, "What have you got on your face?"

I said, "Make-up."

She said, "Go and wash it all off."

So I did. I don't know where I had got the idea you had to put on a lot of make-up. Nobody had ever told me anything about it, and I had never seen anyone make up.

On the stage that first night before an audience I was naturally terrified. But when Aunt Gladys (who had never played the scene before) and I sat facing each other on a little sofa, and I saw that unforgettable glazed look on her face—a look only to be found on an actress' face when she hasn't the faintest idea of what her lines are—I found myself asking myself questions and answering them briskly in my best elementary-school manner. How absurd I must have been, and how awfully unlike "a young lady of fashion" by Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

But there I was, on the stage with Mu and Uncle Sidney, and so began an a ticeship which was to last for more tha a century. I don't remember ever bein anything by anyone. Once when I d Mummum something about acting, she her eyebrows and said, "You should that without being told." It always see be taken for granted that I would know to do without being told. Of course I Luckily the parts given to me were tin didn't ruin anything.

After a few weeks in Montreal, Mur left for New York, turning me over uncle. Mrs. Rankin, Gladys's mother, a which meant different plays with no pa me. So, often, if there was a piano in t chestra pit, I played it between the ac enjoyed myself a lot.

And one unforgettable Saturday ni Saint John, New Brunswick, we stayed theater in the dark until after midnight. as it was Sunday, we strolled out and train for other parts. All our luggage hac left in the hotel and my trunk containi my worldly possessions—not many rea didn't see for years. I remember Aunt C leaving the theater that night looking proud and grand, also rather fat. She h five dresses.

After that we played a week in Halifa I remember it now, I received no sala suppose my uncle thought it would re pense me if my meager hotel bills were Being new to this kind of life, I traveled ar in a continual state of excitement. After fax we played Bar Harbor for one ni wasn't in the play, so between the acts I down in the orchestra and played the p Bar Harbor was full of people from Phi phia, and a lot of the girls I knew there up and talked to me.

After that tour closed I joined Mumm who had gone to live with my uncle, Drew, at the Sherman Square Hotel in York City.

There is a terribly trite word but I know any other to use to express happened then; suddenly I found mys pawn—a very unimportant thing that moved around a lot. I did nothing at al cause of my own planning or thinking. what I was told. Like the pawn, I was pi up from that Canadian tour, moved by with Uncle Sidney and Aunt Gladys dropped at the Sherman Square Hotel in York, and told to ask for my Uncle Ja apartment. There I went and found Mumm

She had a room and I was given a so room, the first Friar's Cell. It was a little room, the sort of room I had in my own apartment where Jack used to come and s At the Sherman Square Hotel I was in Friar's Cell, next to Mummum.

Of course I was a little bit bewildered. M mum had been the pivot of the entire fa and now something had happened and al values were different. There was no expl tion, and it would never have occurred to to ask for one.

Even today I cannot tell why all this c about. It is a characteristic of my family we never talked intimately to each other ab the important things—never. Today I th that this is rather tragic.

But at fifteen I did what I was told to do quite happily. The new surroundings, changes put me in a state of mind that was quite a daze—a sort of suspended animat Mummum was still there, very reticen person of absolutely enormous dignity silences. She had a comfortable room and was Mrs. John Drew, Uncle Jack's moth But it was Uncle Jack's apartment, not house. He was then the prosperous membe the family, a leading man at Daly's.

Uncle Jack was reticent too—not so m as his mother except about personal thin which he never discussed at all. How can put into words impressions in those early d of someone known so well? I didn't, a child, sit back and say, "My, he is dist guished!" Of course he was.

The Sherman Square Hotel was an apa ment hotel, just a good, well-built hotel. Ev morning I used to leave it and go trudg from agency to agency, looking for a job.

RIVER BRAND
the popular low cost regular grain rice.

CAROLINA BRAND
the King Size extra long grain rice.

SO EASY TO MAKE—
SO WONDERFUL TO TASTE!

Now! River Brand and Carolina Brand Rice give you the delicious, natural flavor of white rice just as nature intended. And in only 14 minutes you have the snowiest, fluffiest rice you've ever served. Easy on your budget, too—River Brand and Carolina Brand give you up to 3 times as much rice per package as artificially processed brands. Yes, the best rice costs less—goes further!

14 MINUTES FROM START TO FINISH!
Amazing new 14-minute recipe on every package

RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.
New York, N. Y. · Houston, Texas
Memphis, Tenn. · El Campo, Texas
Eunice, La. · Jonesboro, Ark.
© 1955 RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC

ways the answers were the same, "Nothoday!"—sometimes with a pleasant smile, etimes with a frown. Apparently belongo a well-known theater family is a handirather than a help. I have never known this is, but all my children have found it nd I certainly did.

his was during my fifteenth year. Although very grown-up, I was still terribly young, g by the standards of any era. Perhaps convent was partly responsible for this, more of it was due to the fact that in our ly children were not only supposed to be and not heard but to be practically idiotic. ay after day I kept on going to the agenand various offices and came home withthe faintest sign of an engagement or even pe of one. I never did get an engagement his way, although I went out early in the ning and spent the entire day sitting nd, waiting for nothing.

do not think I shall ever forget the offices Irs. Fernandez, and Simmons and Brown; ent so many hours waiting in them! No llest chance was offered me—not even a k engagement.

hus passed the time from September to uary, a time of continual searching and of t discouragement. The peculiar rumble of old cable cars seemed to sing of my daily ch for nothing, as time and again I rened home without a job and burning up embarrassment over the thought of living other people. I was not terrible to look at n, and certainly had youth in my favor and me, and yet I remained at large.

ichard Harding Davis and a group of his nds used to come to see Uncle Jack. Dana son was one of them and John Fox and by Russell and James Barnes and Arthur , who became Lord Lee and gave quers to be the residence of the British me Minister. (Long afterward all of them e ushers at Dick Davis's wedding to Cecil rk at which I was the only bridesmaid.)

SED to beg Dick Davis to talk about Lonbecause I had never gotten London out of system since I was six years old. I had ays wanted to go back.

Dick Davis thought I ought to have some ersion and meet people of my own age. It s Dick who persuaded Uncle Jack to let me to Dana Gibson's wedding to Irene Langne. Dick's sister, Nora, and I traveled to hmond in a drawing room. It was an enorus wedding at the Jefferson Hotel in Richnd. This was where I first knew Nancy nghorne. I thought then that she was a most ractive and brilliant girl, and I was not prised when, after she married Waldorf tor, she went on to the career that is history.

This was Uncle Jack's third year under the nagement of Charles Frohman, who had gun to institute the star system in the Amern theater with Uncle Jack his first star. aude Adams, then Uncle Jack's leading lady, came Mr. Frohman's second star three years er in "The Little Minister."

Uncle Jack finally arranged with Mr. Frohan that I should have some understudying ores and a little tray carrying in his company. What I did then and during all my three ars with Uncle Jack was done in order to t. I had not stopped hurting about not being pianist. I went on the stage because I did not ow how to do anything but act—and I did t know how to do that. I had not become an bitious actress. In fact I never have.

While I was carrying trays in Uncle Jack's ay, I went to a Yale prom with Cecil Clark's other, Bruce, and a girl named Ethel Gardr from Boston. I bought a ready-made black tin skirt and made my black chiffon waist yself. Fortunately I had been taught to sew the convent—not very well but needs must. ruce's mother, a perfectly delightful person, me on from Chicago to chaperon us.

Of course this was in the days when no ung girl ever went anywhere without an der woman as chaperon. There was no such ing as boys and girls going out together on dates"—in fact the word had not yet been vented. The only places where I saw young en were in my friends' houses, at dinners or other parties.

My going on such excursions as to the Yale rom did not disrupt the play, but there was always a mild protest from Uncle Jack before he gave me permission.

At the Lyceum Theatre where Sothern was playing Rudolf Rassendyll in "The Prisoner of Zenda" they had Thursday matinees, and as Uncle Jack played matinees on Wednesday, I could go almost every week to see Sothern. I had a crush on him; I bought his picture and dreamed about Rudolf Rassendyll just as romantically as any schoolgirl. I think that Dick Davis thought I ought to meet Sothern. At any rate, he arranged a lunch at Delmonico's at which I sat next to what I thought was a middle-aged gentleman—he was probably between thirty and thirty-five—who was very nice to me. He turned out to be Mr. Sothern, but he was not Rudolf Rassendyll, and I recovered from my crush.

When my cousin, Louise Drew, went abroad to go to school at Versailles, Aunt Dodo, her mother, went to live in Paris to be near her. They took Mummum with them and I left the Sherman Square Hotel and went to live in Mrs. Wilson's boardinghouse at 36th Street. It was one of a row of brownstone houses. On top of the newel post in the front hall was the statue of a Nubian slave holding up a shaded gas lamp that was always turned down very low when we came in from the theater at night.

I had a hall bedroom and three meals a day for $9 a week, so that even on the $30 a week that I was earning, I could pay for my clothes and hope to save against the lean and hungry summer and toward the realization of my dream of going back to London.

Maude Adams was living at Mrs. Wilson's with her mother and that is how Uncle Jack heard about it and knew it would be a nice place for me to stay. At that time I did not know Maude at all and we saw very little of her at the boardinghouse. Mrs. Wilson was a dressmaker and made the loveliest of clothes. She always made Maude's dresses, and later she was to make all my costumes for "Captain

All The Minerals, All The Vitamins, All The Food Energy

OF THE "HIGH-PRICE" SPREAD ARE IN TODAY'S

Blue Bonnet Margarine!

PROOF

Compared to the "High-Price" Spread, Blue Bonnet gives you:

ALL THE MILK MINERALS—
ALL THE CALCIUM
ALL THE PHOSPHORUS

Four times more
VITAMIN D

More dependable
VITAMIN A
each pound, the year round

VITAMIN E

AND ALL THE VALUABLE FOOD ENERGY

MELTING ON HOT FOODS, or spread cold, BLUE BONNET Margarine melts on your tongue instantly, with a burst of the sunny-sweet flavor you love.

SO GOOD FOR YOUR FAMILY!

ALL THE NOURISHMENT you can give them in a spread for bread is in BLUE BONNET Margarine. In fact, you give them a more uniform source of vitamins in BLUE BONNET than in the "high-price" spread—and just as much of the milk minerals. And you will find that BLUE BONNET spreads so smoothly on your bread, tastes so sunny-sweet, it delights you—every pound.

Blue Bonnet FOR FLAVOR! NUTRITION! ECONOMY!

Jinks." There was no place in her house in which to receive a man caller or, for that matter, a caller of any kind, but sometimes she would let us use the front parlor where she did her fittings.

In those days no actor thought of playing a whole season in New York. It was the custom to play there for three months or so and for the rest of the season in other cities. Uncle Jack, like Irving, Terry, Bernhardt and Duse when they came to this country, followed this custom and so presently "The Bauble Shop," in which I had been carrying trays, was about to go on tour.

Elsie de Wolfe, who had been playing the part of Lady Kate Fennell, did not want to leave New York and, although I was barely sixteen and the author, Henry Arthur Jones, had described Lady Kate Fennell in the program as "a woman of the world, of 45," some maniac suggested that I be given a trial in the part. So one Wednesday afternoon, wearing Miss de Wolfe's beautiful Paquin clothes and feeling very terrified and perhaps a little ridiculous, I played the part. When they found that I didn't actually fall on my face they let me have the part when they went on tour.

THUS it was that I traveled with my uncle, receiving a very small salary, of course, and living in the cheapest of hotels and boarding-houses. Uncle Jack was very kind to me and I occasionally met some of his friends and they would often invite me out. As I remember, I enjoyed myself very much, although I never had any clothes to wear which I really liked.

In Chicago I remember that one notice referred to me as "an opalescent dream named Ethel Barrymore that came on and played Lady Kate." I hadn't the faintest idea what that word meant and had to ask Uncle Jack. I was delighted to find it meant something pleasant.

When we were in Chicago Mrs. Arthur Caton (later Mrs. Marshall Field) was giving a ball. Uncle Jack thought I was too young to go to a grown-up party, but Mrs. Caton and her niece and nephew, Katharine and Spencer Eddy, persuaded him to let me go. That was a sort of Chicago debut for me.

I was to have many friends there: Medill McCormick and his wife, Ruth Hanna; Florence and Minna Fields, whose mother married Thomas Nelson Page; Ru Carpenter; Nancy Coleman; and many, many others. Some of the earliest of those friendships were with the writers and artists like Peter Dunne, George Ade, John McCutcheon and others who were just beginning—or hadn't yet begun—to make their mark.

That first tour was the beginning of a lifetime of playing all the large cities in America and most of the little ones. In every one of them I found friends.

Audiences were—and are—always good in one-night towns where they are composed so largely of the people who really want to see the play and have only this one chance to see it. One of these audiences in Little Rock, Arkansas, was the best I ever played to. I remember it that way because they were so eager to be pleased. When an audience is like that, they help you so; you know they are with you and you don't have that extra drain on your energy to keep them from coughing or moving about in their seats. One-night stands are the best audiences in America. I never minded the physical effort of traveling, never even thought about it.

During these years I saw nothing of my father and almost nothing of Lionel and Jack. Jack was in school and Lionel was already on the stage. He played briefly with Mummum and Uncle Googan in "The Rivals" and then with McKee Rankin, Aunt Gladys's fath His part in Mr. Rankin's production "Magda" was the same one that Jack f played when, a little later, he also went on stage in Mr. Rankin's company.

It was the part of a young officer and Jac uniform inspired Amy Leslie, the drama cr of the Chicago News, to write: "Jack Ba more looked as if he had been dressed up a forgotten."

Jack always loved to tell this story.

It was during my first tour with Uncle J that I got to know Maude Adams a little. C night in Springfield, Massachusetts, we supper of crackers and milk together after theater, and sat and talked. I thought this e ning was wonderful. I remember how D Davis adored her, as all her friends did, a how later when we were playing New Hav we went to a tea given by an undergraduate his rooms and she delighted all the boys singing for them. For two or three years was perfectly charming and gay, and then began to be the original "I want to be alo woman. On long journeys all the way acr the country, she would never come out of berth, and it was very rarely that anybody s her off the stage. I never knew whether t was Mr. Frohman's idea or her own. I h always had a great feeling for her, althou I never knew her any better. She was a r spirit, and I am glad I touched her even ligh

As the earth has lasted at least a thousand million years, in a condition not very unlike the present, it will probably continue habitable for a future period of at least the same order of magnitude, possibly for very much longer. An acceptance of such a future is bound to affect human thought. It will be realized that the things which seem to us most stable, such as human nature and the facts of geography, are really not only changeable, but certain to change. On the other hand, it will be realized that remarkably little change can occur within a lifetime. —J. B. S. HALDANE: Possible Worlds (Harper and Brothers)

All the time I on tour with Un Jack I lived in cheapest boardi house rooms I co find, and I found th for myself. In ev theater a notice wo be posted on the board a day or t before we were move on to the n town listing the av able accommodati there, starting with most expensive h and going on do to the cheapest boa inghouses, which w the ones that int ested me.

Nobody paid a attention to me. C elders were helping those Barrymore children to the extent seeing that we ate. Except for that I didn't anything from Uncle Googan and when went on tour with Uncle Jack I had salary—though small—and was supposed live on it, and I did, without any adv or supervision from anybody. Even th the only clothes I had were my winter a summer convent uniforms. I bought a piece French-blue velvet and made a sort of col of it which I wore on my black serge sch dresses so they wouldn't look so uniformly was wearing it when I had my picture tak with Maude Adams in Springfield, Massach setts.

ONCE when we were in Boston I stayed the Langham Hotel where, instead of a h bedroom, I had a sitting room, bedroom a bath and three meals a day, all for $15 a wee This was when I was playing in "Rosemar and was finished after the second act so tha could leave at ten o'clock. I always walk home from the theater, and part of the way the hotel led through a very brightly light district where everybody was cheerful a friendly. Apparently after the first few nig they got to know my face, and they'd s "Hello, dearie, how are you tonight?"

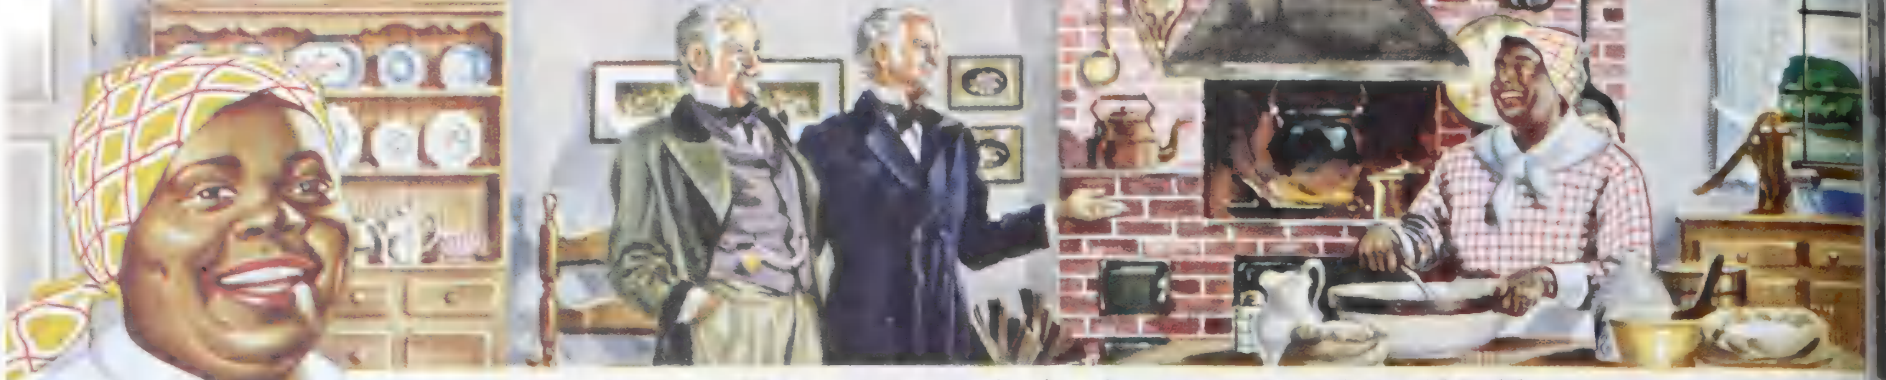
I thought they were all perfectly charmin It was years later I discovered I had be walking through the red-light district, bu have never changed my mind about h friendly and nice they were.

After three years with Uncle Jack I had r first good part in "Rosemary," in which Mau Adams was the leading lady. There was a sm maid's part that was very effective and this f to me. The public was kind and the pape were even kinder, and I felt myself beginning at last!

CONTINUED ON PAGE 153

How long since you've tasted real cheese?

Real cheese is exciting! It has a tangy quality no process cheese can ever have. Miss Wisconsin is the kind of real cheese that makes all others taste pale by comparison. It is naturally aged cheddar is made in the Wisconsin dairy country by men who know you can't rush a good thing . . . who are willing to wait a full year for Sharp Aged Miss Wisconsin to develop its wonderful flavor. Truly, it's fabulous cheese!



ARMOUR STAR ®

Miss Wisconsin Cheddar comes in generous wedges—Sharp Aged, Medium Aged or Mild. It 's wonderful in all kinds of ways. For free recipes write: Marie Gifford, Dept. 212, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Miss Wisconsin NATURAL AGED Cheddar Cheese

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BRICK, PROVOLONE, ROMANO AND BLUE

When guests of Colonel Higbee asked Aunt Jemima how she made pancakes so light and full of flavor, she just smiled and answered—"That's my own secret. You just eat 'em." Always she kept that secret.

Aunt Jemima Legend

Often through Lent you'll want these easy main dishes...

with the matchless 4-flour flavor of Aunt Jemima pancakes

FOR THE FINEST BUCKWHEATS get Aunt Jemima in the YELLOW box

AUNT JEMIMA PANCAKE TOP FOR CREAMED FISH

Add flaked fish, cooked peas, bits of pimento and green pepper to piping hot, well-seasoned white sauce. Heat thoroughly and pour into individual casseroles. Serve each topped with freshly baked Aunt Jemima Deluxe pancakes (recipe on package) of graduated size. These can be kept hot in oven for a short while.

CHEESE FOLDOVERS

Place a slice of processed cheese on each hot Aunt Jemima Pancake. Fold the pancakes over envelope style. Top each serving of two pancakes with syrup.

Don McNeill's Breakfast Club is cheery; ABC Radio, weekdays.

Wheat, corn, rye and rice flours are blended in the treasured Aunt Jemima recipe... to give you the tenderest, best-tasting pancakes you ever had!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 150

ut the great dream of my life was still to go ondon. I had always loved the thought of d had never been able to get it out of my d. I saw no hopes for many years of get- there but this did not weaken my deter- ation, someday, in some way, to get to don.

was very romantic at this time and had inee crushes. My crush was William Gil- , who was playing in "Secret Service." tunately for my young heart, he had mati- on the days we didn't, and thus I was able o every Thursday and rapturously admire . I had his photograph—which I had ght—and hoped that someday I would e the thrill of meeting him, feeling just as antic about him as I had felt long before ut Rudolf Rassendyll.

fter the New York run of "Rosemary," I t on tour with Uncle Jack. We had reached Louis and one night he called me to his sing room and said:

I have just had a most extraordinary tele- n from C. F. about you."

e handed it to me and I read:

ULD ETHEL LIKE TO GO TO LONDON WITH GILLETTE IN SECRET SERVICE? CHARLES OHMAN.

hy I didn't drop dead, I do not know. This t news was almost too much for me. My le was bewildered at my excitement and ked at me curiously.

Do you really want to go?" he asked.

said, "More than anything in the world."

ncle Jack said, "Very well, you can go if want to so much. We'll find someone to ace you."

s soon as they did, I on the train to New k and soon after that, a small bag that car- everything I owned, I given my ticket and to go to the boat for journey to wonderful ndon with wonderful ette.

The great man is he who does not lose his child's heart.
—MENCIUS

y father, whom I had not seen for several rs, heard about my leaving and promised ome down to the dock to see me off. As he a great friend of Gillette, he said he would oduce me to him, but knowing his genius irresponsibility, I wasn't too disappointed n he didn't turn up.

s the boat drew away from the pier, I was ding on the deck with Harry Woodruff, a ng actor in the company whom I just w, when toward us walked the tall figure was the dream of my life at the moment. whispered to Harry, "I don't know him."

Oh," he said, "I'll introduce you."

illette bowed over my hand and I thought, h, no! This isn't what I meant at all!"

nd it wasn't.

etting off the train at Waterloo Station I mediately felt I'd come home. The wooden ements, wet with that lovely rain, smelled e heaven. I had no idea I'd been missing it much.

his was the summer of Queen Victoria's mond Jubilee, celebrating the sixtieth an- ersary of her coronation. I saw the parade m someone's house in Piccadilly. It was a ific spectacle, more magnificent, I think, n any of the coronation parades that fol- ed it. I shall never forget the Indian princes, pping from chin to waist with fabulous els, unbelievable strings of pearls, dia- nds and rubies.

FOUND lodgings in Chapel Street. I was ch too shy to present any of the letters en me to the Sidney Webbs and Bernard aw and many other Fabians, all of whom I t quite painlessly later on, but some of the ople to whom Dick Davis had written looked up and I began at once to go about with m and have good times.

As all the cast, except for me, had been in play in New York, there were only a few earsals before we opened. My part in ecret Service" was very small; I had been gaged primarily as an understudy. In those ys understudying was not taken seriously, r is it taken seriously today; it is more or less of a theory in the American theater that leading actors and actresses never get ill. And in reality we don't often miss a performance; it is a rare thing when a theater has to be closed because of illness.

But one night after the curtain had gone up and I was sitting on the stage in my nurse's costume, Odette Tyler, whom I was understudying in an ingénue part, fainted just before she was to make her entrance. The curtain had to come down and I heard shouts for me to come and play her part.

UNFORTUNATELY, I had never had a rehearsal, as understudies should have, and I was panic-stricken. "I can't," I said.

"You must!" they insisted.

I had seen the play over and over again because of my crush on Gillette, and I was perfectly familiar with it—at least, I thought I was. I rushed upstairs to Miss Tyler's room, tearing off my things as I went. Then I had immediately to put them on again when I found that Odette Tyler had been removed to the hospital—in her costume.

Dressed in my nurse's costume, I played the part as best I could. It was a great moment for me. The next day I got a dress and made an apparent success, so much so that I began receiving many letters and several of the critics came to see the play again and gave me real praise.

Miss Tyler continued ill and I continued in her part. I was sorry that she was ill and yet I was very happy that I was playing. It really looked as though everything had begun for me.

One morning I went to the theater for my mail and on the stage I saw some people rehearsing. They were rehearsing a new girl. They had cabled for her the day after Miss Tyler had been taken ill and, when she was ready the next day, I was sent to my old part of a few lines. It was my first heartbreak in the theater!

In spite of this disappointment, I kept saying to myself, "I am still in London, the place I want to be in more than anywhere else in the world." I determined that I would remain, no matter what happened. A great many of the people who had been kind to me about my performance in "Secret Service" were actor-managers of prominence. So I proceeded to go around among the admiring throng who had praised me, but I had no practical suggestions from them. In fact, I was not given a sign of encouragement of getting anything of any kind to do.

Then one afternoon a hansom cab brought me a note.

(And let me digress to point out that in those days when hansom cabs brought me my messages, I seemed to get them just as quickly as if there had been telephones. What a gracious life it was in those days of no telephones, no passports, no income taxes! Horse-and-buggy age? What was the matter with the horse and buggy? What was the matter with the hansom cab? Was there ever any lovelier way to travel, any lovelier sound than the clop-clop of the horse's hoofs on those wooden pavements in London? I feel so sorry for the people who know only enough about those days to laugh at them! My passion for hansom cabs came to be well known. Once coming home on a boat, I met Peter Dunne who told me that he had been in London. I said, "Why didn't you come to see me?" And he said, "I forgot the number of your cab!")

The note the cab brought me was from Cissie Loftus, saying that she was singing at an important house that night and her accompanist was ill and would I play for her? We didn't have to get there till half past ten and I would be finished at the theater by then, so I said, "I'd love to." Afterward, as I was trying to get through the crowd to leave, Creighton Webb, a friend of Uncle Jack's, grabbed me and said:

"Ethel, you must come with me. The Duke of York wants me to present you to him."

I said, "Oh, no! I couldn't."

He said, "You've got to."

I said, "What'll I do?"

He said, "Just curtsy. Come along. Behave yourself."

Suddenly I was looking at the bluest eyes I have ever seen and such a kindly smile, and he said: "Aren't you the little girl I saw in 'Secret Service'?"

And I gasped, "Yes, sir."

He said, "You know I saw it again and you weren't playing the part. Why? I liked you so much better than the present girl."

I said, "Thank you, sir," and fled, very happy and blushing from head to foot.

As I ran I got a pleasant smile from the Duchess of York, and I often thought of it in later life when I saw her pictures and heard stories of her when she became the great Queen Mary.

The people I saw most were "Uncle" Ben Webster, the actor; his wife, May Whitty, whom I called "Maisie Dreams"; Anthony Hope, the novelist; Didi and Alfred Littleton; and Etty and Willie Grenfell. These I saw most and loved most. As I look back on it now, they were very wonderful to me—so wonderful in every way that I didn't realize at the time my good fortune in being allowed to know them so well and so intimately. I was still fairly young and took these honors as a matter of course.

I was also great friends with quite a different group of people, Lady Lister-Kaye and Sir John and her sister the Duchess of Manchester

Gala Rice Platter—fast favorite for big-family meals! Mix tasty Underwood Deviled Ham with creamed vegetables, spoon over fluffy rice. Makes a "company pretty" dish that's hearty, thrifty!

Poached Eggs and Underwood Treat. Spread Underwood's on crisp slices of toast, and top with poached egg. Quick trick for hot 'n filling breakfasts!

TV Snack Tray—so easy to fix, with spicy spread-'n-serve Underwood's. Lavish Underwood's on crackers and breads ...better make plenty!

To glorify everyday favorites...just add

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM

Underwood Deviled Ham adds zest to salads . . . sandwiches . . . budget-stretching main dishes. Puts special flavor, extra nutrition in family favorites, for just pennies! Keep the big Family Size can on hand for main-dish treats . . . the Regular Size for quick, delicious snacks.

Wm. Underwood Co., 85 Walnut St., Watertown 72, Mass.

and her beautiful young twin daughters and Kim, her son. Lady Lister-Kaye was very kind to me, and I would go very often to her house in Manchester Square.

I also knew Sir George and Lady Lewis, whose daughter Elsie became a friend of mine. Sir George was one of the great solicitors of England; it was said of him that he knew the secrets of every great family in England. I used to go to wonderful dinners at their house. That was where I occasionally saw Sir Henry Irving. And Edie Craig, Ellen Terry's daughter, had a flat in the same building where the Websters lived and she took me to see Miss Terry.

One night at a big ball someone came up to me and said, "Lord Kitchener wants to dance with you."

I will never forget how frightened I was! He was like a man carved out of teak with green, terrifying eyes. He never spoke a single word but just kept looking down at me. When the dance was over, I felt as if I had been released from chains. In those days Englishmen didn't dance very well. They just hopped around. When I went to a ball, I always hoped that Jack Carter, the second secretary at the embassy, would be there, and plenty of Hungarians and Austrians because they danced so well.

I had two dresses, one black and one white, which I found were quite enough for the highest and most exalted society. In London, somehow, people don't care who you are or what you have on; if they make up their minds they like you, they take you in and there you stay for all time.

I was really living in two worlds after "Secret Service" closed and I had no job. Unless I was asked out to dinner, I was often quite hungry, though I found that if I didn't have any dinner in the offing I could live on dried dates, cheap and filling. Finally I realized how hopeless it all was; nothing was coming and I scarcely had money left to pay for my lodgings. I had to go and confess ignominiously to Uncle Jack, who was in London and about to sail to America, that I had failed, and I asked him if I could go back with him. He took it quite calmly and said:

"Oh, of course, of course. We'll see to it."

I was to bring back two beautiful dresses for the leading lady in Uncle Jack's play, "A Marriage of Convenience." They were copies of authentic Louis XVI costumes, elaborate white satin and brocade. I was packing the dresses in the trunk that had been sent to my lodgings for the purpose and I was crying. I tried to keep any tears from falling on the dresses.

And a hansom cab stopped at the door with a note for me. It read: "Dear little Bullfinch: [That was the name Ellen Terry called me because she thought I looked like one.] I hear you're going back to America. Come down to the theatre tonight to say goodbye to Sir Henry and me. Ellen Terry."

So I washed my face and bathed my eyes and got into my black evening dress—I was going to a supper party at the Savoy, given by friends of Uncle Jack to say good-by to him—and went to the theater and up to Miss Terry's dressing room and she said:

"So, you're going back to America! Go in and say good-by to Sir Henry."

I was, of course, terrified at the mere thought of facing him. But it was extremely nice of him to let me say good-by, so I went to Sir Henry's dressing room and he said, "So you want to go back to America?"

"No, Sir Henry," I said, "I don't, but I can't find anything to do."

And he said, "How would you like to stay here and be our little leading lady?"

"Oh, Sir Henry!" I could not say another word—I could not think of anything else.

"Well," he said, "you could play Annette in 'The Bells' and there's a part in Laurence play that I am going to do about Peter the Great. Now don't cry. Just go downstairs. Mr. Loveday has a contract all ready for you to sign. Run along."

I have no remembrance of signing that contract. I only know that suddenly it was tucked away close to my fast-beating heart and I was at the Lyceum Theatre, floating on a cloud to my farewell supper party.

Besides my aunt and uncle and cousins many of the highlights of the English theatre were there, including Mrs. Patrick Campbell. They all knew I was brokenhearted about not being able to stay in London. They had been nice and kind, gentle and sympathetic, and even now, as I took my seat at the table, they were still nice and kind, gentle and sympathetic. I let them go on and didn't say a word, just keeping the contract where it was.

Finally Mrs. Campbell called down the table to me, "We are so sorry that you are sailing tomorrow."

Now was my time. "Oh, but I'm not," I said, as if it were the most casual announcement in the world.

Everybody at the table exclaimed and my uncle was the loudest of all. Uncle Jack said, "What-what-what-what?"

"I'm going to stay here," I said. "I have just signed a contract with Sir Henry Irving and Miss Terry. I am going to be their leading lady."

I got the engagement with Irving in the late spring and it must have been sometime toward the approach of midsummer when I felt the sudden urge to go home and see Mummum before rehearsal for the new engagement began. But I had no money. I cabled to Dick Davis asking him to send me $100. He was off to the wars somewhere, and it was his father who sent me the money, though I didn't know this until I began paying it back to Dick. And that was the first he ever knew about it. Mr. Davis hadn't bothered to tell him about that kindness to a little girl who had obviously needed it.

Mummum was at the Bevan House in Larchmont, quite alone except for Jack. I was very disturbed about her. She used to sit on the porch hour after hour, day after day, looking out at nothing and I suppose remembering everything, occasionally reading little paper backed books that she brought down in quantities from her room on the third floor. I remember them so well, those paper-backed novels with blue covers. I used to wonder if she was really reading them or just passing the time, turning over the pages while she was thinking of her great and crowded past.

Mummum never talked about herself and it was hard to get her to talk about anything. I was sure, though, that she was pleased that I had come to see her.

I spent a week with her and then sailed back to my new and wonderful job. The day I was to start rehearsals the cable came, early in the morning. Mummum was dead.

There was much to be done, cables to be sent. Uncle Googan was in Australia. Uncle Jack was abroad. Lionel was on the road. At Larchmont there was only Jack, who at fourteen had to face what I had to face in California at the same age. Luckily my Great-aunt Hannah, the sister of my grandfather John Drew, came forward and attended to everything.

But I was late for my first rehearsal. The old commissionaire at the stage door said with terrifying solemnity, "Oh, missie, you're late!"

I flew onto the stage. There was all the company standing about and Sir Henry, sitting alone in the center of the stage looking at me under his eyebrows, very coldly.

I said, "Sir Henry, I'm dreadfully sorry to be late, but something terrible has happened.

HOME

By ELEANOR GRAHAM VANCE

After the fretful day, when peace descends
To spread a cover on the dreams we keep,
Safe in each other's trust like old, old friends,
We sleep.

l looking at me under his eyebrows he "What was it?"

I id, "I just got a cable that my grand- er has died."

d his face, that beautiful face, looked up. id, "Mrs. John Drew?" and I said, "Yes." I said, "Go home, my dear. No rehearsal ou today."

t was the first of his many kindnesses to ad a letter from my grandmother a week she died, thanking me for having come to er. It nearly broke my heart.

on afterward we went on a long tour in ovinces. Suzanne Sheldon, another American girl, was in the company. Her mother was with her and together we lived in lodging houses on the road. Since I was getting the bigger salary, I paid for the sitting room which we all shared.

Sir Henry was very serious and everybody else around the theater was frightened to death of him, but for some reason I always amused him. Something about me always made him laugh or smile. Later on, I often met him at big dinners where there were other important people, and how he stood out! How he made them all look commonplace, ordinary! He had the most delicate, beautiful face and beautiful, long hands.

I had no part in "The Merchant of Venice" so that I had many chances to see him in it. He always made Shylock seem the only gentleman in the play. I've always been glad, too, that I could so often see Ellen Terry as Portia.

During the tour we rehearsed "Peter the Great" which was Laurence Irving's play. He had been tentatively marked for diplomatic service and had been sent to Russia as a sort of student guest of Tolstoy, who was a friend of his father. He was very Russian and very somber. I had never known anyone like that, so I was profoundly impressed and became Russian and somber too. We had many melancholy walks through towns like Hull and Sheffield, which are suicidal anyway, and exactly suited our mood.

Then back to London, and Suzanne and I took a flat together directly opposite the Websters' at 21 Bedford Street, Strand.

Laurence used to come to tea and gloom. He was a beautiful character; a little spasmodic and erratic but, underneath an assumed sinister manner, he was very gentle. I got his frame of mind and played nothing but Russian music of the most melancholy type. We floated together into a romance of Russian pessimism, of nervous depression. I decided that I was as sad as Laurence, and we thought we might just as well get married and be delightfully miserable together.

Laurence rushed off and announced our engagement to his father and mother, and there was a terrifying visit I had to make to Lady Irving. I don't remember ever meeting anyone as frightening. She and Sir Henry had been separated for years, and I felt so happy for him!

A CURIOUS thing about me at this time—and practically always—was that, in spite of the fact that I saw nothing of my father, or, shall I say, he saw nothing of me, I still had a strong urge to belong to someone, and there was now no one left but my father. So I cabled him at the Lambs' Club, the only address I knew, telling him of my engagement. I received an answer saying:

CONGRATULATIONS LOVE FATHER

But the awful thing was that Laurence now became an entirely changed man. He was happy and his happiness made him quite a different person, not the one whom I had agreed to marry and spend a long, lovely, gloomy, tragic life with. Of course it was all very young.

I was desolated, but I knew I couldn't go on with the marriage and I had to tell Laurence that I'd made a terrible mistake. It required an enormous amount of courage to come to this decision, because there I was at the Lyceum Theatre in Laurence's play, with his father, and every hand would be against me. That I was prepared for—and how right I was! No one thought that I would have the courage to break the engagement. However, I did.

Sir Henry was very kind and understanding about it, and later on, as the years went by, Laurence and I became the greatest friends. Also I was slightly comforted, after I had cabled my father that the engagement was broken, to receive a reply saying:

CONGRATULATIONS LOVE FATHER

A play came to London called "The Belle of New York." On the night of the dress rehearsal I was not in our play at the Lyceum, so I went to the rehearsal because Phyllis Rankin, Aunt Gladys's sister, was in it. I was sitting alone in the dark theater when I heard three managers, two Australians and an Englishman, telling Mr. Lederer, the producer:

"You can't open this play in London tomorrow night. The British audience wouldn't understand a word of it. It's too American."

Mr. Lederer walked out into the dark lobby and paced up and down looking very worried and I, being terribly young, had courage enough to go up to him and say, "Please don't believe them. I'm sure they'll love it just as it is."

He said, "Who on earth are you?"

And I said, "Oh, I'm not anybody, but I just know. Please, please don't change it!"

I must have been very fierce and eager, as usual. At any rate, he didn't change a word. It opened the next night and ran for years and years.

I gave a tea party, a big one, in our flat for "The Belle of New York" people. Jack, who had been sent to a school in England by my father, was at the flat, but he was too shy to come downstairs to the party. I said, "You've got to," but he wouldn't. He broke out into a cold sweat, and I didn't ask him any more.

This terror of people and gatherings left him at an early age.

He went back to school, but he managed to get away from it when he pleased—he had invented a major, supposed to be a friend of father's, who demanded Jack's presence quite often. Later he studied at the Slade School of Art, living at Aunt Eva Wace's.

FUDGY

BROWNIES

UICK AS A WINK!

QUICK BROWNIES

Made the magic Eagle Brand way!

ackage (6-oz.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces up (½ 15-oz. can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk sh of salt
easpoon vanilla extract up walnut meats, coarsely chopped lt chocolate over hot, not boiling water. in Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed lk—the blend of pure milk and sugar t's already cooked to creamy smooth- s. Remove from heat. Stir in salt, vanilla, d walnut meats. Turn into well-greased 8"x2" pan. Bake in moderate oven 5°F.) 25 minutes. While brownies are rm, cut into bars: when cool, remove from n. Make this treat often . . . you can be e of perfect results every time with any of gle Brand's 70 magic recipes.

Copyright, T. B. C.

FREE!

et my 28-page, -color recipe book

e Borden Company
ept. LHJ 35, Box 171
ew York 46, N. Y.

ease send me Elsie's free recipe book, rden's Eagle Brand 70 Magic Recipes.

ame_____ reet_____
ity_____

Here's the handy thrifty way to buy yeast

Three packages in one neat strip

Get Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast —in NEW "THRIFTY THREE'S"

● You're really getting the most for your money when you buy Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast in the new "Thrifty Three's." That's three packages of yeast in one neat strip . . . more economical, easier to handle and handier to store on your shelf.

And you're getting the finest yeast you can buy—for any amount of money—the yeast that prize-winning cooks prefer. This grand dry yeast stays fresh for months at a time right in your kitchen cupboard. And it's so easy to use . . . rises in a hurry every time. Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast is guaranteed fresher and faster rising —or double your money back.

When you bake at home, use Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast—it's the speediest, handiest, thriftiest yeast there is. Get it at your grocer's in the handy new "Thrifty Three's."

have grapefruit instead

Worth its weight in health

Lose weight—and like it! Low-calorie Florida grapefruit is packed full of lively flavor. So the more you have it the less you mind dieting.

Packed with vitamins, too! Especially "C"—the one you can't store up, need every day . . . Say "Shoo" to rich foods—have grapefruit instead!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

Watch "Twenty Questions" on TV each week. Consult your newspaper for day and time.

CANNED. Keep cans of grapefruit juice pre-chilled, ready to pour FRESH. Some of the best have seeds. Flick them out with a fork

SECTIONS. In cans, all ready for your salads, desserts or breakfasts

FROZEN. A can of frozen concentrate makes 1½ pints of juice

FLORIDA Grapefruit

Mr. John Hay was now Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and every Thursday afternoon I would go to the embassy to help Helen and Alice (his daughters) pour tea and make myself useful in any way I could. I remember Helen saying to me, "Don't you find when you go out to dinner in London that you have to take with you everything you ever knew or ever read to be able to cope with the brilliant young men?"

And you did. You had to cope with really brilliant young men just out of Oxford or Cambridge and probably already in Parliament.

It was the fashion then to wear tiaras and of course I didn't have one. So instead I got some oak leaves and wore them in my hair. Somebody called me Daphne, and soon everybody was calling me that. I had always hated Ethel as a name—my father had called me that after Thackeray's Ethel Newcome—and I loved being called Daphne. One of those who always called me Daphne was Gerald du Maurier, who named his younger daughter Daphne after me.

I went out to lots of dinners and dances—sometimes two or three a night during the season. One evening I went to dinner at the Heinemanns'. There were only eight people there, but one of them was Whistler. He had one of his great evenings and no one else spoke. It was absolutely breath-taking for me. When I got home I had to wake Suzanne up to tell her all about it.

Life in London was very gay and very stimulating and very glamorous and yet, young though I was, I took it as a matter of course. It is curious, but the only place where I was never terribly shy was in England. Once in New York when Mr. Whitney was giving a ball for Dorothy, his youngest daughter, I got a lovely new dress at Bendels to wear. That night I drove up to the great Whitney house, but instead of going in, I said to my driver, "Go home." In London I could go to Buckingham Palace and think nothing of it. Doors opened without my knowing that they were ever closed and I just walked through them.

Youth today must be strong, unafraid, and a better taxpayer than its father. —HARRY V. WADE

No wonder I never wanted to leave it!

At the Websters' I had met Gerald du Maurier, who was so entirely different from Laurence Irving that I found him enchanting. He was tall and slight, not good-looking, but with great charm, gay, amusing, witty. He swept me and I thought "This is it!" So Gerald and I were engaged. (I didn't have to cable father this time, for he was in London and I went to see him for a minute.)

GERALD's mother was divine to me and so were his sisters. One of them, Sylvia, was very beautiful. Her father, George du Maurier, had often drawn her to illustrate his books; she looked exactly like the picture of the Duchess of Towers in "Peter Ibbetson." (Sylvia was married to Llewelyn Davies and they had four or five sons. It was for these children that Barrie really invented "Peter Pan"—the eldest one was named Peter.)

But in spite of all their kindness to me, when Mrs. du Maurier began to tell me how to take care of Gerald, what to make him wear in winter and so on, it alarmed me so that all I could think of was getting home to the four walls of my dressing room—any dressing room. I had just enough money for cheap passage back to America by Canada and for the night train to New York. Gerald saw me off at the train. I felt heartbroken. I was crying, tears pouring down my cheeks. Gerald was running along the platform. I almost jumped off the train. I was still in love with Gerald, but I knew I couldn't go through with the marriage.

It was not a very happy trip for me. I was leaving the city I loved; everything I cared about seemed to be concentrated there. I was going to something that didn't even exist, for, after all, that's what a position that you haven't really got is.

And so I arrived at the Grand Central Terminal with exactly one quarter, all that I had left. This I grandly gave the redcap who carried my bag to the hansom.

I had no idea where I was going or wh to happen to me, and out of a maze of derment a voice from the top of the cab through with, "Where to, miss?" For reason I said, "The Waldorf," at tha perhaps the world's most expensive ho Penniless and with head very high, up to the desk of the Waldorf. I was abs staggered by four or five young clerks c forward and greeting me with enthusias a certain amount of ceremony.

"Miss Barrymore, we are so glad t you back with us again."

I said, "Oh," faintly, and then add just want to know if my uncle is here."

"Oh, yes, Mr. Drew is here. Will you a suite or ——"

"I'll have a room," I said.

THE porter brought me back to life "The cab is waiting."

I said, "Oh, yes," rather languidly an turned to one of the clerks: "Will you p cab, please?"

I followed the bellboy to my room the door closed and I was left alone something that I had not expected to sat down on a chair with the realization had come home, that this was my count land, and the words of welcome that from porters, cabmen and clerks was thing that made the life I had just left in don quite unreal. I felt that welcom warmth which can come only from you people. Here was where I belonged. come home.

Later I found out the reason for the whelming reception. The American ne pers, which I had no in London, had bee of me and of the pa had been going to. B the two real engage they had made up oth dukes and earls and ev Indian prince I had seen. Of course at th I knew nothing abou

Immediately I called Uncle Jack's ro

"Who on earth is this?" he asked sounds like Ethel."

"It is!" I said.

"But you're in England!" he insisted.

"No," I said, "I'm upstairs in the hot

After I had convinced him that I reall upstairs and not in London he told me to down and have breakfast with him.

So I did and while we were having th breakfast I had had for many a long day him that I had come home to try to g engagement. I asked if he would take see Mr. Frohman.

We went the next day. Mr. Frohma very nice to me, said I looked like my m who had played with him and of whom h always very fond, and he added, "Then part in Annie Russell's new play, 'Cathe It isn't much of a part ——"

I replied that I would be satisfied with thing. So I was told to be at rehearsal th day at the Garrick Theatre.

When I arrived there I found it was i a very small part, calling for two bea dresses but not much else! I had to pa them out of my salary of $35 a week. cost $100 apiece and it took me all seas pay for them.

One of the sad things about the thea that when you are beginning, trying to m very little money go a long way, you ha pay for your own clothes; when you're a relatively rich, they're provided for you.

I summoned courage to ask for an ad on my salary so I could get out of the Wa and move back to Mrs. Wilson's boar house where I had lived before.

When I walked onto the stage the first of that play, "Catherine," I got the mos mendous ovation, and I kept saying to m "This is awful. I have nothing to do—jus or three lines in this act and two or thr the next!"

I didn't realize that people over here been talking about me, not as an actres as a person, talking about me because I been moving around with the most exc people in England. I had been doing it

CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

Now! Satisfy Your "COFFEE HUNGER" with NEW NESCAFÉ®

—tastier coffee made the modern way!

In the morning when your mouth's watering for a good cup of coffee—quick, make Nescafé! That "wake up" Nescafé flavor, that robust Nescafé richness really satisfies your coffee hunger! Yes, any time a sociable cup of coffee seems like a good idea, it's time for Nescafé!

all coffee
nothing but coffee!

When you're hungry for tastier coffee, try New Nescafé

© 1955 The Nestle Company, Inc.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 156

ally—a young girl of seventeen having a very good time and thinking it was wonderful. I had no idea that anyone over here knew about it or bothered about me. I will never forget the agony of that big ovation with nothing in my part to warrant it, except those two pretty dresses.

One newspaper critic made the momentous discovery that I was "rather disappointing." But some yellow journal called me "that glamour girl." It was the first time I had ever seen or heard the word.

In "Catherine" Annie Russell played a part in which the master of a great house engaged her as governess to his daughters. At the end of the first act he asked her to play Chopin's Nocturne on the piano, which she was supposed to teach his daughters to play. But Annie Russell could not play the piano, so she sat at a dummy one and I played for her, off stage. I had very little to do in the play, so I used to sit in my dressing room and read until a boy would come and say "Music." Then I would dash up, play and go back to my book.

One night the boy didn't come. That was no excuse for me, of course. I should have been listening, but I had depended upon him for weeks. I didn't know what had happened until the curtain was down. I'll never forget the look Annie Russell gave me as our eyes met.

I could only gasp, "Oh, I am so sorry! It is terrible!" All she said was, "Yes, it is," and went to her room.

I felt as if an elevator had dropped from under me. I haven't got over it yet—I still wake up in the night and think of it. They didn't do anything to me, but they got someone else to play the piano.

Cecil Clark was about to marry Dick Davis, and while "Catherine" was playing in Chicago, we had our dresses for the wedding made at the same place. The marriage took place at Marion early in May. Dick had his brother Charles as his best man, and a lot of his friends for ushers, but I was the only bridesmaid.

Dick gave me a very handsome diamond brooch in the form of a buckle as my bridesmaid's present. And more than once, later on, when I came home penniless from a London summer, that brooch kept me alive until I was working again.

When "Catherine" ended its run, I had saved enough to go back to England in June, besides paying for those two dresses, which, because I had paid for them myself, I could take with me.

I got lodgings at 18-A Clifford Street and began at once to have good times with old friends and to make new ones. Among the new friends was Millie, the Duchess of Sutherland. I was often at Stafford House, the great town house on which the Sutherlands had a ninety-nine-year lease. I also stayed with Alfred and Didi Littleton, who had taken a small house in Scotland. Arthur Balfour was the only other person staying with them. They were all crazy about bridge, and I had to play with them although I didn't know how. It was agonizing but they were very kind.

Later I stayed with Herbert and Dolly Gladstone, who had rented a furnished house with a harmonium in it. I used to play it after dinner, and we would sing hymns.

By the end of summer my savings were gone once more and Mr. Frohman's London manager provided me with transportation home as he was to do after so many later summers.

EDWARD H. MARSH COLLECTION

"I put a velvet collar on my school uniform and wore it when I had my picture taken with Maude Adams." William W. Bellows thinks he took picture between 1890–1894, says "Miss Barrymore was a very pretty young lady."

In New York I went back to Mrs. W and my diamond buckle made its fi quaintance with Simpson's pawnshop. Frohman was putting on "His Excellen Governor" which I had seen in Londor was fired with ambition to play Iren brugh's part in it.

Although frightened to death, I mana muster up enough courage to see Mr. man and ask him about it. I remember to hold my hands together so that Mr. man would not see how I was tremblin said, "I hear you are going to do 'His lency, the Governor.' I want to play S

Mr. Frohman replied, "Do you, inde does Ellen Terry."

"Oh!" I gasped.

He seemed very much amused and "Well, I don't think you can play a pa that quite yet, but if you like you can s and rehearse it for me someday."

So they gave me the part and I stuc One morning I told him that I was rea the rehearsal he had promised me. Alth think he had forgotten all about his pr he very kindly and patiently went dow in the E Theatre a in the dark, auditorium I went on a dark stag there was one little the stage ager, wh holding the and giving lines, c scarcely see to attempt formance brilliant, kling co part almost dark, to an ence of on awful occ After it was Mr. Fro was very ni again told m I reminded very much mother—in that I was ingly like her. This naturally made me h

About two days after my rehearsal Mr. Frohman I read the announcement play's forthcoming production at the E and I need hardly say that I was not i cast. But later on in the season, when the was through its New York run and Mr. man was about to send it on the road, h me that he would let me play the par really thought I could. Of course I said was sure I could, and so we started off on

The part I was playing was that of a co adventuress. I was, of course, much too y for it, so I got myself a beautiful red wig a black spangled dress and thought m quite the real thing. It was a strenuous with a stretch of one-night stands eight in succession. But I thrived on it, since playing a role I loved. I was getting week. Mr. Frohman was pleased with notices; everywhere I went the critics we kind as they could be.

It was while I was playing in "His E lency" that I suddenly discovered that in of making a comedy point, I was throwi away—tossing it off—as if it meant not thus achieving much more successfully effect that I wanted. I had seen my mothe this when she came to Philadelphia in Senator" with William H. Crane, when I realized her wonderful naturalness and

Nobody in our family ever taught me thing about acting except by absorption in our family absorption was a good wa learn. I remembered my grandmother; membered, without having realized it till the naturalness of my mother's acting, twe five years ahead of her time. I had playe three years with Uncle Jack, who acte naturally that he never seemed to be actin

CONTINUED ON PAGE 160

2 MAN-SIZED MEALS IN MINUTES

For the male appetite, the stew that's beef-rich and bountiful! To a hearty gravy made from fine-chopped beef, the Hormel folks add still more beef . . . this time in succulent chunks. No wonder Dinty Moore is America's favorite beef stew! The BIG meal in the BIG can . . .
DINTY MOORE BEEF STEW

Easy way to a man's heart: Hormel Chili, bubbling-hot and fragrant, spooned over luscious Hormel Tamales. Men (women too!) like Hormel Chili for its abundance of good beef, its rich and savory sauce that's not too hot, not too mild, but just right!
HORMEL CHILI and HORMEL TAMALES remarkable new instant starch discovery!

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

swish in cold water it's ready!

NO COOKING . . . no boiling, no hot water, no waiting when you use Instant Niagara Starch.

JUST SWISH and Niagara dissolves, stays dissolved . . . the only starch that works perfectly in cold water.

Here's a completely new kind of starch to save you time and money. No cooking... Instant Niagara does it for you! The starch is all "made" at the factory, then dried to the tiniest of white flakes. You just put the water back in, and it's ready to use. Niagara ends the mess of making starch.

Niagara works wonders with all your cottons. No white spots or streaks, even on dark fabrics. Your iron stays clean, glides easily, smoothly . . . and presto—cottons look new again!

It's thrifty, too. Yes, Instant Niagara actually goes 4 to 5 times further than costly bottled starch. Next time . . . Niagara for you!

save money! costs only a penny a quart

(medium starch solution) 1¢ ONE QUART

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 158

naturally that he never let anyone see a wheel going around.

In "His Excellency" I began to understand the necessity of covering up those wheels, of never letting one of them show, no matter what the critics might say, no matter if some wheely actresses seemed to be successful.

During the run of "His Excellency, the Governor," I managed to save enough money for a holiday and so, at the end of the season, I went back to England to spend my summer vacation.

Jack was eighteen that summer and he came with me when I went to stay with Millie at Dunrobin, that wonderful place of the Sutherlands' on the sea. It was a very big house party. The Grenfells were there with their five children. Winston Churchill and Harry Percy were there too. I was always fascinated by Harry's name. It sounded so Shakespearean.

I remember Jack's delight the first night at dinner when the Earl of Mar and Kellie appeared in a gorgeous kilt. Just after we had been seated—there must have been forty of us at table—a most piercing shriek came from behind the duke's chair. Nobody paid any attention to it but went on talking—all except Jack and me. We glanced at each other with expressions of horror. Then we saw something move back of the duke's chair. It was the piper. He began to stalk majestically around the table, piping the most pitiful sounds. As no one paid any attention to him, Jack and I realized that it must be a well-known custom, not to be noticed.

We had splendid swimming up there. As a great many of the tenants were fishermen, and as it is a surprising fact that but very few fishermen can swim, Millie was anxious that they should all learn and had imported a magnificent Swede to act as their instructor. The Swede made a large diving float for us and we used to have wonderful exhibitions of diving by the Swede, Constance MacKenzie and Florence Chaplin (nieces of the duke). Constance was the most beautiful swimmer I have ever seen. Jack, incidentally, was very good. He had never dived from any great height before, but he could not bear to see two girls doing it, so off he went one day and made the best dive of anybody—a way Jack had.

He had a wonderful time at Dunrobin, and at the end of the summer he came back to America with me.

A highbrow is a man who has found something more interesting than women.

—EDGAR WALLACE

Clyde Fitch was becoming more and more popular and successful as a dramatist. Mr. Frohman told me about a new play of Mr. Fitch's he was going to produce, "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," which had a wonderful part in it. But he was not sure that I could play it; nor was Mr. Fitch—particularly Mr. Fitch. However, Mr. Frohman decided to take a chance with me, and we began rehearsals. The role was that of Madame Trentoni, very taxing for so young and inexperienced an actress. There were comedy, pathos and dancing in it. I was more worried about the dancing than about anything else.

WE opened in Philadelphia, in the Walnut Street Theatre. The notices were amazingly bad—fairly bad for the play and very bad for me. One woman critic wrote: "If the young lady who plays Madame Trentoni had possessed beauty, charm or talent, this play might have been a success"—the only criticism I have ever been able to remember word for word.

I was crushed. All through the run in Philadelphia and the two weeks of one-night stands that followed I was feeling numb, hoping and praying that we would close permanently. I begged Mr. Frohman not to take the play to New York. But we opened at the Garrick Theatre on February 4, 1901. The advertisements announced: "For two weeks only. A play by Clyde Fitch called 'Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines.'"

On the opening night I had for the first time the terrible sense of responsibility which, ever since, has made every first night a kind of little dying, an agony of terror that never failed make me physically sick. While I had b playing small parts, and even in "His Ex lency," I hadn't been important enough have that terrific feeling of responsibility was only on the opening night in New Y that I felt the full weight of it, and began suffer the sick terror that I have suffered every first night ever since. I think I h always managed to hide it from the audie but I don't know how I've lived through it

I kept saying to myself, as I have done every first night since, "Why am I doing th Why didn't I try to do something else? would have been glad of an earthquake some other great calamity that would s people from coming in or me from going

Years and years afterward on the first ni of "The Corn is Green," although I knew was a wonderful, beautiful play and that I all right in it, I was still hoping for an ear quake.

BUT the opening night of "Captain Jink in spite of my sick anguish of panic, was of those unexpected, sensational success My father came backstage after the pl There were crowds of people on the stage, he just kissed me and said, "It was wonderf darling," and faded away.

The next day the critics were even m enthusiastic than the audience had been.

I was still living at Mrs. Wilson's boardi house and Jack had come to live there too now moved from the hall bedroom to second floor front. A very grand move, deed, as I had an alcove to my bedroom a this made me think I had a sitting room. I v getting $125 a week a thought myself very for nate. The fact that seve other members of the co pany were getting mu bigger salaries did worry me.

Mrs. Wilson's house v on 36th Street and the G rick on 35th Street. I us to walk around to theater every night along Sixth Avenue. O evening Jack walked around the corner w me. As we approached the theater—I h been playing about a month—the lights in t front of the house looked different. I did r pay much attention to them as I was thinki about something else. But I sensed that the was a change somewhere and I glanced again and suddenly stood frozen to the sp

ETHEL BARRYMORE was up there lights.

Next day I went to see Mr. Frohman thank him. He waved his hand toward t people passing by in the street. "I didn't it," he said. "They did it."

The play ran for months. Every night t old-fashioned bouquet of gardenias that carried when I went on stage in my white dr in the last act came to me at the theater with card on which was written "L'inconnu." It w years before I found out who it was who se them.

Later, when we were on tour, there was man who always bought two tickets in t front row, one for his hat and coat and one f himself. This started in Cleveland, but would suddenly appear in other cities. I wrote mad letters and kept sending me d mond pins and bracelets, and in sending the back I learned about registered mail.

It's curious how you dare to go on the sta knowing there's an eccentric in the audien who might shoot you. You have to think of but not too much or you wouldn't be ab to go on.

New York was very kind to me all th winter. I was young and healthy, so I was ab to combine work and play pretty well. A though I enjoyed going out very much, I st was just as happy at Mrs. Wilson's, havi crackers and milk after the theater and talki to my cousin, Georgie Drew Mendum.

After a while Arthur Brisbane gave Jack job, drawing a picture a week for the Ne York Journal. Brisbane thought so highly the drawings that he paid Jack $50 a week, an Jack left the boardinghouse and took room with a red-haired reporter from St. Louis wh

CONTINUED ON PAGE 162

Sure Cure for Homesickness

℞

The sound of familiar voices.. news from home.. encouragement.. cheer.. Talk frequently by Long Distance

When one of the family is away from home, there's nothing like a Long Distance call to keep ties warm and close.

Why not arrange for regular telephone visits with your boy or girl away at school? It means so much. Costs so little.

LONG DISTANCE RATES ARE LOW

Here are some examples:

New York to New Haven	40¢
Baltimore to Pittsburgh	60¢
Cleveland to Atlanta	$1.00
Dallas to Chicago	$1.20
Los Angeles to Boston	$2.00

These are the Station-to-Station rates for the first three minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include the federal excise tax.

Call by Number. It's Twice as Fast.

Bell Telephone System

½ ton a month . . .

That's how many dishes you do for a family of four. Sounds like you ought to know about new Lux Liquid Detergent

Makes lighter work of dishwashing

If you stacked your monthly quota of dishes-to-do on a scale, they'd weigh over half a ton. That's why you need Lux Liquid—made for doing dishes fast and easy. It floats grease right off . . . gets plates and glasses sparkling clean.

And there's real economy in Lux Liquid. Just a teaspoonful does a dishpanful . . . one can outlasts several boxes of the leading laundry powder. Lux Liquid is almost as mild as Lux Toilet Soap. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees Lux Liquid to be as promised, or your money will be refunded. You'll find Lux Liquid is every bit as good for dishes as Lux Flakes care is for nylons.

P.S. Women seem to be finding lots of new ways to put Lux Liquid to work . . . washing kitchen and bathroom tile, floors and windows. Get Lux Liquid when you market!

A teaspoonful does a dishpanful

Packed in a can as it should be—with a dripless spout

IT'S THE NEXT BEST THING TO A DISHWASHING MACHINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 160

was getting $35 a week on the World. His name was Herbert Bayard Swope.

In the spring we went on tour. What I remember about that tour is sitting on the back platform of the train and seeing little lambs and colts and dogwoods and blossoms—just spring. I don't think spring can be more beautiful anywhere in the world than in upper New York and Pennsylvania.

The play ran on into the summer—I remember that we played a Fourth of July matinee—and we didn't close long enough for me to go to England. Instead I went to stay at Marion with the Davises and at Beverly Farms with Mr. and Mrs. Sears and Eleanora. The Sears house in Beverly Farms was just down the street from Justice Holmes's. I was always thrilled to see him. I loved his loving detective stories; it was a great bond between us.

We reopened early and played and played and played all over the country. During the tour we went back to Philadelphia and for two weeks you couldn't get into the theater. We broke the record of the new Garrick Theatre in the same play and with the same cast that had met with such a cool reception two years before.

When one of the men of the company became suddenly ill, I telegraphed my brother Jack to come on and take his part. Jack had not been on the stage yet and took it all as a great joke. He had a very short part and was very funny in it. After the end of the second act, where I did the celebrated dance with a hysterical breaking down at the end of it, there were always a great many curtain calls, when I took the whole company on the stage with me. When the curtain went up at the first curtain call on the first night of Jack's appearance, much to my surprise Jack walked out from the crowd right to the footlights and bowed low—quite alone.

It was the silliest thing I have ever seen done, and, at the next curtain call, all of us were laughing hysterically at him. But he was not to be outdone; he graciously came forward, led me by the hand, bowed to me and then to the audience, as if he were introducing a shy debutante. It was not difficult then to realize that Jack would be a grand comedian.

When we closed in June, I was a star, with my name up in lights, but I was getting only $125 a week. Mr. Frohman said, "No matter what you get, Ethel, it'll go," and instead of a larger salary proposed that he give me a bonus, probably thinking that some of the bonus wouldn't go.

